"Even to come here, Tom, mathree, an' talk to your cold grave, even that is denied me. I must go from the home that sheltered me from youth, to a foreign land that is cold to me and mine, and to the grave where the stranger will cover them from his happy sight! And this is the last day I will ever see even the sod that lies on my husband's cold heart!. Oh! Lord, be merciful and kill me!

"Dear mother, you are hard on Kathie and your boy," the young man cried as he again knelt beside her, and tried to take her hand.

"You have your son, mother—is that nothing to you?"

"May God forgive me Tom, darling"

Our Young Folks.

A Brave Little Daughter.

There is a very pretty story by Miss Strickland in her "Queens of England," of a little girl who saved her father's life. "It was in the time of Queen Mary and Lord Fermor, the father of the child, was condemned to death for conspiring to bring back the exiled King James to the throne. Her mother was Lady Catharine Graham, and her name was Lady Catharine Graham, and she was only nine years of age. The poor child was, during the trial of her father, left in the queen's apartments in Windsor Castle. The day after the condemnation of Lord Preston the queen found little Lady Catharine in St. George's gallery gazing earnestly on the whole-length picture of James II., which still retains the strange mixture of sadness and expression of the young girl's face, Mary asked her hastily what she saw in that picture that made her look at it so particularly. "I was thinking, said the innocent child, "how hard it is that my father must die for loving yours. The story goes that the queen, picked up in conference by this artless reply, immediately signed the pardon of Lord Preston, and gave the father back to the child.

Legend of St. Francis and the Wolf.

There was great fear in Gubbio. The men were afraid and troubled, and mothers cheered, because of the terrible wolf, who lurked in the forest near the town. A wolf so hunger had yet been able to devour, and so strong, so fierce, so cunning. Many armed men had met the wolf, but it was a little creature he had been left empty and blood stained, and laughed at the men who went together in the market place, to consult as to how they could capture the creature, or drive it from them.

As they stood conversing with heavy hearts and anxious faces, the boy Francis came from his home and halted in the crowd and they pulled his cloak.

"My children, he answered, our lord will send relief. He never refuse to hear petitions which are made to him. Come with me to yonder mountain."

It was a long journey, but the boy went on with infinite pains, young as it was, from time to time, the people laughing from their play, and to this reply, "Go, little fool, go! Our lord will not call called the wolf to appear!"

Thus the boy at last, with trembling why is it that the savage wolf is ravening in Francis, and then, gazing at him, said, "Wolf, wolf, why is it that thou dost ravage this town? Thou art a robber, but all good people are thy foes. Thou art a robber, and all good people are thy foes. Thou art a robber, and all good people are thy foes. Thou art a robber, and

THE MONITOR.

TWENTY-FIFTH YEAR OF PUBLICATION

WEDNESDAY, MAY 24, 1882.

Proposed Canonization of Two of Henry VIII's Victims.

The attention of Cardinal Manning has for some time past been devoted to a subject fraught with interest not only to the Catholics of England, but of the entire world. He has brought together a vast mass of evidence relating to the noble Christian heroes, Cardinal Fisher, Bishop of Rochester, and Sir Thomas More, Chancellor of England, both of whom sealed their faith with their blood in the reign of the much-married Henry VIII. Many valuable and hitherto unpublished documents, which throw great light on their lives and virtues, have been contributed by Mgr. Cuthbert Hedley, Bishop of Cossarpolis, Mgr. Weathers, Coadjutor of Westminster, Lord John Francis Arundell of Wardour, Lady Georgiana Fullerton, Lord Henry Fitz-Alan Howard, Duke of Norfolk, Lord Petre, and many other distinguished persons. The evidence has already been submitted to the Congregation of Rites, with a view to the canonization, as martyrs, of Bishop Fisher and Sir Thomas More. Father Negroni, S. J., the Postulator of the cause, has already presented to the Holy Father a petition for its hearing, to which his Holiness has given an affirmative reply, on the condition, however, that previous to the formal examination into their martyrdom, their writings be submitted to the revising ordeal of a secret commission. The Holy Father has also, at the instance of Father Negroni, granted in this case a dispensation from a strict rule of the Congregation of Rites, which ordains that two hundred years must elapse between the ordinary or informal process, and the solemn presentation of the cause by Pontifical authority. Although, the amount and nature of the evidence under examination, and the favor with which the Holy Father views the cause, give fair hope that within a short time these two illustrious champions of the Faith will be formally enrolled among "the white-robed army of the martyrs."

A brief outline of their history cannot fail to interest our readers: Bishop Fisher had the spiritual care of the Diocese of Rochester and Thomas More held the Chancellorship of England at the time when Henry VIII., lured by the attractions of the wily Anne Boleyn, proposed a divorce to his lawful wife, Catherine of Arragon. On her refusal to accept it, the King himself pronounced the sentence of divorce, for which he endeavored by every means in his power to obtain the Pontifical sanction. But the Pope, Paul III., who respected civil and ecclesiastical laws, firmly refused his approbation. Henry, then, acting on his own authority, privately married Anne Boleyn on the 4th of November, 1532. On Easter eve of the following year he publicly proclaimed his lawful wife, and proclaimed his monarch then cut adrift from the Holy See, constituted himself head of an independent sect, and commenced a persecution against those of his subjects who opposed his union with Anne Boleyn and his newfangled notions on religious supremacy. Among the numbers that boldly braved the tyrant for the cause of faith and justice, Bishop Fisher and Sir Thomas More figure most prominently. They were both thrown into prison. Paul III., to reward the fidelity of Bishop Fisher, sent him the Cardinal's hat, on hearing of which Henry observed: "Paul can very well send him the Cardinal's hat, but I will take care that he will not have a head to put it on. After fifteen months' imprisonment he was dragged before a select tribunal, by which he was condemned to death on the 17th of June, 1535, for having refused to acknowledge the spiritual supremacy of the religious King Harry. Five days later, when ascending the scaffold, he threw aside his walking stick, saying: "Come, my feet, do make those few steps by yourselves," and, with a joyful countenance, recited the Te Deum. His head was struck off and exposed for some time on London Bridge. After the execution some soldiers were sent to pillage his house, and in the course of their search came upon an iron box, which they opened with eager hasty, expecting to find within a rich collection of gold and precious stones. But the only treasure of the aged Bishop was a suit of hair-cloth and a rough discipline. He was thirty-three years Bishop, and remarkable for the great sanctity of his life.

Sir Thomas More was a man of great learning and piety, and for over forty years had filled with consummate ability the most important positions under the English Crown. When the heresy of Luther had risen in Germany, the active zeal of Thomas More prevented this new contagion from spreading in England. When imprisoned by Henry VIII. he was treated with the utmost rigor, his goods were confiscated, and his family reduced to extreme poverty. He was in vain solicited by well-meaning, but misguided friends, to yield to the wishes of the King. To his weeping wife he said: "My Louise, how long can I hope to live? Twenty years, perhaps? But what are they compared with eternity! You are a bad merchant if you would have me exchange the one for the other!" When deprived of his books in prison he closed up the only window in his cell, observing, in reply to the pained looks of his guard, "Should not one who stop when the goods are lost?" During his imprisonment he wrote two excellent books—one on "Consolation," in English, and the other in Latin, on "The Passion of Christ." Promises and threats having alike failed to shake his constancy, he was brought before Audley, the Chancellor, the Duke of Norfolk, and others, but boldly and indignantly rejected the new law which made Henry VIII. head of the English Church. "I have studied for seven years," said he, "the question whether the Pope's power is of divine or human institution. I have found that it comes from God; I believe it, and for it I will die." The Chancellor said: "Then you would make yourself more learned than the bishops, the theologians, the nobles, the State Council, and all the Kingdom." "For one of your bishops," he replied, "I have hundreds, even canonized; for your nobility—behold! I have that of the martyrs and confessors; for one council I have all established by a thousand years ago till to-day, and for this little kingdom I have France, Spain, Italy, and all Christian empires." Sentence of death was of course soon passed upon him by a court summoned expressly for his condemnation. On hearing that his sentence was, "by the King's clemency," changed from the stake to the block, he exclaimed: "May God preserve my friends from such favors." When issuing from the court he was met by his daughter, Margaret, who, having embraced him, asked: "Father, why do you dia innocent?" "Dear daughter," he replied, "would you have me die guilty?" On the 6th of July he was led forth for execution. Having reached the scaffold, he said to the executioner: "Lend me your hand to mount up; to come down I will not require it." The beheading begged his pardon, and had for reply: "You render me to-day the greatest favor which mortal can bestow on me." He added: "My neck is so short that I fear you will not do yourself much honor." His head, when struck off, was exposed on London Bridge for fourteen days, whence it was removed by his daughter and buried at St. Dunstan's. His body still repose at Chelsea.

Such is a brief and necessarily imperfect account of these two "good and faithful servants," who suffered for the cause of religion with a fortitude and joyousness worthy of the early martyrs.

Another Anti-Catholic Secret Order

At almost every occurrence of an election in any State of the Union there springs into existence a lot of political vipers who congregate in some obscure den and hiss their anti-Catholic bigotry into each other's ears, bind each other's souls with iron-clad oaths, and swear by all that is good and great that the Pope of Rome must not rule this country, especially if Johnathan Jones is elected to Congress on the true-blue American ticket and George Washington Waffle is elected as alderman of the ward! These fellows who follow this dark-lantern system are all "patriots" who are ready and willing to hold all the offices in the gift of the people or the President, so as to prevent Pat or Dan from having any hand in the management of State or municipal affairs. This proves that their patriotism is all assumed, and the things who secretly plot in politics against Catholics are invariably a despicable lot of dishonest demagogues, whose motives and principles of their equally unprincipled neighbors.

The latest phase of this un-American mode of political warfare comes from Texas, and, as usual, the counterpart exists in the State already, as this kind of anti-Catholic crew runs through the country like any other epidemic, subsiding only after the "patriots" have secured all the places worth having through the votes of the people they have badly befooled. The following telegram will give our readers some idea of the character of the cranks involved in the new scheme, and will also put them on their guard against the insidious wiles of designing demagogues of the same dream class:

DALLAS (TEX.), May 19.—The Times to day issued an address of a secret political order and Catholic society, something after the style of the old Know-Nothing organization, and is called the Knights of Unknown Leaders. Wm. Jennings Bryan, President; Wm. Hudson, Secretary; Ed. Hall, and Isaac Sellers, of Dallas Herald, and Lee Sims, of the Times, are the leading spirits in the order. It is to have organized branches in every county in Texas, first, to unite the false society in Washington, and, secondly, to elect a President, Congress, Legislature, and State officers, who will be in the interest of the Catholic Church. The writer of the address has not yet been discovered, but it is supposed to be a Catholic priest. The writer of the address says that he has been informed by his daughter and brother that the Catholics are organizing a secret society in this country, and that it is time for the Protestants to do something for their homes and firesides, or else the Catholics will be in the majority in Congress and in the Legislature, and will elect a President who will be a tool of the Pope of Rome, and will take away our public schools, and will do away with our public schools, and will do away with our public schools, and will do away with

Farm and Home.

A Mother's Duty.

Consider it your religious duty to take outdoor exercise without fail each day. Sweeping and trotting around the house will not take the place of the exhilaration of the open air and change of scene are absolutely necessary. Oh, I know all about Lucy's gown that is not finished, and Tommy's jacket, and even his coat has buttonless coat threwn into your lap, as if to add the last straw to the camel's back. Still I say, "Up and out." Is it not more important that your children in their tender years should not be left motherless, and that they should not be born to that feeble constitution of body which will blight every blessing? Let buttons and strings go. You will take hold of them with more vigor when you return, bright and refreshed, and if every stitch is not finished at such a moment, still remember that she who "hath done what she could," is entitled to no mean praise. Your husband is undoubtedly one of the best of men, though there are malicious people who might answer that that was not saying much for him. Still he would never dream to the end of time, of what you are dying of a lack of pure air and exercise. So accept my advice, and take the matter in hand yourself.

Dust, Dusters and Wipe.

Do not dust, but wipe!

Who would believe it! The duster—that powerful emblem of domestic toil—may under certain circumstances, become more dangerous to handle than a six-shooter. We are in dead earnest. A eminent scientist declares it to be a fact.

Do you know just what you do when you brush away dust? You disseminate in the air and consequently introduce into your own interior, into your very tissues and respiratory organs, all sorts of ugly spores, epidemic germs and murderous vibrunes which dust contains.

One movement of a feather duster may be enough to poison both you and your neighbors—to inoculate you all with typhus, variolous, or cholera—ravages as it may appear.

Instead of a feather duster take a cloth; wipe away the dust instead of stirring up. In short, wipe—never dust!

Whom to Marry.

Never marry because the person has a handsome face or a well-turned figure; for we soon become insensible to angelic forms and faces. "Handsome is that handsome does." If the countenance has life and intelligence, if the walk is indicative of firmness, the carriage modest, and the whole appearance proves the possessor to have a sound mind, a pure heart, and a religious soul, that person is worth all the skin-deep beauties—men and women—that ever went up to the marriage altar with nothing but their good looks to commend them. If the admired one is rich in real estate, bank stock, or railway shares, do not let that prove an insurmountable objection; but if poor, like yourself, so much the better. There is nothing like a young couple just about the age of twenty-two, starting in life with good hearts, clear heads, may consciences, and empty pockets. You have something to hope for, to work for, to live for. Your interests are identical, your homes mutual, your pleasures and your pains shared, your plancery of temper outlive all the charms of a fine face, and make the decay of it impossible.

Young men and middle-aged men suffering from nervous debility, premature old age, loss of memory, and kindred symptoms, should read these pages for Part VII of pamphlet issued by World's Dispensary Medical Association, Buffalo, N.Y.

The first number of the Catholic Chronicle, of Bay City, Mich., is at hand this week. It bears all the appearance of being a sound, live journal, is well edited, is well written, comprehensible in appearance, and is every way worthy of being liberally supported. We cordially welcome the Chronicle and hope it will have a long and prosperous career.

Good for Rabies.

When I have a baby afflicted with rabies or consul for quieting my own and baby's nerves so Parker's Ginger Tonic. It generally does the trick quicker and better than any extemporaneous prescription I know of.—Newark Monitor.

Abraham's Crough Syrup never fails to cure if used in time and according to directions.

We hear of people, even in Philadelphia, say a few days ago that he thought it was the duty of Abraham's Crough Syrup to give the Pamphlet to the medical faculty, as they could prescribe and use it whenever they thought it was the best medicine for sick be, "as many of my patients prefer to take the stuff, and cause have confidence in a remedy when there it has been remarkably difficult. I have indeed it next be a medicine is a secret in medical science. Abraham's Crough Syrup is only respectable druggists and dealers in medicine everywhere.

—Married, at Simsbury, Conn., Joseph E. Troy, aged 75, a widower since last September, to Mary Ivy, his daughter-in-law, aged 30, a widow since March.

If the mother is feeble it is impossible that her children should be robust and healthy. Dr. Jayne's Vermifuge Compound is a perfect specific for all chronic diseases of the vital system of the female. Send to Mrs. Lydia E. Pinkham, 233 Western Avenue, Lynn, Mass., for pamphlet.

A Valuable Addition.

Become it is beneficial to the scalp, and add to personal beauty by restoring color and luster to hair, is the belief held by why Parker's Hair Balsam is such a popular dressing.

—HALL'S VEGETABLE SICILIAN HAIR RENEWER is a scientific combination of some of the most powerful restorative agents in the vegetable kingdom. It restores gray hair to its original color. It makes the locks white and silken. It cures dandruff and humors and promotes a healthy growth of the hair. It is based on a chemical principle by which the hair is nourished and supported. It makes hair moist, soft and glossy, and is unsurpassed as a hair preservative. It is the most economical preparation ever offered to the public, as its effects remain a long time, making only an occasional application necessary. It is recommended and used by gentlemen of social rank, and officially endorsed by the State Assayer of Massachusetts. The popularity of HALL'S HAIR RENEWER has increased with the test of many years, both in the country and foreign lands, and is now known and used in all the civilized countries in the world.

For Sale by all Druggists.

NERVOUS DEBILITY.

A CURE GUARANTEED.

DR. E. C. WEST'S NERVE AND BRAIN TREATMENT, a specific for Hysteria, Dizziness, Convulsions, Nervous Headache, Nervous Prostration, Nervous Weakness, Leucorrhœa, Spermatorrhœa, Impotency, Premature Old Age, Loss of Memory, Wakefulness, Nervous Irritability, Seminal Emissions, Sexual Decay and Death. One box will cure ordinary cases. Six boxes are sufficient to cure the worst cases. It is a box, or six boxes for $5, sent by mail prepaid on receipt of price. Each package contains enough for a month's treatment. Will cure any one from the effects of abuse or excess. Six boxes will, and the medicine is so compounded, no change in diet is necessary. It does not affect even. Guarantees issued only when the money is received direct from the agent. Address, F. RICHARDS & CO., wholesale druggists, 327 and 329 Sansome street, San Francisco, Sole agents Pacific coast.

—$1,500 a year can be easily made at home working for E. Ridout & Co., 10 Barclay street, New York. Send for their catalogue and full particulars.

TRUTH ATTESTED.

Some Important Statements of Well-known People Wholly Verified.

In order that the public may be fully satisfied that the testimonials of cures published in our advertisements are genuine, we publish the following letters. The details of cures here mentioned are omitted, and can be had by the curious on application.

Oakland, Cal., Nov. 11, 1881.

Gentlemen: I have been suffering for the past four years with disease of the kidneys and inflammation of the bladder. I had pains in my back and loins, and was very much troubled with gravel. My age attended with severe pains and burning sensations, and I had about commencing to take your Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, when I had been in bed two weeks without obtaining any relief, but finally concluded to wait no longer, and I sent for a bottle of your medicine. My surprise was great when I found that nothing has given me so much relief. I by this time had taken three bottles, and have now gradually improved.

Yours, very truly your,

J. O'Leary

ALAMEDA, Cal., Nov. 11, 1881.

Messrs. H. H. Warner & Co.

Gentlemen: I have been suffering with kidney complaint for the past seven years. My sufferings were great in the back, loins and bladder. I had tried many remedies, but found no relief. Being now old, as the cold always settles in my kidneys, I was induced by a physician who prescribed your Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, to give it a trial. I have tried several bottles, and have now obtained relief, and I feel that I can recommend it to my friends.

Yours, very truly,

Geo. H. Gogg

Twenty-fourth and Broadway.

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal., Oct. 20, 1881.

Messrs. H. H. Warner & Co.

Gentlemen: I have been suffering with kidney complaint for the past seven years. My sufferings were great in the back, loins and bladder. I had tried many remedies, but found no relief. Being now old, as the cold always settles in my kidneys, I was induced by a physician who prescribed your Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, to give it a trial. I have tried several bottles, and have now obtained relief, and I feel that I can recommend it to my friends.

Yours, very truly,

M. C. Quinby

506 Stockton Street.

SAN JOSE, Cal., Nov. 8, 1881.

Messrs. H. H. Warner & Co.

Gentlemen: Was afflicted with yellow jaundice and kidney complaint. Your Kidney and Liver Cure was recommended to me. Took two bottles, a complete cure was effected. After being known and used in all the civilized countries in the world.

For Sale by all Druggists.

NERVOUS DEBILITY.

A CURE GUARANTEED.

DR. E. C. WEST'S NERVE AND BRAIN TREATMENT, a specific for Hysteria, Dizziness, Convulsions, Nervous Headache, Nervous Prostration, Nervous Weakness, Leucorrhœa, Spermatorrhœa, Impotency, Premature Old Age, Loss of Memory, Wakefulness, Nervous Irritability, Seminal Emissions, Sexual Decay and Death. One box will cure ordinary cases. Six boxes are sufficient to cure the worst cases. It is a box, or six boxes for $5, sent by mail prepaid on receipt of price. Each package contains enough for a month's treatment. Will cure any one from the effects of abuse or excess. Six boxes will, and the medicine is so compounded, no change in diet is necessary. It does not affect even. Guarantees issued only when the money is received direct from the agent. Address, F. RICHARDS & CO., wholesale druggists, 327 and 329 Sansome street, San Francisco, Sole agents Pacific coast.

—$1,500 a year can be easily made at home working for E. Ridout & Co., 10 Barclay street, New York. Send for their catalogue and full particulars.

MISCELLANEOUS.

J. O'KANE,

MANUFACTURER AND DEALER IN

Harness, Saddles, Whips, Blankets, Boots, Etc.

767 MARKET ST

Special attention given to the manufacture of "Boots" of all kinds for ladies, which manufactured in the most superior manner, of the best stock and lasts. The frequency of these attacks caused me to labor to find out the cause and remedy, and I passed through months of severe suffering, and finally succeeded in curing myself. Since then I have passed from the city to take the hackney I experienced relief from the regular use of the kidneys resin the top hose, down to fresh and wing fine cures, and I am satisfied with dispatch of the whole case natural. Hand and foot power, of the pa. to particulars, by return mail every mail. Hand and foot power, of the pa. Enlarged at times, the pain were so severe that they sometimes almost to convulsions. I consulted some of the best physicians in the city, but they failed to do me any good. A specialist, they told me that I could procure a remedy through a friend in good health attending the use of your Kidney and Liver Cure in kidney diseases, I commenced taking it about six months ago. After taking the first bottle, I passed five stones which were pain, which I have had no symptoms of so long. Yours, etc.

Yours, very truly,

J. O'Leary

OAKLAND, Cal., Nov. 11, 1881.

Messrs. H. H. Warner & Co.

Gentlemen: I have been suffering with kidney complaint for the past seven years. My sufferings were great in the back, loins and bladder. I had tried many remedies, but found no relief. Being now old, as the cold always settles in my kidneys, I was induced by a physician who prescribed your Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, to give it a trial. I have tried several bottles, and have now obtained relief, and I feel that I can recommend it to my friends.

Yours, very truly,

Geo. H. Gogg

Twenty-fourth and Broadway.

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal., Oct. 20, 1881.

Messrs. H. H. Warner & Co.

Gentlemen: I have been suffering with kidney complaint for the past seven years. My sufferings were great in the back, loins and bladder. I had tried many remedies, but found no relief. Being now old, as the cold always settles in my kidneys, I was induced by a physician who prescribed your Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, to give it a trial. I have tried several bottles, and have now obtained relief, and I feel that I can recommend it to my friends.

Yours, very truly,

M. C. Quinby

506 Stockton Street.

SAN JOSE, Cal., Nov. 8, 1881.

Messrs. H. H. Warner & Co.

Gentlemen: Was afflicted with yellow jaundice and kidney complaint. Your Kidney and Liver Cure was recommended to me. Took two bottles, a complete cure was effected. After being known and used in all the civilized countries in the world.

For Sale by all Druggists.

INSURANCE

COMMERCIAL INSURANCE COMPANY OF CALIFORNIA

FIRE AND MARINE.

Capital fully paid $200,000 00
Assets January 1, 1882 377,457 86
Losses paid since organization 800,000 00

PRINCIPAL OFFICE

405 California Street, S. F.

CHAS. A. LATOS, President. JOHN H. WISE, President of CALIFORNIA.

F. J. WHITE, Secy. Jas. FORMAN, Vice-Pres't

R. H. Warner, Sec'y

WESTERN Fire and Marine Insurance Co

609 California St., San Francisco.

CAPITAL STOCK - - $200,000

Board of Trustees—James Phelan, W. H. Dodge, Thos. Jennings, Henry Cheeseborough, J. Wise, Wm. H. Leet, Market Isaac, J. Wilkinson, S. N. Clarke, John Ely, W. J. Gorham.

Losses Promptly Paid.

Risks taken as low as will responsible company.

FIRE AND MARINE INSURANCE

UNION INSURANCE COMPANY

OF SAN FRANCISCO,

THE CALIFORNIA LLOYDS,

ESTABLISHED IN 1861

Nos. 416 and 418 California Street

CAS H CAPITAL $250,000 GOLD

FAIR RATES. PROMPT SETTLEMENT OF LOSSES. SOLID SECURITY.

DIRECTORS:

SAN FRANCISCO

E. Sweeney, Lt. Ford, Moses Heller, N. Ketcha, M. J. O'Connor, J. Donahoe, Daniel Meyer, Adam Grant, Antonio Rosti, Charles Kohl, Joseph Seligman, Rudolph Ulrich, J. Lawrence Pond, N. Wolf, N. Ransom.

Nicholas Luning, John Parrish, James Moffitt, J. Foster, M. D. Sweeny, James Mac-Crackin, Gustave Touchard, Jas. Phelan, Geo. Hickman, J. B. Lunt, Charles Bacon, W. H. Howard, Williams Scott, Wm. Sherman, Ed. Gallagher, Gustave Touchard.

A. B. FRASER, President.

GUSTAVE TOUCHARD, Vice-President.

N. G. KITTLE, Vice-President.

JAS. D. BAILEY, Secretary.

GEO. THOMAS, Surveyor.

EMPLOYMENT, ETC.

O'BRIEN & WARD'S EMPLOYMENT OFFICE

508 Clay Street.

Opposite Clay street Pack, and a few doors HAS ALWAYS ON HAND Good Help, Farm Hands, Teamsters, Dairymen, Shepherds, Gardeners, Mechanics, Carpenters, Masons, and laborers of all kinds, and employs for private families and ranches without any charge to employers.

MISCELLANEOUS.

FURLONG & MANSEAU.

MANUFACTURERS OF

Silver and Walnut SHOW CASES.

518 Market Bet. 4th & 5th, up stairs

Sewing Machine Agency,

NO. 151 FOURTH ST.

San Francisco

BIG REWARD

will be paid for any case of Piles, Constipation, Sick Headache, Nervous Debility, Kidney Complaint, Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint, Dizziness, Costiveness, Blotches, Blood Humors, Female Weakness, Dull Pain in the Back, Nervous Irritability, Low Spirits, Want of Energy, Want of Appetite, Loss of Memory, Universal Lassitude, Pain in the Limbs, Sudden Flushes of Heat, Burning in the Flesh, Cold Feet, Cold Hands, Cold Sweats, Night Sweats, Nervous Jerking, Sleeplessness, Cough, Asthma, Dry Skin, Eruptions, Pimples, Tetter, Salt Rheum, Pain in the Head, Fever, Chills, Nervous Headache, Nervous Prostration, Nervous Weakness, Dizziness, Sexual Decay, Seminal Emissions, Spermatorrhœa, Impotency, Premature Old Age, Loss of Sexual Power, Wakefulness, Dyspepsia, Biliousness, Dropsy, Gravel, Pain in the Back, Kidneys, Liver and Urinary Organs, Diseases of the Urinary Organs, Dimness of Vision, Premature Decay, Nervous Irritability, Low Spirits

WEEK'S NEWS FROM IRELAND.

[CONCLUDED FROM FIRST PAGE.]

The Irish Question.

NEW YORK, May 21.—A cable special to the Herald from London May 20th says: Irish politics are still the subject of the hour, but a strange and unexpected calmness has come over the scene. Whether this portends coming storm or indicates the prevalence of milder counsels in the Parnellite camp, it is hard to say. The result of last night's debate on the Expression bill proved a surprise. The very mild resolution passed by the Irish party, and their action in the House, seems to show that they intend to try a waiting game. The Irish party are not generally considered to have acted sensibly. Their action was not significant. Once fairly in the debate—we have arrived at the turning point of the history of Irish agitation. Healy spoke for an the waiting man. Webbers are about that the Irish peasantry consider that they had been betrayed by Parnell, and that the Land League is beginning to feel the effects of war. They have spent their money freely in furthering their objects, and the funds are lessening and the will is almost wind bell. This is thought to have much to do with the new departure.

Davitt's Manchester Address.

LONDON, May 21.—Michael Davitt, in addressing a meeting of Irishmen at Manchester, declared "that nobody lamented the recent murders more than he did, and nobody was earlier to express such crimes in the future. He declared that without the presence of the police and military the property of Irish landlords would not be worth a month's purchase. There could be no alliance between Irishmen and English Whigs until landlordism was abolished, and the Government could not expect cooperation with the secret society movement, when it was made to appear that such a movement was only for the protection of a wrapped people. If Hamiltons was earnest in the endeavor to suppress crime, he must go to the source of all agrarian outrages and remove landlordism, sweep away Dublin Castle and show he could repose confidence in Ireland, or in vain."

A Riot at Limerick.

DUBLIN, May 21.—The statement is untrue that crops has been affixed to the residence of Gerald Griffin's also and a representation of a coffin left on his doorstep.

Seventeen houses have been burned at Middleton, County Cork, and seventy persons rendered homeless.

Her, Father Cheeby, who returned from Kilmalock, was received with an ovation.

In a riot at Limerick between the police and people, the latter were charged on the street with fixed bayonets, and several persons were injured.

Parnell Wishes to Resign.

LONDON, May 21.—The leaders of the Land League oppose Parnell's contemplated resignation of his seat, though he has strongly urged his desire to resile on the continent for awhile.

The Government intends to permit the Coercion Act to lapse when the passage of the Expression bill.

The Expression Bill Passed to its Second Reading.

NEW YORK, May 20.—A cable special from London says: Rather unexpectedly the debate on the second reading of the Expression bill came to a close this afternoon, the division showing a majority of 338 in favor of the principles of the measure. The minority was composed entirely of Land Leaguers and a few of the most advanced Radicals. The only noteworthy incident in the discussion was the admission of Mr Gladstone that the main I ans of the bill, and the motives which prompted it, induced the Government in carrying it forward with all possible energy, had reference, not so much to those persons of rank and station, who had become victims of the fury of criminals, as to the manner which had been received by the with among the people of Ireland by the Nationalist members of Parliament and others. The measure will be further proceeded with next Tuesday, and there is now every ground for believing that it will become a law before the House adjourns for the Whitsuntide recess.

Dillon stated that he had a letter from Patrick Egan, denying the assertion of Forster relative to Sheridan, and said Forster should either prove the truth of his statement or retract it.

Parnell spoke very moderately. He hoped that with the passage of the Arrears bill and the amendments to the Land Act the Land League agitation might be ended.

The bill passed to its second reading by a vote of 368 to 45.

O'Shea, member of Parliament, writes to the Freeman's Journal that, in regards the denial of Forster, that he (O'Shea) never suggested that the last plan was for O'Shea to privately visit Kilmainham Jail. O'Shea says that Forster's report of their conversation is inaccurate, but that he (O'Shea) found Forster nervous and excited concerning other matters to such an extent that in writing the order for O'Shea to visit Kilmainham he mistakenly another pass for O'Shea.

A Prowling Irish-American

Thomas O'Connor, an Irish-American was arrested in Windsor castle, grounds of the Duke of Devonshire, on Friday night last, on the charge of being there unlawfully.

Guards Doubled.

In consequence of an anonymous Fenian threat the guards at the Government establishment at Tyrawith are doubled.

Notes.

It is said that the Marquis of Waterford will call the attention of the House of Lords on Monday to the Kilmainham compact.

There is a serious strain on the finances of the Land League, owing to the number of evicted tenants the League has to support.

Collings, Dillon, Healy, Sheridan, Thompson, Sexton, Marathon, Cowan, Taylor and Lalemant were in the minority against a second reading of the Expression bill.

One result of the murders in Dublin will probably be the organization of a new detective force in Ireland.

The police constantly search Parnell's grave.

THE GOVERNMENT'S DIFFICULTIES.

NEW YORK, May 21.—A cable special to the Tribune from London, of May 20th, says: Last night's victory, immense though the majority was for the Prevention of Crime bill, removes few of the most serious difficulties which the Government have yet to confront. The radical opposition to certain features, especially the composition of the new tribunals, will be renewed with increased vigor when the amendments are introduced. It is not improbable that the bill will be passed through the Committee of the House of Lords without any material alteration, while the bill is passed through the Commons. The Irish members will take the same course Mr Parnell continues a peculiar attitude, being apparently disinclined to carry out his Kilmainham pledge to support the Government, but directing the direction of his influence in Ireland by an open acquiescence in the measures for the prevention of crime. Nobody seems quite sure how far the provisions of which it is believed was shattered by the amendments, are capable of being revived. Mr. Parnell's leadership of the Parliamentary Party is openly challenged. The section of the Liberal Party which regards the assertion of authority as the first duty in Ireland is apprehensive lest the efficiency of the bill should be impaired by accepting Parnell as an accomplice. They think that Mr Gladstone is disposed to relax the stringency on certain points for the sake of securing, Irish Parnell's support, and secondly for the purpose of attaching some chaos of the Irish people to the side of law and order. Neither the Whigs nor Conservatives are likely to regard such a policy favorably. Mr Gladstone announced on last night that nothing will be sacrificed which is essential to the principle of the measure, failed to reassure all of his supporters. Mr Trevelyan's first speech, as chief Secretary, was received with general cheers, and convinced the House of the disposition of the Irish Executive to avail themselves of the full power of the new bill.

THE KILMAINHAM COMPACT,

PARNELL CRITICISES

The debate of Monday and Tuesday, involving the disclosures of the Kilmainham negotiations, accompanied by the avowal of the state-paper suppression of a part of Mr. Parnell's letter, seemingly hurt the Government throughout the country. There is a marked change in the tone of the Ministerial press, even from the leading Liberal papers declaring that the attempt to deceive the House and the country was among the most scandalous incidents of Parliamentary history. Few Birds of the existence of such a thing can be found in the London Press, but it is, nevertheless, whispered.

Good Advice.

Our family for the past five years has been kept in good health by using Smith's Cinqua Tonic. It prevents malaria, lowtache, and all nervous complaints. Cures more aches and pains than any known remedy. Depot 1023 Market st.

Market Report.

MONTHLY REPORT BY J. C. DAVIS, 305 AND 307 MARKET STREET.

MERCANTILE MARKET,
422 Clay St., Tuesday Evening, May 23, 1882

WEEKLY REVIEW.

Values were well sustained on all cereals Monday, Barley being active at an advance. Sales of the California Board were heavy and business was conducted with unusual vigor. Potatoes were advanced at last week's prices. Butter and Eggs advanced. Poultry was firm and active. Strawberries and Cherries are declining.

DOMESTIC PRODUCE MARKET.

The quotable values represent exclusive prices for round lots and are made up from actual transactions. Extreme quotations are only be realized for Produce that comes up to the standard of choice in every respect, and the lowest quotation and rare taken in preparing Produce for market are very closely examined by buyers.

Flour—
Quotations are: City Extras, $5 75@5 50; City Superfine, $5 75@5 25; Interior brands, $4 50@5 00; for extra, and $3 50@4 00 for superfine.

Wheat—
Quotations are: Standard No. 1 Shipping, $1 37@1 40; No. 2, $1 37@1 40 per cental; Extra Uniform, $1 72@1 8.

Barley—
Quotations are: Feed, 82 1/2@82 37; Garnet Chili, $1 75@1 90; River Red, $2 12@2 1 ; Tomales, $2 75@2 80; Oregon Bordeu, $1 90@1 80; Burbank Seedlings, $1 80@2 00; Early Ohio, $2 25@2 50; Peachblow, $2 50@2 80; Peach Blows, $2 75@3 00; Sweet, $2 00@2 50; Early Rose, $1 90@2 00.

Oats—
Quotations are: White, New Crop, 65@70 c; Gray, 65@70; Black, 60@65 c.

Corn—
Quotable at $1 60@1 65 00 per ton; table meal, $35 00@40 00.

Beans—
Quotable at 3 25@3 50 per ℔ lb.

Butter—
Quotations are: Choice fresh roll Butter, 30@35c; Fancy, 31@ c; Medium do, 20@25c; Pickled, 17@20c; Pickled, 14@20c; Eastern Butter, 18@22c ℔ lb.

Cheese—
Quotations are: California Cheese, 11@14c; Eastern, 16@20c; Gilroy Imitation Eastern, 17@19c ℔ lb.

Poultry—
Quotations are: Live Turkeys, 17@20c; Dressed, 17@20; Ducks, $7 00@8 00; Hens, $4 00@6 00; Hens, $6 00@7 50; Young Roosters, $7 00@11 00; Old, $5 00@6 50; Geese, $1 25@2 75 ℔ pair; Pigeons, $3 00; Squabs, $3 50@3 50 ℔ doz.

Eggs—
Quotable at 20@25c for choice; 18@20c for ordinary; California, 18c; Eastern, 20@25c; Salt Lake, —@—; Oregon, 22@25c ℔ doz.

Dessert Fruit—
Quotations are: California Oranges, $3 50@4 25 ℔ box; California Lemons, $1 50@2 00; Malaga, $6 00@8 00 ℔ drum; Mexican Oranges, $5 00@6 00 ℔ hundred; Mexican Lemons, $10 00@12 00; California limes, 50c@$1 25 ℔ box, and $3 00@4 00 ℔ large, day Bananas, $2 50@3 00 ℔ bunch; Pine Apples, $7 50@8 ℔ dozen; Apples, $1 25@2 25; Oranges, do, $1 75 ℔ box; Pears, 75@$1 00 ℔ box; Quinces, $1 50@2 ℔ box.

Vegetables—
Quotations are: Cabbage, 60@75c ℔ ctl; Garlic, 1@1c ℔ lb; Marrowfat Squash, $10 00@12 00 ℔ ton; Cauliflower, 75 ℔ doz.; Egg Plants, dry, 20@25c ℔ lb; Dry Onions, 3c ℔ lb; Turnips, 50c ℔ bag; Carrots, 60@75 ℔ sack; Beets, 60@75c ℔ sack; Green Peas, 12@15c ℔ lb; Lima Beans, 10@12c ℔ lb; Sweet Potatoes, 3@4c ℔ lb; Cucumbers, 50@75c ℔ box; Tomatoes, 50@75c ℔ box; Green Corn, 25@50c ℔ doz; Asparagus, 50c ℔ box; Rhubarb, 2@3c ℔ lb; Horse Radish, 10@12

Poetry.

TIRED MOTHERS.

BY MRS. AUBREY SMITH.

A little elf-like form upon her knee,
Your tired head, that has so much to bear!
A child's clear eye now looking lovingly!
From sodden wrath a thatch of tangled hair.
Perhaps you do not feel the velvet touch
Of warm, moist fingers, lolling pouts at night.
You do not notice this blessing over much;
You almost are too tired to pray to-night.

But it is blessedness! A year ago
I did not see it so clearly,
We are so dull and blind, we do not know
To catch the sunbeam as it slips away.
And now it seems strange, strange to me
That while I was in the lodge of motherhood
I did not know more oft and tenderly
The little child that brought me only good.

And if some night, when you sit down to rest,
You miss the elfin face from your tired knee,
This restless, curling head from off your breast,
This laughe tongue that chatters constantly;
If from your ears the dimpled hand had slipped,
And never would settle in your aching neck;
If the white feet into their grave had tripped,
I could not blame you for your heartache then!

I wonder so that mothers ever fret
At little children clinging to their gown;
Or that the patter, patter, when the day is wet,
Are ever taken enough to make them frown.
If I could find a little muddy boot,
Or cap, or jacket on my chamber floor;
If I could hear a step, restless but,
Ah! how its patter in my home once more!

If I could send a broken cart to-day,
To-morrow make a kite to reach the sky—
There is no wealth in the world could pay
She was more blissfully content than I.
But, ah! the dainty pillow next my own
Is never rumpled by a shining head;
My darling slumbers in a softer one
Than ever I used to kiss in bed.

Literary Miscellany.

A Singular Conversion.

THE INFLUENCE OF A CHILD OF MARY.

We often hear it lamented that such and such a one should be condemned to a life of obscurity, and consequent uselessness, whose great abilities or admirable virtues would be of so much service to the world without seeming to remember that the ability which is exerted for the good of the domestic circle, or the virtue which teaching by example, acts beneficially upon the humblest member of society, cannot be without its result to mankind at large; for though it be true that; in the language of the poet, "Full many a flower is born to blush unseen, In the moral as well as in the natural world, it is not true that it is "wasted its sweetness on the desert air."

The position of Mrs. Selwood was by no means a commanding one in society—her husband being nothing more than a simple mechanic, and will know that a woman's social position depends altogether on that of her husband. But although poor in the common sense of the term, the poverty of the Selwoods was rather comparative than actual; for though the earnings of the husband were small, the excellent management of the wife contrived to make them supply all the real wants of her family, and besides laying by a small sum for future exigencies, and giving a little to the necessitous, to add something to the elegance of life, in the articles of clothing and furniture, and above all, of books. Books were, indeed, the only extravagance the husband and father indulged; and, as he had a portion of her time to bestow, he was fond of reading aloud to her such passages as he thought most worthy of attention. But the Selwoods were not all alone; they had been from early youth a sweet affer the wife, who had received a fragment of a shell in his side. He was one of the few who had escaped the massacre, and rather was drawn towards him on the side of pity, and turned wonderfully away. I gave myself up for lost as the sulphurous waves rose up to engulph me, when your voice awoke me, and I rejoice to find that I am not yet beyond hope."

"Then do not, I pray you," replied his wife, "struggle any longer against your eternal happiness—submit yourself to the teaching of that Church which Christ has appointed to be a mother to His children."

The heart of Selwood was penetrated at last, the scales of prejudice fell from his eyes, and after attentively and properly attending to the instructions of the priest who was placed over the little flock, he became convinced of the truth of Christianity as taught by the Catholic Church.

A SISTER OF MERCY.

A writer describing the war between Chili and Peru, thus speaks of a Sister of Mercy on the battle field.

"I recall no incident in the wealth of romance or tragedy in which the history of a SISTER OF MERCY had been with so amazing to "fix a cannoner who had received a fragment of a shell in his side. He was one of the few who had escaped the massacre, and rather was drawn towards him on the side of pity, and turned wonderfully away. I gave myself up for lost as the sulphurous waves rose up to engulph me, when your voice awoke me, and I rejoice to find that I am not yet beyond hope."

"Then do not, I pray you," replied his wife, "struggle any longer against your eternal happiness—submit yourself to the teaching of that Church which Christ has appointed to be a mother to His children."

The heart of Selwood was penetrated at last, the scales of prejudice fell from his eyes, and after attentively and properly attending to the instructions of the priest who was placed over the little flock, he became convinced of the truth of Christianity as taught by the Catholic Church.

A SISTER OF MERCY.

A writer describing the war between Chili and Peru, thus speaks of a Sister of Mercy on the battle field.

"I recall no incident in the wealth of romance or tragedy in which the history of

A SISTER OF MERCY

THE MONITOR.
TWENTY FIFTH YEAR OF PUBLICATION
WEDNESDAY, MAY 31, 1882.

The Month of the Sacred Heart.

The beautiful devotions with which Catholics honored the Blessed Virgin during the month of May will expire to-day, and let us hope that those who have given glory to the Mother of God may be sharers in that supreme celestial happiness which is the reward of every faithful child of Mary.

The Church, like the thoughtful Mother that she is, has given her children new subjects for religious meditation during each succeeding month in the year, and with what tender solicitude does she not implore her children to follow the devotions thus prescribed. May has vanished, but how appropriately Mary's month leads us to the Sacred Heart of Jesus! The Mother leads us to the Son, and there we find that Sacred Heart open to receive our petitions and to grant our prayers!

The beautiful and fruitful devotion to the Sacred Heart of Jesus was revealed by our Divine Lord Himself to Blessed Mother Margaret Mary about two hundred years ago, and, despite the opposition which it met with at its introduction, has spread throughout the world until it has become as universal as the Church itself. It pointed Almighty God to establish this devotion in 1675 through a vision to a simple member of the Order of the Visitation Nuns, in the Convent of Parray-le-Monial, Burgundy, and in the vision which this Religious was favored with our Lord promised to pour out the treasures of His Divine love upon all who would practice and propagate devotion to the Sacred Heart of Jesus.

The promises which our Lord made to Blessed Margaret Mary are thus summarized in the beautiful life of this devoted Sister:

1. I will give them the graces necessary for their state.
2. I will give peace in their families.
3. I will comfort them in all their trials and afflictions.
4. I will be their refuge in life and death.
5. I will bestow abundant blessings on all their undertakings.
6. Sinners shall find My Heart an ocean of mercy.
7. Tepid souls shall become fervent.
8. Fervent souls shall advance rapidly towards perfection.
9. I will bless every dwelling in which an image of My Heart will be exposed and honored.
10. I will give priests a peculiar facility in converting the most hardened souls.
11. Those who spread the devotion shall have their names written in My Heart, never to be effaced.

These are the promises made by our Lord Himself, and these spiritual graces and temporal blessings can be obtained by all simply regardless of station or calling in life. In establishing this devotion our Blessed Lord has not confined His celestial favors to the few, but has opened wide the treasury of His Sacred Heart so as to embrace all who give Him their love in prayer and pious practices through the performance of this duty that they have received both spiritual and temporal favors through this devotion. This is set forth in a thousand ways, which even the fallible mind of man can fathom; the house where the picture of the Sacred Heart is found will be blessed with peace and contentment, the families where this devotion is practiced will find the pleasure of that peace which is known only to those who bask in the perpetual sunshine of the smile of God; even to temporal undertakings a blessing is promised, and whatever the Son of God says He will do, that we may fasten our faith to as firmly as the Church of God is fastened to the Rock of Christ.

We could cite innumerable cases where the blessings of piety, peace and prosperity fell upon families who followed this devotion, but just at this juncture we find two letters published in an Eastern contemporary which set forth the results of this divinely-established devotion so vividly that no Catholic can refuse to doubt their truth. Let these examples, then, move every reader of the MONITOR to practice this devotion at least during the month of June, and leave the result in the hands of Him whose overflowing bounty has promised a blessing for even a cup of cold water given to His name. The Church at this crisis needs the prayers of the faithful in every land; apostacy and blatant infidelity are turning the heads of the multitude away from the Cross to and fixing the public gaze upon temporal glitter and fleeting fashion, and one of the most potent means through which Catholics can change this downward course of error is to pray for the conversion of the world through the mercy of the Sacred Heart of Jesus.

Read these letters carefully and ponder on the particular results therein set forth:

THE EXPERIENCE OF A LAYMAN IN REFERENCE TO THE PROMISED REWARD OF BLESSED MARGARET MARY—AN EXPERIMENT THAT MAY BE EASILY TRIED.

To the Editor of The Catholic Review:

BOSTON, May 3, 1882.

I was very glad to see, in your last issue, the extract from the Messenger of the Sacred Heart, in regard to the consoling promises of our Lord to the pious observers of the month of May, which relative Holy Communion on nine Fridays. There is another promise, historically important, with this, made to the same Blessed Margaret Mary, to which I desire, with your kind permission, to call the attention of your readers. I mean the promise that he will bless every household in which a picture or statue of His Sacred Heart is exposed and venerated. Unfortunately, there are great many Catholics, especially those who have been admitted to our public schools, who have no faith in those extra-ordinary manifestations to the saints, in the women, I understand, there are great many Catholics, especially those who have been educated in

Farm and Home.

A Talk About Housework.

Girls whose parents can afford to keep servants, get the impression sometimes that it is quite out of the question to engage in any kind of household work, some even learning the care of her room to the charge of hired help. Such girls grow up in the embodiments of laziness. There is no reason why every girl should not understand the running of the household machinery, so that if at any time mother were sick and unable to oversee the need arrangements, her daughter might be able to take her place, managing satisfactorily. It is a false notion that to become a housekeeper is to become also a domestic drudge, and if any of the girls who read this have made up their minds to that effect, let them abandon it instantly, and by experience prove it a blunder.

When there are two sisters in a family a good plan is to divide the work, each one being responsible for that portion that is entrusted to her. Let each understand clearly what is expected of her, not doing it haphazardly, but promptly and regularly each week; or the work could be alternated, if this arrangement would be more agreeable.

One reason we would give in favour of household work is, that it gives them a chance to learn the many details connected with women's work that cannot be learned in any other way than by experience, and without which knowledge no woman can govern a house well. We don't want to convey the impression that the girl should shoulder the entire responsibility of her home, but simply so, when her hour comes, she may be able to know how to do, should it ever become necessary. Housework is not degrading; on the contrary, we consider it elevating, for it helps to make homes happy. And a girl can be just as much of a lady in her sweeping-cap, with broom in hand, as in breakfast-cap, reclining with book in hand. The truest, noblest, and best woman we know, has been trained from her girl hood to look, practically, to the ways of the household, and yet she is a lady in every respect, an ornament to the most cultured society.

When you have homes of your own, girls, and obliged to get along with little or no help, you will be thankful for the training you have imposed upon yourself in youth, or if it fails to your lot to have servants in abundance, you will still be glad that you can rule and direct them, and should they leave you without any warning, as they are sometimes disposed to do, you will be "mistress of the situation," able to take hold successfully until such time as relief may come.

Agriculture in the Holy Land.

Nothing can well exceed the desolateness of much of this country. Treeless it is for twenty or thirty miles together. Forests which did exist thirty years ago (for instance, on Mount Carmel and Mount Tabor) are fast disappearing. Rich plains of the finest grass-seed, asking to be cultivated, are at best but scratched up a few inches deep in patches with no hedges or boundaries; mountain terraces, naturally or artificially formed, are ready to be planted with vines, as the German colony is doing at the foot of Mount Carmel. The villages are nothing but mud huts, dirt, dust and squalor; the inhabitants with scarce clothing enough for decency; their houses like cranes. There are large tracts without a horse or cow, sheep or dog. They make no pretence at roads, except that from Jaffa to Jerusalem, which is like a cart-road over a pigsweed field—the rest at best are like sheep-walks on the Downs of Sussex, but for far the most part like the dry bed of a most rocky river where, amid blocks of stone, each nation has way at a foot-pace as best he can, or on smooth, sloping rocks, or over loose stones thrown down from the old walls on either side, which no one offers a finger to remove. Nothing quick wheels, not so much as a barrow, is to be met with in a ride of over three hundred miles.

Every thing is taxed, every fruit-tree, so none now are planted; every cow or horse, etc.; every vegetable sold out of a private garden. Every eighth egg is not taxed, but taken by the government. In some places the taxes of the district are sold to the highest bidder. The farmer is unable to sell a measure of his corn till all has been collected into a heap and the tax-gatherer has sat his seal upon it, from which there is no appeal. Double taxes are expected this year, because, after three years of enormous, the harvest promises to be abundant.

Nothing like a small farmhouse is to be found far or near. If there was, the owner is liable to have soldiers or twenty officers quartered upon him, to be fed and lodged at his expense. The tonnage fifty in the extreme, none more so than Jerusalem itself, where, however, taxes are levied from every house for lighting and cleaning the streets, while a spranned ankle or a splash into a hole of blackest dirt is sure to be the result of a momentary carelessness.

Nothing is done for the good or improvement of the people or the land by the government. Not only so, but every offer (and I heard of several made by private individuals, or by companies) is at once refused, unless a bribe be given to the authorities.

Then the picture, I believe in no way over-drawn, of that land which was once "flowing with milk and honey." What might it not become again with fair usage and good government! But there is no hope for Palestine while it remains in the hands of its present rulers.

Good for Babies.

When I have a baby at breast nothing is so sound for quieting my own and baby's nerves as Parker's Ginger Tonic. It prevents bowel complaint and is better than any stimulant to give strength and appetite.—A Newark Mother.

In the Whole History of Medicine

No preparation has ever performed such marvellous cures, or maintained so wide a reputation, as AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL, which is recognized as the world's remedy for all diseases of the throat and lungs. Its long-continued series of wonderful cures in all climates has made it universally known as a safe and reliable agent to employ against the ordinary ailments, which are the forerunners of more serious disorders, it acts promptly and surely, always relieving suffering, and often saving life. The production is offered, by its timely use, to those threatened with chronic disorders, makes it an invaluable remedy to be kept always at hand in every home. No person can afford to do without it, and those who have once used it never will. To those whose occupations or exposures induce coughs, colds, or other ailments, physicians use the CHERRY PECTORAL extensively in their practice, and strongly recommend it. It is absolutely certain in its curative effects, and will cure the many ills where cures are possible.

FOR SALE BY ALL DEALERS.

A Valuable Addition

Because it is beneficial to the scalp and adds personal beauty by restoring color and lustre to gray or faded hair is why Parker's Hair Balsam is such a popular dressing.

—$1,000 a year can be easily made at home working for E. G. Hilbert & Co., 19 Barclay street, New York. Send for their catalogue and full particulars.

Tell your friends of Ammen's Cough Syrup. Cable—Ammen's Cough Syrup.

TRUTH ATTESTED.

Some Important Statements of Well-known People Wholly Verified.

In order that the public may fully realize the genuineness of the testimonials we now publish and publish the "Sunshine Magazine of perfect health" we have to say that the cures are as much more than mortals should, not merely in degree, but in the kind of cures, and in the fact that they are permanent.

[illegible]

Monroe, H. H. Warner & Co.

GENTLEMEN: I have been suffering for the past four years with disease of the kidneys and inflammation of the bladder. I was so lame I could not walk without great pain, and was so lame I could not walk without great pain, and was so lame I could not walk without great pain, and

ENGLISH CIVILIZATION.

BY FRANCIS CARR.

PART II.

No English historian pretends to assert the English were attempted to civilize Ireland, no that any law was ever passed by her Parliament for her relief, or to benefit her condition. All the laws that were ever enacted by the English for Ireland were acts of confiscation, coercion, "penal acts," "gagging acts," "penal statutes" (I rather said with "Hibernia," about in every sense and in every line." They passed laws debasing the Irish to universal enslavement, and for confiscating their churches, monasteries and schools. The whole English code affecting Ireland is well described by Edmund Burke: "They (the penal laws) were written in blood and tears upon the hill." No English rule was made into Ireland with any other motive than robbery and bloodshed. Tyldey is the man who first discovered that Ireland was "civilized" by Ireland. But may it not be said "our civilization is of Anglo-Saxon origin, as well as our liberties at the present day?" I say it is not, for the Anglo-Saxons were not civilized at any period of their history, and even their descent has only partially survived. Let us hear the [illegible] ANGLO-SAXONS MAILAN.

"And what he says of the "civilization" of the Anglo-Saxons: "The Saxons brought with them from their original home a rude and barbarous tongue no any of the dialects which overturned the Roman Empire, and their attempts with the Britons could not have contributed to polish their manners. The royal authority was weak and little had been learned of that regular system of government which the Franks and Goths had derived from the provincial Romans among whom they were settled. No property, no arts, no skill, no incentive to industry, no motive for [illegible] existing out of family ties, remained." Hallam's History of the Middle Ages, p. 1[illegible]

Our authority above cited further says that among the Anglo-Saxons "No man could leave the shire to which he belonged without the permission of his ealdorman. No man could be without a lord on whom he depended, though he might pick his powerful patron, it was under the condition of engaging himself to another. If he left his lord, or if his kinsmen were bound to present him in the county court, and to answer for him in his stead. Thus the wave done he might be seized by any one who met him as a robber. Among those murder was committed on payment of three lord. Both were held to be chattels, and it was a maxim of the common law that the child of a slave mother, even by a father who was a freeman, was also a slave (Turton, ancient laws). The contrary was the rule of the Roman law. The flogging of a freeman by a slave master was impossible of the dream of slavery.

As this article is already too long, I shall close for the present, and I, in your next issue, if you deem the subject worthy of publication, continue the inquiry into the "civilization" of the people, who are said to have "civilized" Ireland in the twelfth century. From the a-libertine, all English, which I have cited, the reader can fully appreciate the worth of the poet, that those "civilizers" were despoiled.

"From the most wounded rave than were lived."

MARKET REPORT.

MONTHLY CIRCULAR.

☞ City 28, Tuesday Evening, May 30, 1882.

WEEKLY REVIEW.

The market for cereals was moderately active during the latter part of the past week. In wheat several transfers were made on call which exhibited less confidence in future. Barley is a little weaker. Oats are steady. Rye is nominal and steady hold. Corn is fairly steady. Bran is weak and steady. Buckwheat sells Feed is weak. Butter and Eggs remain firm at good prices.

DOMESTIC PRODUCE MARKET.

There being no material change in last week's quotations, we omit the Report to make room for important dispatches.

New Advertisements.

PACIFIC STEAM
CARPET BEATING
And Renovating Works.
WHITENING
In all its Branches Thoroughly and Promptly Done.
OAKLAND BRANCH: Twelfth-first street and Telegraph ave. Time of cars which pass by the door each 30 Mail, Telephone at all our Offices.
333 GOLDEN GATE AVE.
CUNKLINGS BROS., PROPRIETORS.

EDUCATIONAL.
CAPTAIN McNEVIN,
Nautical Academy, 406 Beale street,
HAS MADE ARRANGEMENTS FOR THE SPECIAL instruction of young men who intend to follow the sea, in the art of navigation, and who desire a thorough training. The use of chart, plan, table of bearings, sextant, etc., is taught free, but only those attending the Pilot School, will each find a place. Boarding and lodging can be had on the premises. Terms, $5 per month. CAPT. McNEVIN, School of Navigation.

MONEY TO LOAN
PACIFIC BANK
Established 1863.
CAPITAL STOCK $1,000,000.00
Surplus 420,447.74
San Francisco, Feb. 9, 1882.
This Bank having a surplus of coin will make loans at a low rate of interest on satisfactory security.
M. M. McDONALD, President.

GUMMINGS & HARRINGTON,
BOOK SELLERS,
BOOK BINDERS,
Blank Book Manufacturers
AND PRINTERS,
509 CLAY STREET,
Above Sansome SAN FRANCISCO

MUSIC BAZAR, 141 STRATT WORK ST. Celebrated Steinway Pianos, Mason and Hamlin Organs, Sole agents for Sherman's Celebrated Band Instruments. Sheet music and music books. Pianos to rent, $5 per month. Pianos to rent allowed on purchase price. Weekly payment accepted. No extra charge. ☞ Send for circular.

CENTRAL PACIFIC HOTEL,
318 Fourth Street,
SAN FRANCISCO CAL.
Free Coach to and from the Hotel.
Board and Lodging $1 pr. Day
Board and Lodging $5 & $6 per Week.
M. FARRELL, Proprietor.

5 CT. TEMPERANCE
Coffee House and Restaurant.
30 SOLID, GENUINE HOME COOKING. PRICES reduced one day at noon each after Winter. Dinner, Breakfast, Lunch and Office Hours. 631 Clay street, bet. Sansome and Montgomery streets. Change of face every day. Coming to 5 ct. lady. open 5 a.m.

NEW MARKET.
QUEEN CITY MARKET,
FOR FIRST-CLASS
BEEF, VEAL, LAMB, AMERICAN MUTTON, PORK AND CORNED MEATS OF EVERY KIND, CANNOT BE BEAT.
THIS MARKET ALSO CHOICEST EASTERN HAMS, BACON & LARD.
Foreign Sausages Imported expressly for this Establishment.
CORNED BEEF AND PORK FOR SALE BY THE BARREL.
"QUEEN CITY MARKET."
1154 to 1158 MARKET STREET,
NEAR THE CORNER OF TAYLOR.
ZIMMERMAN & CO., Proprietors.

SUITS CLOTHING SUITS
$12.
Immense Reduction at J. S. HAND'S
314 KEARNY STREET.
SUITS CLOTHING SUITS
$18. $20.
Cheapest House, J. S. HAND'S
314 KEARNY STREET.
SUITS CLOTHING SUITS
$25. $30.
J. S. HAND, Merchant TAILOR and CLOTHIER.
314 KEARNY STREET.

New Advertisements.

GOOD NEWS!
20,000 CHINAMEN LEAVING
THE PACIFIC COAST ANNUALLY. THIS WILL have place within the proper will some interesting from directly or indirectly. The majority of persons who land directly with China are in no comparison with the number who patronize him indirectly, by buying the productions of the white country.
On the other hand there is good reason for all those who are more generally used this Health and Strength The Celestial White Labor should see that the goods they buy bear the name of a manufacturing firm should not deign Chinese.
THE UNITED WORKINGMEN'S Boot and Shoe Company would respectfully inform the public that they respectfully WILL HAVE. Go this Company a charge by some their business and employ none of the Celestial generation, giving our boys the course of earning a decent living. CALL FOR THE UNITED WORKINGMEN. Let no respectable citizen, Be sure they have the Stamp, no name on shoes.
"UNITED WORKINGMEN."
PACIFIC COAST LAND BUREAU.
LOAN BROKERS. WESTFIELD LANDS. 1 FIRST CLASS WARDS. CITY RESIDENCE ANGLO-CALIFORNIAN BANK.
CENTRAL BEAT OF BUSINESS.
32 MONTGOMERY ST. SAN FRANCISCO
Will Appear at each month and of the Mark. Agency. Lots in Lots, Blocks, Farming Lands. Lots Tracts established and sold at Auction.
CAPITAL STOCK $1,000,000.
SAN LUIS OBISPO LANDS.
60,000 Acres of Grazing Land from $1.25 upwards.
15,000 Acres of Fruit Lands in the Lower Salinas Valley, Adjoining Cities, Villages, Railroad Stations.
25,000 Acres, from $2 upwards, of Wheat Fig. Fruit Lands in the Upper Salinas Valley, Adjoining the Cities, Towns, Railroad Stations.
Lots in the Cities, Towns, Villages, Railroad Stations, Farming Lands, Fruit Lands, Wheat Lands, Grazing Lands, Lots in ENGLISH CIVILIZATION.

TO ANSWER THE

PART II.

No English historian pretends to assert that England ever attempted to civilize Ireland, or that any law was ever passed in her Parliament for her relief, or to benefit her subjects. All he knows that were ever enacted by the English for Ireland were acts of confiscation and "arrow acts, Coercion, "Insult statutes, and penal codes said with "blood, blood in every sold "now and in every line." They passed laws for arresting the Irish from receiving education, and for confiscating their churches, monasteries and schools. The whole English code affecting Ireland is well described by Edmund Burke: "They (the penal laws) were politic to blood and ingenious to hell." No English ruler was ever more cruel to Ireland with any other motive than robbery and bloodshed. Perhaps in the Irishman's pride, he discovered that Ireland was "civilized by England. But may it not be said "our civilization is of Anglo-Saxon origin, as well as Christian at the present day? I say it was so, for the Anglo-Saxons were not civilized at any period of their history, and even their language has only partially survived. Let us hear the

TESTIMONY OF THE ANGLO-SAXONS.

And what be some of the "civilization of the Anglo-Saxons? "The Saxons brought with them from their original forests at least as much religion as any of the tribes which inhabited the Roman Empire, and their attitude with the Britons was very much the same as that which the Britons bore to the Romans. The royal authority was weak, and the land was heated of that rigid system of government which the Franks and Lombards received from the provincial Romans among whom they were mingled. No people ever so much endeared to others, to nations many, yet for ever arising out of family revenge." History of the Middle Ages, p. 22, 23.

Our authority above cited further says that among the Anglo-Saxons, "No man could leave the shire to which he belonged without the permission of its sheriffs. No man could live with one a lord on whom he depended, should he might join his present patron, it was under the condition of engaging himself to another. If he failed in this, his kindred were bound to present him in the county court, and to make a bird for him themselves. Unless this were done he might be seized by any one who met him as a vagrant. Among these murders was one matter in passing of a foe. "The lives of the kings (the Saxon) varied at 1,200 shillings, the wehrd at 1,600 shillings, a ceorl (peasant) at 200 shillings. Tacitus, in speaking of the Saxon robbers, says, "Their whole power of Saxon robbers, is to commit a Wehrd-man or ceorl, from the possession; in war, robberies of all classes were sanctioned by the king's will and law." Tacitus, speaking of the Saxon state of things, continued "among them, in the time of the ancient conquerors, robbery was a thing of credit, a thing of honor, and a virtue." Edgert Bellamy, in his "Dawn of Light," says, "Tacitus, speaking of the Saxon robbers, compared them, "analogous to the Scythians, with naked arms." Saxon Christianity and civilization! Hodge, p. 22.

Tacitus, who wrote in the Saxon centuries, who had every opportunity of knowing the "civilization" of the Anglo-Saxons, describes them as "robbers and barbarians whelps from the kennel of barbarism hateful to God and man." The history of slavery which existed among those people is graphically described by J. R. Green, in a work already quoted, "the Short History of the English People, published by Harper & Bro., New York, 1870. The author of this work laid the results of examination in the school of modern history at the English University at Oxford, and knows whereof he writes.

"There had always been a slave class, a class of the native under the Saxon, Dane, and Norman, among the Saxon people, but the number of this class, if unaffected by the conquest of Britain, were swelled by the wars which were sprung up among the English conquerors. No one knew the prisoner taken in battle from the doom of slavery." Again this sacred historian continues, "The criminal whose kindred would not pay up his fine became the criminal of the plaintiff, or the king. Sometimes a father, pressed by need, sold his children and wife into bondage." Again this sacred historian continues, "The slave became a part of the civil law. The estate, to be alienated at death, or by will, or the law, whose property was held as tenants in common. The children were brought up in kinship, even the freeman's children, in a state mother, inherited the mother's condition. Freemen, shepherds, swineherd, ploughmen, hired, dairy maid, barn-boy, ploughman, and wood wait were born serfs."

THE SAME AUTHOR SAYS

That the master had the power of putting his slaves to death. "That it was only a matter the man," and that "if he feel he might be cleared by a stay least and proved to death for his crime, or forced to death, or else slay every a woman." Page 22. The "new" Anglo-Saxon civilization with a vengeance! Mr Hallam states that this peculiar form of Anglo-Saxon slavery continued in England after the period of the Norman conquest, and was chiefly enforced in the time of Henry II., in whom, says the first attempt to conquer Ireland was undertaken. He says "From the time of Henry II. as we learn from charters, the "villeins, or serfs," were sold upon the soil, with, enumerated to substitutes, cattle, and other chattels." Hallam, p. 136. In such a condition had the Irishman, and his kindred been for centuries, and yet the Irishman was better than the English villein, if we could have confidence in the statements of the English writers, who were noted for the purpose of their end. Both were held to be chattels and it was a matter of the common law that the child of a slave mother, even by a father who was a freeman, was a slave. Fortescue quoted the civil law. The contrary was the rule of the Roman law. Thus degraded a freeman or a slave no more was incapable of the crime of slavery.

As this article is already too long, I shall give for the present, and in your next issue I shall endeavor to give the history of polytheistic, or the time this impute into the "civilization" of the people, which so much have "civilized" Ireland in the twelfth century. From the a civilization, all English, which I have cited, the reader may not fail to appreciate the worth of the poet, the boon "civilizers" were described.

"From the most accomplished race that ever lived."

MARKET REPORT.

Morning Call.
222 Clay St., Tuesday, May 30, 1882.

WEEKLY REVIEW.

The market for cereals was moderately active during the latter part of the past week. In wheat several transfers were made on cash which established the confidence shortly. Rye is nearly little weaker. Oats are in light demand and slightly lower. Corn continue active. Bean is quiet and steady. Potatoes are steady. Onions are weak. Butter and Eggs remain firm at good prices.

DOMESTIC PRODUCE MARKET.

There being no material change in our trade quotations, we omit the Report to make room for important dispatches.

New Advertisements.

PACIFIC STEAM CARPET BEATING And Renovating Works. WHITENING In all its Branches Thoroughly and Promptly Done.

OAKLAND BRANCH: 333 GOLDEN GATE AVE. CONKLIN BROS., PROPRIETORS.

EDUCATIONAL. CAPTAIN McNEVIN, Nautical Academy, 406 Beale street.

MONEY TO LOAN. PACIFIC BANK. Established 1863. CAPITAL STOCK $1,000,000.00 Surplus 420,447.74 San Francisco, Feb. 9, 1882. This Bank having a surplus of gold will make loans at a low rate of interest on satisfactory security. H. H. MCDONALD, President.

CUMMINGS & HARRINGTON, BOOK SELLERS, BOOK BINDERS, Blank Book Manufacturers AND PRINTERS. 509 CLAY STREET, SAN FRANCISCO.

CENTRAL PACIFIC HOTEL, 348 Fourth Street. SAN FRANCISCO. Free Coach to and from the Hotel. Board and Lodging $1 pr. Day Board and Lodging $5 & $6 per Week. M. FARRELL, Proprietor.

5CT. TEMPERANCE Coffee House and Restaurant.

NEW MARKET. QUEEN CITY MARKET, FOR FIRST-CLASS BEEF, VEAL, LAMB, CORNED MEATS THIS MARKET AMERICAN MUTTON, PORK AND OF EVERY KIND. CANNOT BE BEAT. ALSO CHOICEST EASTERN HAMS, BACON & LARD. Foreign Sausages Imported expressly for this Establishment. CORNED BEEF AND PORK FOR SALE BY THE BARREL. "QUEEN CITY MARKET." 1154 to 1158 MARKET STREET, NEAR THE CORNER OF TAYLOR. ZIMMERMAN & CO., Proprietors.

SUITS CLOTHING SUITS $12. $14. Immense Reduction at J. S. HAND'S 314 KEARNY STREET.

SUITS CLOTHING SUITS $18. $20. Cheapest House, J. S. HAND'S 314 KEARNY STREET.

SUITS CLOTHING SUITS $25. $30. J. S. HAND, Merchant TAILOR and CLOTHIER. 314 KEARNY STREET.

New Advertisements.

GOOD NEWS! 20,000 CHINAMEN LEAVING THIS PACIFIC COAST ANNUALLY. THIS will Take place after Long Delay. Parties who Contemplate Visiting the Celestial Empire can Secure Cabins and Steerage Tickets at Greatly Reduced Rates by Applying at the Office of the Undersigned. THE UNITED WORKINGMEN'S Boot and Shoe Company. "UNITED WORKINGMEN." PACIFIC COAST LAND BUREAU. 22 MONTGOMERY ST., SAN FRANCISCO. SAN LUIS OBISPO LANDS. C. H. PHILLIPS, General Office, 22 Montgomery St., S. F. Cal.

CARROLL & TILTON, Respectfully announce that they have opened THE LARGE STORE, 573 Market Street, WITH A LIMITED GENT'S AND BOY'S CLOTHING, FURNISHING GOODS, HATS, CAPS, ETC. Having been in this business many years, we can promise that all our goods will be as represented. We buy for Cash and sell as low as possible. CARROL & TILTON, 573 Market Street, opp. Powell.

NEVER GIVE UP THE SHIP.

COMPOUND OXYGEN. A NEW TREATMENT BY INHALATION. THE UNITED WORKINGMEN'S Boot and Shoe Company.

McCORMICK BROS., BOOK AND JOB PRINTERS. 622 Clay Street. San Francisco California. JOB PRINTING IN THE Cheapest, Neatest & Quickest Manner. GIVE US A TRIAL. And be Convinced that our Prices are Lower than any other office in San Francisco. Orders from the Country Promptly Executed, and work sent by Mail or Express.

PROFESSIONAL CARDS.

M. COONEY, Attorney and Counsellor at Law. 441 Kearny street, cor. Pine. Rooms 1 & 2.

JOHN M. BURNETT, Attorney and Counsellor at Law. Rooms 1 and 2. 507 Montgomery street, cor. Sacramento. San Francisco.

J. D. SULLIVAN, ATTORNEY-AT-LAW. Rooms 4, 5, and 16. 24 MONTGOMERY STREET, San Francisco.

J. B. METCALFE, Attorney and Counselor at Law. Rooms 5 and 6. 230 MONTGOMERY STREET, S. F.

MRS. MARION TODD, Attorney-at-Law. Montgomery Block.

A. H. LOUGHBOROUGH, Law Office, N. W. Cor. Sacramento and Montgomery Streets.

JAMES T. NOON, Attorney & Counsellor AT LAW. No. 230 Kearny Street, Rooms 1 AND 2. Will Practice in Civil and Criminal Courts.

E. P. Tierney, M. D. Office, 708 Montgomery st., San Francisco.

INDIANAPOLIS CHAIR MAN'FG COMPANY.

Mechanics' Savings Bank, 411 Mission street.

CHRISTY & WISE WOOL Commission Merchants. HAY, GRAIN, ETC. To their New and Commodious WAREHOUSE, N E cor Fifth and Townsend Sts. Where all Wool, Hides Skins, Etc., will be stored and Weighed, under their personal supervision, and correctness thereby guaranteed. Glycerine Dip, Carbolic Dip, Sulphur Dip, Wool Bags, Twines, Shears, Lime, SULPHUR TOBACCO. VERY LOWEST RATES. CASH ADVANCED at Low Rates of Interest.

WASHING. Prices Reduced. White's Laundry. No 618 MARKET STREET. Branch Office, 1107 Market Street. Thirteenth Street bet. Folsom and Howard.

GEO. H. FULLER. MANUFACTURER OF Settees, School and Office Furniture. CABINET WORK TO ORDER A SPECIALTY. Salesroom, 19 New Montgomery Street. Manufactory, 124 Main St. SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

R. W. THEOBALD, DEALER IN FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC COALS. 35 and 37 CLAY STREET, SAN FRANCISCO. Connected with the Pacific Bell Telephone Exchange. Orders sent through this medium will be promptly attended to. P. O. Box 2187.

JOE POHEIM The Tailor, Makes the Best-Fitting SUITS IN THE CITY. Business Suits made to Order from $20 00. Pants do do - 5 00. Fine Dress Pants from - 8 00. Fine French Beaver Suits from - 40 00. Overcoats from - 20 00. PROMPT ATTENTION AND HONEST DEALING.

BOOTS & SHOES. ROBT. FLENNIKEN, 724 AND 726 Montgomery Street. LARGE ASSORTMENT. MESSRS. JORY BROS. Ladies' Misses' Children and Infants FINE KID SHOES. GREATLY REDUCED PRICES. A Large Consignment of LADIES, MISSES AND CHILDREN'S Kid Sandalls and Slippers. ROBERT FLENNIKEN. 724 and 726 Montgomery st.

A NEW THING!! BUT A GOOD ONE. HOUSEKEEPERS ATTENTION. PLEASE ASK YOUR GROCER for the Celebrated CLOCK POWDER.

PERFECT FIT GUARANTEED OR NO SALE. Samples and Rules for Self-measurement sent FREE to any address. 203 Montgomery St. 724 Market St. SAN FRANCISCO. CARPETS, OIL-CLOTHS, LINOLEUM, COCOA MATTINGS, RUGS, LACE CURTAINS, CORNICES, SHADES, ETC., ETC. ALEX MACKAY, 315 MARKET STREET, San Francisco.

R. HERRING, MANUFACTURER OF FINE FURNITURE. MANTELS. House, Bank, and Office Fittings. In Pacific Coast Woods a Specialty. Nos. 429 and 431 FOURTH STREET, Cor. of Silver. DESIGNS FURNISHED.

"THE WINTHROP RANGE." JACOB AHLBACH. TINSMITH, PLUMBER, GAS FITTER. Stoves and Tinware. No. 231 Fourth street.

JOSEPH MAYER, ORGAN BUILDER, No. 127 Page Street, San Francisco. All Orders to the above Address will receive prompt attention.

THE MONITOR, A CATHOLIC FAMILY JOURNAL. Devoted to the Preservation and Diffusion of Catholic Principles. Published by The Monitor Publishing Co., at the Office, 508 Clay Street, San Francisco, California.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION:

Per Year in Advance, $2 00. Per Year in Advance, Ship Mail, $2 50. Per Month, $1 00. Per Week, 25 cents. Single copies, 5 cents. The Monitor will be sent to Subscribers until all arrears are paid, when it will be discontinued at the option of the Publisher. Subscribers will be charged at the rate of 25 cents per week for the time they may receive it after the expiration of their subscription. Subscribers will find the date of the expiration of their subscription printed on the paper, and will be kept informed of the same by the publication of their name in the list of subscribers. Remittances should be made by Postal Order, Bank Check, or Registered Letter. Postage Stamps will be received in payment for fractional parts of a dollar. Address all communications, business or otherwise, to the Publisher, P. O. Box 2147. Office, 508 Clay St., San Francisco, Cal. Editor and Publisher, Rev. P. Manogue. Associate Editor, Rev. J. Prendergast. Managing Editor, P. Ryan. Business Manager, J. Wilkie. Assistant Business Manager, J. Ryan. Publication Office, Bush Street, Cor. Sansome. Publication Office, Post Office Building, Sacramento Street.

The Monitor.

Strive for Justice for thy Soul, and even if the Death Bell for Justice, and God will overthrow thy enemies for Thee. (Cardinal Tai...)

THE MONITOR.

In now in the twenty-fifth year of publication, and its well-established reputation as an able and reliable Religious newspaper, has placed it in a wide circulation and an influence which makes The Monitor a valuable medium for advertisers.

Advertisements inserted at reasonable rates.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

Communications, to secure insertion, should be handed in not later than Tuesday of each week.

No communications will be inserted unless accompanied by the author's real name. This is required as a private guarantee of good faith.

Communications will be gladly received from all interested in the cause advocated by this Journal. Correspondents should be as brief as possible, and should write legibly, and on one side of the paper only. We cannot undertake to return the MSS. of unused articles.

All communications and remunerations, whether on business or otherwise, are to be addressed to the Manager.

VOL. XXV. SAN FRANCISCO, WEDNESDAY, JUNE 14, 1882. NO. 36.

MISCELLANEOUS.

California FRUIT SALT. A POSITIVE CURE FOR DYSPEPSIA. TRY IT. DRUGGISTS SELL IT. Made By H. B. SLAVEN, The Baldwin Building.

PLATING, NICKEL PLATING, GOLD PLATING, SILVER PLATING. Elegant and Durable. PLATING ESTABLISHMENT. San Francisco Gold, Silver and Nickel Plating Works. 55 and 857 Mission Street, near 5th. G. C. DENNISTON, Proprietor.

STACK & LACOMBE, Practical Hatters, 639 MARKET STREET.

W. YOUNG, DOMESTIC SEWING MACHINES. Machines Exchanged, Repaired, Etc. 2001 Mission St., near 16th.

J. J. DYER, DENTIST, S. E. cor. Kearny & Post Sts. Entrance, 27 Post St. Rooms 14 & 15.

KANE & HEANEY, Choice Butter, Cheese, EGGS, ETC. 1 and 3 Centre Market, Market, near Kearny.

STATHAM PIANOS Are Unsurpassed in Tone, Touch and Durability. Sold for Cash or Easy Instalments. At the Factory 765 MISSION STREET, 765 Building and Repairing a Specialty. Send for Circular.

N. Gray & Co., UNDERTAKERS, 641 Sacramento Street, San Francisco. EMBALMING. Metallic Burial Cases and Caskets.

GEO. G. GERE, M. D. and Surgeon. 304 Sutter St., San Francisco. OFFICE HOURS: 10 to 12 and 2 to 4.

HALL'S SARSAPARILLA YELLOW DOCK AND IODIDE OF POTASS. The Best Spring Medicine and Beautifier of the Complexion in use. Cures Pimples, Boils, Blotches, Neuralgia, Scrofula, Gout, Rheumatic and Mercurial Pains, and all Diseases arising from a disordered state of the Blood or Liver. SOLD BY ALL DRUGGISTS. J. S. OATES & CO., Proprietors, 417 Sansome Street, S. F.

Archbishop Croke.

ENTHUSIASTIC RECEPTIONS ACCORDED TO THE PATRIOTIC PRELATE.

The People Drawing His Carriage Through Tipperary.

Splendid Victories Achieved by the Land League

LAUDATION OF LAND LEAGUE LADIES OF IRELAND.

The Duty of the People in The Hour of Danger

BISHOP GILMOUR.

Full Text of His Letter on Parnell, Who Use the Land League in Order to Foist Themselves into Political Notoriety But Cathalics Make Poor Patriots No Toleration for Turncoats A "Presidential Plucked to Pieces Some Bad Men Shown Up.

CALIFORNIA MISSIONARIES.

The Place of Spain in the Spread of the Faith.

Vallejo, Cal., June 2nd, 1882.

THE WEEK'S NEWS FROM IRELAND.

Dillon Defends Boycotting in the Commons.

LONDON, June 7.—In the Commons the Habitual Criminals bill was discussed on the adjournment. Harcourt, Home Secretary, said the Government would only accept any amendment consistent with putting down boycotting.

Chamberlain said he was in favor of compensation for Irish tenants as for English tenants unbeaten.

Dillon defended boycotting, and declared but for that system "moonlight" outrages would be more numerous than they had been. They would not have been at all if the Land Leagues had been left alone. He said it was certain that the system of boycotting had been grossly abused for purposes of private revenge.

The debate was upon the amendment offered by Charles Russell, Liberal member for Dublin, defining intimidation as threats, acts or violence to persons or property, or incitement thereto.

DAVITT ON THE LAND QUESTION.

Davitt in a speech at Liverpool last night said that his opinion was that the land question was at property. He considered that the sell of Irish land should be purchased for the tenants for £14,000,000 in Government bonds, repayable in fifty years, the purchase money to Landlords could be a monstrous failure.

New York, June 7.—A London special to the Herald says: Davitt in his speech on the land question, agrees with Henry George's plan of land nationalization, but thinks the agitation should be confined to Ireland, and one not departure in Irish social life. Davitt said he felt certain of the support of the Parliamentary farmers, who have to look forward to a time when they should be tenants of their farms, when they should have the confidence in the truth of the theory, and have the courage to convert the theory into a live way of thinking. However this may work, the handling of a new problem from a point of view, which is so artificial, has been greeted with hostility by his Parliamentary associates, who believe that the introduction of this economic theory will drive from the Land League ranks the conservative and clerical element which is expected so much to strengthen the League. Davitt has ignored these associates, and seems to have thrown himself unreservedly into the arms of Henry George, who believes that the land question is the element in the land movement.

The idea of the nationalization of land, proposed by Davitt in Liverpool, is impracticable, and would be a violation of the sacred property rights of the little proprietary, without any guarantee of the little property. He said that the land in Ireland could be purchased for $140,000,000 in Government bonds, payable in fifty years, in exchange for the ownership, his plan would be to transfer the ownership of the land from the landlords to the tenants, and to transfer the position of the peasant proprietors from the landlords to the Government, which would have to pay the rent, and most difficultly would be in an end, so the Government would have to pay the rent, and the Government would have to pay the rent.

Davitt will sail for America on the steamer Gallia.

Assassination of a Landlord and his Escort.

DUBLIN, June 8.—Walter M. Bourke, a Galway landlord, residing at Rahasan, was shot dead while returning from Galway. His escort, a soldier, was also killed. The murder occurred at Ballinrobe, about two miles north of Claremorris. Bourke was riding in front of his dragoon escort, when a volley was fired from behind a wall, and both fell dead. Bourke was a magistrate, son of the late Queen Bourke, and married a German baroness. He possessed very extensive property in Ireland. He was shot at Rahasan. He received several threatening letters, and had lately left London to reside on his estate. Further look an active part in the Land League.

Bourke was shot twice. A few months ago he entered a church at Ballinrobe and found a notice posted on the door, which was celebrating. The priest ordered it to be torn down, and he escaped by a side door without hindering. Bourke was not a relative of the late Queen Bourke, who, it is said, inherited the reputation of being one of the worst places in Ireland for evil deeds.

Davitt at Cork.

LONDON, June 8.—In a speech in Cork to-night Davitt explained that the object in going to America was to make an appeal towards the land of Ireland. He said that the Irish Land League. He also contradicted the rumor of a split in the League movement.

In the Commons.

The Commons passed Bradlaugh's amendment to the Registration bill by a vote of 45 to 206.

Thomas Power O'Connor, in the course of a speech supporting the amendment to define intimidation, said that the Irish Land Leaguers, the objection was made to the language, but the Irish Land Leaguers, Mr. Healy, and other Irish ruling caused some trouble.

Parnell moved that the Chairman have the chair.

Gladstone assenting, progress was reported.

The news of the murder of Bourke in Galway caused a profound sensation in the Commons. Parnell and other Irish members expressed regret at the outrage. They stated that the Land League organization of Gort caused six months ago, "Sir, you have been leading the Commons of the murder immediately after the shooting.

DAVITT'S GREAT SPEECH.

He Receives Immense Enthusiasm Throughout Ireland.

New York, June 8.—A special from Dublin says: Michael Davitt's Liverpool speech is spoken of as one of the greatest efforts of his life. He has received an enthusiastic reception wherever he has appeared in Ireland, and he pronounced one of the most remarkable orators in the history of the land agitation. He proposed the nationalization of Ireland by abolishing all landlord property without compensation, and that the State would then become the owner of the land, and would be the landlord. Farmers would then have perfect security of tenure, yet would be free to sell their holdings to the highest bidder, and the property remained in land by their outlay and improvements, and of unlawful rents, and in the way as they now dispose of the property. Landlords would be abolished, and would be compensated. The payment of land would be necessary. The payment would be made to the security of the peasant proprietary without any guarantee of the little proprietary. He said that the land would be purchased for $140,000,000 in Government bonds, payable in fifty years, in exchange for the ownership, his plan would be to transfer the ownership of the land from the landlords to the tenants, and to transfer the position of the peasant proprietors from the landlords to the Government, which would have to pay the rent, and most difficultly would be in an end, so the Government would have to pay the rent, and the Government would have to pay the rent.

Davitt will sail for America on the steamer Gallia.

Assassination of a Landlord and his Escort.

DUBLIN, June 8.—Walter M. Bourke, a Galway landlord, residing at Rahasan, was shot dead while returning from Gort. His escort, a soldier, was also killed. The murder occurred at Ballinrobe, about two miles north of Claremorris. Bourke was riding in front of his dragoon escort, when a volley was fired from behind a wall, and both fell dead. Bourke was a magistrate, son of the late Queen Bourke, and married a German baroness. He possessed very extensive property in Ireland. He was shot at Rahasan. He received several threatening letters, and had lately left London to reside on his estate. Further look an active part in the Land League.

Bourke was shot twice. A few months ago he entered a church at Ballinrobe and found a notice posted on the door, which was celebrating. The priest ordered it to be torn down, and he escaped by a side door without hindering. Bourke was not a relative of the late Queen Bourke, who, it is said, inherited the reputation of being one of the worst places in Ireland for evil deeds.

Davitt at Cork.

LONDON, June 8.—In a speech in Cork to-night Davitt explained that the object in going to America was to make an appeal towards the land of Ireland. He said that the Irish Land League. He also contradicted the rumor of a split in the League movement.

In the Commons.

The Commons passed Bradlaugh's amendment to the Registration bill by a vote of 45 to 206.

Thomas Power O'Connor, in the course of a speech supporting the amendment to define intimidation, said that the Irish Land Leaguers, the objection was made to the language, but the Irish Land Leaguers, Mr. Healy, and other Irish ruling caused some trouble.

Parnell moved that the Chairman have the chair.

Gladstone assenting, progress was reported.

The news of the murder of Bourke in Galway caused a profound sensation in the Commons. Parnell and other Irish members expressed regret at the outrage. They stated that the Land League organization of Gort caused six months ago, "Sir, you have been leading the Commons of the murder immediately after the shooting.

DAVITT'S GREAT SPEECH.

He Receives Immense Enthusiasm Throughout Ireland.

New York, June 8.—A special from Dublin says: Michael Davitt's Liverpool speech is spoken of as one of the greatest efforts of his life. He has received an enthusiastic reception wherever he has appeared in Ireland, and he pronounced one of the most remarkable orators in the history of the land agitation. He proposed the nationalization of Ireland by abolishing all landlord property without compensation, and that the State would then become the owner of the land, and would be the landlord. Farmers would then have perfect security of tenure, yet would be free to sell their holdings to the highest bidder, and the property remained in land by their outlay and improvements, and of unlawful rents, and in the way as they now dispose of the property. Landlords would be abolished, and would be compensated. The payment of land would be necessary. The payment would be made to the security of the peasant proprietary without any guarantee of the little proprietary. He said that the land would be purchased for $140,000,000 in Government bonds, payable in fifty years, in exchange for the ownership, his plan would be to transfer the ownership of the land from the landlords to the tenants, and to transfer the position of the peasant proprietors from the landlords to the Government, which would have to pay the rent, and most difficultly would be in an end, so the Government would have to pay the rent, and the Government would have to pay the rent.

Davitt will sail for America on the steamer Gallia.

Assassination of a Landlord and his Escort.

DUBLIN, June 8.—Walter M. Bourke, a Galway landlord, residing at Rahasan, was shot dead while returning from Gort. His escort, a soldier, was also killed. The murder occurred at Ballinrobe, about two miles north of Claremorris. Bourke was riding in front of his dragoon escort, when a volley was fired from behind a wall, and both fell dead. Bourke was a magistrate, son of the late Queen Bourke, and married a German baroness. He possessed very extensive property in Ireland. He was shot at Rahasan. He received several threatening letters, and had lately left London to reside on his estate. Further look an active part in the Land League.

Bourke was shot twice. A few months ago he entered a church at Ballinrobe and found a notice posted on the door, which was celebrating. The priest ordered it to be torn down, and he escaped by a side door without hindering. Bourke was not a relative of the late Queen Bourke, who, it is said, inherited the reputation of being one of the worst places in Ireland for evil deeds.

Davitt at Cork.

LONDON, June 8.—In a speech in Cork to-night Davitt explained that the object in going to America was to make an appeal towards the land of Ireland. He said that the Irish Land League. He also contradicted the rumor of a split in the League movement.

In the Commons.

The Commons passed Bradlaugh's amendment to the Registration bill by a vote of 45 to 206.

Thomas Power O'Connor, in the course of a speech supporting the amendment to define intimidation, said that the Irish Land Leaguers, the objection was made to the language, but the Irish Land Leaguers, Mr. Healy, and other Irish ruling caused some trouble.

Parnell moved that the Chairman have the chair.

Gladstone assenting, progress was reported.

The news of the murder of Bourke in Galway caused a profound sensation in the Commons. Parnell and other Irish members expressed regret at the outrage. They stated that the Land League organization of Gort caused six months ago, "Sir, you have been leading the Commons of the murder immediately after the shooting.

DAVITT'S GREAT SPEECH.

He Receives Immense Enthusiasm Throughout Ireland.

New York, June 8.—A special from Dublin says: Michael Davitt's Liverpool speech is spoken of as one of the greatest efforts of his life. He has received an enthusiastic reception wherever he has appeared in Ireland, and he pronounced one of the most remarkable orators in the history of the land agitation. He proposed the nationalization of Ireland by abolishing all landlord property without compensation, and that the State would then become the owner of the land, and would be the landlord. Farmers would then have perfect security of tenure, yet would be free to sell their holdings to the highest bidder, and the property remained in land by their outlay and improvements, and of unlawful rents, and in the way as they now dispose of the property. Landlords would be abolished, and would be compensated. The payment of land would be necessary. The payment would be made to the security of the peasant proprietary without any guarantee of the little proprietary. He said that the land would be purchased for $140,000,000 in Government bonds, payable in fifty years, in exchange for the ownership, his plan would be to transfer the ownership of the land from the landlords to the tenants, and to transfer the position of the peasant proprietors from the landlords to the Government, which would have to pay the rent, and most difficultly would be in an end, so the Government would have to pay the rent, and the Government would have to pay the rent.

Davitt will sail for America on the steamer Gallia.

Poetry.

(FOR THE MONITOR.)

"WAITING AND WATCHING FOR ME."

(An old teacher, who had the children whom we have served on earth shall be the first to welcome us to Heaven.)

There are little ones clamoring silent on my path
In need of a friend and a guide;
There are little little eyes looking into mine,
Whose tears could be easily dried.
But I pass my children in silence by
In the midst of their grief or their glee;
Will they, if I stand at the Beautiful Gate,
Be waiting and watching for me?

There are old and forsaken, who linger awhile
In the homes which their desertion has made,
And an action of love or a few gentle words,
Might cheer the sad world well.
But the reaper is near to the long standing corn,
The weary and old soon be at rest;
Will any of these, at the Beautiful Gate,
Be waiting and watching for me?

There are dear ones at home I may bless with my love;
There are mothers weep pacing the street;
There are friendless and suffering strangers around;
There are beguiled and poor I must save!
There are many enthralled, of whom, happy and blest
In the land of the land I shall see,
Will any of them, at the Beautiful Gate,
Be waiting and watching for me?

Literary Miscellany.

Three Patrick's Eyes.

BY JOHN AUGUSTUS O'SHEA.

CHAPTER I.

Short's Gardens must have got its name on the focus a new locende principle, for garden there is none at all. Instead of a garden, the open space is a street—long, narrow, dingy, ill-looking, and ill-smelling street, without even the pretence to relieve its squalor, save, perhaps, the solitary geranium on a third-story front window of No. 13. And whether that adds to the cheerfulness of the view may well be a moot point. A lonely stalk withering on a London air may suggest fresh meadows to some—a country lane to others. Short's Gardens, No. 13, is a tall, melancholy house—a house with the air of having seen better days. Better days it may have seen—it is big enough to have been the town mansion of a magnate—in a third-story front window of No. 13. And whether that adds to the cheerfulness of the view may well be a moot point. A lonely stalk withering on a London air may suggest fresh meadows to some—a country lane to others. Short's Gardens, No. 13, is a tall, melancholy house—a house with the air of having seen better days. Better days it may have seen—it is big enough to have been the town mansion of a magnate—in a third-story front window of No. 13. And whether that adds to the cheerful-

Family Fun.

BUILDING A HEN COOP.

MONITOR MENTION.

MISCELLANEOUS.

NEWMAN & FREUD,
1025 & 1027 Stockton St.,
(Cor. Jackson.)
Importers and Dealers in all kinds of COTTON & WOOLEN YARNS
Zephyrs, Canvasses,
HEADS, FLOSSES, CHENILLES,
And all materials used in art needle work and KENSINGTON EMBROIDERY.
We also call public attention to our Large and Well-selected Stock of Corsets, Hosiery, Underwear
Handkerchiefs, Embroideries, Laces, Fans, Etc., Etc., Etc.,
WHICH WE ARE OFFERING AT GREATLY REDUCED PRICES.
NEWMAN & FREUD,
1023 & 1027 Stockton Street.
(P. O. Box 2051.)
☞ All orders from the country receive prompt attention. Send for Catalogue.

DR. CLARK
JOHNSON'S
Indian Blood Syrup.

CURES Dyspepsia, Liver Disease, Fever & Ague, Rheumatism, Heart Disease, Biliousness, Nervous Debility, etc.
THE BEST REMEDY KNOWN to Man!
12,000,000 Bottles
HAVE BEEN SOLD SINCE 1876.
This Syrup possesses Virtues that cannot be mentioned in a Newspaper.
It Regulates the Digestive Organs, Removes Obstructions, Cures Constipation, Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint, Dyspepsia, Sick Headache, Jaundice, Dizziness, Costiveness, Dry Skin, Humors, Fever and Ague, Pain in the Bones, Joints and Back, Female Complaints, Nervous Prostration, Nervous Debility, Night Sweats, Sleeplessness, Dysentery, Diarrhoea, Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Kidney Complaints, Dropsy, Gravel, Diabetes, Blood Diseases, General Debility, Hot Flashes, Sleeplessness, Depression of Spirits, Diseases of the Skin, Eruptions, Pimples, Boils, Tetter, Tumors, Tumors, Salt Rheum, Scrofula, Consumption (in its early stages), Dropsical Swellings, Erysipelas, Piles, Fever Sores, Ulcers, Abscesses, Mercurial Diseases, Blood Poisons, Malaria, etc., Address, Dr. Sanford, 21 Dey St., New York.
Health is Wealth! Dr. Clark Johnson's Indian Blood Syrup, a short trial of which completely cures Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint, Fever and Ague, Chills, Fever Sores, Ulcers, Boils, Pimples, Tetter, Salt Rheum, Blood Poisons, Female Weakness, Nervous Prostration, Nervous Debility, Sleeplessness, Dropsy, Gravel, Diabetes, Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Kidney Complaints, Dysentery, Diarrhoea, Consumption (in its early stages), Malaria, etc., Address, Dr. Sanford, 21 Dey St., New York.
☞ Beware of Counterfeits! Genuine Dr. Clark Johnson's Indian Blood Syrup.

LYDIA E. PINKHAM'S VEGETABLE COMPOUND.
Is a Positive Cure
For all those Painful Complaints and Weaknesses so common to our best female population.
A Medicine for Women. Invaluable to a Woman. Prepared by a Woman.
The Greatest Medical Discovery Since the Days of Noah!
It promotes the healthy action, strengthens and invigorates the whole system, gives elasticity and buoyancy to the step, restores the color and vivacity to the face, and imparts to the pale female of woman the fresh blooming appearance of perfect health.
☞ Physicians Use It and Prescribe It Freely. ☜
It cures entirely the worst forms of Female Complaints, all ovarian tumors, inflammation and ulceration, falling and displacements of the uterus, that feeling of bearing down, causing pain, weight and backache, is promptly cured by its use.
For the cure of Kidney Complaints of either sex this Compound is unsurpassed.
LYDIA E. PINKHAM'S BLOOD PURIFIER
Will at all times and under all circumstances act in harmony with the laws of health, gives tone and strength to the system, and makes the weak strong.
Both the Compound and Blood Purifier are prepared at 233 and 235 Western Avenue, Lynn, Mass. Price of either, $1. Six bottles for $5. Sent by mail in the form of pills, on receipt of price, per box, for pills, or of Lozenges, for either. Mrs. Pinkham freely answers all letters of inquiry. Enclose 3c. stamp for reply. Mention this paper.
Sold by all druggists.
☞ Sold by all druggists. ☜
DR. CLARK JOHNSON'S Indian Blood Syrup.

CURES Dyspepsia, Liver Disease, Fever & Ague, Rheumatism, Heart Disease, Biliousness, Nervous Debility, etc.
THE BEST REMEDY KNOWN to Man!
12,000,000 Bottles
HAVE BEEN SOLD SINCE 1876.
This Syrup possesses Virtues that cannot be mentioned in a Newspaper.
It Regulates the Digestive Organs, Removes Obstructions, Cures Constipation, Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint, Dyspepsia, Sick Headache, Jaundice, Dizziness, Costiveness, Dry Skin, Humors, Fever and Ague, Pain in the Bones, Joints and Back, Female Complaints, Nervous Prostration, Nervous Debility, Night Sweats, Sleeplessness, Dysentery, Diarrhoea, Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Kidney Complaints, Dropsy, Gravel, Diabetes, Blood Diseases, General Debility, Hot Flashes, Sleeplessness, Depression of Spirits, Diseases of the Skin, Eruptions, Pimples, Boils, Tetter, Tumors, Tumors, Salt Rheum, Scrofula, Consumption (in its early stages), Dropsical Swellings, Erysipelas, Piles, Fever Sores, Ulcers, Abscesses, Mercurial Diseases, Blood Poisons, Malaria, etc., Address, Dr. Sanford, 21 Dey St., New York.

EDUCATIONAL.

ST. ROSE'S ACADEMY,
UNDER THE DIRECTION OF THE Sisters of St. Dominic,
SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.
THIS INSTITUTION, BEAUTIFULLY LOCATED in the Mission and Sixteenth, adjoins St. Peter's Church. For the acquisition of a refined and most educational education, this academy is one of the best and most successful schools.
TERMS:
Board, Washing and English Tuition, per quarter $60 00
Gentlemen Pupils 10 00
EXTRAS:
Languages, (each) $10 00
Music, Lessons 10 00
Vocal Lessons in Class 5 00
Vocal Lessons 10 00
Drawing and Painting in Water Colors 5 00
Painting in Oil 10 00
Use of Piano for Practice 5 00
DAY PUPILS:
Preparatory Class, per term $10 00
Intermediate 15 00
Higher 20 00
Use of Piano for Practice 5 00
Each young lady is required to be provided with two dozen each of table and bath napkins, one dozen towels, dressing cloth, four sheets, two pillow slips, one blanket, one counterpane, one mattress, one pillow, one hair mattress, one bedstead, one pillow, one bolster, one hair pillow, one pillow, one bedstead, one pillow, one bolster, one hair pillow, one pillow, one bedstead, one pillow, one bolster, one hair pillow, one pillow

THE MONITOR.
PRINTED FOURTEEN YEARS OF PUBLICATION
WEDNESDAY, JUNE 14, 1882.

The Hierarchy of the Church.

The Gerarchia Cattolica is a statistical work published annually in Rome, giving a complete list of the dignitaries of the Church not only in the Eternal City itself, but also throughout the world. The book was first published during the Pontificate of Clement XI., at the beginning of the last century, and has been continued ever since, the spread of the Church rendering it annually more interesting.

From the pages of the issue of this work for the present year we learn that the Sacred College, composed of 65 Cardinals, is made up of the following nationalities:

Italians	34	Portuguese	1
French	5	Irish	1
Germans	3	Polish	1
Austrians	3	Swiss	1
Spanish	3	Belgian	1
Hungarian	1	American	1

The oldest member of the Sacred College is Cardinal Donnet, Archbishop of Bordeaux who is 87, and the youngest member of that august body is Cardinal Zigliara, a Dominican, who, although but 49 years old, has the reputation of being the ablest Thomist living. Among the other notables, Cardinal Billio is accounted the most learned, Cardinal Alimonda is said to be the most eloquent, and Cardinal Hayuald has the reputation of being the greatest linguist.

Of the 65 Cardinals, 6 are of the order of Bishops, 46 of the order of Priests, and 13 of the order of Deacons. Of this number there is but one Prelate whom elevation dates back to Pope Gregory XVI., and that is the Archbishop of Prague, Cardinal Schwarzenberg, elevated in 1842. Of the other Cardinals, 43 were created by Pope Pius IX., and the remaining 21 were elevated by the present Pontiff. The death rate in the Sacred College, since the demise of the late Pontiff, Pius the Great, has been at the rate of five every year, making a total of 20.

Regarding the number of Sees throughout the world, they work states that there are 149 Archiepiscopal Sees of the Latin rite and 27 of the Oriental rite. There are also 546 Bishoprics of the Latin rite and 47 of the Oriental. A tabular statement is given showing that up to April 1st of the present year the Church has a Prelacy of 1,209 Bishops having jurisdiction, but in this list administrators, vicars-general and honorary Monsigneri are not included.

Since Pope Leo XIII. has occupied the Chair of Peter he has created 5 Archiepiscopal Sees, 15 Bishoprics, 7 Apostolic Vicariates and 3 Apostolic Prefectures. The work also mentions the Archiepiscopal Sees, 15 Bishoprics, so long used to denote Sees which subsequently fell under infidel influence, and the Bishops of which will hereafter be known as Bishops of titular Sees from which they derive their titles.

The Church in Our Portion of China.

The tricism which tells us that "the blood of the martyrs is the seed of the Church" is constantly being demonstrated by the continual spread of Catholic faith through out the vast dominions ruled by China and Japan. In the entire martyrology of the Church no epoch furnishes Christian victims who exhibited more sublime fortitude in their sufferings for the faith than the celestial courage manifested by the priests and neophytes who have suffered persecution and death in the Eastern countries designated.

We all admire the heroic valor which marked the conduct of the first Christians who they were led forth to the lions in the amphitheatre, or mounted the funeral pyre to pay the penalty of their faith by winning the crown of martyrdom, yet do we embrace within the last century has furnished thousands of martyrs who fall victims to the fury of pagan Chinese Mandarins, for the sole reason that they refused to trample on the Cross and to deny themselves as followers of the true God.

With such examples in the history of the foundation of Catholic missions in China and Japan furnish, we need have no fear for the future spread of the faith in those regions. Thousands upon the seed has been planted in these lands, and as often has it been pulled down, after having been dogged with the blood of martyrs. But Catholic missionaries never surrender the sacred symbol of their saving faith entirely into the hands of the enemy, and then, amidst the ruins which savage paganism has made of churches erected to God by those whose souls have long since found a shrine in the unseen sanctuary of heaven, the missionary re-enters to remain again the battle of the Cross, and to win, if need be, the martyr's crown. This has been the history of Christian missions in many lands, and in China, to-day, we find millions of Catholics, many of whom have received the faith from priests who subsequently suffered for the faith.

We are led to these reflections in consequence of having received, through the kindness of Archbishop Alemany, a copy of the statistics furnished by Rt. Rev. Fathom Anthonius, Vicar-Apostolic of Eastern Hupe, one of the nations of China adjacent to Shanghai, and in which is set forth the following interesting facts, showing the spread of the faith in that portion of the Chinese Empire during the year 1880:

No. of Christians	11,679
" of catechumens	1,000
" of baptisms of pagan children	1,000
" of Confirmations	111
" of Priests	4,150
" European missionaries in the V. A.	1
" native " " "	12
" Churches, Chapels and Oratories	35
" Public Territories	1

Since these statistics were compiled a large number of converts have been added to the Church, and the number of Chinese children whose lives have been saved and whose souls have been Christianized through the saving waters of baptism, has added a mighty host. They are responsible to the Vicar of Christ on earth for all their actions, but no brawling women, no political mountebank, no person who calls himself a Catholic, yet whose conduct and counsel keeps him from the Sacraments, must be permitted to drag down with impunity the sacred office of a Catholic Bishop in the midst of the youngest crew who assail it. Practical Catholics, who are constant in their devotion to the Church, well know that their duty is to obey, and the Bishop's office is to command. They know, too, that the censure of a pastor is always to be dreaded, and that it is always better to obey even a doubtful command coming from one authorized by the Church of Christ, than it is to risk the sin of scandal by wilfully standing out in rebellion against the mandate of a Bishop who is supreme in all matters pertaining to religion and morals.

This is the true position of sincere practical Catholics upon this matter, and we pope its elucidation will have the effect of checking that growing spirit of insubordination to all ecclesiastical authority which is being injected into Catholic minds by means of newspapers who glory in sowing the seeds of demoniacal discord among Catholics, simply because their master, the devil, dictates the policy they are to pursue. As Bishop Gillmour well says, we must "take our places as Catholics or heretics." If we are Catholics we must be subject to our Bishops, who are the interpreters of our faith and the divinely-appointed guardians of the gospel of Jesus Christ. If we are determined to revolt against the decrees of our Bishops, then we become heretics and leave ourselves liable to the severest censures of the Church. But, as the Bishop of Cleveland early says, "We cannot sit on the fence and jump down among God's faithful children at one time, and then jump over into the devil's pasture whenever the spirit of evil prompts us." We must, in a word, be consistent, conscientious Catholics, or we will assert our rights as Catholics, we have jurisdiction, and thus we will gain God's blessing upon ourselves and our descendants, as well as save the Pastors who are entrusted by God to watch over our souls from the scriptural task of having to cut us off from the Sacraments of the Church in life, and the hopelessness of holy sepulchre in death.

The "Alta" on the Religious Press.

The castigation which the MONITOR has been compelled to administer to the Alta on two occasions when it endeavored in its weak way to misrepresent the Church and to malign a Catholic Bishop, has so enraged the venerable old lady that the shows her vixenish disposition by asserting her superiority over the Religious press in general. Fortunately, however, nobody cares what views the Alta holds on any subject, and its opinions are as barren of interest to the readers of the daily press as last year's almanac. The Alta says that the editors of religious papers "are never journalists; they may be true to one sense, if all journalists are of the type of the Alta writer. The editors of the Religious press, however, are invariably gentlemen, which is by no means synonymous with journalist when applied to bad Bohemians, some of whom are far from being respectable.

The Alta assumes the lack of enterprise on the part of the Religious press, but as it possesses no enterprise whatever of its own, it is scarcely qualified to complain of any shortcomings on the part of others. Hence we are not astonished to find it resorting to falsehood in order to fasten "the want of enterprise" upon the Monitor in its past action, for instance, it bears "false witness against its neighbor" in the following sentence:

"The MONITOR, in this city, came out on occasion with "Saturday," as the date of its issue, and "Pope Pius IX." as the page, one Wednesday, or, at all events, between Tuesday morning and Thursday night, and taken no notice of his demise, although the daily papers of the Metropolis had announced it some two days before."

The facts of the case are as follows: Pope Pius IX. died at 5:40 P. M. on Wednesday, the 7th of February, 1878, and the MONITOR, dated Thursday, February 8th (the day, not Saturday, as the Alta asserts) contained a half column reference to the death of the Pontiff, commencing and ending with these words:

"Pius IX. died on Wednesday last during the session of the Ecumenical Council, convening the sixteenth day of February, and the following Pontiff, Pope Pius IX., had breathed his last in the morning of the 7th inst. The Catholic World, on telegram had arrived up to four o'clock. This morning's issue of the Alta is sorry that we cannot give fuller information before we go to press."

This features a foul falsehood on the Alta.

Every intelligent Catholic knows that the death of Pope Pius IX. was reported nearly a dozen times before his demise, hence the prudence which our predecessor (Richard O'Sullivan, whose memory we are grateful to be able to defend from the malicious mendacity of a mercenary ghoul who seeks to fashioner his grave,) used in not accepting as truth an event that had so often been falsely predicted. And that he did so, is clearly stated in the subsequent issue of the MONITOR in these words:

"The reason for our questioning the reliability of the intelligence was the fact that the newspaper correspondents were in all probability ignorant of the death of Pius IX. on occasion when it noticed that well known Catholic Church. In the absence of information from the proper and authentic ecclesiastical source, we felt justified in treating the report as a mere rumor. Indeed, it may be remembered that we cautioned our readers against the reliability of the report, and the event proved that our caution was well-founded. Indeed, it may be remembered that we cautioned our readers against the reliability of the report, and the event proved that our caution was well-founded. Indeed, it may be remembered that we cautioned our readers against the reliability of the report, and the event proved that our caution was well-founded."

Such is the Alta. Such is the spirit of the Religious press, in a fowl of indignation against Bishop Gilmour for his action regarding certain unwise women and demagogues who before Catholics join in this scandal and become sharers in the sin of encouraging insubordination, they should bear in mind that Catholic Bishops are alone endowed with the high prerogative of teaching and censuring, and that their authority is not derived from caucuses, conventions or conferences as made up of the people, but the power of Bishops comes directly from Almighty God. They are responsible to the Vicar of Christ on earth for all their actions, but no brawling women, no political mountebank, no person who calls himself a Catholic, yet whose conduct and counsel keeps him from the Sacraments, must be permitted to drag down with impunity the sacred office of a Catholic Bishop in the mire of the youngest crew who assail it. Practical Catholics, who are constant in their devotion to the Church, well know that their duty is to obey, and the Bishop's office is to command. They know, too, that the censure of a pastor is always to be dreaded, and that it is always better to obey even a doubtful command coming from one authorized by the Church of Christ, than it is to risk the sin of scandal by wilfully standing out in rebellion against the mandate of a Bishop who is supreme in all matters pertaining to religion and morals.

This is the true position of sincere practical Catholics upon this matter, and we pope its elucidation will have the effect of checking that growing spirit of insubordination to all ecclesiastical authority which is being injected into Catholic minds by means of newspapers who glory in sowing the seeds of demoniacal discord among Catholics, simply because their master, the devil, dictates the policy they are to pursue. As Bishop Gilmour well says, we must "take our places as Catholics or heretics." If we are Catholics we must be subject to our Bishops, who are the interpreters of our faith and the divinely-appointed guardians of the gospel of Jesus Christ. If we are determined to revolt against the decrees of our Bishops, then we become heretics and leave ourselves liable to the severest censures of the Church. But, as the Bishop of Cleveland early says, "We cannot sit on the fence and jump down among God's faithful children at one time, and then jump over into the devil's pasture whenever the spirit of evil prompts us." We must, in a word, be consistent, conscientious Catholics, or we will assert our rights as Catholics, we have jurisdiction, and thus we will gain God's blessing upon ourselves and our descendants, as well as save the Pastors who are entrusted by God to watch over our souls from the scriptural task of having to cut us off from the Sacraments of the Church in life, and the hopelessness of holy sepulchre in death.

New Geographical Division of the United States.

The rapid accumulation of territory by the United States, and the settlement of regions which half a century ago were almost unknown, has led to such a confusion of title in the description of the various States and the several States of the Union, that the Census Bureau has determined to supplant the [illegible] by the phrases "Approach to and from the [illegible]" and "Lands and Lodgings" [illegible] name bound Lodging the [illegible] will have to be sub- [illegible] following classification adopted and adhered to:

Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, New York, Connecticut, New Jersey and Pennsylvania are to be called the North Atlantic States. Delaware, Maryland, District of Columbia, Virginia, West Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia and Florida will be classed as South Atlantic States: Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Iowa, Missouri, Dakota, Nebraska and Kansas will form the Northern Central; and Kentucky, Tennessee, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Texas, Indian Territory and Arkansas the Southern Central States, or "Division." All States and Territories west of the Rocky Mountains are termed the Western Division. The term "Division" is used by the Bureau instead of "Section" so that the Territories may be included. This plan may have to be changed when all the Territories are admitted into the Sisterhood of States.

Whether this plan is adopted or not, it is very evident that it has much to commend it over the old style, as it always seemed to many persons a very spiteful and teadyish proceeding to have any portion of the Union designated as the "New England" States; and again, the section known as the Western States was not in the western portion of the Union, but are now more properly located in the Northern Central and Southern Central groups.

Bishop Gilmour's Letter.

Every Catholic who is true to his faith and sincere in his belief will thank us for publishing Bishop Gilmour's letter, in which he expose certain misrewaling women and disreputable men who think they can shield their sins against the Church, her Pastors, and society, by the barricade of the Land Leagues. Every true of Ireland's liberty will bless Bishop Gilmour for separating the chaff and the chaff from the good grain in the Land League ranks, and the action of the Bishop of Cleveland in this matter will tend to keep the patriotic ranks of the Land League from the influence of cranks and crooked Catholics whose only glory seems to be to publicly parade their contempt for the consecrated Pastors of the Church of Christ. The secular press, or, as it is designated by some of its many cases, the lay press, joins in a howl of indignation against Bishop Gilmour for his action regarding certain unwise women and demagogues who before Catholics join in this scandal and become sharers in the sin of encouraging insubordination, they should bear in mind that Catholic Bishops are alone endowed with the high prerogative of teaching and censuring, and that their authority is not derived from caucuses, conventions or conferences as made up of the people, but the power of Bishops comes directly from Almighty God. They are responsible to the Vicar of Christ on earth for all their actions, but no brawling women, no political mountebank, no person who calls himself a Catholic, yet whose conduct and counsel keeps him from the Sacraments, must be permitted to drag down with impunity the sacred office of a Catholic Bishop in the mire of the youngest crew who assail it. Practical Catholics, who are constant in their devotion to the Church, well know that their duty is to obey, and the Bishop's office is to command. They know, too, that the censure of a pastor is always to be dreaded, and that it is always better to obey even a doubtful command coming from one authorized by the Church of Christ, than it is to risk the sin of scandal by wilfully standing out in rebellion against the mandate of a Bishop who is supreme in all matters pertaining to religion and morals.

This is the true position of sincere practical Catholics upon this matter, and we pope its elucidation will have the effect of checking that growing spirit of insubordination to all ecclesiastical authority which is being injected into Catholic minds by means of newspapers who glory in sowing the seeds of demoniacal discord among Catholics, simply because their master, the devil, dictates the policy they are to pursue. As Bishop Gilmour well says, we must "take our places as Catholics or heretics." If we are Catholics we must be subject to our Bishops, who are the interpreters of our faith and the divinely-appointed guardians of the gospel of Jesus Christ. If we are determined to revolt against the decrees of our Bishops, then we become heretics and leave ourselves liable to the severest censures of the Church. But, as the Bishop of Cleveland early says, "We cannot sit on the fence and jump down among God's faithful children at one time, and then jump over into the devil's pasture whenever the spirit of evil prompts us." We must, in a word, be consistent, conscientious Catholics, or we will assert our rights as Catholics, we have jurisdiction, and thus we will gain God's blessing upon ourselves and our descendants, as well as save the Pastors who are entrusted by God to watch over our souls from the scriptural task of having to cut us off from the Sacraments of the Church in life, and the hopelessness of holy sepulchre in death.

Here, then, we have proved the naturality of the "enterprising" Alta, whose "enterprise" is mainly comprised in the fact that it makes more blunders than all its daily contemporaries combined. This is only partially true, when it attempts to treat of Catholic affairs—about which it has much to learn and a great deal of malignant slander to atone for—but the paper itself is so valueless to the community that were it to die to-morrow it would leave no void in the newspaper press of the city, as it is merely a literary fossil tolerated solely through respect for its antiquity.

The Alta says that editors of Religious papers sometimes drift from top shops, but the absurdity of the Alta objection to them on that account is proved by the fact that some of the most famous journalists in America failed at other callings, and then they turned to journalism. Men, the latchet of whose shoes the Alta scribener would not be worthy to unite, have drifted from the struggle with the world into editorial sanctum, and made the world better through the brilliancy of their intellect. Thus experience has proved that there is no royal road to success in the career of the newspaperial fraternity. A man may be a grain-grower or a poor ballad singer, and yet, when opportunity offers, he may develop into a merchant, or a banker, or an editor even, and the higher he rises from his mental position, the more credit he deserves for his tact and talent. It is, therefore, a species of abominable flunkeyism which prompts people to say to a Washington that he was only a surveyor, or to a Horace that he was once only a photo-boy, or to a Marbry that he was once only a mason without wherewith to pay his tailor. The temple of fame glatters with the names of men who achieved greatness from the humblest positions in life, and by pursuing their different occupations with tenacity of will and honesty of purpose gained fortune and fame. This is passed to all people who have sufficient intelligence not to permit their passion to run away with their reason nor to permit their opinion to entangle them in a dense fog regarding the proper mature and adopted citizen of this Republic who is not impregnated with that shoddyish sentiment that labor is not "respectable," and should not be recognized by people whose lazy bespeaks the animal that forms their prototype.

The Democratic Nominations.

The Democratic delegates will assemble next week at San Jose to make nominations for almost every elective office in the State, and from what we hear from many of the members of that party, they are determined to present the voters of California with candidates who will not only be acceptable to Democratic partisans themselves, but also to a large number who have hitherto not affiliated with that party. The MONITOR leaves party nominations to those to whom it belongs, but we think that at this time there can be no harm in suggesting to the members of that Convention the name of a gentleman, who, if nominated and elected to the office for which he aspires, will reflect honor upon the Democratic party and as upon the party that placed him in nomination. That gentleman is Judge J. W. Armstrong, of Sacramento, whose name has become synonymous with fairness. We are happy to see allied with the position of one of the Justices of the Supreme Court.

Judge Armstrong is essentially a lawyer, devoted to his profession, he is a student of close attention, and knows nothing of the "quirks and quibbles" of the politician. The bar of Central California knows Judge Armstrong well, and they unite in according him all praise for ability as a counselor and safe adviser in the intricacies of the law, and his clients never suffer at his hands. Besides all these qualities, he seems to be in accordance with the justice of things to take at least one member of the Supreme Bench from the interior of the State, and thus charge the centralized spirit upon the Supreme Court. We know that from this city. But the press of the interior will speak the sentiments of the people far more than any other authority, as they have had opportunity of watching the professional career of Judge Armstrong better than any one else. The following we select from a number of complimentary notices we find in exchange, and we call the special attention of delegates to the San Jose Convention to the fact that Judge Armstrong as set forth in the Oroville Mercury:

"The Democratic delegates from the 7 districts of the Supreme Court to John W. Armstrong, of Sacramento, for Associate Justice of the Supreme Court. In sending him for that position, the delegates have made a good choice.

If there is any other thing the gift of the people of the State should be bestowed for good, true and able men, that position is upon the Supreme Bench. The duties of the incumbent of the office are of the most delicate and important trust. It should not only be a man of profound learning in the law, but one possessed of the requisite balance of judgment, and a man who is conscientious and honest. Unless these points be possessed, he brings the wisdom of his office. We know Judge Armstrong, who we know can pass through the ordeal unscathed, and we know that he will give satisfaction to his intimate friends. That man is John W. Armstrong, of Sacramento, formerly of this county, and whom some we take the liberty to mention to the delegates as being the most suitable and available candidate for the place. We know Judge Armstrong well, and we know in this connection that only in order that he may have an opportunity to vote for him in a public office.

Speaking of Judge Armstrong's qualifications, the Yuba Democrat expresses a belief that he is the choice of the Democrats of Yuba county, and says he has enjoyed an extensive practice there for years, and is well known to the bar of the country and as incorruptible man, and that his appointment would be a most acceptable one, and would be hailed by existing bar. And the Sacramento Bee says that Judge Armstrong has all the ability and integrity may be applied to him with his "constant strong" [illegible]

AN ECCLESIASTICAL DECISION.

The Supreme Court of the State of Indiana, delivered, recently, a very important opinion, in the case of Rev. Stephen Chatard, Roman Catholic Bishop of Vincennes, vs. Dennis O'Donovan, sexton of the Church of Bethlehem, Hendricks county, and refused to execute the Church orders. The sexton had been appointed and his church and national conference interfered, but in spite of such appointed, and the court decided against the Bishop on a demurrer, holding that the sexton, by the Church, was a tenant at sufferance and tenant, and that to acquire a right to the property of the church, a person must be given. The Bishop accepted the decision, and the Supreme Court, in its decision, that body decided that the court erred in its ruling, and that the relations existing between the priest and Bishop, or other high authority, are those of a master and servant, with regard to Church property.

"Catholics who love to read of the Mother of God and the glorious promises which saints and ecclesiastical writers—as well as the Bible—written themselves—have made to those who honor the Blessed Virgin, will find a most interesting article in this issue.

DEVOTION TO THE BLESSED VIRGIN.

He who is Particularly Devoted to the Blessed Mother, is Particularly Favored and Covered by Her Divine Son.

After having read the beautiful letter of Pope Pius IX. to the Bishops of Germany on the Mysteries of the Rosary, and the touching remarks of the editor thereon, I felt that I might interrupt the Meditations on the Dolors in order to say a few words in favor of all devotion to the Mother of God, and to specify the peculiar advantages of devotion to the Dolors, which are greater than are not likely to be prominently set forth in simple meditations on the Sorrows of our Sacred Mother. I flatter myself that that little essay will contribute much to fix more deeply and steadily in our hearts confidence in the Mother of God, our august Queen. It is certain that all devotion approved of by God's Church are good and efficacious, and that we can become, in a special manner, the children of the Blessed Mother, by practising piously and faithfully any one of the numerous devotions under her name. Our mother Mother does not expect too much of us, that is, does not require that we should recite long prayers, but she does absolutely demand that we give her our hearts and that we remain sincerely devoted to her. I cannot but intensely admire the remark, which Benedict XIII. made to the Jesuits Hieronimus, S. J., left to his companions. "Now I have about to take his departure from this land of exile, they asked him to leave them, in writing, what was the most efficacious means to be subject to our Lady, in order to obtain her protection, and to be her children. He wrote: Ego ad Deiparam ita sum affectus ut, quo magis eam ut matrem ac protectrix, ipsa me adeam, ita eam considerar ac protegere." Blessed Hermann, S. J., says: "Mary is not the Mother of Jesus Christ, but of us." Jesus says that the Holy Mother has abundant succors in reserve for her servants in the hour of their need. Blessed Alfonso Rodriguez, S. J., says: "Mary is the Mother of Jesus Christ, but of us." Well, then, if we are true children of the Blessed Mother, and persevere in any devotion to her, we are sure to be saved. Mary is our Mother, and we can be in this world, outside of a special vocation in the Church, we can make graces more efficacious than others. No doubt, that to the Mother of God, we can be more full than that of the Dolors to make us bear with holy resignation our crosses, to make us bear with mortal and venial sins, to make us love God and His Holy Mother. Furthermore, we should be more anxious than to make us do two things that are necessary for us, namely, to love our Mother, viz., to pray fervently for the conversion of sinners that are wallowing in the mire of the infernal pit, and to pray for the salvation of those souls that are detained in the purgatorial fires. Now, the truth is most seriously, therefore, urge upon all Christians devotion to the Dolors of Mary. It is really strange that so few comparatively speaking, attend to this devotion. Blessed Mary Magdalen de Pazzi, Blessed St. Bridget that very few companionate her in her suffering, which the greater part of her life was spent in tears, whence she said to the saint: "If others forget you, you, at least, you should not forget me." Surely, this devotion has been neglected, and it is time that it should be, and, it continually keeps before our eyes that it was in the Dolors that we were born to Mary, that we are her Immaculate, Mary is our Mother. And, [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

Farm and Home.

Good Farmers.

One sign of a good farmer, is his prime manure. It does not require a good farmer to raise beautiful crops on a farm already rich, but this art lies in so managing the farm that it will produce good crops every year without losing fertility. A man may make money from his farm while he is wasteful of fertilizers, but he is not a good farmer, for he is constantly running his land into debt. Good farming consists of such management as will make the farm produce the best possible results without deteriorating the soil. This can be accomplished by a rigid economy in the making and saving of manure, and by such a systematic rotation of crops as will be least exhaustive to the soil.

Goats with Sheep.

Farmers in New Jersey use goats to protect their sheep from dogs. Two goats can drive away a dozen dogs, and twelve should such farmer pets in with his sheep. As soon as the dog arrives at night the goats attack him, and their butting propensities are too much for the canine, who soon finds himself rolling over. A few repetitions of this treatment cause the dog to quit the field, limping and yelling. Formerly, when a dog entered a sheep field at night, the sheep would run wildly around and get panicky. Since the goats have been used the dogs leave their sheep form in less behind the goats, and seem to enjoy the fun. The idea of utilizing goats in this way comes from the West, where they are put in sheep pens to drive away wolves.

PRESENTIMENTS.

An Investigation of the Causes of Those Dark Forebodings which Make Powerful Men Weak.

[Golden Rule.]

Much apprehension has been occasioned throughout America from the announcement made by Professor Proctor that the autumn of nineteen years of the great comet of last summer will cause the destruction of the world. But while people are beginning to strangely ponder over the announcement, an event of far more serious importance, which is taking place to-day, seems to be almost wholly overlooked. The nature of this most vital subject can be best explained by relating the following experience:

Bishop E. O. Haven, known to the entire land, was unaccountably awakened one night out of a sound sleep, and lay awake until morning. He must accept unusually active, and he not only reviewed his past life, which had been an eventful one, but laid extensive plans for the future. He did not feel especially ill, but could not account for the unusual activity of his brain, yet for the restlessness which seemed to possess him. In the morn ing he had but little appetite, but was apparently well in other respects. In a few days, however, he began to feel restless and morbid, although he tried earnestly to overcome the feelings which had taken possession of him. But try as he would the shadow of some evil impending hung over him, and he was conscious of a general shifting and wasting away of his physical faculties. He was not aware of any disease whatever, and in his mind pronounced himself in the strength, and being absolutely free from pain, he observes the symptoms from which he is afflicted, thus permitting the work of destruction to go on unhindered. Into the office of Dr. Kilmer, a patent "Scroll" and "Letter" on the bottle containing a remedy for Kidney Disease, Dropsy, Inland with the same number of English Ladies' and Gentlemen's Bedding, Mattresses, Pillows and Silk Pure medicine.

JOHN GWALTZ.

A remarkable law prices expressed at the low rate adopted by RAPHAEL TUCK'S for the beautiful Oil Chromos, Photo Gems, Photo Art, Photo Tints, Photo Enamels, Photo Art Gems, Photo Tints, Photo Enamels, Photo Art Gems, Photo Tints, Photo Enamels, Photo Art Gems

OUR SCHOOLS.

ANNUAL COMMENCEMENTS.

[CONCLUDED FROM FIFTH PAGE.]

ST. JOSEPH'S INSTITUTE, EUREKA.

The following particulars condensing the recent Annual exercises of St. Joseph's Institute, Eureka, Humboldt county, under charge of the Sisters of Mercy, we condense from the Democratic Standard of that place:

The exercises were principally a musical programme, and opened with a march, an instrumental duet by Misses M. Scudall and Katie Snyder, which was rendered without a fault. Vocal duet, by the choral class. "The French man's Dinner," a comical narrative, by Miss Georgie Mackey, was read in a clear, distinct voice. "Mocking Bird Variations," by Misses Maggie Kendall, Minnie Bell and Kate Snyder, with all its intricate parts, was the most perfect rendition we have ever heard. Truly the proficiency which these young ladies have attained is worthy of the highest commendation. Next on the programme was a vocal duet by the choral class, whose voices came clear and well modulated. It was a vocal treat. "Rockville Schottische," by Misses Maude Mackey and Gertie Dunnigan. An oration was then read by Miss Josie Crosbie, the young lady had perfect command of herself and read with full appreciation. Miss Maggie Kendall closed the first part of the programme with a piano solo, "La Sonnambula." At this point the distribution of prize book taken, each scholar receiving some reward in proportion to some branch of study, or for deportment, according to the degree of merit accorded. After the intermission, the following Nun Countess played on the organ: "Gold Bottom Schottische," by Misses Mamie Mackey and Gertie Dunnigan. An oration was then read by Miss Josie Crosbie, the young lady had perfect command of herself and read with full appreciation. Miss Maggie Kendall closed the first part of the programme with a piano solo, "La Sonnambula." At this point the distribution of prize book taken, each scholar receiving some reward in proportion to some branch of study, or for deportment, according to the degree of merit accorded. After the intermission, the following Nun Countess played on the organ: "Gold Bottom," by Misses Minnie and Ada Bell and Nora Dunnigan. Miss Minnie Bell read the Salutatory in a clear and distinct voice. "Bonnie Blue Flag Quadrille," by Misses Maggie Mackey and Kate Snyder, which was rendered without a fault. Vocal duet, by the choral class. "The French man's Dinner," a comical narrative, by Miss Georgie Mackey, was read in a clear, distinct voice. "Mocking Bird Variations," by Misses Maggie Kendall, Minnie Bell and Kate Snyder, with all its intricate parts, was the most perfect rendition we have ever heard. Truly the proficiency which these young ladies have attained is worthy of the highest commendation. Next on the programme was a vocal duet by the choral class, whose voices came clear and well modulated. It was a vocal treat. "Rockville Schottische," by Misses Mamie Mackey and Gertie Dunnigan. An oration was then read by Miss Josie Crosbie, the young lady had perfect command of herself and read with full appreciation. Miss Maggie Kendall closed the first part of the programme with a piano solo, "La Sonnambula." At this point the distribution of prize book taken, each scholar receiving some reward in proportion to some branch of study, or for deportment, according to the degree of merit accorded. After the intermission, the following Nun Countess played on the organ: "Gold Bottom Schottische," by Misses Minnie and Ada Bell and Nora Dunnigan. Miss Minnie Bell read the Salutatory in a clear and distinct voice. "Bonnie Blue Flag Quadrille," by Misses Maggie Mackey and Kate Snyder, which was rendered without a fault. Vocal duet, by the choral class. "Martha," by Misses Minnie Bell and Maggie Mackey, was rendered with a vocal duet. "Ave Maria Stella," by Misses Minnie and Ada Bell and Nora Dunnigan. Miss Minnie Bell read the Valedictory and lately did that young lady seem to feel and appreciate the words that she uttered, and she was apparently required to use her self control in the last degree to preserve her voice in the end. All were visibly affected. Doubtless in these exercises as evidences of study, application and careful tuition, there were some beautiful product work, tapestry, etc. These were exhibited at the production of Miss Ada Bell, Graduate, daughter of W. T. Olmstead, of Hydesville, two elegant drawings both representing an old cabin; a specimen of penmanship, a poem wrought in German text. The drawings were creation pieces in perfection. Miss Nora Dunnigan had wrought some beautiful specimens of crochet and embroidery; also a piece of tapestry representing Queen Esther. Miss Minnie Bell presented specimens of painting on rice paper; a bouquet of rosebuds wrought in tapestry; a photograph; also a portion of this young lady's graduate thesis, which, in fact, was composed of pieces of different subjects on rice paper; namely, copy; a sole rendition of valued work in one; representing a bouquet of flowers, adjusted the eye of young Miss Minnie Bell, who was entitled to the collection a corpus fecerat, was the result of the young lady's own taste and skill in drawing; thought and design; the work of her own hand, and the product of her correct taste. Miss Mamie Mackey presented specimens of tapestry. Rev. Father Lynch addressed a few remarks to the pupils, encouraging and congratulated the community of every one's holding fast to the good name of the Institute and to the pride of life. The exercises were highly satisfactory to the parents, teachers and friends, the line of parting from school mates and teachers was productive of tears in the part of many. The example of simple purity which is ever present with the pupils of this Institute is a beautiful promoter of womanly qualities, a safe conductor to virtuous pastor and a higher life. When these young ladies, in their different spheres, shall meet in the Christian life world, shall meet as a family and sisterhood, and through them in the sacrifice of the Institute, shall meet with the affection of their school days, the pure lessons and instructions of St. Joseph's Institute will hold and protect them, and prompt them to the Eternal Institute of Mercy, where, in the Eternal Life, we will forget the closing exercises of June 1st 1882.

ST. VINCENT'S ACADEMY, PETALUMA.

The annual commencement exercises of St. Vincent's Academy, Petaluma, under the charge of the Sisters of Charity, took place on the 1st, 2d, 3d and 4th June. The Petaluma Argus says:

A programme consisting of instrumental and vocal music, and recitations, was rendered in a creditable manner. Many of the performances were very good, and showed that they had not allow any extraneous particulars. The graduating class consisted of Misses Mary Clark, Mary Clark and Sarah Fallon. The whole attention was bent to show the one word through beating which is given to scholars at this school. It is understood that the young ladies are the pattern of the kind in the State. A Poet's Dream, Pre Destinate piece written by request especially for this occasion, by Rev. J. J. Ryan, was well acted by Miss Mary Clark. The piece was one of great merit, and showed a high order of elevated mind. The audience, a large number of the place of note, were in ecstatic admiration. All of the work was done by pupils of the academy and are worthy of special mention.

NOTRE DAME COLLEGE, SAN JOSE.

The annual commencement exercises of Notre Dame, San Jose, under the direction of the Sisters of Charity, took place Wednesday afternoon, in the presence of a vast audience of the friends of the institution. The programme opened with a grand march on the piano, performed by twelve young ladies. Mademoiselle Ada Bell, in French, read a fiction entitled "Washington." The Misses Bell and Lynch then sang a duet, "Lucia," particularly of Mary Queen of Scot's sad doom. Miss Mamie Mackey and Miss Lizzie Bell then sang with fine effect, "The Female Martyr." Two young ladies then were seen and heard with splendid effect by Miss Burke and Miss K. Lynch, "The New Street on the Hill." Miss Ada Prendergast, "Miss Burlington delivered one of Longfellow's poems, "The Wreck." The next piece delivered by Miss Mamie Sullivan is a beautiful poem, "The Two." Then and then only, gained her great applause.

The Valedictory was next in order, read on Misses Minnie T. Sullivan, Annie Bell, Lizzie Bell, Ada Prendergast, Mamie Burke, Lizzie Bell, Hannah Bell, Mamie Burke, Lizzie Bell, Hannah Bell, Mamie Burke, Lizzie Bell, Hannah Bell

Poetry.

THE ANGELUS.

BY JULIE BONDRIA.

The Angelus, the Angelus, how clear and sweet it rings
Across the city's noise and die, high o'er die roofs and spires!
In shaded valleys, green and fair, it softly lingers round the choir.
And dies amid the pure fresh hills in waves of mellow music.

It floats over a hundred seas, through every land and clime,
'Mid every change of dark and light, the old familiar chime;
In deep Canadian woods and glades it greets the exiles' ear,
And far away 'neath gum-tree's shade it drins the exiles's tear.

'Tis linked with golden memories of childhood and of youth,
When life yet remained brightest things, and every word seemed truth;
When summer days were not too long, and winter had no chide,
And each acquaintance was a friend, till we had friends in crowds.

The Angelus, the Angelus, the sweetest call to prayer!
That wrung in sound the angel's words and Mary's humble yes!
Oh! may its tones reach farther yet, till the great judgment day—
A Bell rebel home and wandering hearts to die—but shower away!

A lark twirl heaven and other hearts more sad—
Bed still than all.
Who wander far from Mary's feet, and will no longer her call.
Oh! ye who weep, still weep and pray for those dead feet that roam—
Pray they may find, in their having want, that hungry which lands home.

They loved her once. Who counts them lost? though they may Have left their dark their fall!
Though name and fame and soul are stained, she has not ceased for all.
Oh! may her gentle voice touch their hearts, their souls, and bring them back and thrill!
God's their Saviour yet, not judge—Mary their mother still.

Literary Miscellany.

Three Patrick's Eves.

BY JOHN AUGUSTUS O'SHEA.

THE BOTTLE AND ITS WORK.

Another Patrick's eve in dull, foggy London. There is no geniuns on the sill of 13, Shoe's Garden, now. Neither symbolling of hope without, nor sign of hope within. The poor room was bare enough last year; at present it is almost ignorant of furniture. Few would recognize in the pinched, sallow, stooped and twisting on a trouble-bed, the handsome, healthy Pat Quinn, of Cahcorrivan, and assuredly none would recognize in the sickly, yellow, complaining woman who leaned over him, his dear wife, Mary Quinn. There she was though, the once cheerful Mary, was, and sunny, fair, and delightsome in her eye, the smile on her cheek now. The change came that year had been, to speak in a homely way, from the frying pan into the fire. Poverty is a sore burden; but poverty with drunkenness is intolerable.

For Pat had become a drunkard. It is easier to pick up with bad companions than remarked, "because we work on the square and not the crook") had received on a "virtue" and the Kerrymen, who was strong and plucky, got appointed on a "plough" at eighteen shillings a week to watch those poor-spirited wretches who would sooner stitch at any price than see their families starve. It personed him from their wicked courses by gentle hints as to the safety of their sanguinary brain if they kept on that'are tack. The miscreants thus generously warned of of those sanguinary brains of theirs, and consented to stop work for a time sooner than he put in a way that they should be well to stop it always, and the Square-stitchers cried cockle-a-hoop. But in a contest of this kind money is the sinew of war, and capital has the on its side and the lax into the bargain. The catchpenny of the Square-stitchers became" exhausted gradually, the pinquess occasionally came to grief on their gallant outpost duty; with the increase of misery and the decrease of the funds to relieve it, some defections in the ranks of the "rights of labor" man, and the feathers of the Square-stitching cock began visibly to droop.

It was in this crisis the trade found itself on the evening we penetrate a second time into the home ("home," how mocking the word Dale!) of Pat Sullivan for the second time. He was in that horrid state of mental and bodily health which sometimes results from a continued debauch, especially when the sufferer has been badly led. This state is called a "dry retching," that is, an unfruitful tendency to retching. Mary had been to consult a neighbour, and they told her to try and get him to swallow something, and he would find himself better for it. But the stomach, too often and too long outraged, refused to retain anything, even the lightest beverage. She had made whey for him at Mrs. Looney's fire (the milk being boughtwith her last penny), but he had not been able to swallow it. He groaned and tossed on his pain, and Mary held his hot hand in hers, and leant over him in anguish.

Suddenly same a robust voice at the door.

"Open it," said the sufferer, looking up.

"It's Berry, I'm afraid," answered the woman.

"At the moment the door opened to the advance of the impatient visitor, and he stepped straight forward to Pat and the room.

"God bless ye—didn't hear me, I suppose—they told me it was an Irishman lived here, too."

"Mary stood up and curtsyed the while a quick scarlet blush overspread her forehead.

It was not Mr. Berry, but Father Barry, from the neighboring Catholic chapel of Lincoln's Inn Fields.

"Visiting the sick—or is it indeed here you live, my child?"

"Yes, sweet father,"

"And that man in the bed?"

"My husband."

"What's the matter with him! Fever!"

Mary blushed a deeper scarlet still.

"Why don't you send for me?" continued the good priest as he approached the patient. A glance was sufficient to convince the priest of what was the matter. The priest was the mission of Lincoln's Inn, who had too much experience of the sick drunkard's bedside. "It is a providence! sure, sure, he remained;" my good woman, run to the next apothecary's shop, and get some lime water; put that in a little milk, and we'll give it to him.

Mary still blushingly paused.

"Why do you hesitate?"

The flush was removed from her. She fell on her knees in an agony of tears and cried in a voice toward the heart of pranks.

"Oh, father, do try and save him! I'm ruined! I'm ruined! I've sold my bed and bed habits. We have hardly anything left! I was obliged to pawn my wedding ring to pay the halfpenny for a shaw! to go out to work in, the little pictures I loved of the Lakes of Killarney were sold, the dolly-shop for to-day's breakfast, the spoon threatened to pass on—'s few sticks that are left not for the rent on to-morrow."

"And to-morrow will be St. Patrick's Day."

The figure on the trackle-bed was moved as by a convulsion.

"Here," said the priest, lifting the kneeling woman, and slipping a half-crown silver into her palm, "go get what I told you in my case, and, whisper, some dinner for yourself, and we shall glass on the rest, with the help of the good God and St. Patrick."

As the door closed on Mary the priest raised the head to the side of his bed, whom when he had sworn to shelter and protect, and he had himself, the bearer of the blessed name, been an inmate of the cell with desks and pickpockets, and murderers. And he had to thank God's consolation—the bottle. The story of the twelve-month he knew well. Mary, always true, stood by him with the fondness of an Irish wife. She tried hard to reclaim the poor wretch, but cursed the devil, with the cheerful aid of his agent, the idle, mischievous, and plausible Bill Sykes, had led him fast hold of him. Pat, who most irishmen, had a high sense of honour, and generosity, and Berry had exploited it to his account. And Pat being generous, fond of company, and naturally inclined to excess, and naturally disposed to side with the same placed before his eyes, stands and oppressed—"the rights of labor" in the instance—Mr. Berry found in him only too willing a victim. Even so upon the pure, innocent, unsuspecting, shops one must be punctual with the rent, and the needs is not plied too rapidly, one the hand has acquired the habit of fagging the porter. The poor fellow's temper, the tyrant's tool, the idler lost his employment, and what did he care, seeing that he had Mary? He had a wife, he made her work first by going out as a charwoman. Incredible! Bless you, you have no idea of the measly disgraceful things men can do once they become slaves to the bottle. There was I put once spark of manliness left in the Kerryman's heart, and he was ashamed to be a tool, a mere machineron of the past—he never raised his hand to the poor, forgiving, indulgent Mary a second time.

Here pause and consider how this sudden of things would end if this Irish Pat had not fallen low indeed. The unconscious of his first night's debauch, when he had crawled home from the Lion's Head, the Sunday of "mysteries for her and forty-eight hours of prison for himself, had left a sore behind and twinging on the mind, the excitement beneath on pretty, and more amiable, she was deprived of a daughter still-born, and it was only by the incessant care of Mary that the child brought to hospital to which she had been conveyed, that the mother's life was preserved. Pat, when the news of what had resulted from his conduct came to his care, would not look on the poor little one, the mental for every shame, much less on the face of a neighbor. The thought that he had ruined the child to be the wife of his bosom whom he had sworn to shelter and protect, and to be had himself, the bearer of the blessed name, been an inmate of the cell with desks and pickpockets, and murderers. And he had to thank God's consolation—the bottle. The story of the twelve-month he knew well. Mary, always true, stood by him with the fondness of an Irish wife. She tried hard to reclaim the poor wretch, but cursed the devil, with the cheerful aid of his agent, the idle, mischievous, and plausible Bill Sykes, had led him fast hold of him. Pat, who most irishmen, had a high sense of honour, and generosity, and Berry had exploited it to his account. And Pat being generous, fond of company, and naturally inclined to excess, and naturally disposed to side with the same placed before his eyes, stands and oppressed—"the rights of labor" in the instance—Mr. Berry found in him only too willing a victim. Even so upon the pure, innocent, unsuspecting, shops one must be punctual with the rent, and the needs is not plied too rapidly, one the hand has acquired the habit of fagging the porter. The poor fellow's temper, the tyrant's tool, the idler lost his employment, and what did he care, seeing that he had Mary? He had a wife, he made her work first by going out as a charwoman. Incredible! Bless you, you have no idea of the measly disgraceful things men can do once they become slaves to the bottle. There was I put once spark of manliness left in the Kerryman's heart, and he was ashamed to be a tool, a mere machineron of the past—he never raised his hand to the poor, forgiving, indulgent Mary a second time.

Pat's second and sober—

THE MONITOR.
TWENTY-FIFTH YEAR OF PUBLICATION
WEDNESDAY, JUNE 21, 1882.

England and the Vatican.

In recent numbers of the London Tablet we notice quite an array of correspondents who all seem to be possessed with the idea that "his Holiness, Pope Leo XIII, is most anxious to resume full diplomatic relations with the British Government," and some of whom go so far as to recommend Catholic laymen to get up petitions to the present Parliament asking the Ministry and Queen to introduce a measure for the reception of a Papal Nuncio in London and the establishment of an English Envoy in Rome. Sanguine souls these writers that they seem oblivious to the fact that the present Prime Minister of England is the same Gladstone who not so very long ago gave to the world his infamous work on the Vatican Decrees, in which he endeavored to deluge England in bloodshed by means of a religious war to root out Romanism. They seem also to forget that it is not so very long ago since Cardinal Wiseman was mobbed in the streets of London, and all who read cannot be ignorant of the fact that in 1851, when the Catholic Primacy was restored in England, John Bull went wild with rage at the "Papish plot" which had been secretly smuggled into the country without consulting the clothhoppers of Cornwall or the yokels of Yorkshire! And yet these are the very same people who are now expected to give their tacit consent to a Cardinal's presence at the Court of St. James, and Gladstone is the Prime Minister who introduced the measures through Parliament! We have learned that the age of miracles is not past, and we will be convinced beyond cavil when we see the desire of some of the Catholics of England consummated.

The most enthusiastic mover in this dreaming dream of Englishmen seems to be Mgr. Capel, who has written a letter to the London Telegraph, in which we find some expressions that sound a little odd to a Catholic on this continent, and upon which we feel in conscience bound to dissent from this distinguished ecclesiastic. Thus, for instance, Monsignore says:

"The Catholic Church is a living and working power in every part of the British Empire. Wherever the Queen claims supremacy, the Catholic Church is recognized as a factor in the spread and support of moral order."

Rightly speaking, this is not true, as there are many parts of England, Scotland and Wales, as well as the foreign colonies of the British Empire, where the Catholic Church is not "a living and working power." Besides, the distinguished Prelate must be joking when he informs the world that the Catholic Church is recognized by the English Government as "a factor in the spread and support of moral order." We have not read English history and the Vatican Decrees aright, or else the assertion of Mgr. Capel is a gossamer fancy based upon the veriest fiction. In Ireland, it is a fact patent to all that for years the Bishops have been imprisoned, the Clergy have recognize the Catholic body in the higher grade of admission, and only last week we read in an Irish Catholic journal that the Bishops of Ireland threatened to withdraw from the Senate of the so-called Royal University because of the partisanship manifested recently in the selection of professors and fellows. A majority of those selected, it seems, are Protestants, though the Royal University was supposed to take the place of the Catholic University, besides most of the Professors are Queen's College men, and many of them are importations from England.

Furthermore, we see from the English papers that the Catholic Bishops of England adopted the following resolutions at their annual meeting, held at Cardinal Manning's residence during Low Week:

1. That the Catholic Church possesses by its divine constitution the inherent right of jurisdiction, conferred by the Holy Ghost, of watching over and guarding the morals of her children; and that it is her duty, and this obligation it can in no sense resign, solely in virtue of her mission and authority.

2. That the duty of a church on the part of the children of Catholic youth under systems of public schools obtaining in Christendom, is the practical recognition of this inherent right of Catholic Church.

3. That the principles and spirit which actuated the national universities and primary and board school system, and the intrinsic dangers which such institutions present to faith and morals, create a proximate occasion of mortal sin.

4. That the Government of Prime Minister, in letter of August 4, 1847, directing the Bishops to make personal letters to the clergy and laity on the subject of the Universities, upon them in these words: "We will directly explain to your pastoral letter the doctrine of the Church on crediting the prevalence of mortal sin; and to which occasions no one without grievous sin can expose himself, unless under the pressure of grave and adequate necessity, and taken such occasions to shelve, or at least remove all proximate danger. And in the present case, where, as the Bishops has declared, there is an intrinsic and very serious danger to purity of morals, as well as to faith (which is adequate and sufficient for salvation), it is next to impossible to discover circumstances in which Catholics could without sin expose such Catholic universities.

4. That the circumstances are not what constitutes "any particular case" grave and adequate necessity, "and what pronouncion can be deemed adequate to "remove all proximate danger" of mortal sin, is one, the solution of which belongs to the Church, and not to the private judgments of any individuals, even of the clergy, whether secular or regular. Such questions must in every instance be referred to the decision of the Bishop of the parents or of others responsible for the parties concerned.

5. The Bishops have agreed, each in his own Diocese, to inform all members of the Bishop both secular and regular, that they are forbidden and must not to encourage or to permit Catholics to frequent board schools, or to reside at the National Universities for a prolonged period.

From these irrefutable evidences it is very plain that England does not consider the just claims of the Catholic Church in the matter of education; hence she can not be "a factor in the spread of moral order" in any land where her hands are tied and her powers circumscribed by civil legislation.

Aside from those powerful reasons why the English prejudice would refuse to receive a political representative from Rome, we feel that the effect would be detrimental to religion. Out of the entire episcopate of Ireland we doubt if there are three Bishops who desire the consummation of the coalition between Rome and England, as they know full well, from bitter past experience, that no Nuncio residing within sound of Bow Bells could keep beyond the baneful influence of English intrigue against Ireland, and thus the cause of religion in Ireland would suffer, the Bishops themselves would be kept in constant tribulation, and Rome would be drawn into the meshes of British diplomacy, from which it would only emerge shorn of much of its ancient glory as an impartial arbitrator unbought by influence and unbribed by gain.

In his letter to the Standard, Mgr. Capel falls into the mistake common to all Englishmen who vainly imagine that Great Britain comprises the whole world, that everybody should assess when John Bull takes stuff, and that beyond the shadow of the English flag all is desolation. This impression we gained by the following extract:

"It is our pride and our glory to confess, with deep gratitude, that England gives us, in the exercise of our religion, an amount of liberty unequaled by any other power."

This may pass very well as the opinion of an English ecclesiastic who courts the favor of royalty, but readers of history will fail to see where much gratitude is due to a Government that imprisons priests for the crime of shielding their flocks from landlord oppression. Why, the very stones on Tyburn Hill still bear the red tint of the blood of Catholic priests and people executed under English penal law for no other crime than that of administering the Sacraments or receiving them at the hands of a Catholic priest. If Mgr. Capel will peruse the pages of Bishop Challoner's "Memoirs of Missionary Priests" he will discover a criminal record of English persecution which reveals tortures that are repugnant to common decency. Even within the memory of his Monsignorship the law of England did not permit a Catholic to hold any official position of prominence, to practice at the bar or to sit on a jury. And if these burdens have been lifted from the shoulders of English Catholics, pray, whom may they thank? The Government? Not at all. The English people! By no means. Gratitude places the wreath of glory upon the tombs of Archbishop MacHale and his coadjutors among the Prelates of Ireland, and, in like manner, gratitude decorates the graves of Daniel O'Connell, Richard Lalor Shiel, and a dozen other Irish laymen who gained Catholic emancipation for that very English class who fought against it formerly, but who now crook the knee to the English Crown and lavishly "confess with deep gratitude, that England gives us, in the exercise of our religion, an amount of liberty unsurpassed by any other power." In the very face of this subserviant gratitude, however, we find Cardinal Manning and all the Bishops under the British flag from Middlesex to Melbourne urging out at the injustice of England towards Catholics in the matter of education, we find sections of that civilized land where no Sister of Charity could walk the streets without danger of insult; and yet, we find that were it not for the influx of Irish Catholics into England, and the influence they which what was once O'Connell's boast as "the finest peasantry in the world," has been reduced through the rascality of landlordism and the raffianism of legal tyranny in Ireland. Is it any wonder, then, that the people of that country should be incessantly at war with that worst of despotisms—landlordism—which, not satisfied with having rendered the poor people homeless, but even refuses to allow temporary sheds to be erected to keep the elements from killing them. And when the fathers and brothers have marched thirty miles over a mountain road to seek sufficient food to keep the children that need them from starvation, they are forced by the mock guardians of the poor to go back again thirty miles with empty stomachs and hats burning in their souls. Such a régime upon England is the outgrowth of misrule, and is the cause of much of the crime in Ireland.

Davitt's New Departure.

In order that our readers may be able to judge of Michael Davitt's movements fairly and with proper understanding, we print to-day the full text of his magnificent speech in Manchester, in which there is an entire absence of the "Communism" or other "isms" alluded to by the subjoined extract from the press dating the past two weeks. In this speech we also fail to find those "advanced ideas" which we were assured created "a breach" in the Land League ranks, and which—it was hopefully predicted by a portion of the press—would lead to the disruption of the Land League unity. Hence, there is no Communism element in Davitt's speech, there is no split among the leaders, and thus the lies sent speeding across the Atlantic ocean are again contradicted. Prior to his departure from Cork, Mr. Davitt explained that his object in going to America was to make an appeal toward the support of Miss Anna Parnell and the Ladies' Land League, and also to contradict the lying rumor of a split in the League movement. He said, in reference to his mission to America, that rumors had been industriously spread by lying landlord organs in Ireland and England that there had been a split in the Land League, and that Parnell's followers were breaking away from his guidance. "I wish to tell our people in America," he said, "that this foul calumny is a lie. We have profited by past experience, and please God, we have profited to advantage. I will, therefore, tell ten millions of our race that there is no difference of opinion, no split, at any rate, in the National ranks at home, and that the banner of the Land for the people, raised three years ago, will never be struck."

It is useless, therefore, to accuse Michael Davitt of having abandoned the cause of Parnell, and of having adopted Henry George's views in direct opposition to Parnell's land views. Our contemporary says:

"That which gave the Parnell Branch its chief notoriety was its public official denunciation of Archbishop Croke as an enemy of the Land League. A resolution which was duly announced through the Cleveland papers. But it was subsequently said some there were few fresh lengths of glory left for Parnell's Land League to achieve, and the Kerry Sun soon supplanted at one of meetings, a resolution condemning Parnell, and his Land League, and the Parnell Branch to have arrived at the zenith of its glory."

People who, pretending to be Catholics, thus use the cloak of their religion for the purpose of calumniating such men as the beloved Archbishop of Cashel, and such Pontiffs as Leo XIII., deserve the most condign punishment for the outrage they perpetrate against the respect of the whole Catholic body.

We next select a precious morsel of malice, inserted in the Cleveland Herald by the President of the Parnell Branch against Bishop Gilmour: "Uncle Richard Gilmour. . . . I would take the stamp against you to-morrow and fight you to the bitter end (fight the Bishop on theocbool question). Men who, like the Bishop, think the end justifies the means."

The idea that language I. P. O'Shea addressed to the Bishop who is supposed to have charge of his spiritual salvation. But this Protestantized Prelate is outdone in his uncommonness by the Clevelandite, who Miss Mary T. Rowland, who, it appears, is a famine Bohemian who, in her letter to the Cleveland Herald, says: "Yesterday the Cleveland Sunday Times was under a cloud of sorrow that was suppressed by the public authorities." The same paper says that some two years ago the amiable Rev. Dr. Mahar (a widely-known priest of the Diocese of Cleveland) through the odoness of his immoral paper. The Doctor of Divinity was a polite reader of the Cleveland Herald, and found for which Miss Rowland was collecting.

Those, then, are the persons people upon whom Bishop Gilmour has placed the ban of excommunication, and who still have in store for the public special days have given before they can be restored to communion with the Church of God or be permitted to participate in the plenitude of God's grace through worthy reception of the Sacraments.

In this connection it may be well to bring to the recollection of our readers the fact that so far from being opposed to the peaceable, constitutional agitation of the Irish question, Bishop Gilmour blessed and encouraged the Land League movement on Irish affairs that over emanated from the Catholic Episcopate. To his host also, he said, that he was the first Bishop in America, as the Pilot American observes, to order a collection in the churches of his Diocese for the relief of the Irish people, and he was the first Bishop, at various times since, on the land movement, show that he is the friend of those who have the true interests of the Irish people at heart. He is not a land lawyer, but the vigorous and outspoken opponent of the tricksters who are striving, taint the sacred cause of Irish nationalism with the doctrine of the "Carbonari" of the "Commune;" and as such no honest lover of Ireland, who desires her future welfare, can evil at his fearless denunciation of their vile schemes. Had the so-called "Ladies Parnell Land League" confined themselves to the work for which their sisters in Ireland won such high eulogiums from the "Eagle of the Rock," and in furtherance of which we see bands of ladies, with their priests at their head, running every week in the various churches and halls, they might easily overcome any repugnance Bishop Gilmour may have to their joining the ranks of the Land Leagues. But when they allow their representatives to call the Bishop of Cleveland a "dictator" to contract and allow him to be publicly insulted at their meetings by the most flagrant disrespect, and tolerate men who will get up in to-morrow and fight you to the bitter end (fight the Bishop on theschool question). Men who, like the Bishop, think the end justifies the means."

The idea that language I. P. O'Shea addressed to the Bishop who is supposed to have charge of his spiritual salvation. But this Protestantized Prelate is outdone in his uncommonness by the Clevelandite, who Miss Mary T. Rowland, who, it appears, is a famine Bohemian who, in her letter to the Cleveland Herald, says: "Yesterday the Cleveland Sunday Times was under a cloud of sorrow that was suppressed by the public authorities." The same paper says that some two years ago the amiable Rev. Dr. Mahar (a widely-known priest of the Diocese of Cleveland) through the odoness of his immoral paper. The Doctor of Divinity was a polite reader of the Cleveland Herald, and found for which Miss Rowland was collecting.

Those, then, are the persons people upon whom Bishop Gilmour has placed the ban of excommunication, and who still have in store for the public special days have given before they can be restored to communion with the Church of God or be permitted to participate in the plenitude of God's grace through worthy reception of the Sacraments.

In this connection it may be well to bring to the recollection of our readers the fact that so far from being opposed to the peaceable, constitutional agitation of the Irish question, Bishop Gilmour blessed and encouraged the Land League movement on Irish affairs that over emanated from the Catholic Episcopate. To his host also, he said, that he was the first Bishop in America, as the Pilot American observes, to order a collection in the churches of his Diocese for the relief of the Irish people, and he was the first Bishop, at various times since, on the land movement, show that he is the friend of those who have the true interests of the Irish people at heart. He is not a land lawyer, but the vigorous and outspoken opponent of the tricksters who are striving, taint the sacred cause of Irish nationalism with the doctrine of the "Carbonari" of the "Commune;" and as such no honest lover of Ireland, who desires her future welfare, can evil at his fearless denunciation of their vile schemes. Had the so-called "Ladies Parnell Land League" confined

ENGLISH CIVILIZATION.

How English Civilization was Propagated in Ireland. English a Nation of Robbers. Reports of English Historians on English Rascality.

In a former article I alluded to the fact that the invasion of Ireland was hardly be said to have been an "English" invasion at all. The noble warriors who landed on the Suir with the Earl of Strongbow did not claim to be English men. In fact England was then a conquered country and for people more than one hundred years who conquered Ireland in the year 1192 never undoubtedly have spoken the French language or dreamed that they were "Norman French." As "William the Conqueror" came over from Normandy, and he was a modern phrase, "adjusted" England in the year A. D. 1066, and as he was attempted to conquer "Celtic Ireland" was made 100 years afterwards, and as the Norman conquerors of Ireland continued to speak the Gallic tongue, it must have been the language of the conquerors of Ireland and the "civilization" if any, which they introduced into Ireland. The English "civilization" of Ireland, then, is to be traced back to its origin in order to an author, and a work already spoken of, Mr. Hallam's "Middle Ages," in which he gives a "Sketch of the state of English society after the Norman conquest." Hallam's work is very valuable and very carefully written, and is quoted as authority in all schools, colleges, universities and libraries. It is not a work of fiction, it is not a work of romance, it is not a work of a "Celtic" or "Papist" writer, it is a work written in a fair manner as to be of great advantage to the whole English reading public, and it is a work which this system it could and would be cultivated to the highest perfection, and would be sufficient to feed wherever it was capable, and the great rich of the country would be the middle classes of the community from the borders of the country, and the middle classes would be the middle classes of the country, and the middle classes would be the middle classes of the country, and the middle classes would be the middle classes

Farm and Home.

Cheap Lands in the Future.

The report of the commissioner of public lands, just issued, contains the statement that the total amount of arable land still remaining subject to conquest under the homestead and pre-emption acts is barely sufficient to meet the demand of settlers for a year or two to come. Of course there will be a considerable amount of public land left, but the quality will be very poor. Most of it will be hilly, rocky and broken, and covered with trees of little value. A large proportion of it will be in the southern states. There will also be considerable swamp land that will be useless for general agricultural purposes till it is drained, and to drain it will require the expenditure of large capital. All the land has been passed over by persons seeking homes. Much of it has been in the market upward of forty years, and where this is the case the price is normal. Whatever there was of value on it in the form of trees has been removed by settlers in the vicinity. It will be necessary to clear it before it can be planted to crops. Owing to the number of stumps and stones it will remain, it will be necessary to work the land with hand implements. There will also be a large amount of land open to settlers in the great arid plains, but it will not be available for general agricultural purposes. That which is so situated that it can be irrigated with comparatively little expense has already been taken up. The remainder will only be valuable for grazing purposes, and a quarter section of it will not furnish a sufficiently large ranch to enable the possessor of it to get a living by keeping stock. There will also be some moderately good land in Oregon and Washington territory.

Several years will pass before the land owned by various railroad companies will be disposed of, but with the recent rapid advances of farming land it is fair to presume that its price will increase from year to year. There is also considerable land owned by agricultural colleges and included in school sections. It is also likely that several land reservations will be for sale.

The Cherokee Rose.

The legend of the Cherokee rose is as pretty as the flower itself. An Indian chief of the Seminole tribe was taken prisoner by his enemies, the Cherokees, and condemned to death, but became so entirely ill that it became necessary to wait for his restoration to health before committing him to the fire. And as he lay prostrated by disease in the wigwam of his captor, the daughter of the latter, a young, dark-faced maid, was his nurse. She fell in love with the young chieftain, and wishing to save his life urged him to escape; but he would not do so unless she would go with him. Yet before she had gone far, impelled by soft regret at leaving home, she asked permission of her lover to return for the purpose of bearing away some memento of it. So, returning her footsteps she broke a sprig from the white rose which climbed up the poles of her father's tent, and preserving it during her flight through the wilderness, planted it by the grave of her new home in the land of the Seminoles. And from that day this beautiful flower has always been known between the capes of Florida and throughout the southern states by the name of the Cherokee rose.

Bound Her Chickens Should Swim.

Some time ago a hen was set upon duck eggs, and in due time the ducklings were hatched and led out by the maternal water. Biddy was much alarmed at the apparent want of her maternity but after a few days she lost all fear, and each morning she led them to the water and patiently waited until they came down hither. After a few weeks the ducks were able to take care of themselves, and the hen was set upon eggs of her own kind. When the chicks were hatched she had not forgotten the anxiety she had experienced daily. She led her flock to the water, but to her surprise not one entered. After some time spent in talking to them in hen language trying to convince them it was their duty to go into the water, she became exasperated at what looked like disobedience on the part of her children, seized them one by one and threw them in, drowning the whole flock.

An Alligator a "Fishing."

While at Wakulla Springs, Florida, a spring that covers several acres and is from 40 to 60 feet in depth, Dr. Wolfe, of Cincinnati, witnessed a few days since an alligator's method of catching his Friday's dinner. The spring, be it remembered, is as clear as crystal, anything on its bottom being perfectly visible. The doctor thus describes the scene:

There was an old batteau in the spring, which I made use of to float me around to see the sights. The owner of this ancient craft, a Mr. Crouch, paddled the boat and acted as guide. We made several fruitless efforts to capture fish with a 'gig,' when we discovered an alligator enjoying a sun bath on the sandy beach. I gave him a prod with the gig which made him quickly slide into deep water, and there he full right to lay at full length upon the white shell bottom, forty feet beneath the surface of the water. Being entirely out of our reach, we left him as 'twere asleep. In two hours we returned to see if he had changed his position, but he still remained in dignified repose, perhaps enjoying over the fish I had given his head with the gig. Our boat lay lightly on the surface of the water above him. He was as visible to our sight as he was sensible to our touch. He seemed to be fast asleep, and what strengthened this impression was the fact that not less than 100 fishes, of all sizes and varieties, swam around him sipping watery parasites and mosses from his bony skin. I noticed this familiarity of the fish with the alligator with absolute interest. About the head and outlines of his mouth the fish appeared to be particularly attractive and most industriously engaged. They sheltered here as thick as flies and were busy as bees. Minnows were absorbed in watching this 'strange operation, conceive my astonishment when I saw the gator gradually, and, as I thought, lazily, open its mouth to the fullest extent. This, instead of frightening the fish only gave them better facilities for "picking crumbs of comfort" from the alligator's tooth and teeth. They swam in crowds, each trying to be in advance of the other, until "they had passage, as Hamlet has thrunged. Sooner than you write it the deadly trap was shut, "and the fish were not" no more." Those that got half-way in or half-way out were caught in the middle, and struggled for "liberty or death," and it was surely death. Closely I watched the gator anticipated to see the end of the museum. I fancied I saw him look up at me with a playful smile twinkling in his eye, as he seemed to say, "I fooled 'em!" He then gave a chopping gulp or two with his ponderous jaws and again went to sleep, or in other words, he closed the trap for a supply of credulous fishes.

AN OPEN LETTER.

Some Outspoken Statements of Great Value from Parties at the Highest Standing.

When the people of America become so thoroughly aroused, and on a subject of such serious importance as the preservation of their lives and health, it is but natural that the ones who have been largely instrumental in the origin of this movement should speak frankly and directly to the people most interested. It is for this reason that we thus come before the public and make the following revelation.

Every careful observer who has sought to keep pace with the march of events has noted the alarming increase of certain peculiar physical troubles within the past few years. These troubles have come at unexpected moments and in a most treacherous way. They have manifested themselves in innumerable forms, but they have always had the same cause. They have not afflicted the minor parts of the body, but have gone direct to the strongholds of the system and their work has usually been so prompt as to be fatal. Their treacherous and deceptive nature has often prevented a careful analysis of what ocasioned them, and, as a result, intense suffering and final disaster have usually ensued. The real cause, however, has been a derangement of the kidneys, and all of these troubles are, in fact, the first symptoms of the terrible Bright's disease, which has cast its dark shadow over so many homes in the land and is increasing wonderfully and continually. It is now conceded by the ablest physicians in every land and by eminent scientists the world over, that this disease is the result of blood poisoning. This poisoning is brought about by wasted and unhealthy kidneys that permit the poison to remain in the blood, instead of throwing it from the system. But it is usually evident to all who have studied into the effects and have become conversant with the facts, that a disordered state of the kidneys and liver produces most of the common complaints and pains which afflict the human race, and they can be traced to this source just as certainly as can Bright's disease. To purify a stream we must go to its source, and to cure a disease we must remove the cause. It being true, therefore, that nine-tenths of all human ailments are caused by diseased kidneys or liver, the only certain way to cure these troubles is by treating the organs which cause them. Now intimately the kidneys are associated with the entire system may be understood from the fact that over 1,000 ounces of blood pass through them every hour, being more than 300 gallons, or nearly one ton in the course of twenty-four hours. The vast mass of living fluid is sent to every part of the body, and if the kidneys are diseased the impurities that are in the blood are not removed, and hence pass through the veins, carrying disease in some one of the many terrible forms. The horrors which accompany most of the diseases caused by disordered kidneys and liver cannot be described in print, while the dangers surrounding them are even greater than the agony. And yet a person may be troubled for months or even years without the pages of the diseases that have attacked him. Some of the symptoms of the first stages, any one of which indicates disordered kidneys or liver are these: Pains in the back and around the loins, severe headaches, dizziness, inflamed eyes, a coated tongue and a dry mouth, loss of appetite, chilly sensations, indigestion (the stomach never is in order when the kidneys or liver are out of order), a dryness of the skin, nervousness, night sweats, muscular debility, despondency, a tired feeling nearly all night, yellow skin and blotches on the eyes, etc. If any of the following things are noticed about the fluids passed from the system, it shows that the kidneys and liver are out of order. A red deposit, a scum upon the surface, an unnatural thickness or thinness, a very dark or a very light color, a burning sensation in passing, an unusual odor, retention, or a frequent desire to pass water, especially at night.

The above are a few of the hundreds of symptoms which indicate the beginning of agravated cases of kidney or liver difficulties, and they require instant attention. If these symptoms are not checked at once, they are almost certain to result in some one of the many terrible diseases of the kidneys. Bad unpleasant at all the symptoms and every one these diseases may be, they are nothing compared to the last stages of the complaints. The kidneys waste away by degrees, becoming smaller and smaller, the patient becomes uncontrollable; the lungs are oppressed; the eyeballs grow glassy, and the entire system is in a state of decay and collapse. For weeks before death comes the sufferer looks forward to it as a blessed relief, and as a thing that can furnish even temporary help is gladly hailed. Then it is that bloating begins and the face becomes puffy and pallid; the pulse can only be caught in jerks; breathing is impossible, and muscular action suspended. The patient finally sinks into a state of unconsciousness to everything except the pains which racking him, and death comes by one of these slow degrees. There can be but one conclusion from which all readers of our statement will draw from these facts, which is the necessity of treating the disease in its early and by that means which has been proven the best and most efficient.

It has been our privilege to treat more cases and effect more cures of this terrible complaint than has ever been known before in the history of the world. The wonderful sale which our remedies have attained is due wholly to the fact that they have cured the ones who have used them. Thousands have used a bottle of our remedy for nearly on a basis of worth, and have to just what we claim. Kidney and Liver Cure has found the wonderful power and success. But in this connection one more important fact: It has always been true that articles of merit are subject to imitations. No one seeks to counterfeit the bills of a worthless bank. The productions of a cracked brained or evil-minded quack, who never cured. It is just so with a healing remedy. It is possessed no worth it will not be subjected to imitations. If, however, it has power and value, imitations will spring up on every side. While it is a tribute to the value of this medicine that it has imitations, still, in justice to those who are suffering, we feel that all should be warned against them.

There is but one known remedy that has ever been able to cure serious kidney troubles or control those great organs when once diseased, and that remedy is Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure. There are numerous imitations that are claiming to be just as efficacious, and some which even claim to be the same. The test of merit, however, is in what has been accomplished, and we therefore say, unhesitatingly, that for all diseases of the kidneys, liver, and urinary organs Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure stands alone, not alone in excellence, but in the wonderful results it has achieved. In order to remedy avoid the purchase of spurious and injurious medicines, observe these hints:

Our remedy is put up in dark amber glass bottles, with the flade four trade mark blown in the back. A private proprietary six cent internal revenue stamp is affixed to the cork and over the top of the cork and it of a light brown color. In the middle thereof is a Safe in outline, and on it the picture of a negro gathering beefs. If this stamp is not found on every bottle of the Kidney and Liver Cure, or if there is any evidence that it has been tampered with, and if a Safe is not blown on the back of the bottle, reject the bottle at once, and insist on having a genuine one.

We are led to publish the foregoing in order that the public may know and realize just where they stand. We have always sought to keep our personality from connecting upon the public, knowing well that the intrinsic value of our remedy is the essential thing, but the unprecedented which has been made of this medicine, and the volume of letters we are constantly receiving demand a personal statement from us. We are justly gratified at the confidence which has been shown us, and thankful for the myriads of curses our remedy has performed, and we plate ourselves for the future as we have endeavored in the past, to furnish the best and only valuable remedy that can control and cure all the many and terrible troubles arising from disorders of these great organs. Sincerely, H. H. WARNER & CO.

Rochester, N. Y.

BANKING HOUSES.

R. H. McDonald, President, San Francisco, Cal.

PACIFIC BANK. Established 1863. CAPITAL STOCK $1,000,000.00 Surplus 420,447.74

San Francisco, Feb. 9, 1882.

Report of the Bank Commissioners for the State of California to the Hon. A. L. Hart, Attorney General—Dear Sir: In compliance with law, we beg to report that we have examined the affairs of the Pacific Bank, and to submit the following answers of its condition:

STATE OF CALIFORNIA, } Bank Commissioners
CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO, } for State of California.

RESOURCES.

Bank Premises	$150,000 00
Other Real Estate owned	1,284 21
Cash on hand and in Vaults	93,277 53
Cash due from other Banks	15,141 13
Loans on Real Estate	1,187,564 01
Loans on Bonds, Gold
Loans on Bonds, Gov.	154,956 00
Loans on Warrants
Loans on Warrants, Stocks, Bonds, Real Estate	404,414 00
Loans on Other Collateral Security	1,020,617 10
Money on hand	525,000 00
Due from Bank Banks	34,223 15
Other Assets	1,279 18
Collection Account	2,000 00
Total Assets	$5,597,816 20

LIABILITIES.

Capital paid up	$1,000,000 00
Surplus Fund	420,447 74
Other Deposits	1,248,013 80
Bank Deposits	20,737 29
Interest Collected	17,437 23
Other Assets	4,376 14
Dividend Account	450 00
Total Liabilities	$3,597,816 20

R. H. McDonald, Pres't.

Jos. A. Donohoe, San Francisco. Eugene Kelly, New York.

DONOHOE, KELLY & CO. SAN FRANCISCO.

EUGENE, KELLY & CO, NEW YORK.

BANKERS.

EXCHANGE ON NEW YORK, LONDON, AND BANK IRELAND (Dublin), Payable at all the Branches And in Every Country Town in Ireland.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Advertisement has only been proposed at the low rates charged by Pitman's Advertising Agency (established 1855) to be kept in a number of surprises in the shape of a number of surprises in each issue and best appliances are in the hands of skilled and active workmen.

Promptness of delivery is a prominent characteristic in our business. Orders from the interior filled as promptly as those from San Francisco. Black Book of Advertisers, containing 1,000 pages, mailed free to order.

Cor. Sansome and Bush Sts., San Francisco.

P. J. DALY, FRUIT AND PRODUCE Commission House, 306 & 307 Washington St., Bet. Battery and Front ..... San Francisco

Goods shipped to all parts of the State. Ships supplied at Wholesale Rates.

No Pay in Advance! GREAT ELECTRIC HAIR TONIC, Warranted to Cure Baldness! 120 TYLER STREET, S. F.

TO THE LADIES. For Cheap and Handsome Hats and Bonnets go to MRS. SWANTON'S, 1217 Stockton street.

OIL STOVES, ALL SIZES, For Cooking or Parlor Use. Send for Illustrated Circular. WIESTER & CO., No. 17 New Montgomery Street, San Francisco.

DAVID DRADY, 226 Fourth Street, Importer and Dealer in Fine Mouldings, Mirrors and Pictures. Framing and Regilding done at Reasonable Prices.

A. F. KNORP, Mechanics' Mill, 411 MISSION STREET (New Premises) BEYOND FLOOR. SAN FRANCISCO. MANUFACTURER TO ORDER LADIES, BOOK CASES, Mantels, Cabinets, Mantels, and every Description of Interior Finish for Churches, Offices, Stores, Banks, Building and Dwelling Houses, and Private Residences, in any style desired and at reasonable rates. Also, Manufacturer of Sash, Doors, Blinds, Scroll Sawing, Planing, Shaping, Turning, &c. Brackets, Mouldings, and Newel Posts. Special attention paid to the putting up of machinery.

CHICKERING PIANOS. B. CURTAZ, AGENT, No. 20 O'Farrell Street. $866 a week in your own town. Terms and $5 outfit free. Address H. Hallett & Co., Portland, Me.

MISCELLANEOUS.

CARROLL & TILTON, Respectfully announce that they have opened THE LARGE STORE, 873 Market Street, WITH A LINE OF GENT'S AND BOY'S CLOTHING, FURNISHING GOODS, HATS, CAPS, ETC. Having been in this business many years, we can promise that all our goods will be as represented. We buy for Cash and sell as low as possible. CARROL & TILTON, 873 Market Street, opp. Powell, And 540 to 546 JONES & CO.

J. O'KANE, MANUFACTURER AND IMPORTER OF Harness, Saddles, Whips, Blankets, Boots, Etc. 767 MARKET ST. SAN FRANCISCO, CALIFORNIA. Special attention given to the manufacture of "Boots" of all kinds for horses. Our robes are all the principal horse fairs throughout the Pacific Coast. N. B. All orders executed superiorly in this branch of business if properly due to careful close attention and the valuable suggestions of the most skilled "surgeons" in the United States. The benefits of which receives to the public in the shape of a superior, stylish, durable article. Sign of the N. B. Direct Attention Purchasers and Dealers to our Stock of Goods. Our Prices are Lowest. Wholesale Supplying Dealers with Saddlery and Harness. Always on hand with the finest assortment of English Leather and Gentlemen's Saddles, bridles, whips, spurs, bits and fight new bridles.

ESTABLISHED 1864.

J. COONEY, PRACTICAL Painter and Whitener. SIGNS NEATLY EXECUTED. NO. 113 FOURTH STREET, San Francisco, Cal. Jobbing, small job branches, promptly attended to. N. B. Hangings.

CUMMINGS & HARRINGTON, BOOK SELLERS, BOOK BINDERS, Blank Book Manufacturers AND PRINTERS, 509 CLAY STREET, Above Sansome ..... SAN FRANCISCO. MUSIC, MAGAZINES, ILLUSTRATED WORKS, ETC., bound in Good Style at lowest cash prices. Work on monthly periodicals received. No extra charge. Send for circular.

Ladies' Cents' and Children's STRAW HATS From 50c. upwards. AT PIX'S Factory 755 Mission St., opposite St. Patrick's Church. LATE HATS WE HAVE NOT MADE, NEW STYLES MADE FROM the Pioneer Straw Hat Manufactory of the Pacific Coast.

RAZORS! FOR $1,000. I WILL MAKE A BETTER RAZOR AND MORE ONES in the same time than any man IN THE WORLD. My own make guaranteed ..... $2 50 My Grand Razors warranted not to cut the finest hair shaving ..... 3 50 Good English Razors ..... 1 00 Best English Razors ..... 1 50 Sent C. O. D. or by mail. M. PRICE, 415 Kearny Street. Grinding and Repairing.

NOTICE OF REMOVAL. JERRY LOWNEY & SON HAVE REMOVED THEIR CARRIAGE FACTORY from 1019 Market Street to the Commodious Building 1026 Ninth Street. All kinds of carriages and wagons for sale and made to order, and repairing promptly attended to.

CHEAPEST PLACE To Buy New and Second Hand Machines. All kinds; rented $1 per month; rentals for all machines; allowed on purchase. SINGER OFFICE, 151 FOURTH STREET.

THE BEST TEA. There is no worse hypocrite than bad tea, not only so dear and disappointing. Above all others the tea which we call our Old Japan Tea is just what it will forward, only that shows the young as well as the old hard, and leaves no unpleasant sensation to regret its use. Everyone is looking for good tea, and those who have hitherto failed to find so precious a commodity, should give a trial to the Great American Importing Tea Co.'s, Original 50 cts. Pure Fragrant, at 375 and 104 Kearny street.

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free. Address Stinson & Co., Portland, Me.

TAILORS.

John Kavanagh, MERCHANT TAILOR, 6 New Montgomery Street, PALACE HOTEL, S. F. The Making of Clergymens' Cassocks a Specialty.

N. SWEENY, MERCHANT TAILOR 41 Second street, Opposite Jesse street ..... San Francisco. Cassocks and Clerical Clothing a Specialty.

JOHN HICKEY, Merchant Tailor, 933 Market street, Between Fifth and Sixth streets ..... San Francisco. Business Suits to order from $20 Pants ..... 5 Black Doeskin Pants 35 7

D. LETER & CO., 25 Montgomery Avenue, (BRANCH, 20 FOR RENT STREET) Merchant Tailors, Business Suits to Order, From ..... $20 00 Pants ..... 5 00 Fine Dress Suits ..... 35 00 Black Doeskin Pants ..... 7 00. Perfect Fit Guaranteed Or No Sale.

M. FITZPATRICK IS The BOSS Tailor, Of the Pacific Coast, 36 1-2 FOURTH STREET, Corner of Jessie ..... San Francisco. ☞ We thank for your CLOTHES. You are sure to be suited and don't you forget it.

THOMAS DRADY, MERCHANT TAILOR No. 6 Third Street. Near Market, S. F.

E. F. WILTON, MERCHANT TAILOR, 16 Stockton Street.

DENIS REDMOND, MERCHANT TAILOR, Fine Suits $35 Hayes street. ☞ Perfect fit and good work guaranteed.

PETER SHORT DRAPER AND TAILOR, No. 1 Montgomery St. Masonic Temple. All the Latest Fashions in Suitings JUST ARRIVED. Dress Suits to Order ..... $50 Business Suits to Order 30

PEHRSSON & PAUL, Merchant Tailors, 205 FOURTH STREET, S. F. Suits Made to Order from $23.00 Upwards. Pants to order from $6.00 Upwards. PERFECT FIT GUARANTEED.

BELLS ETC.

MENEELY BELL FOUNDRY. Favorably known to the public since 1826. Church Bells, Chimes, Peals, Academy Bells, and other Bells, also Chimes and Peals. MENEELY & CO., TROY, N. Y.

BUCKEYE BELL FOUNDRY. Bells of Pure Copper and Tin, for Churches, Schools, Farms, Factories, etc. Warranted satisfactory. Catalogue sent Free. VANDUZEN & TIFT, Cincinnati, O.

Church & School Bells. Bell, Cotton Bell, Cotton Bell, Hung & Rigged. No. 8, 25 in. $30 lbs. $ 25 00 No. 7, 22 in. 20 lbs. 20 00 No. 6, 20 in. 150 lbs. 50 00 No. 5, 18 in. 100 lbs. 35 00 No. 4, 16 in. 60 lbs. 25 00 No. 3, 14 in. 30 lbs. 20 00 No. 2, 12 in. 20 lbs. 15 00 No. 1, 10 in. 10 lbs. 10 00. Brauer & Co., Schoen Falls, N. Y.

BLYMYER M'F'G CO. BELLS. Church, School, Fire Alarm, & other Bells. Warranted superior to any other make. Catalogue sent free. LINFORTH, RICE & CO. Sole Agents, 303 and 305 Market Street, S. F.

Clinton H. Meneely Bell Company, Successors to Meneely & Kimberly, Bell Founders Troy, N. Y., manufacture superior quality of Bells. Special attention given to Church Bells. ☞ Catalogues sent free to parties sending name.

McSHANE BELL FOUNDRY MANUFACTURE THOSE CELEBRATED BELLS for Churches, Academies, Fire Alarms, Time Locks and Clocks. Also Chimes and Peals. HENRY McSHANE & CO., Baltimore Md.

I am suffering with Catarrh, or Bronchitis, and cannot procure relief. I can furnish a number of testimonials of Wonderful Cures. A Name Testimonial, Free. Sufferers should address, Dr. Sanford's Office, 162 Fulton St., N. Y. Sold by druggists everywhere. Sanford's Radical Cure for Catarrh, Cold in the Head and Catarrhal Headache. Price, 50 cts. ☞ Ask for Sanford's Radical Cure. Beware of Snuffs, Powders and Nasal Douches. Sold by druggists. Potter Drug & Chem. Corp., Boston.

SOLD BY DRUGGISTS AND NOT WITH STUFF. Dr. Sanford's Liver Invigorator. Positively Cures Liver Complaint, Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Biliousness, Jaundice, Constipation, Piles, Dizziness, Sick Headache, Dysentery, Diarrhœa, Colic, Flatulency, Nervous Prostration, Fever and Ague, Malaria, Chills and Fever, Fever and Ague, Malaria, Chills and Fever, Fever and Ague, Malaria, Chills and Fever of Ireland that is known to be the most loyal to the authority of England. Surely those men should not be left to shriek those which can be addressed by Irishmen, and which are supported by unprejudiced English thought upon the other side (loud cheers). That the Irish land code is of English origin is true; but does that fact necessarily constitute it a good code or one suited to the genius, customs, and wants of the Irish people? The land laws are notoriously unsuited to the requirements of a progressive age, and have consequently been in a great measure swept away in every civilized country outside of Great Britain and Ireland; but had not this been the case, and were this still capable of being pointed to as suiting the feelings and social conditions of one or more civilized nations, this could be no argument for their continuance in Ireland, in face of their scenes of disastrous failure in that country (cheers), and in opposition to the interest and will of the Irish people (loud cheers). The assertion that landlordism is essential to the supremacy of English authority in Ireland, that it constitutes the tenure by which the country is held in subjection, is one of those popular fallacies which only need to be examined in order to be thoroughly exploded.

DAVITT'S GREAT SPEECH.

[CONCLUDED FROM FIRST PAGE.]

THE ORIGIN IS EASILY TRACEABLE to those who have followed the consequences of their treatment of the peasantry of Ireland in proportion to the strength of their authority in the English mind. If the landlords of Ireland were the only need or physical power for the maintenance of England's authority in that country, about how long do you think our people be kept in subjection to their rule? (Cheers.) Not a single day; and it is well known that an army of 50,000 men and a military police force of over 12,000 men is deemed necessary to defend the property of the landlords. It would be a waste of words to refute the assertion that the landlords are in the main guard of England's supremacy in Ireland (cheers). Of all the institutions of law looting on Ireland by comparison as a foreign and making a part of the machinery by which it is governed, landlordism presents the weakest point of attack. It has always been, and must always continue to be, the most obnoxious factor of English rule, and would alone, in the absence of every other circumstance, arouse the deep sympathy in an unmitigated state, let the flame of social discontent, and inspire a national sentiment of resistance which would in time that could obtain such a notoriously obnoxious system (cheers). Instead of being England's strongholds it is just the reverse, as it renders the name and authority of England the most unpopular of all the injurious Government responsible for all the injuries which it inflicts upon the country, and consequently it is the interest of the state the name of the power whose instructions are carried into effect by landlords. Landlordism, Mr. Davitt proceeded to say, had never succeeded in obtaining a respectable position from the Irish people, who had now fully made up their minds as to what in their land demand (cheers), and that measure must be passed upon Irish landlordism (cheers). Mr. Gladstone's temporary expedient of fixing rents, backed by the undisguised desperation with which he means to enforce the payment of those rents, and some and frighten other Irish men from other other Irish men, is a temporary measurement of the Irish social problem, but he deceived himself egregiously if he imagined that the Land Legislation movement is about to ebbe itself all the world over because he has been conveyed to Mr. Parnell's view upon the arrears question (cheers), and accepted the entire of the Land Bill, leaving the treaty of Kilmainham (cheers). I think it is well to remind the Irishmen who, when they have supported the whole Irish party through the diplomacy of Parnell, have yet been ready to cry out upon the arrears question (cheers), and accuse the Irish party of having broken up the treaty of Kilmainham (cheers). I think it is well to remind the Irishmen of Poetry.

VISION OF THE WOUNDED.

BY ELEANOR C. DONNELLY.

Two hands have hastened me for days,
Two hands of slender shape,
All crushed and torn, as in the press
Is trodden the purple grape;
Albeit of moulds, at prayer or play,
These manifest paths I know,
And a plaintive voice keeps whispering:
"These hands were pierced for thee!"
For me, sweet Lord? for me?
"Yes, even so, wrapped in thy
These hands were pierced for thee!"

Through bells and daggers pressing on,
As through a fiery flood,
Two circlets feet beneath me shine
Mark every step with blood;
The swollen veins—cut with nails,
It breaks my heart to see.
While the same red vine-stains
"These feet were pierced for thee!"
For me, dear Christ, for me!
"Yes, even so, rebellious flesh!
These feet were pierced for thee!"

As on they journey to the close,
These wounded feet and mine,
Dim grows still the world, the
And more and more Divine,
For in my guide's wide open side,
The river heart I see,
And the tender voice echo like a pulse,
"This heart was pierced for thee!"
For me, great God! for me!
"Yes, even in my love, my
This heart was pierced for thee!"

Literary Miscellany.

The Pictorlai Prayer-Book.

BY GEO. PARKINSON.

It was many a long year ago, and the scene of my story is the office of one of the most respectable notaries in Paris, Monsieur Dubois, a man of the old school, universally respected for his good sense, probity, and benevolence. There were present, beside the notary himself, a lady of middle age, nicely dressed; she could never have been handsome but perhaps had her countenance been less proud or disdainful she would not have appeared as she did—positively ugly; an insignificant looking little man and a woman, very shabby dressed, who sat at some distance from the others, holding the hand of a beautiful little boy. "Her death was rather sudden," said Madame Moreuville, the richly clad lady, to the man inquiringly.

"Yes," replied he coolly; but no doubt she was well prepared.

"Have you got rid of the contents of the will?"

"Her death the slightest; but we shall soon know. Dubois will open it directly.

"Pray, who is that shabby looking woman? What business can she have here?"

"Oh! don't you know her! It's the run-away nurse, Marie, who made such a disgraceful match some years ago with a lieutenant in the army—a man of low birth."

At that moment Marie approached the speaker; she was scarcely in middle age, but sorrow had been inscribed with time in robbing her cheek of its bloom and her eyes of their fire.

"Pray, what brings you here?" said Madame Moreuville, haughtily.

"Madame, I replied the poor widow "I am not come to interfere with your rights; I have I have deserved nothing from my aunt but her pardon, and I hope to have she has left me that."

"What!" cried Madame Moreuville, "pardon to you, the disgrace of your family, who fled from my relation—of your aunt—the best of aunts—with a low fellow!"

"Madame, I acknowledge my fault. I have been vegetating in a miserable village; but I am not the only sufferer; I have lost my husband, and my sorrow and my poverty have taught me to know the value of my fault."

"Yes, even so, vengeful! thing! These hands were pierced for thee!"

"Pshaw! tell me what she left you."

"Not

Poetry.

VISION OF THE WOUNDED.

BY ELEANOR C. DONNELLY.

Two hands have beaten me for days,
Two hands of slender shape,
All crushed and torn; as in the press
I, bruised in the press, gape;
Adrift on moist, at prayer or play,
Were mangled palms I see,
And a pleiadic voice keeps whispering:
"These hands were pierced for thee!"
For you, sweet Lord! for me!
Yes, even so, anguished lying
These hands were pierced for thee!

Through toils and dangers pressing on,
As through a fiery flood,
Two slender feet beside me have Mark every step I tread!
The swollen veins are red with coils,
Which the nails have made!
Yet, as I hear the voice out-shrill
"These feet were pierced for thee!"
For you, dear Christ, for me!
Yes, even so, rebellious flesh!
These feet were pierced for thee!

As on they journey to the cross,
Those wounded feet and mine,
Dumbness still the vision grows
And more and more Divine,—
Up in my spiritual wide open sight,
The river heart I see,
And the radiant wave ashe like a psalm,
"This heart was pierced for thee!"
For me, dear Christ, for me!
Yes, even so, my love, my lamb,
This heart was pierced for thee!

Literary Miscellany.

The Pictorlai Prayer-Book.

BY GEO. FARRINGON.

It was many a long year ago, and the scene of my story is the office of one of the most respectable notaries in Paris, Monsieur Dubois—a man of the old school, universally respected for his good sense, probity, and benevolence. There were present, besides the notary himself, a lady of middle age, ruddy dressed, who could never have been handsome but perhaps had her countenance been less proud or disdainful she would not have appeared at she did—positively ugly; an insignificant looking little man and a stranger, very shabby dressed, who sat at some distance from the others, holding the hand of a tasteful little boy.

"Her death was rather sudden," said Madame Morsaville, the richly clad lady, to the man nabbiest.

"Yes," replied he coolly; but no doubt she was well prepared.

"Have you any idea of the contents of the will?"

"Not the slightest; but we shall soon know. Dubois will open it directly.

"Pray, who is that shabby looking woman? What business can she have here?"

"Oh! don't you know her! It's the run-away niece, Marie, who made such a disgraceful match some years ago with a lieutenant in the army—a man of low birth."

At that moment Marie approached the speakers; she was scarcely in middle age, but sorrow had been beforehand with time in robbing her cheek of its bloom and her eyes of their lustre.

"Pray, what brings you here?" said Madame Morsaville, haughty.

"Madame is my husband's widow" "we met come to interfere with your rights; I know I have deserved nothing from my aunt but her displeasure and I hope he has left me that."

"What!" cried Madame Morsaville, "pardon to you, the disgrace of your family, who fled from the protection of your aunt—the best of aunts—with a low fellow!"

"Madame, I acknowledge my fault. I have been ungrateful and disobedient, I know it; but my suffering have been so great that I hope Heaven has pardoned me; for I have lookedon it as the loss of my husband, and the poverty and sorrow attendant upon it, as a punishment from above.

"And you deserved—"

"Cease these reproaches, madame," said the notary in a stern tone; "your conduct is fault is not so very grievous as to call for them."

"But why should she insult me with her presence!"

"She has a right to be here," replied the notary. "She came at my desire."

He then proceeded to read the will, in which, after the usual preamble, the deceased divided the property into two equal parts. The first was composed of a sum of eight thousand pounds in the hands of a notary in the second of a furnished house, some rubies and some family jewels; the third of an illustrated prayer-book. The will then proceeded as follows:

"I desire that my property may be divided into these lots: the first to be the eight thousand pounds; the second the chateau, furniture, and jewels; the third, my prayer book, which is still in the same state as when I took it with me in the emigration during the reign of terror. I pardon my niece, Marie, for the sorrow she has caused me; and, as a proof of my sincerity, I mention her in my will. My beloved cousin, Madame Morsaville, will have the first choice, my brother-in-law, Monsieur D' Arlement, the second, and Marie the last.

"Ah! my sister-in-law was a sensible woman," cried M. D' Arlement.

"I'm," said Madame Morsaville, tilting the lids as if to prevent the tears from flowing, "I shall still have the prayer-book."

The notary, who seemed scarcely able to conceal his indignation, interrupted the testator.

"What lot do you choose, madame?" said he.

"The eight thousand pounds."

"Madame Morsaville, you are rich, and your cousin is very, very poor; cannot you leave this lot and take the prayer-book, that this—this" he seem for a moment at a loss for an expression, "this strange will has put in the balance with the other lots?"

"Are you joking Monsieur Dubois? or don't you see my honoured cousin has made her will with the express intention that her prayer-book shall fall to Marie who has to have the last choice."

"And what do you conclude from that?"

"I conclude that she desired her niece should understand that prayer and repentance were the only excuses she ought to expect in this life. Ah! she was a saint, that dear woman."

"Saint, quoth!" cried the notary indignantly; "may Heaven defend me from such saints! An unforgiving, unnatural woman! I am wrong, I do her injustice. Her intention I am sure, was to give you and Monsieur D' Arlemont an opportunity of doing a good, a noble action by dividing the property equally with her niece.

"Monsieur D' Arlemont will do as he pleases; I repeat that my choice is made.

"And as to mine," said D' Arlemont "I shall take the chateau and all it contains."

"In that case, said the notary," addressing Marie. "I can only give you, my good Madame Le Fayre, the prayer-book."

She took the book and pressing it to her lips, she held it to her son's who stood out with childish delight at the sight of its richly gilt cover. "O mamma! let me have it."

"Yes, my boy, you shall have it; it will be the only legacy I can leave you. But, never, never will I part with it. I thank Heaven she has pardoned me, she has said it, and I know she was truth itself."

The notary turned whay his head.

"Don't go, Madame Le Fayre," said he. "I must speak to you by and by."

At that moment the boy, in playing with the book, unclasped it and cried out. "O mamma! look at the pretty pictures. But why are they all covered over with this nice thin paper?"

"It is to keep them from being soiled."

"But why put six papers to every picture!"

His mother looked; she uttered a piercing cry, and fell fainting into the arms of Monsieur Dubois, who said to those present: "Let her alone, it is nothing; she will not die this time. Give me that book, child; you may do mischief to it."

The two rich legatees went away, commenting not very charitably on Marie's swoon, and the evident interest the notary took in her.

About a month afterward they met Madame Le Fayre and her son, both well dressed, riding in a very pretty carriage with two horses. This unexpected sight led them to make inquiry after her, and they found that she had purchased a handsome house, and was living in a quiet but very good style. Thunderstruck at this intelligence, they went together to question the notary. They found him at his desk.

"Do we interrupt you?" said the lady.

"I am not particularly busy; only making out an account of bank stock I have just bought for Madame Le Fayre."

"And for Heaven's sake where does it come from?

"Why, don't you know?"

"No; how should I?"

"Did you not see what was in the book when she fainted?"

"No."

"Well, then, I must tell you that the prayer-book contained sixty engravings, and each was covered by six bank notes of fifty pounds each!"

"Good heaven!" cried the gentleman. "Oh! if I had but known!" and the lady.

A Heavenly Secret.

In those good old times, when people are supposed to have lived better lives than we do now-a-days, they had a quaint fashion of clothing plain, practical ideas in the poetic garb of pretty stories, leaving their hearers to realize the truths thus disguised. Every now and then some patient priest or hermit would musically recite a long story, in a given stored way in an obscure nook or corner of an old monastic library, and receive the jewel for our pleasure and instruction. One of these ancient legends recently brought to light, tells us of this secret from heaven:

"The gates of heaven were opened one day to welcome a beautiful young soul who bore no sign of the Cross, no trace of having ever experienced an earthly sorrow. A strange, beaming with celestial light, had never shed a bitter tear; her feet were not scored with stinging from worldly thorns; she had never experienced a disappointed affection. The inhabitants of the heavenly Jerusalem wondered how it was that the angel widow "" see not come to interfere with your rights; I know I have deserved nothing from my aunt but her displeasure thence which He Dr. vine bounty had prepared for her. The silent aloofness of her pure mysterious countenance. How, thought they, could this soul reach heaven without being stained with the seal of suffering? None of them could solve this strange enigma, but the soul turned to her Guardian Angel, and said:

"She has accepted thorns, clouds, sunshine, and all times in all places; always rejoicing in the Divine Will, she knew how to place God between herself and sorrow. Then this mystery was clearly understood.

The Indian and the Crucifix.

Father De Smet, S. J. the celebrated Indian missionary, used to tell the following remarkable occurrence. It is given, as nearly as possible, in his words:—"In 1840," said he, "I visited the Blackfeet Indians, though they are a very warlike tribe, received me with a kind welcome. On this occasion I was present at a council held, at which, after the usual preamble, the deceased divided the property into two equal parts. The first was composed of a sum of eight thousand pounds in the hands of a notary; the second of a furnished house, some rubies and some family jewels; the third of an illustrated prayer-book. The will then proceeded as follows:

"I desire that my property may be divided into these lots: the first to be the eight thousand pounds; the second the chateau, furniture, and jewels; the third, my prayer book, which is still in the same state as when I took it with me in the emigration during the reign of terror. I pardon my niece, Marie, for the sorrow she has caused me; and, as a proof of my sincerity, I mention her in my will. My beloved cousin, Madame Morsaville, will have the first choice, my brother-in-law, Monsieur D' Arlement, the second, and Marie the last.

"Ah! my sister-in-law was a sensible woman," cried M. D' Arlemont.

"I'm," said Madame Morsaville, tilting the lids as if to prevent the tears from flowing, "I shall still have the prayer-book."

The notary, who seemed scarcely able to conceal his indignation, interrupted the testator.

"What lot do you choose, madame?" said he.

"The eight thousand pounds."

"Madame Morsaville, you are rich, and your cousin is very, very poor; cannot you leave this lot and take the prayer-book, that this—this" he seem for a moment at a loss for an expression, "this strange will has put in the balance with the other lots?"

"Are you joking Monsieur Dubois? or don't you see my honoured cousin has made her will with the express intention that her prayer-book shall fall to Marie who has to have the last choice."

"And what do you conclude from that?"

"I conclude that she desired her niece should understand that prayer and repentance were the only excuses she ought to expect in this life. Ah! she was a saint, that dear woman."

"Saint, quoth!" cried the notary indignantly; "may Heaven defend me from such saints! An unforgiving, unnatural woman! I am wrong, I do her injustice. Her intention I am sure, was to give you and Monsieur D' Arlemont an opportunity of doing a good, a noble action by dividing the property equally with her niece.

"Monsieur D' Arlemont will do as he pleases; I repeat that my choice is made.

"And as to mine," said D' Arlemont

Catholicity at the Home of Calvin.

A correspondent writing recently from Geneva to the London Tablet, says:—

"England should rather be glad to hear that we have now got four large churches and one small chapel in Geneva. They have all been opened since 1873, when the four Catholic churches of this town were sold by the Government. They were well attended and in a flourishing condition, though receiving no help from the State. With one exception they have been called by the same names as the churches that have been taken away. At one of them, the Sacre Cœur, there is an English Confessor. The village churches around, on the Swiss territory, have all been taken from us, but the Catholics of each village have opened a new church, which happily the Federal law allows them to do.

"The four confessed churches here are not much used by their new masters, the "National Catholics."—They are shut all the week, and on Sundays there is only service in the morning, which is said to be attended by only a few individuals. I am told that the confessionals have been removed and the altars laid bare.—They are served by French defroques, who go about in lay dress, and are said to have no influence of any kind.

"It is expected that St. Joseph's will soon be for sale, as it appears that it has no congregation whatever, and it is hoped that the Catholics will then be able to buy it back. In a word, the Catholic Church has come triumphantly off the field of battle here; the defeat of the schismatics, with all the power of an infidel State at their back, has been complete. Non nobis Domine, non nobis, sed nomine tuo da gloriam.

Sta. Stabina, Rome.

This most interesting church, once given by Honorius III. to St. Dominic, and by the Dominicans retained in possession, is the mother church of the Rosary, and where, in the convent adjoining, we still see his cell, has been now allotted to his Eminence Cardinal McCabe as his title. The ancient edifice that surrounds the convent, and its spacious gardens is a remnant of the fortification here raised by the Savelli family. The church, founded S. D., 428, and rebuilt in 824, was consecrated anew, having been restored by Gregory IX., in 1238. Few mediæval buildings in Rome have been more maltreated than this; and yet there is a quiet solemnity in its aspect that no despoilers have effaced. In 1586 was swept away the antique chancel with marble screens and enclosure, all of the ninth century; the fine old interior pavement being at the same time destroyed as well as all traces of the entire interior decoration in laid marbles and mosaics. Alike have disappeared the mosaic heads of the Saviour and fourteen saints on the chancel arch, and also the whole upper part of the picture. But one interesting art-work when remains, is the grand door of cypress wood, in panels, with low relief of subjects from the Old and New Testaments. Some "antiquarians" suppose these panels to be older than the seventh century, while several place them later than the thirteenth. In these panels are twenty-four Corinthian columns of white marble, relics of the Temple of "Jano Bagnus," which once stood here above is an inlaid frieze of pietra dura. The Church of Sta. Sabina is built on the site of the house of the saint, in which she suffered martyrdom under the Emperor Hadrian, A. D., 425, by Pater, a priest of Illyria (pauperibus locuples, sibi pauper) "rich for the poor, and poor for himself." St. Gregory the Great read two of his homilies here. The High Altar covers the remains of Sabina and Seraphia, St. Theodore, Pope, Eventius, and Theodulus, all martyrs. At the end of the right aisle is the chapel of the rosary, where one of the most beautiful pictures in Rome (by Sassoferrato) commemorates the vision of St. Dominic, on the very spot where he received the Rosary from the hands of the Blessed Virgin. The cloisters of the thirteenth century are distinguished by a severe simplicity approaching to monkishness; their low marble shafts supporting pointed arches, under plain superimposed bandings—a solemn scene at hours when the dim light harmonizes with the sentiments of monastic antiquity. The upstairs terraces command a view beyond description interesting; on one side groves and a still fruitful, the orange tree planted by St. Dominic; in the saint's cell there hangs an impressive picture of him by Hasanni Noders, but founded on traditional ideas of a supposed—described as radiantly beautiful. This abounds in legends of the great convent of St. Sixtus, of St. Thomas Aquinas, St. Pius, V., St. Norbert, St. Raymond de Peñaafort, etc., etc.

Evil Ways of Americans.

Rev. Dr. Gallagher, of this city, has been studying the question why the death rate is larger in America than in Europe. His conclusions are that the American people shorten their lives by wrong living. They are dying out, and the cause are: First, because they eat too much and too fast. A person studying closely the habits of Americans would think that their object in life was to eat. Americans seldom converse five minutes without something to eat. Another reason why Americans are dying out is because they drink too much. The curse of our nation is intemperance. A third reason why Americans are dying out is because they gamble too fast. This is becoming a nation of gambling which is undermining all honest industries. Another reason is disappointed ambition. We are a nation of cranks. Each man desires to lead his fellows. A republic has many blessings, but it possesses one disadvantage, the failure to satisfy the grasping ambition of its teeming millions. If a man in Europe fails in business, he knows he still remains true to him, as a rule. But in this country when a man loses his fortune by adversity he is quickly forgotten. We should cultivate amenities and duties of life upon a person's bank book.—Home Journal.

Straight to Heaven.

A good, Christian mother, who had a habit of gathering her children round her every evening and reading for them a story from the "Lives of the Saints," was rewarded for this pious practice by the holy thoughts and pious resolutions it inspired them. One day as she read the story of the holy Martyrs, Agnes and Cecilia, the eldest of ten, said to her: "Mother, if we were about to die like the Machabees, surely you would prevent us?" The mother hesitated a moment, and looked around upon her little children, with a deep sigh of maternal affection, while two big tears stood in her eyes. "My mother," said Fanny, the little angel of sight as she kissed away the tears from her mother's cheek, "I know you love us, and you would not prevent us from dying for God; but rather encourage us, for then you know we would go straight to heaven."

The Worst Kind of Poor People.

It is too often true that rich Catholics are poor Catholics. They abound in natural goods; they are indigent of graces and virtues.

Their wealth is their evil. They pay homage to it, and they expect that the crowd who have less of it than they have, will worship them as its avatars. They are of the world, worldly. They are vain of their costly mansions, their liveried servants, their magnificent equipages, their immense stores, their jungle and fine linen, their broadcloth, their silks and satins and laces and furs, their dainty meats and rare wines, and of the opportunities for other pleasures which their money makes for them.

These people are a hindrance to the Church. They will not cultivate spiritually themselves, and they are a scandal both to the weaker brethren and to non-Catholics who know what they profess and what they practice. They are the enemies within the household. They are the liberal Catholics, who, on the presence of outsiders, minimize the doctrines of their religion, lest they be ashamed of being Christians. They have no Rosary. They keep no sacred pictures or holy water in their homes. They do not make the Stations of the Cross. They do not pray before or after meals. They have no family prayers. They do not frequent the Sacraments. They cannot fast on Lent. They must have a dispensation from this and a relaxation of the law. They do not see the harm of mixed marriages, and they would not have a Nuptial Mass at their weddings, not they, indeed, but it is not the fashion, "good form, you know, and what would they do if they were not in the fashion."

They introduce into congregations the cursed spirit of worldliness. They must have the first pews, they must bow down to them, and the service must be conducted to suit their fashion.

To them may be applied the words of the Apocalypse: "Thou sayest I am rich and made wealthy, and have need of nothing; and knowest not that thou art wretched and miserable and poor and blind and naked."

They should take to themselves that denunciation of Christ:—"Woe to you that are rich, for you have your consolation." And that other warning: "Woe to you that are rich, for you have already received your consolation."

Yet, they are Catholics, they have joy in the kingdom of heaven.

They should cultivate their money. It was not granted them for themselves alone. Others are not starving. They should part with their superfluity. They should practice self-denial. They should give good example. They should have no pomps and vanities of earth. Unless they do, they will surely go into the exterior darkness, where there is poverty complete and eternal, and gnashing of teeth forever.—Catholic Mirror.

Publication of the Vatican Codex of the Greek Bible.

A Rome correspondent writes: "His Holiness, under date 17, current, addressed to Canon Fabiani, and to Abbot Cozza, of the Monastery of Grotta Ferrata, an official Brief, to congratulate them on the successful completion of the Herculean enterprise of the Vatican Codex of the Greek Bible. This most precious Codex, designated by bibliographers by the letter B, is deemed by the best critics the most ancient of the Biblical Codices, though there are extant earnestly to claim that honor for the Codex Sinaitic Discovered in the Library of St. Pacomius. It was written in Alexandria, Egypt, probably in the fourth century of the Christian era, and designed for the public use of the Greek Liturgy.

"It is thought to be one of the volumes which, with truly regal munificence, Constantine the Great ordered copied in Alexandria, and transmitted from the vision of St. Dominic, on the very spot where he received the Rosary from the hands of the Blessed Virgin. The cloisters of the thirteenth century are distinguished by a severe simplicity approaching to monkishness; their low marble shafts supporting pointed arches, under plain superimposed bandings—a solemn scene at hours when the dim light harmonizes with the sentiments of monastic antiquity. The upstairs terraces command a view beyond description interesting; on one side groves and a still fruitful, the orange tree planted by St. Dominic; in the saint's cell there hangs an impressive picture of him by Hasanni Noders, but founded on traditional ideas of a supposed—described as radiantly beautiful. This abounds in legends of the great convent of St. Sixtus, of St. Thomas Aquinas, St. Pius, V., St. Norbert, St. Raymond de Peñaafort, etc., etc.

What a Woman Can Do.

As a wife and mother, a woman can make the fortune and happiness of her husband and children or, if the old proverb be true, surely this would be sufficient destiny. By her thrift, prudence and tact, she can secure a competence for herself and a competence in old age, no matter how small their beginning or how adverse may be their lot. By her cheerfulness she can restore her husband's spirit, shaken by the anxiety of business. By her tender care she can restore him to health, if disease has overtaken him. By her counsel, she can point out the way he should take to find happiness, if temptation is in his path. By her counsel and sympathy, she can inspire him with courage and energy in the battle of life. By her counsel and sympathy, she can inspire her children, however adverse their positions, into noble men and women. And, by leading in all things a free and beautiful life, she can refine, elevate and spiritualize the first generation of her children with others of her sex emulating and assisting her, she can make a beautiful world around her. When all the statesmen or reformers that ever legislated.

She can do much, she can do much, she can do much, she

THE MONITOR.

PERIODICAL PAYS TRIP OF PUBLICATION

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 26, 1895.

What Two Preachers Don't Know About the Catholic Church.

It would be almost as consistent to expect a pig to dance the polka as to rely upon a Protestant preacher to tell the truth about Home, Romanism, or anything pertaining thereto never so remotely. This peculiar feature of Protestantism we have alluded to at sundry times, and we are forced to allude to it again from the last two of our sectarian contemporaries alluded last week to the Catholic Church and the Irish question after a fashion of ignorance which would disgrace a Digger Indian. Why is it that men—clergymen so they call themselves—who undertake to edit Protestant organs, will make themselves the laughing stock of their neighbors by printing pure nonsense about Popery, and try to pass it off as editorial evidence from the lowest level of literary erudition? Do these preachers perpetrate such blunders in order to keep their readers wrongly informed regarding "Romanism," or are they really too ignorant to know better themselves? There's the Pacific, for instance, has a correspondent who signs himself "Atlantic," who quotes Latin, and who writes about "creeds" as if he had served a life-long apprenticeship to the business of making them—yet when this long-studied writer attempts to briefly state the nature of the Catholic creed and of infallibility, he perpetrates this bungling paragraph:

"The Danish Church claims that they are so therefore because they have formulated by the ecclesiastical power. Whatever emanates from the Pope or some ecumenical council must be infallible."

Now, for the information of just such ignorant contributors as the Pacific writer, we will state that the Apostles' Creed, which is the sum of Catholic belief, was not only "formulated by the ecclesiastical power," but was actually composed by the twelve Apostles before they separated to preach the gospel to all nations. The Pacific writer should also know that it is not Catholic doctrine to say that "whatever emanates from the Pope or some Ecumenical Council must be infallible." If the Pacific writer will spend only a pinpeck of his cash purchase a "Brewmish" book that will tell him all about this subject thereof at present he labors under invincible ignorance. Yet he has the assurance to formulate a rule for the Catholic Church which is as wrong as it is ridiculous. We hope, therefore, that "Atlantic"—like many more of his kidney—will learn a little about the Catholic Church before he undertakes to instruct his readers, whom he only makes equally ignorant with himself.

The other preacher, with whom we have to deal is the evangelical egotist who edits the very un-Christian paper called the Christian Advocate—the city organ of the "Methodist Episcopal Church." Whose intolerance is measured by the amount of malice they can perpetrate against what they would call twin evils: Pope and Popery.

"Ireland" is one of the themes the very un-Christian Advocate editor wrote about last week, and, if we are to judge of his physical condition by his mental production, we should say that he had a bad attack of yellow jaundice while he was using his pen to pitch Popery out of Ireland. Just hear the reverend nutter as he writes about a subject whereof he has as much knowledge as a horse has of a holy day:

"Ireland is laid contrast the difference between the Protestant and Roman Catholic systems of religion. Protestanism in Ireland is under precisely the same laws as Papism."

Ireland does present "the bold contrast" which our Bibleist friend alludes to, but it is not exactly in the same light as he view it. Take, for example, the contrast between the morality of the Catholic portion of Ireland and the Protestant section, and we will find a fearful "contrast," indeed! Dr. Forbes, one of Victoria's physicians, published a record of illegitimate births a few years ago, and in one of his chapters he thus notes "the bold contrast" between the proportion of illegitimate children, which he declares originates exactly "with the relative proportions of the two religions in each Province—being large where the Protestant element is large, and small where the Catholic element preponderates." This may not be the kind of difference to which our Methodist editor alluded, but it suggested itself as a very suitable reminder for the ranting critic of the Catholic Irish people.

The wise man of the Wesleyan supply informs us that the Protestants in Ireland are under precisely the same laws as the Papists, but he evinces his Know-nothingism by not stating that Protestants make the laws, apply them, define them and administer them, and all poor Catholic Pat has to do is to obey or go to jail. If he asks that his child may have a little Christian instruction mixed up with the pro-English education his children are forced to accept, he is marked as a malcontent, dragged before a magistrate, thrust into prison on "suspicion," and then turned adrift, after a year's incarceration, to find his children spiritual away by some child-stealing swaddling schemer of the free soup brigade, his wife, mayhap, dead, and his happy little home leveled into the dust! Oh, yes! Brother Advocate, the laws are the same, but the administration of the law is what makes a country potable of the pious of Paradise or the turmoil of Hell! The Advocate need only read the history of England's misgovernment of Ireland to discover the kingdom of the hell in which she has kept the Irish people for the last seven centuries.

Instead of looking to England to remedy the wrongs inflicted on Ireland through bad legislation, the Advocate sees the mountain of Irish grievance to be entirely composed of one sole ingredient, viz.: "Popery," and the sweet-scented swaddling soul would remedy all the Irish wrongs by simply driving all the Prelates, priests and Papists to that sulphur-scented region known as the "Hades" in the ridiculously-revised edition of the bogus Bible, or confine them within the classic regions of Connaught where Cromwell consigned them when he was Beelzebub's left bower in the bloody business of butchering the Irish people. "Kill off Popery," cries the Advocate, with all the zeal of a Roman gladiator drunk with the blood of the slains. But this Market street Methodist is too late in the field with his Protestant panacea for the cure of the King's evil inflicted upon poor Pat. For three hundred years this Protestant plebeian has been applied to the christened scrofulous of the Irish people, as, yet, from the time of the application of Cromwell's caution, down to Gladstone's granulated golden remedy, not a single prescription in the whole pharmacopoia of Protestant persecution has been able to purge Popery out of the Irish people! Hence, the Advocate's Wesleyan wash would prove ineffectual as the nostrum of a quack who knows nothing whatever of the disease he would experiment upon, and who is too intensely bigoted and ignorant to discern the true remedy for Ireland's wrongs.

Having thus shown our Market street Methodist how much he does not know about Ireland, let us call his attention to the true state of Ireland's misfortune, as set forth recently by an Englishman in the column of the Manchester Examiner, under the signature of "Verax," who is a prodounced Radical, a Protestant and a Dissenter, and one who can instruct our Market street Methodist quack so that the Advocate may not hereafter waddle in such Wesleyan prejudice relative to the question of ignoring Bishops, priests and Papists from the land Christianized by St. Patrick long centuries before the miasma of Methodism infused indifference and infidelity into the religious atmosphere.

Now, enlightened and un-Christian Advocate, open wide your capacious, ungrateful ears, and listen to the lecture which an honest, noble-hearted Christian of the Protestant type delivers to you and your kind upon the real cause that has kept Ireland in turmoil and trouble since the Saxon curse first fell upon her fair bosom. The article in question is entitled "The Religious Difficulty in Ireland," and the sentiments it contains does great honor to the head and heart of the Englishman who gave them utterance. "Verax" says:

"England was a Protestant Power when she undertook the re-conquest of Ireland. The Irish were required to accept both the rule and the faith of their conquerors. They were entitled with the political rules and the religious rules at the same time and by the same hands. The same blow which struck down the power of the native chiefs struck down the native Irish Church, and then companions in misfortune became fast friends forever. In this way fidelity to the ancient faith became associated with revolt against English rule. The State existed for Protestants exclusively, and it was held that the only way means by which England might hope to keep Ireland in its power was the proscribing of the native faith. This plan was tried till it failed, and had to be given up, but it in the interval Ireland priest and Ireland and kept alive the national image, I ad stood by the people in the darkest days, of persecution, and submitted once for all the alliance between religion and patriotism. Brighter days have dawned since then, but we have never yet effectually disarmed the hostility of the priesthood. The Irish priest is true to his trust, alone. He is persuaded that we have no religion, that we would uproot it if we could, that much of our legislation as regards Ireland has this for its real though unavowed aim, that our friendship is as dangerous as our hostility, and that our very gifts are to be received with fear. If all Ireland were Catholic these suspicions might be allayed, and give way to a spirit of trustfulness. But Ulster is sturdily, fervently Protestant, and keeps the ancient quarrel warm. The enemy is there encamped upon the soil. He has in Ulster a base of operations from which his proselyting agencies can be pushed into the remotest corners of the land. And Ulster is helped from England. Almost every Protestant denomination has its Irish Missions, whose object is to convert the Catholics of Ireland to Protestantism. The people who support these Missions would disclaim any sectarian design. They would say that their object was, not to win over the Irish to Protestantism, but to enlighten them in the way of salvation, to put the word of God into their hands, and make them acquainted with the blessings which are offered in the gospel 'without money and without price.' These efforts are well meant, but it cannot be reported that the Catholic clergy will view them with approbation. I am afraid that they regard them as great insults. 'What! they say, with scorn, 'are we and our flocks, who belong to the one, true and Apostolic Church, to be treated as if we were infidels or pagans? Do the schismatics who left our communion three centuries ago blacker than they have any heavenly message to convey to the children of St. Patrick and St. Columba?' There is some force, we fear, in this indignation. Ireland is so strong in a priest as in other people, and—but this is to be called as impolite in his own court. Protestant sects do not tolerate proselytizing among one another. If a society were established to convert Church people for the purpose of converting Methodists, or by Methodists for the purpose of converting Presbyterians, or Independents, or Baptists, a fearful outcry would be raised, and the mission would have to be abandoned. Yet we all admit that it is quite natural to sanction missions for the conversion of the Catholics of Ireland. The assumption which justifies this difference of procedure would seem to be that Catholics are not Christians, or that salvation is not procurable in the Catholic pale, or that Catholics cannot furnish adequate motives to a good and devout life, an assumption which would be resented as insulting by those who would oppose to act upon it. Aggressive Protestantism, admitting for its theater of action a country stained as Ireland is, represents one great Christian division. It keeps up a sharp antagonism between the two countries, and renders it almost impossible for Ireland to endeavor in the same political community."

There, Brother Advocate, put that in your Methodist moonshiners and inhale its fumes, so that you may have some idea of the Irish question before you again attempt to solve a matter that is too profound for your shallow comprehension.

Now let us hear "Verax" relate the manner in which the laws of England, regarding education, are administered in Ireland. The un-Christian Advocate says: "Protestants in Ireland are under precisely the same laws as Papists," but, in order to show how truly the Advocate knows about law or gospel in Ireland, we again quote from the letter of "Verax," in the Manchester Examiner:

"The general impression among Englishmen is that we have acted handsomely towards the Catholics of Ireland, and that if they are still discontented it is only a proof that they are unreasonable in their demands. I cannot see that we have done much for them. We have abolished the disabilities under which they once suffered, that is, we have ceased to do them grievous wrong. We have also disestablished the Protestant Church of Ireland, allowing it, however, to carry off a handsome endowment out of the national estate. But we have done nothing for the Catholics of Ireland beyond capitalizing the sexual alliance formerly made by Maynooth. Possibly we ought to do nothing, but, at any rate, let the fact that we have done nothing be confessed. How have we treated the Catholics of Ireland in the matter of education? Almost fifty years ago we woke up to the conviction that it was necessary to provide Ireland with schools. It was a remarkable discovery, but we took care in carrying out our intention not to afford the slightest countenance to the religion of the Irish people, nor to derive any assistance from it. The schools we founded were secular schools, in which no religious instruction could be given in the ordinary course of teaching. If the co-operation of the clergy should have been invited anywhere, it was in Ireland. If religious instruction according to the tenets held by the great mass of the people might have been tolerated anywhere, it was in Ireland. But it was not permitted in Ireland, while it was, and always has been, permitted in England. The doctrine of the Church of England are taught freely in eleven thousand schools which receive the assistance of the State, but the doctrine of the Catholic Church are not permitted to be taught in the twenty-four public schools of Ireland, though the children who attend may be all Catholics. For the last twenty years the Catholics of Ireland have been anxious to establish a Catholic University, and they have begged for some assistance in the way of endowment or annual grant. But till lately they begged in vain. Mr. Gladstone attempted to meet their wants in 1873. He was held to check by the national jealousy of Catholicism, decently veiled under an objection to all grants for denominational purposes, and we therefore unable to do all that he wished. But small as was the installment he offered, Mr. Fawcett rose in his wrath against it and got the Bill thrown out, to the satisfaction of English Protestantism, and the eternal overthrow of Mr. Gladstone's Government. Lord Beaconsfield ventured upon another attempt, and scattered his Government on the difficulty, but in an opposite one way. A new University has been founded, the principles of which is to offer scholarships, to be competed for by students of the various colleges in Ireland, the successful competitors carrying the money with them to the college from which they came. By this and analogous methods Catholic colleges may be indirectly endowed without violating the scrupulous consciences of England. We cannot do what we wish to do straight out, but save our scruples by a subterfuge. This is not the way we treat Scotland. The Scotch Universities are Presbyterian to the core. They have Moral Philosophy professorships, History professorships, and Faculties of Divinity. But all four are in direct receipts of Parliamentary grants, equivalent in the aggregate to £24,000 a year. Almost every chair in all four is endowed. St. Andrews gets £2,100; Aberdeen, £2,900; Glasgow, £3,400, and Edinburg, £5,600, the balance of the £24,000 going to the maintenance of an Oriental chair, a Scottish chair, and to the principle of these endowments I say nothing. My sole purpose is to compare our treatment of Presbyterian Scotland with our treatment of Catholic Ireland. Again I beg to wave the trite and perhaps unwelcome lesson. We must open our eyes and enlarge our hearts and fling aside our prejudices to the winds if we wishfully succeed in pacifying Ireland."

This extract clinches the last nail in the Advocate's coffin. "Verax" has triumphantly vindicated the cause of the Catholics of Ireland, and the pagan piece of the Advocate is thoroughly cooked!

How Humbug Histories Is Made.

When we consider how many falsehoods against the Catholic Church are found in the columns of the daily press, and which are read and accepted as truth by hundreds of thousands of people, we Catholics need not be so much astonished at the malicious feeling of animosity evinced even by intelligent people against us. The New York Sun circulates about 135,000 copies daily, and the Chronicle of this city must aggregate at least half as many copies, so that no less than a quarter of a million people, within the last month, have read the following paragraph in the centre of a long article published under the curious caption of "The Czar's Party:"

THE FAMOUS SLAV, JOHN GUSS.

The Slavophiles take special pride in the history of a famous Slav, Jan Guss. At the beginning of the fifteenth century the "Age of great corruption of morals," when simony reigned in the Catholic Church, and pest and fever were remitted according to a tariff—when, in short, a most repugnant heathenism was propagated under the name of Catholicism—Europe criminally slumbered. Then Jan Guss arose, denounced the Popes, preached Christianity in its pure form, and demanded the communion in both forms—bread and wine—for the laity as well as the clergy. Guss was burned alive by the Catholic clergy, but his followers made a terrible war. The Pope's moral authority was undermined, and a fertile soil was prepared for Martin Luther, whose appearance Guss had prophesied.

The unlimited lies contained in the foregoing extract are the bad eggs re-hatched by those who hated the Church hundreds of years ago, but which have been put through the incubating process ten thousand times by preachers and teachers whose only mission seemed to be to pervert the truth as much as possible in order to put an end to Popery forever. Our readers may inquire—and rightly so—who is this Jan Guss, or where he flourished. They will seek in vain through all the encyclopedias and indices of history, as he is nowhere to be found, having been born out of the brain of some Bohemian who wrote to suit the popular taste for pernicious periodicals where in Popish persecution is shown up. We think, however, that our nameless Bohemian should have called his myth Bo Gin, as that would have been nearer the proper name for a Jesuo Slav who never existed, who never denied anything, and who, consequently, was never burned by priests, for the simple reason that he never lived! Yet this is the way in which four-fifths of the calumnies against the Catholic Church are formulated and circulated among the people.

The Result of the Democratic Convention.

The MONITOR is not, in any sense a partisan journal, and takes part only in political affairs whenever matters of great moment, which are of vital interest to the people, come up for public consideration. California is about to hold a most important election this Fall, and the Democratic party having placed its nominees in the field for the suffrages of the people, it is our duty to tell our readers what we think of the men for whom they will be asked to vote, and the principles advocated by the entire party platform, just as we will give our opinion of the Republican nominees as soon as they are singled out by that party.

If we are to judge of the quality of the ticket nominated by the Democracy by means of the criticisms of the independent press and the ambiguous of sensible people, we should pronounce the Democratic ticket the strongest ever nominated in the State. The platform, too, is plain, strong and substantial, and, taken in connection with the anti-monopoly material which makes up the ticket, its principles will commend themselves to a large number of people who will give their adherence to any party pledged to rid the people of the horrible echra of monopoly which is annually coiling itself, serpent-like, more and more around our State and will crush the life-blood out of the people unless some remedy is found to release them from the clutches of monopoly. This fact is admitted by all and apparent to those who are not blinded by bribery or silenced by the "sack" of some rich corporation. Monopoly makes the rich more richer and the poor man poorer; it is the foe of the farmer, the enemy of individuals, the bane of business, the bane of all from the toiling manacle and loosen its fangs only when it has absorbed all the blood of the community. Monopoly creates the curse of aristocracy, dividing the community into masters and slaves; it thwarts the will of the people through bribery at the ballot-box, and is destined, if not checked by the American people, to change the whole system of this government from being "a government of the people" into a government where gold will wield the power and the people's voice be unheeded. This is the case, even at this day. Look at the millions upon millions of acres of land given to monopolies by the laws passed through means of a well-paid lobby in Washington. No less than 137,601,337 acres of public land have already been bestowed upon a few fat monopolies! Just ponder on the quantity of land in one hundred and thirty-seven millions acres, and then ponder on the number of people who could find free homes on this domain if it were not swallowed by land-sharks. Eight millionds alone have received 104,135,000 acres—one hundred and one miles of road. Thus it is that the public domain is stolen from the people to satisfy the grasping greed of monopoly.

Look at the local legislature and the same state of affairs is found, and we boldly assert that unless the toiling masses of this country—the producing millions, of whatever class—unite in their might to battle against this monstrous evil, a time will come when it will be too late to decide the conflict between capital and labor through the ballot-box.

In so far as being on the side of the people and against the monster of monopoly, we must acknowledge that the Democracy of this State have nobly adhered to true democratic principles. The delegates at those old-fed permit Democrats who, for a coaxed or coerced by Capital into placing any man upon the ticket in order to placate some corporation or individual, to be observe the secret aims of any monopoly.

The candidates named are all men whose antecedents both as citizens and as the representatives of the people in the various offices they have filled, gives those who vote for them a sure guarantee that, if elected, they will not sacrifice the rights of the people in exchange for the price of purchased principles.

At the head of the ticket stands a man honored among men, as a brave soldier with his breast of his valiant services in sustaining the purpriety of the Union, and, what is still better, he is no fresh soldier fledged into military prominence through political influence, but a hero who fought his way bravely until he achieved a rank and fame in the Union Army which entitles him to the confidence of the American people. This is the candidate whom the Democracy have wisely selected as their nominee for Governor, and if GENERAL GEORGE STONEMAN is elected, California will find in him a prudent and economic officer.

It is not our intention at this early hour of the campaign to mention the various qualifications possessed by all the candidates, as we will pass over many of them for the present, and prefer to them hereafter, but we must congratulate the Democracy upon the political wisdom they evinced in the selection of Hon. GERARDO SUEZNER as one of the candidates for Congressman at Large. We look upon Mr. Sumner as one of the most prominent political magnates in California, and he is elected we feel that his influence will be used to promote the best interests of the people of this State.

Another salient nomination on the general ticket was that of JOHN P. DUNN for the position of State Controller. This gentleman is one of those men of sterling worth whose honesty and capacity entitle them to the suffrages of their fellow-citizens, irrespective of party bias, and John P. Dunn will be endorsed by thousands of voters who honor him for the uprightness of his official career when Auditor of this city.

In the selection of Hon. E. J. MARSHALL for Attorney-General, the Convention also exhibited great sagacity, as he is a gentleman whose legal acumen and well-known constitutional courses will make him a valuable auxiliary to his party in the canvass, and as the legal representative of the rights of the people he will prove an unquestionable advocate.

The Delegates from the First District deserve honor to themselves and the constituents they represented by placing in nomination for Congress the sterling patriot GENERAL WILLIAM S. ROSECRANS, who deserves the recognition of election as "a good and faithful servant" who will represent the interest of the State in the present Congress.

The nomination of Hon. ORESTES GRIFFIN as a member of the State Board of Equalization was a stinging tribute to "God's noblest work—a honest man"—as Mr. Gilldea has proved himself true to the people in every official capacity.

We will allude to the nominees of both parties during this campaign, as we mean to keep our readers parallel with the political race which is to decide the question whether the people are to be ground down by monopoly, or will they preserve enough of the principles of true American independence to vote for candidates who will place themselves upon the anti-monopoly platform.

Davitt's Nationalization of the Land Scheme.

We are indebted to some unknown friend in Lancaster, England, for a copy of the Liverpool Post of the 7th inst., in which we find a full report of Michael Davitt's speech in that city, in which he gave a rapture the programme by which he proposes to remedy Ireland's grievances. We have read the document in its entirety, and we are forced to acknowledge that we see nothing tangible or practical in a single proposition therein wherever a departure is made from the plan proposed by Mr. Parnell. It would also seem to us that the present is not the time to try any experiments nor is it the season to leave the road that has led to victory in order to travel through outsiders fields in the hopeless task of making a safer road way than that over which our predecessors in Irish patriotism have traveled. At best, Mr. Davitt's theory is only theory after all, and his idea of making England owner of the soil of Ireland in such one that will inner reverse the assertion of any large share of Irish people. England now holds Ireland through the landlords, but to place the Government in the place of the landlords would be very much like jumping out of the frying pan into the fire. Besides, it is not unreasonable to suppose that the landlords of Ireland would be very much more easy to deal with than the Government! No just law can compel an owner to part with his property in land or personalities unless he gets the value in return. Surely the world look like political dreaming to think that the programme pointed out by Mr. Davitt, if adopted, would bring any practical benefit to the Irish people.

We cannot help feeling that Mr. Davitt has chosen a very inappropriate time for the promulgation of his scheme, unless we are much mistaken—the effort will only result in drawing the attention of those most interested in the land question, who are interested in arguing the pro and con of the different programmes presented that the practical workings of the Land League will be neglected, and the noble organization in America cease to be an effective auxiliary to Ireland.

We sincerely hope these surmises may be baseless, yet the signs of the times point with fatal mercury to such results in past agitations for Ireland, and we fear that what has been may be again.

Sacrilege in a Catholic Church.

During Saturday night some persons removed the tabernacle from the Church at Ashby, Massachusetts, a small station of St. Paul, and it was entirely broken and scattered. The tabernacle was found in the yard of the church, and was substantially broken, so that the damage will be considerable. The sacrilege was discovered on Monday morning by the sexton, who found the door to the branch of a tree by a rope which was about 40 feet from the ground. The work of the sacrilegious scoundrels.—London Universe.

This disgraceful proceeding reminded us that very lord whereof Mgr. Capel boasts thus: "It is our pride and our glory to confess, with deep gratitude, that England has given, in the past, a large and generous amount of liberty unsurpassed by any other power." But, in this instance, as in many others, facts speak louder than words, and prove how much even a Monsignore may err whenever he attempts to say too much.

DECISIONS OF ROMAN CONGREGATIONS

(DUPLICATION RESCRIPT.)

In a certain city in the diocese of N——, a pious association, established by Pope Benedict XIV., a plenary indulgence once a month for receiving the Holy Communion, and for visiting the Church on the occasion of these confraternities an opportunity of plenary indulgence which had been granted to then the parish priest of the Church, where the association is, and the sacrarity of priests in the diocese, in asking permission to transfer the Pious Union, on the ground that the facility of duplicates is granted to the Congregations of the Holy Cross, to hear Mass, and not to furnish a function, nor even to the Congregations.—(SUCC. 27 AP. 1862.)

RESCRIPT ON THE ANNIVERSARY OF THE OBLIGATION OF A CHURCH.

A diocese of the sacred congregation of Rites, dated 7th February, 1862, following the practice of St. John Lateran, and of the religious Order of the Minors, which a Keystone Mass to be said on the anniversary of the dedication of a church, even when the body is present.

Nulla affectare in hoc decretum, definitionis propriae Ecclesiae Missam de Requie, ac praesertim cum ejusdem ecclesiae dedicatio, quemadmodum in Patriarchali Arbitrarium Lateranensi, obligatio ter anni quotidie celebrandi, ac ipsa Missa de Requie, non obstante decreto diei 16 Aprilis 1853, in una Dioc. Mis S. Franc. de Observantia (4 dubium XX., quo missa hujusmodi permissa fuit ut, (SUCR., 27 Feb. 1862.)

DEVOTION TO THE BLESSED VIRGIN.

THE SORROWS OF MARY—THIRD DOLOR

(Translated for the MONITOR from the French "La Vierge.")

Great was the grief which the soul of Mary pierced by the sword of Simeon constantly felt, and terrible was the affliction suddenly by her when she had to fly before Herod, take the road to exile, and dwell in a pagan country! But so yet the divine Child had not escaped persecution His Mother wherever she went, and His sweet presence had illumined with the beatitude raptures the thrones of the Cherubim. What sudden change when hearing to the Mother's heart when Jesus remained in her three days, and when she felt for the first time, that she was deprived of her Son. This is a mystery, one of the greatest mysteries of the thirty-three years of the life of all Saints and we should carefully meditate upon it. The Holy Family repaired to Jerusalem for the feast of the Passover. In those hearts were already sounding words which Jesus will later on address to His disciples: "Behold we go up to Jerusalem, and the Son of Man shall be delivered to the Gentiles to be mocked, to be scourged and to be crucified."

Mary, particularly, since the prophecy of Simeon, keeps continually before her the terrible vision of the passion and death of her divine Son, and hence as she is passing Calvary with the Child, she feels her pure breast the dark hill, and it even now appears to be prepared with its three crosses, and lavine her to the sacrifice of her Son, and to her martyrdom. But strange to say, at the same time that she discovers the cruel instruments of torture by a secret arrangement of Divine Providence the present is completely veiled from her eyes, she did not know if the Child passed through her Son's Calvary was a good way off, her own was very near. We can easily conceive that the loud lines of Mary for Jesus was continually on the increase, and that it had attained a degree of intensity, which we cannot compare to any other created being. In the earlier years of the divine Child the mystery of an incarnation, the joy of the Nativity, the charms of the world and powerless infancy, but soon the words of scripture commenced to be realized "and Jesus increased in wisdom, and age and stature with God and men." The divine beauty, the charms of the infant Jesus, the sweet words, grew manifested more and more in his humanity, which was full of charms and graces His every look and movement, and in his every word and action. Certainly, all these heavenly attractions were lost on the world, and every hour of the day, was absorbed all by the eye of Mary, most have kindled up every moment a new flame of love in the maternal heart. Each succeeding day, when Mary saw her Son, the Divine beauty, more clear and amiable than the instant that preceded it. And, as light of a sudden, and without a warning, she loses this mighty treasure, We can easily imagine the sorrow of Mary, at first, amidst the shades of evening and fallen upon Judea when the last lambs of men and women and children (except apart from each other had just within one days distance from Jerusalem A song that vast numbers of people were coming and going, and in reality, were more isolated than were formerly Adam and Eve on the evening of the day when they were driven from the earthly paradise, and when the last rays of the setting sun had gilded the hills of Eden, and for the first time to her eyes disappeared in the valley of tears. All light had gone out of Mary's soul, and there came upon her a night of sorrow and of tears, and of a sword pierced. It was because Jesus was no longer with her, and she felt the sharpness of the sword, and the sorrow of the Mother of Jesus, and the tears of the Mother of Jesus increased in wisdom, and age and stature with God and men." The divine beauty, the charms of the infant Jesus, the sweet words, grew manifested more and more in his humanity, which was full of charms and graces His every look and movement, and in his every word and action. Certainly, all these heavenly attractions were lost on the world, and every hour of the day, was absorbed all by the eye of Mary, most have kindled up every moment a new flame of love in the maternal heart. Each succeeding day, when Mary saw her Son, the Divine beauty, more clear and amiable than the instant that preceded it. And, as light of a sudden, and without a warning, she loses this mighty treasure.

Farm and Home.

Making the Crows Useful.

W. S. Morgan, Somerset County, Pa., in view of the fact that the corn-planting season is at hand, gives his experience, which we commend to those who look upon the crow as an enemy. He says: "For the past five seasons I have, just before I expected my corn to come up, mowed on the field about a quart of corn in each acre, and repeated the operation, as necessary, until the corn was so large that the crows could not pull it. If the corn is soaked until tender, they prefer picking what they want to and from the surface, rather than to pull the young plants to get it. The cost of the corn thus sown is but a trifle, and as a result I have a great number of crows almost constantly on my corn-field, and after they have been satisfied with corn they will still pick up all the insects, grubs, and cut-worms they can find, as a dessert. In raising 50 acres of corn, since adopting this plan, I have not lost a hundred stalks by crows and cut-worms combined.

Girls First.

The best husbands I ever met came out of a family where the mother, a most heroic and self-denying woman, laid down the absolute law, "Girls first." Not in any authority, but first to be thought of as to protection and tenderness. Consequently, the adolescence over which those lads were taught to show to their own sisters naturally extended into all women. They grew up a true gentleman—gentlemen, generous, unassuming, yet possessing of speech and kind of heart. In them was the protecting strength of manhood, which scorns to use its strength except for protecting; the proud bravery of manhood, which instinctively prefers being fertinglyand spunky rather than being "twisted round one's finger," as mean men are twisted, and mean women will always be found ready to do; but which I think all honest men and brave women would not merely dislike but utterly despise.

Poor Men's Wives.

The trouble is, upon of our young women are willing to become poor men's wives pretty, even though they may be so in reality. The girl who marries upon a thousand dollars a year looks forward to life spent in second-rate boarding houses, from which she will squeeze out a certain cheap domesticity and some expensive pleasure. The children which Heaven may send will not thought of nor provided for. It is a question whether the young wife can make the dress, or prepare herself a whole course meal of victuals. She marries for freedom, for a good time, spend money which she neither earns nor helps to earn—for Heaven knows what—but certainly not to make a comfortable if humble home for her husband.

One of the hindrances against getting a good wife arises from the false basis upon which society is constructed. The idea that equality is the peculiar birthright of all Americans is erroneous. Where every person thinks that he or she is as good as the next, there is always the opposite proof of incompetency.

A person is intrinsically neither better nor worse than another except in that degree in which he or she is honestly sought to be selected. But the disposition of young women to place the prize (and that some may be found in every young person, perhaps, not to the mine extent) is to think they are as good as everyone else, without taking the trouble to be so. From this erroneous belief arise many of the evils from which society suffers.

Boys Could Learn Trades.

In all countries the workingmen boast that they form the backbone of the nation. Without entering on the vexed question of what form the working-classes, we think the most independent in any country is he who learns a good and useful trade. Compared with him the poor clerk, salesman, and even many in the professions have no calling or occupation, and can be a moment's competitor. If they are thoroughly masters of their trade, good workmen never need fear starvation; they will be always able to make a living. If trade is dull at one place they have only to change to another. Parents in most countries who are a little wall of too much disposed to turn up their noses at the trades, and instead of teaching their boys one of them, give them a first-class education, and then comparatively throw it away by putting them to what they falsely consider the more respectable employment of a clerk or salesman, that in general does not succeed half the expectations. If parents would consult the future welfare of their children they will teach them trades. And if their circumstances render it unnecessary for them to depend upon the labor of their hands, they can start the better in business in that trade on their own account; or if a reverse of fortune should happen, they will have the power of earning a livelihood at their fingerends.

The Household.

—A few drops of ammonia added to the water in a vase of flowers will preserve them much longer.

—All kinds of burns, including scalds and sunburns, are almost immediately relieved by the application of a solution of soda to the burnt surface.

Cream and Cement.—Five pints of ripe cucumbers, three pints of sugar one pint of vinegar, one tablespoonful each of cinnamon, cloves, allspice and black pepper, half a tablespoonful of salt. Boil together for half an hour.

Raspberry Jam.—Three quarters of a pound of sugar to every pound of fruit. Put the fruit on alone, or with the addition of one pint of currant juice to every four pounds of raspberries. Roll half an hour, mashing and stirring well; add the sugar and cook for twenty minutes more. Blackberry jam is very good made in this way, only omitting the currant juice.

—Dr. J. R. Page, of Baltimore, in the New York Medical Record, invites the attention of professions to the topical use of fresh lemon juice as a most efficient means for the removal of membranes from the throat, nose, &c., in diphtheria. In his hands it has proved by far the best agent he has yet tried for the purpose. He applies the juice of the lemon, by means of a camel's hair pencil, to the affected parts, every two or three hours, and in eighteen cases on which he had used it the effect has been all he could wish.

—A Vermont paper relates that a farmer living near St. Johnsbury hired a Frenchman to work for him. The first morning the Frenchman was called at 4 o'clock for breakfast. After eating a hearty meal, he arose from the table and remarked: "This best place I ever got in; two suppers in one night. Hurrah for bed again," and retired not appearing again until 6 o'clock.

AN OPEN LETTER.

Some Outspoken Statements of Great Value from Persons of the Highest Standing.

When the people of America become as thoroughly aroused, and on a subject of such serious importance as the preservation of their lives and health, it is but natural that the ones who have been largely instrumental in the origin of this movement should speak frankly and directly to the people most interested. It is for this reason that we thus come before the public and make the follow-ing revelations.

Every careful observer who has sought to keep pace with the march of events has noted the alarming increase of certain peculiar physical troubles within the past few years. These troubles have come at unexpected moments and in a most treacherous way. They have manifested themselves in innumerable forms, but they have always had the same cause. They have not afflicted the minor parts of the body, but have gone direct to the strongholds of the system and their work has usually been so prompt as it is fatal. Their treacherous and deceptive nature has often prevented a careful analysis of what causes them, and, as a result, intense suffering and fatal disaster have usually ensued. The real cause, however, has been a derangement of the kidneys, and all of those troubles are, in fact, the first symptoms of the terrible Bright's disease, which has cast its dark shadow over so many homes in the land and is increasing wonderfully and continually. It is now conceded by the ablest physicians in every land and by eminent scientists the world over, that this disease is the result of blood poisoning. This poisoning is brought about by wasted and unhealthy kidneys that permit the poison to remain in the blood, instead of throwing it from the system. But it is equally evident to all who have studied into the effects and have become conversant with the facts, that a disordered state of the kidneys and liver produces most of the common complaints of the age which afflict the human race, and they can be traced to this source just as certainly as can Bright's disease. To purify a person we must go to its source, and to cure a disease we must remove the cause. It being true, therefore, that nine-tenths of all human ailments are caused by disordered kidneys or liver, the only certain way to cure them troubles is by treating the organs which cause them. How intimately the kidneys are associated with the entire system may be understood from the fact that over 1,000 ounces of blood pass through them every hour, being more than 300 gallons, or nearly one ton in the course of twenty-four hours. This vast mass of living blood is used to every part of the body, and if the kidneys are diseased the impurities that are in the blood are not removed, and hence pass through the veins, carrying disease in some one of the many terrible forms. The horrors which almost pany most of the diseases caused by disordered kidneys and liver cannot be described in print, with the dangers surrounding them are even greater than the agony. And yet a person may be troubled for months without knowing the cause of the diseases that have attacked him. Some of the symptoms of the first stages, say one of which indicates disordered kidneys or liver are these: Pains in the back and around the loins, severe headaches, dizziness, bilious, coated tongue, and a dull, heavy, tired feeling, nervousness, dull sensations, indigestion, like stomach never is in order, sometimes indigestion, like stomach never is in order, sometimes the kidneys or liver are deranged, a dryness of the skin, sorenessness, sight restless, muscular debility, despondency, a tired feeling especially at night, pulse quickened, tongue, &c., &c. If any of the following things are noticed about the fluids passed from the system, it shows that the kidneys and liver are out of order. A red deposit, a scum upon the surface, an unusual thickness or thinness, a very dark or a very light color, a burning sensation in passing, an unusual color, a retention, or a frequent desire to void and inability to do so.

The above are a few of the hundreds of symptoms which indicate the beginning of aggravated cases of kidney or liver difficulties, and they require prompt attention. If these symptoms are not checked at once, they are almost certain to result in some one of the many terrible diseases of the kidneys. But unpleasant as all the symptoms and even those diseases may be, they are so visible compared to the last stages of the complaint, the kidneys waste away by degrees, accompanied by intense pains the backbone becomes weak, and the lungs are oppressed; the eyeballs grow glassy, and the entire system is poisoned and debilitated. For weeks before death comes the sufferer looks forward to it as a blessed relief, and anybody that can furnish even temporary help is gladly hailed. Then it is that Doctors begins to be disposed to turn up their lid; the breath can only be caught in gasps; speech is impossible, and consciousness is suspended. The patient finally sinks into a state of unconsciousness to everything except the pain which are racking him, and death comes to put an end to his misery. Such are the fearful conditions which all must face, which is the necessity of treating the disease on its first appearance. We have now proven the best and most efficient, which has been our privilege to treat more cases than any two or three of the terrible complaint that have ever been known before in the history of the world. The wonderful sale which our remedy has attained is due wholly to the fact that they have cured the ones who have used them. The power and value of any remedy must rest wholly on a basis of worth, and here is just where Safe Kidney and Liver Cure has found its wonderful power and success. But in this connection some one important fact: It has always been true that articles of merit are subject to imitations. No one seeks to counterfeit the bills of a worthless bank. The productions of a cracked brain or evil-minded worthless quacks, are not in such a healing remedy. It is possession of merit is will not be subjected to imitations. If, however, it has power and value, imitations will spring up on every side. While it is a tribute to the value of this medicine that it has imitations, still, in justice to those who are suffering, we feel that all should be warned against them.

There is but one know remedy that has ever been able to cure serious kidney troubles or scourd these great organs when once deranged, and that remedy is Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure. There are numerous preparations on the market claiming to be just as efficacious, and some which even claim to be the same. The fact remains, however, is it what has been so widely and extensively advertised and used for all diseases of the kidneys, liver, or blood, namely, Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure stands alone, not alone in excellence, but in the wonderful results it has accomplished. In order to accomplish, avoid the purchase of spurious and worthless imitations, we give these facts:

Our remedy is in dry form, rather than bottled, and is put up in tin foil (safe trade mark) blown in the glass, with trade mark, name, and trade mark on the cork. Our name is affixed to the neck and covers the top of the cork and is of a light brown color; in the middle thereof is a Safe in outline, and on the picture of a negro pointing upward. This stamp is not found on every bottle of the Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, or if there is any evidence that it has been tampered with, and if a Safe is not shown on the back of the bottle, reject the bottle at once, and insist on having a genuine article.

We are led to publish the foregoing in order that the public may know, in the most just where we stand. We have always sought to keep our personality from obtruding upon the public, knowing well that the full value of our remedy was the essential thing, but the unexpected success has been made of this medicine, and the volumes of letters we are constantly receiving demand a personal statement from us. We are justly grateful at the confidence which has been shown us, and thankful for the myriads of cures our remedy has performed, and we plede our exertions for the future as we have endeavored in the past, to furnish the best and only available remedy that can control and cure all the many and terrible troubles arising from disorders of those great organs. Sincerely, H. H. WARNER & CO., Rochester, N. Y.

BANKING HOUSES.

R. H. McDonald, President. San Francisco, Cal.

Pacific Bank. Established 1863. CAPITAL STOCK $1,000,000.00. Surplus 420,447.74.

San Francisco, Feb. 9, 1889.

Report of the Bank Commissioners for the State of California to the Hon. A. L. Hart, Attorney General—Inst year, to wit: On the 31st day of December, 1888, we examined the condition of the Pacific Bank, and submit the following statement of its condition:

Respectfully, your obedient servants,
EVAN J. COLEMAN, BANK COMMISSIONERS
ROBERT WEIR, for state of California.
WM. F. WHITE,

RESOURCES.

Bank Premises	$150,000 00
Other Real Estate	236,977 81
U. S. Bonds, 500,000 00 (par)	525,000 00
Land Association Stock	187,500 00
Loans on Real Estate	1,000,000 00
Loans on Stock Collateral	154,956 00
Loans on other securities
Barley, Wheat Barley, Grain, Warrants	456,414 00
Cash on hand	429,647 10
Due from Bks. & Bankers	316,219 45
Expenses, Taxes, etc.	10,227 45
Collection Account	1,000 00
Total Assets	$3,517,942 30

LIABILITIES.

Capital paid up	$1,000,000 00
Surplus Fund	420,447 74
Undivided Profits	197,494 56
Deposits	1,737,797 99
Dividends Unpaid	11,202 00
Bills Exchange, etc.	8,979 75
Bills Payable	142,020 00
Total Liabilities	$3,517,942 30

R. H. McDonald, Pres't.

Jos. A. Donohoe, San Francisco. | Eugene Kelly, New York.

DONOHOE, KELLY & CO.
SAN FRANCISCO.
EUGENE, KELLY & CO,
NEW YORK.
BANKERS.
EXCHANGE ON
NEW YORK, LONDON, AND BANK IRELAND (Dublin).
Payable at all the Branches
AND IN EVERY COUNTY TOWN IN IRELAND.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Amateurs!
Sav a dollar by having your work done at the low rates adopted by Rich & Crosby for the beautiful Printing executed at their office; but if you is so unfortunate as to be a sufferer from the "Amateur craze" and at such an end best appliances are in the hands of skilled and active workmen.

Promptness of delivery is a prominent characteristic in our business. Orders from the interior filled as city prices. Paper Selling Cheap. Black Book manufactured to order.

Cor. Clay and Sansome Sts. San Francisco.

P. J. DALY,
FRUIT AND PRODUCE
Commission House,
305 & 307 Washington St.,
Pat. Battery and Front ..... San Francisco.
Goods shipped to all parts of the State. ☞ Ships supplied at Wholesale Rates.

No Pay in Advance!
GREAT ELECTRIC HAIR TONIC,
Warranted to Cure Baldness!
120 TYLER STREET, S. F.
TO THE LADIES.
For Cheap and Handsome Hats and Bonnets go to
MRS. SWANTON'S,
1217 Stockton street.

OILSTOVES, ALL SIZES, FOR Cooking or Parlor Use
Send for Illustrated Circular.
WIEBER & CO.,
No. 17 New Montgomery Street, SAN FRANCISCO.

DAVID DRADY,
230 Fourth Street,
Importer and Dealer in
Fine Mouldings, Mirrors and Pictures.
☞ Framing and Regilding done at Reasonable Prices.

A. F. KNORP,
Mechanics' Mill,
411 MISSION STREET
(Near Fremont)
SECOND FLOOR. SAN FRANCISCO.
MANUFACTURER TO ORDER DESKS, BOOK CASES, Counters, Tables, Shelves, Mantels, and every Description of Interior Finish for Offices, Stores, Saloons, Dwellings, Sailing and Steam Vessels and Private Residences, in any style desired and at reasonable rates.
☞ All Work Guaranteed. Band and Scroll Sawing, Turning, Planing, Jobbing, Repairing, Scroll Sawing, and Brass Finish. Special attention paid to the polishing of machinery.

CHICKERING PIANOS.
B. CURTAZ, AGENT,
No. 20 O'Farrell Street.
☞$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $5 outfit free. Address H. Hallett & Co., Portland, Me.

MISCELLANEOUS.

A. R. CARROLL. W. H. TILTON.
CARROLL & TILTON,
Respectfully announce that they have opened
THE LARGE STORE,
873 Market Street,
WITH A LINE OF GENT'S AND BOY'S CLOTHING,
FURNISHING GOODS,
HATS, CAPS, ETC.
Having been in this business many years, we can promise that all our goods will be as represented.
We buy for Cash and sell as low as possible.
CARROL & TILTON,
873 Market Street, opp. Powell,
And late with JONES & CO.,

J. O'KANE,
MANUFACTURER AND IMPORTER OF
Harness, Saddles, Whips, Blankets, Boots, Etc.
767 MARKET ST.
SAN FRANCISCO, CALIFORNIA.
Special attention given to the manufacture of "Boots" of all kinds for horses. Our rubber is all the principal horse and harness dealers on the Pacific Coast.
N. B. We make no judged superiority in this branch of business, and we will cheerfully forward our catalogue containing valuable suggestions of the most approved styles and prices of harness, on receipt of a letter which reveals the fact that we saw the advertisement in the paper.
Sole Agents for the A. B. Dixon's Conditioner Powders and Stickbeary's patent "Eureka" and "Eclipse" Fly Weights. Repairing done with neatness and dispatch. Always on hand, with a full assortment of Saddles, Saddlery, Leather and Gentlemen's Saddles, bridles, whips, spurs, lime and lip rope mullen.

J. COONEY,
PRACTICAL
Painter and Whitener.
SIGNS, NEATLY EXECUTED.
NO. 113 FOURTH STREET,
San Francisco, Cal.

CUMMINGS & HARRINGTON,
BOOK SELLERS,
BOOK BINDERS,
Blank Book Manufacturers
AND PRINTERS,
509 CLAY STREET,
Above Sansome ..... SAN FRANCISCO
MUSIC, MAGAZINES, ILLUSTRATED WORKS, ETC. Bound in Book style at low cost prices. Weekly or monthly periodicals received. No extra charge. ☞ Send for circular.

Ladies' Cents' and Children's STRAW HATS
From 85c. upwards.
Factory 753 Mission St., opposite St. Patrick's Church.
HATS MADE TO ORDER, OLD HATS MADE NEW. ☞ Ladies' hats a specialty; prices as the Pioneer Straw Hat Manufactory of the Pacific Coast.

RAZORS!
FOR $1,000
I WILL MAKE A BETTER RAZOR AND HORE ON Razor in the same time (same by mail) TO THE WORLD.
My own make guaranteed $2 50
Good English Razors 1 00
Best English Razors 1 50
☞ Sent C. O. D. to try first.
M. PRICE,
445 Kearny Street.
Grinding and Repairing.

NOTICE OF REMOVAL.
JERRY LOWNEY & SON
HAVE REMOVED THEIR CARRIAGE FACTORY from corner of Howard and Hawes streets, to 626 Howard street, where they are now prepared to receive orders for Carriages, Buggies, Spring Wagons, and Carts, and repairing promptly attended to.

CHEAPEST PLACE
To Buy New and Second Hand Machines.
All kinds; rented $1 per month; needles for all machines, 25 cents per dozen.
SINGER OFFICE, 188 FOURTH STREET.

THE BEST TEA.
There is no more bargain than bad tea, not any so dear and disappointing. Above all people in the mind the citizens of San Francisco enjoy a well-flavored cup that cheers like nectar as well as the old-fashioned, honest tea they used to drink in Boston. Those who want to be sure of good tea, and those who have tried a tea that they could not generally a commodity, should give a trial to the Great American Importing Tea Co., located 86 the Pine Bazaar, at 127 and 129 Kearny street, and 140 and 142 Sixth street.

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 Address Stinson & Co., Portland Me.

TAILORS.

John Kavanagh,
MERCHANT TAILOR,
6 New Montgomery Street,
PALACE HOTEL, S. F.
The Making of Clergymens Cassocks a Specialty.

N. SWEENY,
MERCHANT TAILOR
41 Second street,
Opposite Jesse street ..... San Francisco
Cassocks and Clerical Clothing a Specialty.

JOHN HICKEY,
Merchant Tailor,
933 Market street,
Between Fifth and Sixth streets.

Business Suits to order from	$20
Pants	5
Fine Dress Suits	35
Black Doeskin Pants	7

D. LETER & CO.,
69 Fourth Street, S. F.
Merchant Tailors.

Business Suits to Order, from	$20 00
Pants	5 00
Fine Dress Suits	35 00
Black Doeskin Pants	7 00

Perfect Fit Guaranteed Or No Sale.
M. FITZPATRICK
IN
The BOSS Tailor,
Of the Pacific Coast.
36 1-2 FOURTH STREET.
Cutter of Jones ..... San Francisco
☞ Go there for your CLOTHES. You are sure to be suited and don't you forget it

THOMAS DRADY,
MERCHANT TAILOR
No. 6 Third Street,
Near Market, S. F.

E. F. WILTON,
MERCHANT TAILOR,
12 Stockton Street.
NEAR MARKET ST. ..... SAN FRANCISCO.

DENNIS REDMOND,
MERCHANT TAILOR,
No. 508 Hayes street.
☞ Instructed and good work guaranteed.

PETER SHORT
DRAPER AND TAILOR,
No. 1 Montgomery St. Masonic Temple
All the Latest Fashions in Suitings JUST ARRIVED.

Dress Suits to Order	$50
Business Suits to Order	35

PENRASSON & PAUL,
Merchant Tailors.
205 FOURTH STREET, S. F.
Suits Made to Order from $25.00 Upwards. Pants to order from $6.00 Upwards.
PERFECT FIT GUARANTEED.

BELLS ETC.

MENEELY BELL FOUNDRY.
Favorably known to the public since 1826. Church, Chapel, Fire Alarm, Factory and other bells. Send for Catalogue.
MENEELY & CO., WEST TROY, N. Y.

BUCKEYE BELL FOUNDRY.
Manufacture of Superior Quality Bells for Churches, Schools, Farms, Factories, Etc. Warranted satisfactory. Catalogue free.
VANDUZEN & TIFT, Cincinnati, O.

Church & School Bells.
SOME ADVANTAGES OF THESE BELLS OVER OTHERS ARE:
Size. lb. lbs. Price. Size. lb. lbs. Price.
No. 6. 35 lbs. $30 Bs. $ 35 00
No. 5. 50 " 40 " 50 00
No. 4. 75 " 50 " 75 00
No. 3. 125 " 70 " 125 00
No. 2. 200 " 100 " 200 00
No. 1. 300 " 150 " 300 00
Bennett & Co., Benson Falls, N. Y.

BLYMYER M'F'G CO. BELLS.
Church, School, Firealarm, Time-sound, low price, warranted. Catalogue sent free. BLYMYER MANUFACTURING CO., CINCINNATI, O.

LINFORTH, RICE & CO.
Sole Agents 203 and 205 Market Street, S. F.
Clinton H. Meneely Bell Company,
Successors to Meneely & Kimberly, Bell Founders, Troy, N. Y., have introduced a superior quality of Bells. Special attention given to Church Bells. ☞ Catalogues sent free to parties requesting them.

McSHANE BELL FOUNDRY
MANUFACTURE THOSE CELEBRATED BELLS for CHURCHES, ACADEMIES, etc. Price List and Circulars sent free. HENRY McSHANE & CO., Baltimore Md.

R. SCHAEZLEIN,
MANUFACTURER OF
SOCIETY BADGES.
GOLD AND SILVER PLATE.
13-19 Trinity St., nr Montgomery,
(Int. Nolly and Bush Streets) San Francisco.
BEST AND CHEAPEST IN SHORT ORDER AND Hollow Enamel and Tuffree Emblems. A 11 P and H of H Emblems. A. O. U. W. F. E. A. Order of Chosen Friends. I. O. O. F., etc. Lodge Seals and Badges of any Description made to order. Repairing of Britlands Ware a specialty.

NEW FRANKLIN HOTEL,
The Best Hotel in San Francisco
Cor. Sansome and Pacific streets.
H. CURRAN. Proprietor.
THIS WELL KNOWN AND FAVORITE HOTEL IS SITUATED IN A MOST CENTRAL AND DESIRABLE Location and offers good accommodations to families and the traveling public, and is the nearest Hotel to the business portion of the city.
Terms moderate, $2 50 per day. Board and lodging per week, $5 to $6. Rooms per night, 50c. Free Lumber for the use of Families. Some but the most obliging White help employed. Free Omnibus to and from the Hotel.

MEDICAL REMEDIES.
Cathartic Pills
Combine the choicest cathartic principles in medicine, in proportions accurately adjusted to secure activity, certainty and uniformity of effect. They are the result of years of careful study and practical experiment, and are the most effectual easily yet discovered for correcting those disorders of the stomach, liver, and bowels which result in much suffering and ill health. They are especially applicable to this class of complaints, and are adapted to all ages and conditions in life. They are perfectly natural in their operation, and produce no griping pains or other inconvenience. They are powerful yet gentle in their action, and are recommended by their physicians, and for family use they are unequaled. They are sugar coated, and are free from all injurious substances, and are therefore perfectly safe in all cases. Being compounded of the concentrated virtues of pure vegetable substances, they are positively free from calomel or any injurious properties, and can be safely entrusted to children with perfect safety.
Ayer's Pills are an efficient cure for Constipation or Costiveness, Indigestion, Dyspepsia, Loss of Appetite, Foul Stomach and Breath, Dizziness, Headache, Loss of Memory, Sambness, Billiousness, Jaundice, Rheumatism, Eruptions and Skin Diseases, Dropsy, Tumors, Worms, Neuralgia, Colic, Gripes, Diarrhoea, Dysentery, Gout, Piles, Disorders of the Liver, and all other diseases resulting from a disordered state of the digestive apparatus.
As a Dinner Pill they have no equal.
While gentle in their action, these Pills are the most thorough and searching cathartic that can be employed, and never give pain unless the bowels are inflamed, and then their influence is healing. They stimulate the appetite and digestive organs; they operate to purify the blood, which they invigorate and impart renewed health and vigor to the whole system.
Prepared by Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Practical and Analytical Chemists, Lowell, Mass.
SOLD BY ALL DRUGGISTS EVERYWHERE.

NEW RICH BLOOD!
Wonderful Purgative Pills make New Rich Blood, and will completely change the blood in the entire system in three months. Any person who will take a pill every night for a month may be reasonably expected to be well. Such a thing as sickness should not be said of for a season. Sold by all druggists. B. F. JOHNSON & Co., Boston, Mass., formerly Bangor, Me.

MISCELLANEOUS.

WITH FIVE DOLLARS
YOU CAN BUY A WHOLE
IMPERIAL AUSTRIAN VIENNA CITY
GOVERNMENT BOND,
Which hereafter must and secured by the Government and are redeemable in coin.
FOUR TIMES ANNUALLY,
Until each and every bond is drawn, with a larger or a smaller premium. Every bond wins drawn a premium.
THE THREE HIGHEST PRIZES AMOUNT TO 130 Florins.
The next drawing takes place on the 1ST OF JULY, 1882,
And every bond bought of us on or before that date is entitled to the whole premium that may be drawn on that same bond.
Out of town orders sent in Imperial Letters, inclosing $5, will insure one of those bonds for the next drawing.
For orders, circulars, or any other information, address,
INTERNATIONAL BANKING CO.,
No. 138 Broadway, New York City.
Established in 1871.
N. B.—In writing to us, please state you saw this in The San Francisco Monitor.
☞ The above Government Bonds are not to be compared with any lottery whatsoever, and do not conflict with any of the laws of the United States.

PENSIONS for soldiers, widows, children, parents, brothers or sisters, loss of sight or hearing, rupture, varicose veins, rheumatism, piles, fistula, falling back from exposure, or any other disease. Thousands yet entitled. Pensioners now on rolls increased, if rated low. Deserters, discharged for disease and wounds of 1861 and Mexican wars entitled to pension. Fees, $10 in all. Send stamp for Pension Laws, Decisions, Forms, etc. Address, with proof of service, stating name, regiment and company, Attorney, Box 1111, Washington, D. C.

THIS NEW ELASTIC TRUSS WORKS LIKE THE HAND
The Only Truss Worth Using. Sent on a Trial of 30 Days. Sent on a Trial of 30 Days. Sent on a Trial of 30 Days

DEMOCRACY.

THE STATE CONVENTION AT SAN JOSE.

NAMES OF THE NOMINEES.

A GOOD PLATFORM.

Anti-Monopoly in Every Plank.

SKETCHES AND SPEECHES OF THE CANDIDATES.

The Democratic Convention met at San Jose on the 30th inst., and spent the first few days in the work of organization and in the discussion of the interests of the party. After several ballots had been taken for the proper man for Governor, the choice of the convention at last centered upon of Los Angeles as the standard bearer of Democracy in the forthcoming campaign. Gen. Stoneman was born in Chautauqua county, N. Y., in 1822 and graduated at West Point in 1846. His career from that time until 1861 was uneventful, relating from the United States Army also twenty-five years continuous service with the rank of Major General. In nearly all the prominent battles of the rebellion he was a participant, and took an active part and was rewarded by rapid promotion and the attainment of a reputation for bravery. In the Seven Days' battles, in which he was engaged at Fair Oaks, where he was wounded, in Stoneman's raid to Andersonville, in December, 1864; commanded the cavalry of Sherman's army in February and March, 1865; commanded the expedition to Asheville, South Carolina, in March and April, 1865, and engaged at Wytheville, the capture of Salisbury, South Carolina, in April, 1865, and the capture of Charlotte, North Carolina, in April, 1865. He was brevetted Major General, "for gallant and meritorious service in the field during the rebellion" and on an act memorial he will carry with him a large number of his old comrades.

GENERAL GEORGE STONEMAN

GENERAL STONEMAN'S SPEECH.

Upon receiving the nomination for Governor General Stoneman was escorted upon the stage by a committee of the Convention and addressed the Officers and Members of the Convention in substance as follows:

Gentlemen—I am no orator, and not a ready speaker, as my friends who have just addressed you may have perceived, although we have been engaged for months past in concentrating the forces, yet there has been no blood shed, no act intended to attempt to make a speech. My opinions are well known to the gentlemen who have very well it would give from that I referred to, I have no apology to make for the position I have taken in the politics of California. I have no apology to make for the position I have taken in the politics of California. I have no apology to make for the position I have taken in the politics of California.

Poetry.

THE GRACE OF ST. DOMINIC.

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER.

In Fra Angelico's pictures,
Round a board table built and bare,
Forty brothers are seated
And seven a land is there
Famine and anguish are in their eyes,
And the footsteps of despair.

Enter the wayworn friars
Who have toiled the long day through,
Under the morning starlight
Under the evening dew;
Craving a crust for Christ's dear sake,
From the store of His servants true.

Alms for the empty wallet!
And alas, that men's hearts are cold!
They care for bee for the honey
Than they care for perishing pelf.
Alms! for the Judas-spirit still
That would sell Christ bought and sold.

The forty brothers are silent;
Their lips are too wan to say
Even the Paster Nostrum
They repeat at the fall of day;
For now may he speak with tongue so
That their souls are hot wrath to pray!

In his place at the head of the table,
Dominic rises now;
On his face is heaven's sunshine,
A great compassion is on his brow;
And a more than kindly beauty crowns
His late unwrinkled brow.

"Thank God!" he prays, "all my brothers
For the trial and the cross;
Thank God for love that lifts us
Through mortal loss;
Thank God for sorrow that sends our rest
To purge our mortal dross!"

Let white lips speak, and the listener
Was cleft with a wondrous light;
Silent and swift, two brothers
Became the kitchen's sight;
And yonder cellar, where the barren board
Was now the blossom white!

Thus, "Eat Christ's food, my brothers,"
Said he who was blessed of God,
"O, why distrust his bounty,
Who has so multiplied bread?
Why yield your strength to the hope deferred?
Till the heart grows faint and dead!"

Of Fra Angelico's pictures—
The bare and meagre board,
The cups are standing empty,
Whence no wine is poured;
I mean, till the calm-faced Friar's word
Is to me a word of the Lord.

Praise God for food and fasting!
Praise God for want and pain!
All Praise Him as well as for trouble,
All Praise Him as well as for health,
And say a grace on the gift withheld,
Since that may be lucky blessed!

Literary Miscellany.

Sentenced To Be Shot.

Farmer Owen's son had been found asleep when doing sentinel duty, and he was sentenced to be shot. A telegram had been received by his father saying that the sentence would be carried out in twenty-four hours. Mr. Owen, the minister, called to do what he could to comfort the unfortunate family. During his visit a letter arrived. Blossom, the farmer's daughter, opened the door and received it. "It's from him," was all she said. It was like a prayer. Her mother, who knew of the letter, but could not break the envelope on account of his troubled mind, looking at it, turned towards Mr Allen with the helplessness of a child. The minister opened it and read as follows:

"DEAR FATHER: When this reaches you I shall—be dead. I was shot at daybreak. I tried to do my duty, but I have thought about it, and now it has no terrors. They say that they used to shot people at sea, "to make my death like a man." I thought, father, that I could die like a man, but I'm afraid I shall not. I'm a coward, I guess, and I was a little of one when I first came out. At first it seemed awful to me, but I have thought about it, and now it is all right. I know that they won't hand me, but that I may meet them in heaven, I hope. I know, too, that it might have been on the battle-field of my country, and that when I fell it would be fighting gloriously; but to be shot down like a dog for nearly betraying it, to die for a mistake of my eyes, father! I wonder the thought does not kill me. But I shall not disgrace you. I am going to write a few words to Bessie, and to give you my last my comrades. You know I promised Jim Carr's mother I would look after him for her boy, and when he fell sick I did all I could for him. It was when I was so worn-out and back into the ranks, and the day before that night I carried all his luggage besides my own on our march. Towards night we went on double-quick, and the baggage became very heavy, and I very tired. I was tired too; and so far Jimmie, if I had not lost him on my hands, I should have been delayed by the way. I was tired when we went into camp, and then it was time to go to be sentry, and I would take his place; but I was too tired, father. Long after the lights were out I thought I had been pointed at my head; but I did not know it until, well—until I was shot at. Jim "Did he thanked?" said Mr. Owen. "I know Bessie was not the boy to sleep carelessly at his post."

"They tell me to-day that I have a short reprieve—time to write to you, and good colonel says. Forgive him, father, he only does his duty; he would gladly save me if he could. And do not let my death upset Jimmie. The poor boy is broken-hearted, and does nothing but blame himself, and seems to let him die in my stead.

"I can't bear to think of mother and Blossom. Comfort them, father. Tell them I die as a brave boy should, and that they may be as proud of my death as they would be of my life, if they knew that I was ashamed of me as they must be now. God help them! It is hard to bear. Good-by, father! God fools near and dear to me, as I do full sorry for his poor, broken-hearted child, and would take me to be with him in a better life.

"To-night I shall see the down coming from the pasture, and precious little Blossom standing on the stoop waiting for me—and I shall never, never come home. God bless you all! Forgive your poor Bennie.

"Take this from a little figure I glided down the footpath towards the railway-station. The guard as he counted down to life here in the cottage, wondered at the tear-stained face that was rejoined towards the lantern he held in his hand.

"A table stood in the centre of the room, covered by a hideous black pall that reached to the floor and gave it the appearance of a catafalque. Upon this the dead was laid. The dishes were all appropriately arranged with fringes of black and white crape pasted around them. The chicken, as it lay in its dish upon its back, had a white choker, a black rosette and a white rosette in its neck, made of the same material. The salt-cellars had black caps, and the sugar-bowl had black bands tied around them. The host unique arrangement, upon the table was a silver toothpick holder, a small bearer with horses attached, driver upon the box, and doors to open at the rear end, and a diminutive coffin containing the picks was drawn forth. The mashed potatoes were dug out of a mound covered with roast-potato jackets, which with sprigs of green parsley, looked like a shady burial lot, with several wooden tombstones standing upright upon it.

"The ice cream was moulded in the shape of a coffin and the cake of pie were made in a similar shape. The coffee was served in silver-plated imitations of the undertaker's trade, as taste and ingenuity could devise, and the first slice of the cake handed round guests enjoyed themselves in spite of the funeral accompaniments. Mr. Schuyler heartily enjoyed the discomfiture of his guests as they entered the room and found the table set for supper, and he was upon the fun derived from the affair amply compensated him for the trouble of preparing for it.

Mother!

There is a wealth of love, of sacrifice, and of unwearied devotion expressed in that one word, "Mother." It sounds sweetly familiar to our ears; thoughts of our happiest days, when we used to be petted and caressed by our mother, and when we thought no one could be so good and kind to us as our mother, and when we used to be petted and caressed by our mother, and when we thought no one could be so good and kind to us as our mother. Towards night we went on double-quick, and the baggage became very heavy, and I very tired. I was tired too; and so far Jimmie, if I had not lost him on my hands, I should have been delayed by the way. I was tired when we went into camp, and then it was time to go to be sentry, and I would take his place; but I was too tired, father. Long after the lights were out I thought I had been pointed at my head; but I did not know it until, well—until I was shot at.

"Did he thanked?" said Mr. Owen. "I know Bennie was not the boy to sleep carelessly at his post."

"They tell me to-day that I have a short reprieve—time to write to you, and good colonel says. Forgive him, father, he only does his duty; he would gladly save me if he could. And do not let my death upset Jimmie. The poor boy is broken-hearted, and does nothing but blame himself, and seems to let him die in my stead.

"I can't bear to think of mother and Blossom. Comfort them, father. Tell them I die as a brave boy should, and that they may be as proud of my death as they would be of my life, if they knew that I was ashamed of me as they must be now. God help them! It is hard to bear. Good-by, father! God fools near and dear to me, as I do full sorry for his poor, broken-hearted child, and would take me to be with him in a better life.

"To-night I shall see the down coming from the pasture, and precious little Blossom standing on the stoop waiting for me—and I shall never, never come home. God bless you all! Forgive your poor Bennie."

Late that night a little figure glided down the footpath towards the railway-station. The guard as he counted down to life here in the cottage, wondered at the tear-stained face that was rejoined towards the lantern he held in his hand.

A table stood in the centre of the room, covered by a hideous black pall that reached to the floor and gave it the appearance of a catafalque. Upon this the dead was laid. The dishes were all appropriately arranged with fringes of black and white crape pasted around them. The chicken, as it lay in its dish upon its back, had a white choker, a black rosette and a white rosette in its neck, made of the same material. The salt-cellars had black caps, and the sugar-bowl had black bands tied around them. The host unique arrangement upon the table was a silver toothpick holder, a small bearer with horses attached, driver upon the box, and doors to open at the rear end, and a diminutive coffin containing the picks was drawn forth. The mashed potatoes were dug out of a mound covered with roast-potato jackets, which with sprigs of green parsley, looked like a shady burial lot, with several wooden tombstones standing upright upon it.

"The ice cream was moulded in the shape of a coffin and the cake of pie were made in a similar shape. The coffee was served in silver-plated imitations of the undertaker's trade, as taste and ingenuity could devise, and the first slice of the cake handed round guests enjoyed themselves in spite of the funeral accompaniments. Mr. Schuyler heartily enjoyed the discomfiture of his guests as they entered the room and found the table set for supper, and he was upon the fun derived from the affair amply compensated him for the trouble of preparing for it.

Mother!

There is a wealth of love, of sacrifice, and of unwearied devotion expressed in that one word, "Mother." It sounds sweetly familiar to our ears; thoughts of our happiest moments come hand in hand with the name of the "Angel of Home." In all the sorrows of life, and in all the miseries which others cannot lessen, one and only one is wanted to bear deeply by the way. I was tired when we went into camp, and then it was time to go to be sentry, and I would take his place; but I was too tired, father. Long after the lights were out I thought I had been pointed at my head; but I did not know it until, well—until I was shot at.

"Did he thanked?" said Mr. Owen. "I know Bennie was not the boy to sleep carelessly at his post."

"They tell me to-day that I have a short reprieve—time to write to you, and good colonel says. Forgive him, father, he only does his duty; he would gladly save me if he could. And do not let my death upset Jimmie. The poor boy is broken-hearted, and does nothing but blame himself, and seems to let him die in my stead.

"I can't bear to think of mother and Blossom. Comfort them, father. Tell them I die as a brave boy should, and that they may be as proud of my death as they would be of my life, if they knew that I was ashamed of me as they must be now. God help them! It is hard to bear. Good-by, father! God fools near and dear to me, as I do full sorry for his poor, broken-hearted child, and would take me to be with him in a better life.

"To-night I shall see the down coming from the pasture, and precious little Blossom standing on the stoop waiting for me—and I shall never, never come home. God bless you all! Forgive your poor Bennie."

Late that night a little figure glided down the footpath towards the railway-station. The guard as he counted down to life here in the cottage, wondered at the tear-stained face that was rejoined towards the lantern he held in his hand.

A table stood in the centre of the room, covered by a hideous black pall that reached to the floor and gave it the appearance of a catafalque. Upon this the dead was laid. The dishes were all appropriately arranged with fringes of black and white crape pasted around them. The chicken, as it lay in its dish upon its back, had a white choker, a black rosette and a white rosette in its neck, made of the same material. The salt-cellars had black caps, and the sugar-bowl had black bands tied around them. The host unique arrangement upon the table was a silver toothpick holder, a small bearer with horses attached, driver upon the box, and doors to open at the rear end, and a diminutive coffin containing the picks was drawn forth. The mashed potatoes were dug out of a mound covered with roast-potato jackets, which with sprigs of green parsley, looked like a shady burial lot, with several wooden tombstones standing upright upon it.

"The ice cream was moulded in the shape of a coffin and the cake of pie were made in a similar shape. The coffee was served in silver-plated imitations of the undertaker's trade, as taste and ingenuity could devise, and the first slice of the cake handed round guests enjoyed themselves in spite of the funeral accompaniments. Mr. Schuyler heartily enjoyed the discomfiture of his guests as they entered the room and found the table set for supper, and he was upon the fun derived from the affair amply compensated him for the trouble of preparing for it.

Mother!

There is a wealth of love, of sacrifice, and of unwearied devotion expressed in that one word, "Mother." It sounds sweetly familiar to our ears; thoughts of our happiest days, when we used to be petted and caressed by our mother, and when we thought no one could be so good and kind to us as our mother. Towards night we went on double-quick, and the baggage became very heavy, and I very tired. I was tired too; and so far Jimmie, if I had not lost him on my hands, I should have been delayed

THE MONITOR.

TWENTY-FIFTH YEAR OF PUBLICATION

WEDNESDAY, JULY 5, 1882.

How the Faith is Spread in England

It is very gratifying to witness the steady growth of the Church throughout every portion of England, even in remote places where the definition of the word Catholic was scarcely known a few years ago. We have a notable example of how a single grain of good seed sown by a zealous missionary priest has fructified and brought forth good fruit, in the following recital, which shows the marvelous miracles that can be worked by prayer and perseverance in the cause of Almighty God. The events narrated occurred in Nottingham, England.

In the month of August, 1878, the Rev. H. J. Sabela, of Boston, made his first appearance at Sleaford. By the kind permission of the late Mr. Robert Mayer, he conducted on the cricket field open air services for several Sundays in succession, for the benefit of the Irish harvest men, who very largely congregate in this neighborhood during the harvest season. It was a remarkable sight to behold a Catholic priest in his ecclesiastical attire, and in large cassock in his stalls, kneeling on a bundle of straw in prayer, and standing on a cart with his Bible in his hand, proclaiming the teaching of the Church to the inhabitants of the town and neighborhood, many of whom, no doubt, were attracted and spell-bound by his novel pulpit by curiosity, but many also by his earnest and eloquent sermons. But the attending whites seem made them open-air services impracticable, Father Sabela, fortified and encouraged by a number of his hearers, continued the services in the Corn Exchange. But this step was a signal for a great storm. "No Popery" orators were delivered in many places of worship, and ministers of the different shades of religion, with more or less severity, attacked the Catholic religion in a series of letters in the local papers. Then Father Sabela bought a suitable plot of freehold building land at the cost of £610, and finally, the Bishop has solemnly opened the new church built thereon.

In this reviewing Father Sabela's work in our midst, says the Sleaford Gazette, we cannot refrain from repeating the remark which we made concerning him on a former occasion: "Truly here is an instance where humble and earnest perseverance has been crowned with success." Three years ago there was to our knowledge scarcely a single Roman Catholic living at Sleaford, and had such a thing as the erection of a Catholic place of worship in this town been hinted at, the idea would have been scouted as the connection of an unsound mind—and yet, here we find a Catholic priest, perfect strangers to all of us, standing up unaided and alone in the face of a deeply rooted prejudice against his Church, in a boldness, perhaps, but with the courage and fervor of the Apostolic age, pleading the cause of his Church and erecting in a short time a magnificent edifice, which will be ever afterwards a congregation already formed. And whatever the ideas of the inhabitants of Sleaford may be at this moment in regard to the Catholic Church, in a humble appearance, but with the energy and fervor of the Apostles of old, pleading the cause of his Church and erecting in a short time a magnificent edifice, which he now calls his own, and which, we know, he will not abandon to any that, when he saw the seed sown on the wilds pelting it down with their pitiless rain, and the birds of prey and those in which his own hands flying in the wind, the tears rose in his eyes. He would not speak about the habitation in which he now lived and then, it was almost gigantic to speak of the poverty that was in that house. He remembers that they had only two beds, two chairs, and no one occasion, when a priest visited them and was likely to remain to one, they were in a pure strait, and had to send the housekeeper for a third cup and saucer (hear, hear, and laughter.) It was another Bethlehem, how great an alteration since that time, though it was not for him to say the reason. Some small parts of the truth could be learned from the unofficial parts of the priest's work. There was another and a higher portion of his work that would not be revealed until the day of doom. They knew that it was necessary to have a church and school, for there were some to an extent, that Christ was necessary for the people to assemble, and the schools were necessary for education; but they were simply means to an end, and that end was the channel between God and man—between the Creator and the creature. The Church was the channel for the outpouring of grace. He had also to say that he had been known among Anglican ministers, among medical men, among soldiers, and men of the legal profession, and he could say, without fear of contradiction, that he had never once had an unkind word said to him (Cheers.) But there is a nerve mixed with every joy, and to-day there was a sorrow in his mind, because he had, during the last twenty-five years, lost many kind friends. Among them or four priests who had worked with him in the mission two bishops had gone to their reward, and many of the parishioners had passed away. On considering the books of the mission, he found that during his twenty-five years of labor he had administered Baptism to 67,500 children; there had been 2,900 deaths; 1,500 of which occurred in Guy's Hospital. He had confirmed 14,000 people and married 387 couples. He found that the communicants during the period, not including the Sacrament administered to the sick outside the church, numbered 274,776. All that showed what a great of grace the priest must be. In conclusion, Father Michael returned his thanks for the testimonial and expressed the hope that he would be connected with the mission many years.

Many missionary priests, not only on the Pacific coast, but in every other part of this Union, when they read these words of Father McDaniel, will recall their own labors in church-building when they had to be priest, plasterer and plumber combined.

It is thus, however, that the faith is propagated. Not all the wealth of the world combined could achieve the wonderful works which we everyday see done by missionary priests who labor for the glory of God and the salvation of souls. Vain are the labors of those who think God directs the tongue that speaks and the hand that assists, but with His assistance there is nothing too difficult of accomplishment, no obstacle that cannot be overcome. God blesses the labors of all who labor for His glory, and the manifestations of that love are found in the wonderful achievements they accomplish.

The Difference Between Parnell and Davitt.

In this important crisis of Irish affairs, when the battle with England has been a series of victories on the part of the Irish people and the legislators of their Land League allies, no man must falter on the field, but each must incite his neighbor to stand shoulder to shoulder in the grand conflict for Ireland's regeneration. We must prove our love for the liberty of our native land by union among ourselves. The demon of discord must be stamped out if it appears in Land League gatherings, and then we will be in a position to hold a solid battalion which will eventually gain the independence of Ireland.

Men say there is a "difference" between Parnell and Davitt, and so there is, but it is not a difference of principle, but merely a divergency of opinion as to which is the safest, the speediest and the surest way to secure the land of Ireland to the Gilars of the soil. This difference of opinion is natural to all men, and we must tolerate each other, or we will be forced to tolerate the domination of England, for in the way, we are all there over be—any difference between Parnell and Davitt which will endanger the perpetuity of the Land League. Davitt spoke upon the movement as his child, and as such he has said publicly that he would remain silent sooner than utter a single word that would endanger the organization. Parnell may be called the foster father of the Land League, because when Michael Davitt was flung into prison Parnell proscribed the child of his brain in its crib in Parliament and made the people of England recognize the legitimacy of Davitt's offspring. Mr. Parnell's prominence as the leader of what well may be called Ireland's Forlorn Hope, gives him the recognized right to be the leading spirit in the Land League movement. His ingenuity as a tactician, his cold, logical way of placing facts before the English Parliament, his constant tenacity of purpose and his powerful influence in debate, all help to make him what we designated in the House of Commons—the uncrowned King of Ireland.

Michael Davitt's services will be of wonderful benefit to the Irish cause in regions remote from Mr. Parnell's scene of action. He can cover the land for the purpose of holding down the work of the English enemy; he can cheer the drooping spirits of the people, he can furnish statistics to Parnell, that, when published, will startle the English people into a sense of shame at the treatment the poor, pilfered and persecuted tenant-farmers of Ireland are receiving at the hands of landlord aristocracy, and in this way both Parnell and Davitt can each share in the credit of that victory which is sworn to the Irish people if they carry out the principles originated by Davitt and preserved and propagated by Parnell.

Self-Government for Ireland.

The Liverpool Catholic Times says: A correspondent of a provincial contemporary asserts that "Mr. Parnell and two or three of the Home Rule leaders contemplate a fresh departure in Irish policy in the autumn. They think that with the passing of the Arrears Bill and the prospect of a large extension of the purchase clauses the land question is now in a fair train for settlement, and they contemplate turning the attention of the Irish people to a purely political agitation on the home rule question. This is why Mr. Parnell and his friends are anxious to get everything struck out of the Prevention of Crime Bill which might be used to stop political agitation. The Irish leader believes that home rule is coming within the range of practical politics, and he thinks he will be able to frame a scheme that will satisfy Mr. Chamberlain's condition of leaving the supremacy of Parliament untouched. He intends in the coming autumn to revive the Irish Home Rule League, and to start a popular movement, which will be conducted on strictly constitutional lines, in favor of the establishment of local self-government in Ireland."

Release of Miss O'Connor.

Miss Mary Jane O'Connor, sister of T. P. O'Connor, M. P., by Gladsey, was sacrificatically released from her prison, after six months' imprisonment of nine weeks. The charge upon which Miss O'Connor was sentenced to six months' imprisonment is default of giving bail to keep the peace for twelve months, and not to take home from which others were evicted.

The Term "Romish" as Applied to the Catholic Church.

Whenever prejudiced persons desire to vent their venom upon Catholics, they allude to the Church of God as "the Roman Church," in order to satisfy their little minds by belittling a Church that refuses to die at the bite of every enemy affiliated with "Romish" Church. On several occasions the MONITOR had occasion to rebuke the ranting portion of the republic of letters upon its use of this insulting epithet, but we regret to notice that the use of this opprobrious term is not confined to Catholics, so, in order to show both Catholics and Protestant critics how indecent and incorrect the term is we copy the following from the Catholic Chronicle in reply to a Protestant paper that had called it a "Romish" journal:

The term Romish is an un-English expression of comparatively recent importation, and was borrowed by Evangelical bigots in their contemporal poverty of invective directly from the Dutch Romsch, or the German Romsch.

Ish, as a termination, is not a diminutive, but always denotes a resemblance, a participation in defects, qualities or attributes signified by the adjective or noun to which it is appended. Thus:

Whitish—That which, without being white, has a tint belonging to that color.

Fetish—Sharing in the peculiar defects observable in a pet.

English—Having the attributes common to the Anglos or Anglo-Saxon people.

But this translation has never in the English language been affixed to the names of cities. Whoever heard of "Londonish society," or "Liverpoolish manners," or "New Yorkish society styles," or "Parisish fashions." The affix cut in such a case would decorously—because clownish and unmannerly by the rules of correct language—be regarded as attaching an unfavorable meaning to the word qualified by it. It would be unpleasantly taken as a slight, and as such it was and is meant by those knowingly calling the Church Romish.

We say Danish, Polish, Swedish, and so forth. All right. But the Danes are a people. So are the Poles and the Swedes. So were the Romans. If, therefore, the ish be absolutely wanted, then by all means say Romanish. It will be new, no doubt, but it will not be un-English in its formation or origin.

The Tablet spoken our motion, "Ex Christiano ad Romanum ordo," as you are children of Christ no be you children of Rome, and asks: "Is not this slightly Romish?" We answer no; our being children of Rome no more makes us Romish than our being children of Christ makes us Christian. Cannot our Grand Rapid's friend see this? When we become children—that is to say followers of Christ—we become Christian, not Christish.

The fact is, Roman was too noble and majestic a word for English bigots to apply to the Catholic Church. St. Paul, in one of his epistles, praises the faith of the Romans; then, it would never do to let plous, evangelical Bible readers imagine that this faith was the same in every particular as that now believed and preached by Roman Catholics. Therefore they resorted to a barbarism to satisfy their unholy spleen. But no English is only versed in its language, will ever use this contemptuous expression.

Protestants have to? That only proves that slander-makers are not necessarily well-bred, and that they sometimes pander to the slang of the vulgar upholders of their pretended authority—exactly as some (not all) Protestant preachers will, where the true Church of Christ is concerned.

The Death Struggle of the Irish People.

From the cablegrams which we publish this week our readers will learn that the Repression Bill has passed the House of Commons under circumstances at once shameful to England and scandalous to those who passed it. The outrage perpetrated upon the Irish people by expelling their representatives from the House of Commons and then passing the odious measures which seems destined to be the last torture in their martyrdom, is one that should cause England to turn scarlet as her blood-red flag with very shame. The dir, cumstances, too, should convince every reflecting mind that England is determined not to act with any degree of justice to Ireland, but rather to use every effort to drive the Irish from the soil of their nativity by so cruelly oppressing them as to drive them—in sheer despair—to the only refuge left, the unintelligent ship.

The scourge of eviction—which Gladstone says means death—has again been applied by the English minions against the Irish tenantry, and they are being cast out into the by-ways and highways at the rate of many thousands a month. The result is that the poor people are crowded and the emigrant vessels swarm with peasantry who literally flee from "the wrath to come." And the worst is that in this year of our Lord, 1882, the English Government are refurbishing the rusty tools of a hundred years ago, in order to drive the Irish people from the land of their birth.

The present cruel Repression Bill does away with trial by jury in Ireland; it leaves the individual Irishman at the mercy of the Irish-Saxon magistrate; it takes away the privacy of every man's household, by giving the officers of the law the right to enter any domicile, at any hour of the day or night, under the pretext of searching for arms or papers of a seditious nature. And this makes the fifty second Coercion Act which England has applied to Ireland in eighty years! It may appear strange that this policy has been so long pursued by England against the Irish people, while English representatives in the Cabinet and the Commons have so often appealed for the rights and liberties of other peoples in Italy, Bulgaria and Poland. But symptoms of decay when it calls for mercy from others, but it is not desirable when you are yourself the oppressor. Besides, the English Government has a precedent for its action. Ireland's people are determined never to surrender their bodies and souls into the keeping of their oppressor. They may be exterminated, but they will not be apostate. They may be driven into exile, but they will never surrender their soil to Saxon rule. Peace and prosperity were offered them a century ago if they would only acknowledge the King of England as the Pope

THE TRI-CENTENARY OF ST TERESA.

Mossy Woodland, Gillroy, Cal.

EDITOR OF THE MONITOR:

Dear Sir—I received to-day from a noble daughter of France, a devoted child of the Church, a request (Francaise) a Carmelite convent in Ireland, an appeal addressed to the Christian Women of France, and I send you the name of Teresa or are devoted to that great Saint Teresa. Dr. Jos.

The 15th of October of the present year, 1882, is the third centenary of the death of the Saint, which should show virtues glorified. She was in which she lived, and whose memory crowns Avila, "Pearl of old Castile," with a lustre time cannot dim. On that day Catholic world will unite in celebrating the feast of St. Teresa in a manner worthy of her great genius, sanctity and beauty. At the altars before which the Saint was wont to hold sweet communings with her crucified Lord, the Holy Sacrifice of praise and thanksgiving will be offered, while the image of the artist, the sculptress of the order, the child of Mary Immaculate, the spiritual mother of the poor, all that wealth or talent can yield, will be gathered together to adorn the shrine of the Virgin of His Saint. It is the wish of many persons with whom I am in correspondence that this should be a lasting memorial to future ages of the

THE TRI-CENTENARY OF SAINT TERESA.

The honors which Saint Teresa was born six after her death received from a crowned head Hieronimo Carmelites, a handsome Church was erected in her native city, Avila, for the Carmelites (well in prayer and meditation, and marking the spot where the Saint used to kneel in prayer upon this world, stands a lovely little oratory, a marble slab in the floor of which is inscribed, "Who lives while knowing there the calm, peace, to serenity here I have enjoyed this day." Near and beside, But the cloisters are no longer tenanted by the Daughters of Saint Teresa; they are and the gardens where Saint Teresa used to walk are in the hands of the Minister of the Government. The Municipal Council of Avila, in honor of the Tri-Centenary of Saint Teresa, and in willing to depose of it, it is a gift to Teresa, it is fitting to assist in restoring the convent of Saint Teresa to its original use, and thus to restore it to the Teresa of France, and through them to the

THE TRI-CENTENARY OF SAINT TERESA.

And not alone to those who are nationalists of the Church, but to all Christian people, the appeal speak, and to the Catholics of Alberta most of the Saint Teresa, and by the prayers of the Holy Virgin, Mary Immaculate, the Queen of Heaven, and

Farm and Home.

Wheat and Potatoes.

The United States is the greatest source of importing Wheat into Europe. We also send corn, barley and fruits of various kinds across the Atlantic to the people of the old countries. Of late years we have also shipped pretty largely of the products of the dairy to Europe. America is the great source of agricultural production, and Europe is the center of consumption for our surplus agricultural products. But now comes the curious fact that during the last half year we have imported from Europe about a million and a half bushels of potatoes. The largest share of these potatoes have been consumed in the Eastern cities, but great quantities of them have been shipped as far west as Chicago and St. Louis, and have found markets there. What does this mean? Is not our American soil adapted to potato culture, or is boring and cultivating potatoes too slow work for our American farmers? The truth, perhaps, is that we are giving too much of our soil to wheat culture, and cannot find room for potatoes. We are cultivating too much in a single crop, and not giving enough attention to a diversity of crops. We are wearing our soil out by asking upon it for all it has that will make wheat, while we are having in it the elements for potatoes and other roots, and buying our potatoes in England, Ireland and Germany. As a nation we are doing precisely what many a California farmer is doing—cultivating all our land to wheat and sending to the city for our potatoes and other vegetables. We are paying a large price for an inferior article in a stale and half decayed condition, when we could have a superior article from our own soil, at a cost less than we now pay for freight on the imported potatoes. But when we can no longer produce wheat, and are compelled to resort to potatoes, who will buy our potatoes and of whom will we buy wheat? It may be said it will be a long time before Americans will have exhausted her soil of the elements of wheat. This may be admitted, but the end of that long time may be much sooner than it is expected. Only a few years ago New York was the great wheat-field of the United States, but to-day she does not produce enough of this cereal for home consumption. She is now in the dairy business to recuperate her wheat-exhausted soil. The time was when nations as well as individual farmers thought the most prudent course was to produce those things that would render them the most independent. Commerce has done away with all this idea, and nations as well as individual farmers are now engaged in a struggle to make the most present money. The future is not an element in the calculation. Commerce controls the world now in the interest of money making. Agriculture is to-day but a commercial venture. The markets either at home or abroad dictate the article we shall produce. Commerce says the most money is to be made in the cultivation of wheat and all the farmers of America sow wheat and send to Europe for their potatoes.

Fast Trotters.

It is a remarkable fact that out of the huge number of horses that have trotted in 2:30 or better there are but sixty-five that have beaten 2:30. In this list there are twenty-five stallions, twenty mares, and twenty-five geldings. St. Julien, with his 2:11¼, stands at the head of the record; Dexter, with his 2:17¼, stands at the head of the geldings; and Lady Maud 3, with 2:16¼, stands at the head of the mares; and this is also the best record in the world. Of the mares that have trotted better than 2:20, eight out of the twenty were bred in Kentucky—Maud S., So So, Trinket, Crosie, Lady Thorne, Lucille Goddard, Lula and Fanny. Of the eleven stallions that have trotted better than 2:20, six out of the eleven were bred in Kentucky.

Keeping Apples.

Some correspondent last year advocated hanging apples in damp cellars, claiming that they preserve better than in dry cellars. Vick, in his last Magazine, says of this matter: "The evidence is accumulating that apples keep better in moist or damp cellars than in dry ones. It is probable that this may be established as a fact. It would no doubt be a blessing to most owners, if it were a matter of point of view, if their cellars were used only for small supplies of vegetables, and they should at all times been ventilated as well as possible. Specials in cellars for fruit and vegetables are in use in some parts of the country. The walls rise only a foot above the surface of the ground; they are covered with a double floor, filled in between with sawdust, and over all is a roof. If room is desirable, low walls, one story above ground, can support the roof."

Crafty Crows.

The crows seem to be very clever in Japan. At any rate they are so reported by Consular Bird—Mac Mahella, the author of some treatise in that country. Several of them were looking at a dog with a big piece of meat and were eying a good deal to each other on the subject. After much earnest speech one of them succeeded in tearing off a small piece, whereupon they all surrounded the dog, and the small piece was dropped near him. Unwisely he turned to see it, while the other crows bore off the big piece to the tree, where they all ate it. The dog looked vainly about for it, and then went and barked at them insanely. Another time the dog was holding a piece of meat in the presence of three crows. After a consultation they separated, the two going so near as they dared to the meat, while the third gave the tail a bite which made him turn sharply around, while the other crows snatched at it and off with it to the top of the wall. Along the seashore they are very amusing, for they "take the air" in the evening, seated on sandbanks facing the wind, with their mouths open.

To Polish Shirt Fronts and Wristbands.

Starch the fronts and wrist-bands as stiff as you can. Starch twice—that is, starch dry, then starch again. Iron your shirt with a hot iron in the usual way, making the linen nice and firm; but without any attempt at a good finish; don't fill the grain; your shirt is now ready for polishing, but you must have a board of the same size as the commonest shirt-board, made of hard wood, and covered with one ply of plain cotton cloth. Put this board into the breast of your shirt, damp the front very lightly with a wet sponge, then take a polishing iron, which is flat and bevelled on one end; polish gently with the bevelled part, taking care not to drive the iron up into wave-like blisters. Of course this requires a little practice, but if you are careful and persevere, in a short time you will be able to give that enamel-like finish which is so much wanted.

AN OPEN LETTER.

Some Outspoken Statements of Great Value from Parties of the Highest Standing.

When the people of America become so thoroughly aroused, and on a subject of such serious importance as the preservation of their first blessing, health, it is but natural that the men who have been largely instrumental in the origin of this movement should speak frankly and directly to the people most interested. It is for this reason that we thus come before the public and make the following revelations:

Every careful observer who has sought to keep pace with the march of events has noted the alarming increase of certain peculiar physical troubles within the past few years. These troubles have come at unexpected moments and in a most treacherous way. They have manifested themselves in innumerable forms, but they have always had the same cause. They have not afflicted the minor parts of the body, but have gone direct to the stronghold of the system and their work has usually been as prompt as it is fatal. Their treacherous and deceptive nature has often prevented a careful analysis of what causes them, and, as a result, intense suffering and final disaster have usually ensued. The true cause, however, has been a derangement of the kidneys, and all of these troubles are, in fact, the first symptoms of the terrible Bright's disease, which has cast its dark shadow over so many homes in the land and is increasing wonderfully and continually. It is now conceded by the ablest physicians in every land and by eminent scientists the world over, that this disease is the result of long years of poisoning. This poisoning is brought about by wasted and unhealthy kidneys that permit the poison to remain in the blood, instead of throwing it from the system. But it is equally evident to all who have studied into the effects and have become convinced with the facts, that a disordered state of the kidneys and liver produces most of the common complaints and pains which afflict the human race, and they can be traced to this source just as certainly as to Bright's disease. To purify a stream we must go to its source, and to cure a disease we must remove its cause. It being true, then, that the great mass of human ailments are caused by disordered kidneys or liver, the only certain way to cure them troubles by treating the organs which cause them. How intimately the kidneys are associated with the entire system may be understood from the fact that over 1,000 ounces of blood pass through them every hour, being more than 200 gallons, or nearly one ton in the course of twenty-four hours. This vast mass of living fluid is sent to every part of the body, and if the kidneys are diseased the impurities that are in the blood are not removed, and hence pass through the veins, carrying disease in some one of the many terrible forms. The horror which accompany most of the diseases caused by disordered kidneys are litter cannot be described in print, while the dangers surrounding them are even greater than the agony. And yet a person may be troubled for months without knowing the cause of the disease that have attacked him. Some of the symptoms of the first stage, say one of which indicates disordered kidneys or liver are these: Pains in the back and around the loins, severe headache, dizziness, inflamed eyes, a coated tongue and a dry mouth, loss of appetite, chilly sensations, indigestion (the stomach never is in order when the kidneys or liver are deranged), a dryness of the skin, nervousness, nights sweats, muscular debility, despondency, a tired feeling especially at night, puffing or bloating under the eyes, etc. If any of the following things are noticed about the fluids passed from the system, it shows that the kidneys and liver are out of order. A red deposit, a cloudy appearance, a frothy or ropy mixture or thickness, a very dark or a very light color, a burning sensation in passing, an acrid odor, a retention, and a frequent desire to void and inability to do so.

The above are a few of the hundreds of symptoms which indicate the beginning of aggravated cases of kidney or liver difficulties, and they require instant attention. If these symptoms are not checked at once, they are almost certain to result in some one of the many terrible diseases of the kidneys. But unpleasant as all the symptoms and even these diseases may be, they are nothing compared to the last stages of the disease. The kidneys wasts away by degrees, accompanied by intense pains; the heart becomes uncomfortable; the lungs are oppressed; the eyes balls grow glassy, and the entire system is reduced and debilitated. For weeks before death comes the sufferer looks forward to it as a blessed relief, and anything that can bring even temporary relief is gladly hailed. Then it is that life's ebb is low, the fire burns dim and life's fitful breath can only be caught in gasps; death is impossible, and sometimes even desired. The patient finally sinks into a state of unconsciousness to awaken in another and a better world, which are racking life, and death comes by certain but slow degrees. There can be but one question which all readers of care and judgment will draw from these facts, which is the necessity of treating the disease in time and by that means which has been proven the best relief and cure.

It has been our privilege to treat more cases and effect more cures of this terrible complaint than has ever been known before in the history of the world. The wonderful sale which our remedies have attained is due wholly to the fact that they have cured the cases in which we have taken them. The power and value of any remedy must rest wholly on a basis of worth, and have a foundation in fact. Hamilton's Kidney and Liver Cure has stood its wonderful power and merits for years, and the sentiment of the profession and people in regard to it has grown and strengthened. Our remedies are not to be found in every town and by roadsides, but they are subject to imitation. Beware of such imitations. Some of them are worthless and dangerous. The production of a crooked house or within another are never equal. It is not so with a healing remedy. If it possesses the merit it will not be subjected to imitations. Imitations, however, it has power and value, imitations will spring up on every side. While it is a tribute to the value of this medicine that it has imitations, still, its imitators to show that they are suffering, we hope that all should be warned against them.

There is but one known remedy that has ever been able to cure serious kidney troubles and all those great organs when once deranged, and that remedy is Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure. There are numerous concoctions in the market claiming to be just as efficacious, and some which even claim to be the same. The test of merit, however, is to what has been accomplished, and we therefore say, unhesitatingly, that the Kidneys of the Kidneys, Liver, and urinary organs, have Safe Kidney and Liver Cure. Its wonderful cures, not alone in another place in this paper, but in every town and hamlet in the country, fully avoid the possibility of serious and injurious imitations, and prove these facts.

Our readers may well ask why we thus speak of one medicine, and why (only tyler tars) shown in the back. A private proprietor of such marvelous remedy is afraid to be such and covers the top of the cork and is of a light brown color. In the middle thereof is a fade in outline, and on the pitcher of a pure gathering dark marks. The stamp is not found on every bottle of the Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, or if there is any reason that it has been tampered with, and if a fade is not known on the back of the cork, reject the bottle at once, and insist on having a genuine one.

We are led to publish the foregoing in order that the public may know and could see for themselves. We have always sought to keep our personality from obtruding upon the public, feeling well that the full value of our remedy was the essential thing, but the one principal one which has been made of this medicine, and the volume of letters we are constantly receiving demand a personal statement from us. We are freely gratified at the confidence which we have shown us, and thankful for the myriads of cures expressly transformed, and we plead in the poor, for the future as we have made no secret in the past, that the public may know that this remedy that can control and cure all the many and terrible troubles arising from disorders of these great organs. Sincerely, H. H. WARNER & CO., Rochester, N. Y.

BANKING HOUSES.

JOS. A. DONOHOE, San Francisco. HUGHES KELLY, New York.

DONOHOE, KELLY & CO.
SAN FRANCISCO.
EUGENE, KELLY & CO.
NEW YORK.
BANKERS
EXCHANGE ON
NEW YORK, LONDON, AND BANK IRELAND (Dublin).
Payable at all the Branches
AND IN EVERY COUNTY TOWN IN IRELAND.

MISCELLANEOUS.

A monument has at this time expressed at the Exposition, by Kavan & Co., and for the beautiful Printing Ink stock at their office; but if an is to keep a market of supplies, let it not be out of the office, where it belongs. Let such men and such goods are in the hands of skilled and active workers.

Promptness of delivery is a prominent characteristic in our business. Orders from the interior filled in city prices.

Paper Ruling Book Binding Job Printing executed in.

Black Books Blank Books made to order.

Cor. Clay and Sansome Streets, San Francisco.

P. J. DALY,
FRUIT AND PRODUCE
Commission House,
305 & 307 Washington St.,
Bet. Battery and Front ..... SAN FRANCISCO
Goods shipped to all parts of the State. ☞ Ships supplied at Wholesale Rates.

No Pay in Advance!
GREAT ELECTRIC HAIR TONIC,
Warranted to Cure Baldness!
120 TYLER STREET, S. F.

TO THE LADIES.
For Cheap and Handsome Hats and Bonnets go to
MRS. SWANTON'S,
1217 Stockton street.

H. N. COOK,
MANUFACTURER OF OAK-TANNED
LEATHER BELTING & HOSE,
405 Market Street,
SAN FRANCISCO.
SATISFACTION GUARANTEED.
The Finest Lacing in Cut Strings or Sides always on Hand.
MAIL, EXPRESS AND BULLION BAGS.

FIRE!! FIRE!!
JNO. R. SIMS & SON,
Manufacturers of all kinds of Fireproof Doors and Window Blinds.
SHUTTERS, BURGLAR PROOF BANK VAULTS AND SAFES, Cor. Jones and Commercial Streets, Near the Post Office Buildings, Sansome, Sacramento, Clay, Jackson and Pacific Streets, Also Factory, Sacramento, near Sansome, Rear of the Old School, established in 1855, in the present proprietorship.
All orders from the Interior, Oregon and Washington Territory, or any place on the Pacific coast, attended to with promptness and dispatch.
Our Shutters are Known by a Peculiar Shape, Strength and Neatness, and from the many contracts received it is our opinion, for the information of strangers, they would see that their bid confidence that our experience in this particular calling is unequaled by some one who has recently commenced the business. We refer to our work in Sacramento, Stockton, Virginia and Nevada, every one of which is the result of the best buildings in San Francisco, fully attest.
ALSO—A very large lot of second hand Shutters, in perfect condition, all in very low price.
Nos. 128 and 130 Beale street.

SOLD VIA EIRE, AND NOT SOLD VIA ENGLAND.
DAVID DRADY,
320 Fourth Street,
Importer and Dealer in
Fine Mouldings, Mirrors and Pictures.
☞ Framing and Regilding done at Reasonable Prices.

A. F. KNORP,
Mechanics' Mill,
411 MISSION STREET
(Near Freemont)
SECOND FLOOR.
MANUFACTURER TURNER DERS, NOOK CARDS, Counters, Cabinets, Mouldings, and all Fine Turnings for Interior finish by Machine, Offices, Stores, Banks, Building and Jobbing Work, Scroll Sawing, Fancy Work, Fine Furniture, and Cabinet Work, Repairing, Planing, Shaping, Tenoning, &c. Benches, Moldings and Home Finish. Special attention paid to the polishing of woodwork.

CHICKERING
PIANOS.
B. CURTAZ, AGENT,
No. 20 O'Farrell Street.
$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $5 outfit free. Address H. Hallett & Co., Portland, Me.

MISCELLANEOUS.

AS. CARROLL. W. H. TILTON.

CARROLL & TILTON,
Respectfully announce that they have opened
THE LARGE STORE,
873 Market Street,
WITH A LINE OF GENT'S AND BOY'S
CLOTHING,
FURNISHING GOODS,
HATS, CAPS, ETC.
Having been in this business many years, we can promise that all our goods will be as represented.
We buy for Cash and sell as low as possible.
CARROL & TILTON,
873 Market Street, opp. Powell,
And late with JONES & CO.,

J. O'KANE,
MANUFACTURER AND IMPORTER OF
Harness, Saddles, Whips, Blankets, Boots, Etc.
767 MARKET ST
SAN FRANCISCO, CALIFORNIA.
Special attention given to the manufacture of "Boots" of all kinds for horses. Also refer to all the principal railroads and horsemen on the Pacific Coast.
N. B. Workmanship and repairing in this branch of business, from the fruits of long observation and the valuable suggestions of the best skilled "surfaces" in the United States. The benefits of which reverts to the public in the shape of a service, which cannot be set aside. Agent for Dr. A. H. Dixon's Condition Powders—the celebrated Horse Medicine of the Age. Editor The Monitor. Enjoying from 40 numbers and upwards. Always on hand with the finest assortment of English, Eastern and Domestic Saddles, halters, whips, spurs, bits and 5|8 race saddles.
ESTABLISHED 1864.

J. OOONEY,
PRACTICAL
Painter and Whitener.
SIGNS NEATLY EXECUTED.
NO. 113 FOURTH STREET,
San Francisco, Cal.

W. A. A. TANKERSEN. R. F. CRUTTEN.
CUMMINGS & HARRINGTON,
BOOK SELLERS,
BOOK BINDERS,
Blank Book Manufacturers
AND PRINTERS.
509 GLAY STREET,
Above Sansome ..... SAN FRANCISCO.
MUSIC MAGAZINES, ILLUSTRATED WORKS, ETC. Bound in Boards stylish in cover each price. Weekly or monthly payments received. Six Extra charge. ☞ Send for circular.

Ladies' Cents' and Children's STRAW HATS
From 50c. upwards.
AT THE—
Factory 753 Mission St., opposite
St. Patrick's Church.
HATS MADE TO ORDER, OLD HATS MADE NEW. Ladies' Straw Hats Trimmed in the Finest Style and Manufactory of the Pacific Coast.

RAZORS!
FOR $1,000
I WILL MAKE A BETTER RAZOR AND HONE ON EARTH in the next three years than I can IN THE WORLD NOW.
My own make warranted $6 50
My Guard Razor warranted not to cut the finest hair 4 5
Good English Razors 1 50
Best English Razors 1 50
☞ Sent C. O. D. or by mail.
M. PRICE,
416 Kearny Street.
Grinding and Repairing.

NOTICE OF REMOVAL.
JERRY LOWNEY & SON
HAVE REMOVED THEIR CARRIAGE FACTORY from 1 Montgomery Street and Eighth street, to 420 and 422 Bush street, between Montgomery and Kearny, where they will be pleased to receive orders for carriages, buggies, and wagons for sale and made to order, and repairing promptly attended to.

CHEAPEST PLACE
To Buy New and Second Hand Machines.
All kinds; rented 25 per month; sacrifice for all machines, 25 cents per dozen.
SINGER OFFICE, 141 FOURTH STREET.

OTTO RATTO,
Fashionable Hatter,
326 MONTGOMERY AVENUE,
Between Broadway and Vallejo, Sts., S. F.
HATS MADE TO ORDER.

TAILORS.

John Kavanagh,
MERCHANT TAILOR,
6 New Montgomery Street,
PALACE HOTEL, S. F.
The Making of Clergymens' Cassocks a Specialty.

N. SWEENY,
MERCHANT TAILOR
41 Second street,
(Opposite Jessie street) ..... SAN FRANCISCO
Cassocks and Clerical Clothing a Specialty.

JOHN HICKEY,
Merchant Tailor,
933 Market street,
Between Fifth and Sixth streets. ..... SAN FRANCISCO.

Business Suits to order from	$25
Pants " "	5
Fine Dress Suits "	35
Black Doeskin Pants "	7

D. LETER & CO.,
69 Fourth Street, S. F.,
Merchant Tailors.

Business Suits to Order, from	$25 00
Plain Pants " "	5 00
Black Dress Suits "	35 00
Black Doeskin Pants "	7 00

M. FITZPATRICK
—IS—
The BOSS Tailor,
OF THE PACIFIC COAST.
36 1-2 FOURTH STREET,
Corner of Jones ..... San Francisco
☞ Go there for your CLOTHES. You are sure to be suited and don't you forget it.

THOMAS DRADY,
MERCHANT TAILOR
No. 6 Third Street,
Near Market, S. F.

E. F. WILTON,
MERCHANT
TAILOR,
12 Stockton Street.

NEAR MARKET ST. ..... SAN FRANCISCO
DENNIS RESMOND
MERCHANT TAILOR,
No. 508 Hayes street.
PETER SHORT
DRAPER AND TAILOR.
No. 1 Montgomery St. Masonic Temple
All the Latest Fashions in Suitings JUST ARRIVED.
Dress Suits to Order $50
Business Suits to Order 35

PEHRSSON & PAUL,
Merchant Tailors.
205 FOURTH STREET, S. F.
Suits Made to Order from $25.00 Upwards. Pants to order from $6.00 Upwards.
PERFECT FIT GUARANTEED.

BELLS ETC.

MENEELY BELL COMPANY.
Favorably known to the public since 1826 for the superiority of their Bells. Address
MENEELY & CO., WEST TROY, N. Y.

BUCKEYE BELL FOUNDRY.
Bells of Pure Copper and Tin for Churches, Schools, Farms, Factories, Hotels, etc. Warranted Satisfactory. Catalogues sent Free.
VANDUZEN & TIFT, Cincinnati, O.

Church & School Bells.
Arms and Chimes.
Rich Tone. Fifth Cast of Bell.
Size. Price. Size. Price.
No. 1 Bell ... 1,500 lbs. ... $1 00
No. 2 " ... 1,000 lbs. ... 1 50
No. 3 " ... 500 lbs. ... 2 00
No. 4 " ... 250 lbs. ... 3 00
No. 5 " ... 100 lbs. ... 5 00
No. 6 " ... 50 lbs. ... 10 00
Tower & Co., Boston Falls, N. Y.

BLYMYER M'F'G CO.
BELLS.
Church, School, Factory, Chime, Chimes, Tolling, Alarm, Steamboat, Locomotive, Plantation, Etc.
Sole Agents, 510 and 512 Market Street, S. F.

Clinton H. Meneely Bell Company,
Successors to Meneely & Kimberly, Bell Founders, Troy, N. Y., manufacture a superior quality of Bells. Special attention given to Church Bells. ☞ Catalogues sent free to parties making Bells.

McSHANE BELL FOUNDRY
MANUFACTURE STRONG, CLEAR-TONED BELLS for Churches, Academies, etc. Price-List and Circulars sent free.
HENRY McSHANE & CO., Baltimore, Md.

R. SCHAEZLEIN,
MANUFACTURER OF
SOCIETY BADGES.
Silversmith, Gold and Silver Plater,
13—19 Trinity St., nr Montgomery,
(Bet. Sutter and Bush Streets, San Francisco.)
BADGES AND JEWELS IN BOLID GOLD AND ENAMEL, Gold and Silver Enameled Emblems, F. A. M. and O. of I. American L. of H. Knights of Honor, Friends I. O. U. F., etc. Lodge Seals and Badges of any description made to order. Repairing of Regalia &c. a specialty.

NEW FRANKLIN HOTEL,

Cor. Sansome and Pacific streets.

H. CURRAN, Proprietor.
THIS WELL KNOWN AND FAVORITE HOTEL IS SITUATED IN A MOST CENTRAL AND HEALTHY LOCATION, and offers good accommodations to families and the traveling public, and is the nearest Hotel to all parts of the business portion of the city.
Board and Rooms per day, $1.00. Board and Rooms per week, $6 to $8. Rooms per night, 50c. Free Lunch for the use of Families. Rooms but the most obliging White help employed. Free Coach to and from the Hotel.

MEDICAL REMEDIES.

HALLS VEGETABLE SICILIAN HAIR RENEWER.
Has been in constant use by the public for over twenty years, and is the best preparation now invented for RESTORING GRAY HAIR TO ITS YOUTHFUL COLOR AND LIFE.
It supplies the natural food and color to the hair glands without staining the skin. It will keep the hair thicken the growth of the hair, prevent its blanching and falling off, and thus AVERT BALDNESS.
It cures Itching, Eruptions and Dandruff. As a HAIR DRESSING it is very desirable, giving the hair a silken softness which all admire. It keeps the head clean, cool and healthy.
The State Assayer and Chemist of Mass. and other leading Physicians endorse and recommend it as a great triumph in medicine.

BUCKINGHAMS DYE WHISKERS will change the beard to a BROWN or BLACK at discretion. Being in one preparation it is easily applied, and produces a permanent color that will not wash off.
PREPARED BY
R. P. HALL & CO., NASHUA, N. H.
Sold by all Dealers in Medicine.

NEW RICH BLOOD!
Wonderful Discovery! Quickly makes New Rich Blood and Flesh on the Skeleton! Restores Health and Vigor to the Sick and Debilitated! Cures Dyspepsia, Nervous Debility, Wasting Diseases, Consumption, Scrofula, Chronic Diarrhoea, Dysentery, Chronic Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Chronic Diseases, Fever and Ague, Female Weakness, Leucorrhoea, Diseases of the Urinary Organs, Diseases of the Skin, Blood Poisoning, Diseases of the Liver, Kidneys, Lungs, Stomach and Bowels, Diseases of the Nerves, Brain, Spinal Cord, Loss of Sleep, Loss of Memory, Loss of Vitality, Loss of Power, Loss of Appetite, Loss of Flesh, Loss of Hair, Loss of Beauty, Loss of Life, Loss of Everything. Sold by Druggists. Pamphlet free. Address, DR. SANDER'S MEDICAL INSTITUTE, 1051 Market Street, Opposite Hayes, S. F.

WOOD AND COAL.

COAL. COAL. COAL
2,240 LBS. TO THE TON
Full Weight and Quality Guaranteed.
Cole and Kindling Wood Constantly on hand at very LOWEST PRICES.
T. L. SMITH,
Cor. Eleventh and Market Sts.
☞ Trial Order Solicited.

COAL! COAL!
At Very Lowest Prices.
—ALSO—
All Kinds of Kindling Fuel. Try Us.
MARK HEYWOOD,
716 Folsom street.

COAL. COAL
Lowest Rates.
WHOLESALE AND RETAIL
THOMAS MORTON,
630 Geary Street, San Francisco.
☞ Telephone number, 1283.

DUNDEE COAL CO
NO COMBINATION.
GREAT REDUCTION
FOREIGN & DOMESTIC COAL
Cole of Our House Raises. Delivered Free.
J. FLYNN,
1115 and 1116, Mission Street.

J. M. JOHNSON,
—DEALER IN—
Wood, Coal & Charcoal
YARD AT 425 GOLDEN GATE AVE.
(Formerly Tyler Street.)
Office at 200 Sutter St., nr. Kearny
San Francisco.
Orders left at "Bulletin" office, 1 minute's walk, will receive prompt attention. Telephone connection.

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS.

KNABE PIANO
"For beauty of tone, touch and notes we have never seen their equal."
CLARA LOUISE KELLOGG.
"The Knabe" is absolutely best Piano made.
A. L. BANCROFT & CO.
721 Market Street,
SOLE AGENTS FOR THE PACIFIC COAST.

PIANOS
Fine Tuning and Repairing a specialty. Second hand Pianos from $75 to $125. Pianos to Rent. Instruments Sold on Monthly Payments. Sheet Music, Sheet Music Books, Cover Holder Holder, 8 T.

LOVERS OF MUSIC
Are Respectfully Invited to see
Wonderful Improved
FAY PIANO
1729 Mission, opp. Woodward's.

The Golden Palace
TEA STORE
227 And 229 Second Street,
San Francisco, California.
Has Been Greatly Enlarged to Accommodate the Increased Patronage.
THE CHOICEST GRAND TEAS ONLY ARE OFFERED and will at prices that defy competition. Our Coffees are Roasted Daily, and are the finest in the market. Our Spices are Ground Fresh Every Week, and are Unadulterated and Retail. The celebrated Bankers' Java, Mocha and Mocha Mocha Mocha

The Catholic Church
— THE — WONDER OF THE WORLD.

Beautiful Sermon by Father Burke.

Grand Eulogy on the Pope, the Cardinals and the Prelacy.

On the last Sunday in May, on the reception of Cardinal McCabe, the Very Rev. Thos. J. Burke, O. P., preached the following excellent discourse in the Cathedral, Dublin. He took his text from the Gospel of the day—the 14th chapter of St. John. He said that our divine Lord, in speaking the words recorded in the Gospel, pointed out to his disciples that they should lose sight of Him, but that they should adhere to his commandments and be worthy of His love, and whilst He was thus preparing to depart from them He turned to them and said, "My peace I give unto you," "Not as the world giveth do I give unto you." "Let not your hearts be troubled; but I give you my own peace." The promise which our Saviour made to them His sacrifice has fulfilled on the day of Pentecost, when he completed the work of redemption, by establishing through the holy spirit His Catholic and Apostolic Church. Then it was that the kingdom of peace was founded by the King of Peace upon this earth. In the 16th chapter of Jeremiah, while the Holy spirit of God made itself visible under the appearance of

TONGUES OF FIRE

was the Catholic Church founded, and all the apostles and disciples of the spirit poured out upon her, the work of man's redemption was accomplished, and the spirit was poured out which was to carry that redemption from end to end of the world. Hitherto there was even upon earth doubt and uncertainty, their minds misled by forms of error—clouded by the darkness of sin—that was only fitfully illumined by the occasional glimpses of what turned out to be a false philosophy. Henceforth there could be no uncertainty, no doubt upon the essential questions of what man was to believe and to do to secure his eternal interests, for a voice from heaven—the voice of the spirit of truth, which can never deceive nor be deceived. The Church had always set up, and set up to all people, given the same abiding word of divine truth, the same grand moral law by which man will be judged to the fulfillment of all Christian morality. After 1,800 years the Catholic Church stands forth and confronts the powers of the world, and says to them, "Which of your people ever received the word of God, and deceived or deceived? Their new Cardinal was no stranger coming amongst them. He was not a man of high reputation for great knowledge. His life had been a life spent in prayer in the sanctuary in the midst of them. They had looked on him, spoken familiarly with him, and the simplest amongst them had heard the dear to him as the highest in the land. Humble parish priest, parish priest, canon, archbishop, and now Cardinal of the Church of God. They had watched him and admired him throughout; and who was there amongst them who had not sometimes felt and recognized in the grand example of his life! What message did he bring from the Pontiff? He had brought from the Vicar of the Prince of Peace with authority enormously strengthened and increased in the direct spirit of peace, to defend the truth, to watch over the people, to save them from all invidious dangers that might be in the land, to warn them against all false teachers and false principles, to uphold their rights, to maintain the eternal laws of justice and authority in their relations to one another—in a word, he came that under his guidance every man in this land, in this diocese, might walk in the path ways of justice, equity, charity, and obedience until they attained to the reward of Christian sanctity—that glory to which our Divine Lord ascended on his Thursday. It was the glory of this land that Ireland's heart and Ireland's mind never refused to turn with love and obedience to the sacred messenger of peace sent to her from Rome. So it was in the past, so would it be now. Men's minds were confused, principles were advocated that would not bear the light, law was the dictate of mere one and of passion, speaking by authority for the common good. If that law be not quite the reflex of justice it could be reformed; they had a right to demand its reform, but they had no right to violate it. Now, he prayed that they would not be false to their history that they would not turn their back on that which was their chief glory in the past; that every honest man would rise in defence of religion law, reason, and justice, until the united protest and prayer of a nation may freaged with vengeance, which would bring on a people from an avenging God. How sad it would be if that faith of Ireland was ever weakened in that land, if their man or women should ever lose those characteristics that won for them the title of "Island of Saints." How sad it would be if all was to be changed, and that they who for so many centuries had known what sorrow was and what oppression was were to purchase some temporary advantage at the price of all they knew to be the dearest and most glorious characteristic of their history. But this would never be. He saw in heaven would interceds on her behalf that Ireland might be saved in all the integrity of her faith, and that she might obtain all those rights that belonged to her people and to which they had a right, but that she might obtain them without swerving in the least from the path of lawful zeal, justice, and Christian charity. They had now every guiding them whose hand was firm, grasping the staff of St. Lawrence O'Toole, and as long as the mitre rests on his honest head every soul would be guarded, every right of their people firmly guarded.

A MESSAGE OF PEACE,

LIFT FROM OVER IRELAND THAT BLACK CLOUD,

In conclusion, Father Burke prayed that the faith, charity, affection, and fidelity of our people would be rewarded in the kingdom of everlasting glory.

GUITEAU HANGED.

Final Vindication of the Law.

Dies with Blasphemy on his Lips.

HOW GUITEAU PASSED HIS LAST HOURS.

THE STORY OF THE STRUGGLE AT THE GALLOWS.

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 30.—Guiteau was very restless during the most of the hot sultry night, not sleeping more than twenty minutes at a time. Towards morning he fell into a sudden sleep from which he awoke at 4:30, when the warrant roused his dreams in his cell. Guiteau told him to bring dinner at eleven o'clock promptly.

Guiteau had dropped out of those matters he read a poem composed by himself, which he calls "Simplicity; or, Religious Baby Talk." After reading the poem he attempted to sing it, but broke down in the attempt.

At 9:15 the prisoner came out on the corridor and exercised for fifteen minutes. He walked very briskly, and made it rather difficult for the guards to keep pace with him.

John W. Guiteau arrived at the jail at nine o'clock, and was followed in a few minutes by Warden Crocker. These two gentlemen, with Hicks had a consultation as to the disposition of the body.

At 11 A. M. Mrs. Scoville, Guiteau's sister, who had said yesterday that she would not come to see the hanging, appeared at the jail door and demanded to be admitted, but admittance was refused her.

ARRANGEMENTS FOR THE HANGING.

The office of the jail yard was completely given up to the reporters. Some reporters remained over night. The private office of the Warden was transformed temporarily into a telegraph office.

At nine o'clock there was a constant stream of persons coming into the jail. The scene outside was like that of a fair ground. Enterprising colored men had erected booths, from which refreshments were sold to weary and thirsty people. There were mounted messengers speeding to and from the city, and carriages were hurrying visitors to the jail yard.

At 10 o'clock Dr. Hicks and John W. Guiteau went with General Crocker to the scaffold, with a number of the guards. John W. Guiteau ascended the steps and carefully examined the structure, handling and inspecting all the fixtures both above and below the platform.

A telegram from New York, signed by A. Busnel, was received about 10 o'clock by Dr. Hicks, to ask if the sender could obtain possession of Guiteau's body to exhibit for the benefit of the Young Men's Christian Association. Dr. Hicks paid no attention to the message.

MRS. SCOVILLE SEIZES HIM FLOWERS

Guiteau begged to arrange his dress by putting on a pair of navy blue trousers. At 10 30 o'clock the guard came out of the door and said: He is ready for the drop. Another guard, who took the message, hurried off and soon returned with Hicks, who went into the cell. Guiteau was then reported by the guard to be apparently very composed.

After a short conference with Crocker, John W. Guiteau went outside of the jail to see his sister. He found her in great excitement, bordering on hysteria; but for a short time he succeeded in calming her and discussing her from any attempt to witness the execution. She acknowledged the propriety of such a course, but said she could not possibly remain in the city during the wretched hours of the morning. She brought with her the flowers which Guiteau asked for, and they were taken to the prisoner.

HE EATS A HEARTY DINNER.

WASHINGTON, June 30th, 11 35 A. M.—While Dr. Hicks was in the prisoner's cell at 11 o'clock, Guiteau made some request as to the execution and the hangman. Having noticed a book in his hand, the poem and other writings, he tore up the originals. He then sent for the jail book and pen and ink to him he chose to be chined. His dinner was brought as the doctor was leaving, and he ate it with much relish. His dinner consisted of a pound of broiled steak, a dish of fried potatoes, four slices of bread and a quart of coffee.

OVERCOME WITH EMOTION.

Shortly after 12 o'clock, Guiteau seemed to break down completely and burst into tears, sobbing hysterically. Dr. Hicks sat by his side fanning him, and vainly trying to calm him.

About 11 30, preparations began to be made for the execution. At 11 50 a detachment for troops was formed on the east side of the rotunda and brought their muskets to parade rest. About that time two hundred and fifty people were in the rotunda. Dr. Hicks was with the prisoner engaged in prayer. Guiteau showed great nervousness and appeared greatly startled when he heard the rattle of the muskets on the stone floor of the rotunda. From that moment Guiteau seemed thoroughly overcome with emotion. His step freely and seemed to be in great anguish.

The scene in the rotunda, while waiting for the prisoner, was one long to be remembered. The soldiers were drawn up on one side in a long line, the spectators facing them on the other. It was understood that Guiteau was very much depressed and it was expected that this passage to the gallows would present a distressing sight. The door was watched with eager attention. After the death warrant was read by the Warden the prisoner became more composed, and turning away began to brush his hair.

THE PROCESSION TO THE GALLOWS.

At 12 21 a loud alarm whistle was blown at the Work-house, which is near the Jail, but whistle usually blows at 12 o'clock and by it Guiteau was in the habit of guaging his time. The delay to-day was by special arrangement, so that its startling summons would not come before the officers were ready. Two minutes later the iron gate at the end of the corridor slicked, and the Warden and Crocker made his appearance, and a moment later the familiar form of Guiteau was seen. His face was pallid, and the muscles about the mouth moved nervously; other than this, there was no sign of faltering. The procession moved quickly to the scaffold, and Guiteau ascended the stairs without stopping to take breath. The sound of his steps with as much steadiness as could be expected from a man whose arms were tightly pinioned. At the last step he faltered for a moment, but was assisted by the officers who walked on either side.

Upon reaching the platform, Guiteau was immediately hustled behind the drop, facing the front of the scaffold. Captain Coleman had his hand upon his right, Robert Strong upon his left, and Woodward directly behind him. Jones took a position on the side, near an upright beam. Warden Crocker took his position at the southeast corner of the structure. There was a slight delay while the spectators were pushing and jostling through the door leading from the rotunda to the corridor, at the lower end of which the gallows was placed. Guiteau meanwhile gazed upon the crowd, looked up to the beam over his head, and slightly made a survey of all the dread paraphernalia.

As soon as the crowd gained access, General Crocker waved to them to uncover and all hands were heard. Dr. Hick then prayed, after which Guiteau read a composition and a poem which are too blasphemous to lay before ear readers.

THE DEATH.

The attendants then pinioned his legs and carefully adjusted the noose about his neck. Mr. Strong placed the cap over his head, and, as he did so, Guiteau called out, in a loud voice, "Glory! glory! glory!" Instantly the trap was sprung. The body turned partly around, but there was not the slightest perceptible motion of the limbs.

When the drop fell, a yell was sent up by some persons inside the jail. This was reached outside by a thousand or more people who heard hurried footsteps. There was a general coalaught by the populace upon the jail doors. The officers were unable to withstand it, and a hundred people crowded into the office.

GENERAL NOTES.

Guiteau, just before the trap was sprung, dropped a paper from his hand. This paper was given him by Warden Crocker, who had received it from someone as a signal that he was ready.

John Guiteau said to a reporter, just after the execution, that he was glad that it was over. "What will be done with the remains?" asked the reporter. "We will bury him here in the jail, where he will be safe," said Mr. Guiteau; "he will not be taken out of jail."

At 11 30 this morning a man appeared in front of the jail, stripped off his coat, vest and shirt, and declared that he had come down to save Guiteau. Four policemen grabbed him in a trice and hustled him off to the nearest station house.

The spot indicated by Warden Crocker as Guiteau's burial place is in the same court in which he was executed, about 10 feet from the gallows.

Mrs. Scoville, after waiting upon the outside of the jail until after the execution, decided not to view the remains this afternoon, and about 7 o'clock returned to the city.

At a quarter past three, the military guard which has been on duty at the jail ever since the 2d of July, marched away, being loudly cheered as they left.

Very soon after the hanging, Dr. Hicks and John Guiteau made a very thorough examination of the cell occupied by Guiteau, and Dr. Hicks took possession of the books and other effects of the deceased. A great many of those at the jail visited the cell to see the place where Guiteau had passed his last days.

The funeral takes place to-morrow and will be as private as possible.

Before the death, Guiteau had repeatedly exacted a solemn promise that his body should not be sold or used for mercenary purposes.

ATTEMPT TO POISON.

Washington, June 30th.—Yesterday afternoon, prior to Mrs. Scoville's visit to the jail, she sent to a boarder, a relative, without the knowledge of the Warden or his deputy, was carried into the cell. Deputy Warden Rosh passed through the corridor, to pass out, when he noticed a package and gave it to him. "My sister," curtly replied the assassin. The Warden was about to open it, when he concluded the bouquet was worthy of examination and took it from the cell. It was handed to Dr. McWilliams, the jail physician, who carefully examined the flowers and declared that they had been drugged by being impregnated with some poison. He took the flowers to a chemist at two o'clock this morning for analysis and at this writing it has not been returned to the jail.

THE AUTOPSY.

Washington, June 30th.—The physicians who performed the autopsy were Drs. McLeod, J. J. Hartigks and Z. T. Kwe. A close examination of the prisoner showed that fruitless a neck had been broken and that the rope had cuts a deep gash into the flesh. Scales and other appliances were used to determine the weight and other phenomena. After an examination of the eyes, the brain was removed to be inspected. Dr. A. R. Coring found they left eye completely suffused with blood and took upon an indolent that no opinion could be formed about their condition or expression. Then the chest was open and a thorough examination made, with a view to determine all the physiological facts that would be of interest. The brain was found to be in a normal condition, and weighed forty-nine ounces. The heart weighed a little over nine ounces and was in a healthy condition, as was the other internal organs. The brain was after wards photographed in several positions with great care. The physicians will not make known their conclusions till the investigation is completed, and it may last several days.

ANNUAL COMMENCEMENTS.

MOUNT ST. MARY'S ACADEMY, GRASS VALLEY.

The final examination of the young ladies of Mount St. Mary's Academy, Grass Valley, were held in the Concert Recitation Hall, on the 27th and 28th ult. The examinations were conducted by two Christian Brothers from St. Mary's College, San Francisco. The answers of the young ladies to the numerous and difficult questions proposed, showed careful training and assiduous application. In Grammar, Algebra, Arithmetic, Mathematics and Bookkeeping they particularly distinguished themselves, as also in some of the young ladies in Arithmetic, both practical and mental, as well as in the various branches of the solid education, that the audience was delighted, in the imparting of which education, the good Sisters of Grass Valley are so well known. The results of the examinations were all that could be desired and reflected great credit on the young ladies themselves and to their teachers.

The closing exercises took place in St. Cecilia's Hall situated on the Convent grounds, on the evening of Wednesday June 28th. The hall was most beautifully and elaborately decorated for the occasion. Flags and wreaths were gracefully festooned from the ceiling, and hung pendent from the chandeliers, were floral horseshoes, hearts, anchors, etc., in appropriate mottoes, and a very artistic skill was displayed.

The following interesting programme was admirably carried out in all its details: Salutatory, Miss Mary Tyrrell; Grand March, instrumental solo, Misses M. McGee, M. Maguire, B. Lynch, A. O'Farrell, L. Fitzpatrick; The Haunted Stream, vocal solo, Miss A. Ancil; Duchess Montana, Miss Kelly; Arab Duchess Persence; Marie Theresa, Queen of Hungary, Miss Elizabeth Lynch; Arab Duchess Mary Christina, Queen of Spain, Miss Mary Duchess Montana, Miss Kelly; Arab Duchess Mary Elizabeth, Miss Lynch; Arab Duchess Mary Amalia, Miss Tyrrell; Duchess Mary Carolina, Miss Maguire; Duchess Mary Christina, Queen of Spain, Miss Mary; Marmoring Cascade, instrumental solo, Miss Rita Hamilton; The Fairies' Singing, vocal solo, Miss Zoe Tuttle; Destiny, recitation, Miss Mollie O'Connor; Duet, instrumental trio, Marie Antoinette, set second, Misses Annie Ancil, Mary M. Ancil, Pitie Victoria, M. Dowling; Princess Elizabeth, An Orphan Princess, Miss Mary Ancil; Princess Polignac, C. O'Farrell; Princess Theresa, Miss Mary Ancil; Princess Lamoignon, J. Davis; Princess Lamoignon, Miss Dowling; chorus; How Ho Sacred Is, Misses A. Ancil, Dowling, Tuttle, Lynch, Maguire, Miss Lizzie A. Gindley; The Changed Vows, recitation, Miss Lizzie Gindley; Marmoring, instrumental solo, Miss M. McGee; Duet, instrumental, Misses M. Ancil, M. Ancil; Duet, Misses Ancil, Dowling; Duet, Misses Ancil, Dowling; Duet, Misses Ancil, Dowling

Poetry.

[FOR THE MONITOR.]

AERAEL'S BRIDE.

BY ELEANOR C. DONNELLY.

I.

"Make ready new robes for my bride to be,
Make ready a couch for my bride and me,
Whence we may slumber secure!"
They fashioned the robes with a tasteful skill,
In woodsome white and small;
They fashioned the marriage bed, cool and still,
But narrow and straight withal.

II.

"The woods of the manse are rich in flower,
Bring wreaths for my darling's hair;
And soho, thou bell, in the old church-tower,
The chaunt for the wedded pair!"
Young hands were rife in the summer wood,
When the bridal wreath was taken;
And the bell, asleep in its solitude,
To symbolic life was shaken.

III.

"Now come, now come, ye bridesmaids twain,
Come, gentle, and white-robed priest,
The bride yon forth to her lord's domain,
Come, haste to the marriage feast!"
In sombre robes, thro' the shadowy brown,
There went a wailing train.—
And the bride and the bridegroom laid the sexton Down.
And never rose up again!

Philadelphia, June 22, 1862.

Literary Miscellany.

A Mother's Maxims.

A STORY TRUE TO LIFE.

In June, 1860, the Brig Polly Downs, Capt. John Pagson, sailed from Boston for a port in Turkey, laden with cotton goods. She was a new, fast little vessel, with plenty of storage room, and had accommodations for two passengers.

The crew consisted of a captain, mate, four sailors, a black cook, and a cabin-boy.

Captain Pagson was a commodorean, jolly man, who treated his crew neither to joke nor grog, but who lodged and fed them better than would live out of six of the seamen sailing from New England ports.

"Old Jack" was the mate, who was from the West, used to say he was "a hard man, but you could tie to, in fair weather or foul."

His crew were picked men, and, with the exception of Dan, the cabin-boy, had been with him for years. This was Dan's first voyage, and he felt that the captain and mate cried with him emphatically. He was on probation, and he felt that not a grain of favor would be allowed him.

Dan was a brave boy, and knew nothing of the world beyond the village in which was his mother's church. Shipboard, the sea, Europe, Turkey, were were bewildering ideas to him at once on his narrow experience, scarcely wider than that of the house-dog sleeping at the barn-door.

"Keep your eyes open and your hands ready to use the moment they are called to do it before the moment is over," was his mother's last advice. "For the rest, Daniel, ask the Lord's help. You'll find Him just as near to you in Turkey as in your own home here."

Dan, in the hurry and excitement of getting under way, and of his new duties, repeated this advice over and over to himself. It seemed to keep his mother always near.

"Ay, ay, sir!" shouted Dan, when he was ordered by the captain to "look lively!" It took him his mother's echo. Widow Old friend of mine."

"Rather gentlemanly fellow, this passenger!" remarked to Dan, being Captain Pagson in an unusually talkative humor.

"He is a gentleman, sir, one of the Faneuil's of Faneuil Hall, I reckon. Doctor prescribed a long sea voyage. A gentleman, and a soldier, Mr. Briggs!"

Dan while waiting on the table while at dinner could not help noticing the passenger. "Some of Young Dan," thought the true-born Yankee lad, "I, too, shall be a gentleman in school."

Doctor Farnell was tall, lean man, carefully dressed, with marble pale and mountainous, but with eyebrows and lashes almost white. His eyes, too, were large and pale. They never met the eyes of any other man fairly. Once when Dan happened to look at him he turned quickly away, and he planned furtively and suspiciously as the boy at times during the rest of a voyage.

"Don't like him," thought Dan. "Looks sneaking and tricky, and not like a gentleman."

But Dan, of course, kept his opinion to himself. Old Jack, the cook, swabbed the "raw hand," and tolerated no remarks from him.

Fortunately the lad was not sea-sick. He learned his new duties quickly; was alert, neat and always good-natured. In the course of one week Captain Pagson had two grumbled upon him.

Dan worked harder than ever, and between times, for recreation, when the passenger was on deck, he watched him.

Dr. Farnell talked freely and brilliantly, as even Dan's unwilling view could perceive. But his talk was levelled for above the heads of either the captain or Mr. Briggs, who seemed with half comprehending admiration.

But there were days when the doctor was absolutely silent, as nothing and naked the deck swept in professional gloom, his light eyes darting suspicious glances from side to side.

One of those days Dan, going down just at twilight to find something he had left in his berth, saw a tall figure, which he did not recognize, with a candle groping about among the chests of the sailors.

"Who's there?" he shouted.

The man came quickly towards him. The candle threw a yellow glare over his hair and glaring eyes. It was the passenger. He recalled himself by the sleeve.

"Here, boy—this way! Do they call you?"

"Dan, sir."

"You're surprised to find me here, Dan!" with a guilty laugh. "Took me for a ghost, eh?"

"I beg your pardon! I ought'n to have called to you. But it took me aback sir."

"Naturally, you need not be surprised at finding me in any part of the vessel. I am studying the sailors' character, you know. Captain Pagson has been good enough to give me admittance to all parts of the vessel. You needed a short in that disagreeable tone again. It startled a nervous man." And with a vague smile he blew out the candle and went upon deck, leaving Dan staring after him.

"It's not all right; or, why should he, being a gentleman, make such a long explanation to a boy a-being a cabin boy? Dan at last checking his hand.

That night Captain Pagson was alone on the quarter-deck when Dan presented himself before him and saluted. His voice shook a little, for he was terribly scared.

"Old Job," was a bigger man in his eyes than any king or potentate.

"What is the matter with you?" growled the captain

"The—the passenger, sir."

"What have you to do with the passenger?"

"I beg your pardon, sir, but are you sure he isn't a thief or worse, grasped Dan, forgetting in his terror, the respectful speech he had planned in which he meant to state the fact of Dr. Farnell's vilest books.

The captain seized the rope's end. "Take that for your impudence," he shouted, sawing a blow at Dan, who dodged it, and then blurted out the whole story.

"Searching among the bunks—Dr. Farnell" muttered the captain in astonishment, dropping his weapon; and then he relaxed thoughtfully up and down. Suddenly he stopped before Dan.

"It's well you came to me and nobody else with the story," he said. "It is of no account. Dr. Farnell is an eccentric man. If he wishes to examine the ship in any part he is not to be watched and spied upon." So keep your eyes open to yourself, and your tongue too. If you go blabbing this story about I'll flog you."

Dan crept off to his work feeling as if he had a soundd drubbing. Tears of rage and mortification stood in his eyes.

Mother's rules do very well on land, but there won't work on shipboard," he muttered; "but there's something that needs watching in that man, and I'll watch him."

Nothing of moment happened, however, for days to come, and the expedition grew monotonous. They were whole nights when he passed the deck until morning.

The crew joked together about him. One declared that he was a murderer; another that he escaped from a lunatic asylum, but the common opinion was that he had run away from a termagant wife.

"Dye think," said Irish Jem, "how he eyes every ship we hail as though she might be aboard?"

Dan alone never joined in the gossip between watches about the mystery.

One day a little incident conved which suddenly strengthened his suspicion.

Just before nightfall, when passing the after hatchway, in the covering of which was a slide that could be opened and closed at will, Dan saw Dr. Farnell coming up, covered with dust and dirt. There was an unusual glare in his eyes. He seized Dan by the shoulders.

"Do you know where I have been?" he said hoarsely.

"In the lower hold, sir, among the boxes."

"What dye think no down there, boy, for you and for all of us? Death! Death! Hell! hell nobody—nobody." He dropped his hold and staggered on.

"Mad as a March hare!" muttered Dan.

But half an hour later Dr. Farnell was seated at the supper-table, pale, self-possessed, keeping the captain in a roar with his good stories.

About the middle of the second watch that night Dan turned out of his berth. The boy was really too anxious to sleep.

"Death in the hold, sh! Death in the hold!" he repeated to himself.

He did not dare to go to the captain or crew with his story. Yet he was sure some peril was at hand. He sat shivering for a while, then pulled on his clothes.

"If Death's in the hold, I'll find him," he said.

He groped his way to the after hatchway unseen, and, by the aid of the dim shine of the deck, was realizing listlessly against the slide, when he heard a step upon the lower deck and crouched for the hatchway that opened into the lower hold.

He was no certain danger was aloof that he was not startled when he saw a faint, reddish light, and found the lower hatchway open.

The hold was not so closely stowed but that one could move freely about in it, partly, and on lowering himself quite carefully and that it was a glare directly upon the face of the passenger, who was kneeling and working as something on the floor.

"So that is the way Death looks, hey?" thought Dan. "He couldn't well look worse, and he's good big enough, and pleasy face.

"What grating noise is that?" he asked himself, and at the same instant he sprang forward with a cry of horror.

The passenger had an auger in his hands and a saw lay beside him.

He had bored a hole through the side of the vessel below the water-line, and the water was already coming, drop by drop.

The boy stretched Farnell and shock him like a wild beast. "You are sinking the ship. Help! help!"

The madman turned upon him quietly and coldly.

"Yes, we'll all go down together. Don't make that noise! Nobody can hear you."

He had caught the boy's wrist and held him with the unnatural strength of the insane.

Nobody could hear him. Dan remembered that, and became suddenly still. Horror and fear only made the thought more terrible.

Death was just at hand. There was nobody to drive it back but himself, and he was in the madman's hold.

He stared into the fierce glassy eyes with a agony of hesitation.

Farnell laughed back at him.

"I thought of burning, but this is the quietest. I want to go quietly into the great hereafter. We shall all go down together in a few minutes," glancing at the stream of water gushing in through the opening.

"Oh, mother, mother!" cried the shivering lad.

"We'll go down together. Kings among cadents want serve the Nya attended by the slain on their burial. I will be followed by the Indian captain and his crew."

A sudden flash lighted Dan's eye.

"Not by the captain," he said.

He seized the startled Dan, it was so calm, and in a tone so very different from any in which he had ever spoken before.

"The captain and Mr. Briggs will escape." he cried.

"Why, what do you mean?" cried Farnell. "Escape! How can they escape?"

"Because they are not in the hold. They will take to the boats."

"I never thought of the boats."

Dan felt a chill run over him. He tried to speak, but his voice failed. He had but one chance, and he must try it.

"I will go and bring the captain and Mr. Briggs down if you like. Then they can't get away."

"Ha! he's prevent Job. Well, go, bring them, and be quick," loosening his hold and pushing Dan away.

Dan walked slowly to the ladder, then he made one wild spring.

"To the hold! to the hold! A trick!" he shrieked, and then fell to the deck.

Within another hour the madman was in irons, the leak had been stopped, and the water pumped out of the hold. The danger was passed and all snug and hail.

The crew made a hero of Dan. Even captain Pagson spoke out his hearty praise.

The lad saw what was to be done and did it. He had courage and, what is better good sense! Who might you to use your wits, my boy?

"My mother, sir," said Dan.

THE PERPETUAL OBLATION.

Around the World in Twenty-Four Hours.

Have you young Catholics ever thought that the Holy Sacrifice of the Mass is being offered in some part of the world every hour of your lives! When it is midnight in New York, Mass is beginning in the churches of Italy. There ancient altars, at which saints have knelt, are lit up with lamps, and the Vicar Christ and thousands of priests are lifting holy hands to heaven. A little later and the bells of a thousand towers in France begin to sprinkle the air with holy sounds, and in every city, town and hamlet kneeling crowds adore the chastening hands of God, and pray for sinners who despise His ordinances.

Chivalric and religious Spain catches the echoes, and, when it is one o'clock in New York, offers the great Sacrifice in courtlieu splendid churches.

And then Catholic Ireland, the Island of Saints, which has during many centuries sacrificed for the Faith, rallies anew around the altars it would never forsake.

At two o'clock and after, the priests of the island of the Atlantic—perhaps the Canadian Indian—are bending over their waiting the great cross on their shoulders, bend to the tabernacle.

An hour later, a courageous missionary lifts up the chalice of salvation on the tossed coast of Greenland.

At half-past four the sacred lamps twinkle through the fogs of Newfoundland; and five Nova Scotia's industrious population begins the day by attending Mass.

And now all the Canadian churches and chapels grow radiant, as the faithful people—the habitant of the country, the devout citizens, the consecrated nun and the innocent, hasten to unite their prayers with the sanctuary where the priest is awaiting them.

At six, how many souls are flocking to the churches of New York, eager to begin the day of labor with the holiest act of religion. Many young people, too, gather round the altar there at a later hour, like the fresh flowers which open with the morning dew and offer their dewy fragrance to Heaven.

An hour later the belle of Missouri and Louisiana are ringing; and at eight, Mexico, true to her faith, bends before its glittering altars.

At nine the devout tribes of Oregon follow their bored black-gown to their gay chapels, and California while lessens its grasp on its gold, to think of the treasure that God does not compel.

And when the Angelus bell is ringing at noon in New York, the unhloody Sacrifice is being offered in the Islands of the Pacific, where there are generous souls laboring for our dear Lord.

And so the bells are ringing on, on, over the waters, and one taper after another lights up, as one soul after another sends the light of faith, making glad all the isles of the sea.

At two, the zealous missionaries of Australia are morning with haste, eager for the coming of our Lord, Jesus Christ, Jesus Christ. And all the spicy Islands of the East catch the sweet sounds, one after another, and offer in the afternoon. China knows there are many souls who are worthy of the honor of contribution by the rapt devotion of the Mass.

At six the altars of Hindostan, where St. Francis Xavier ministered, are arrayed with their flowers and lamps and the sacred vessels, and unwearied priests are hastening to fortify their souls before Him who is their life and their strength.

At nine, in Siberia, where many a poor Catholic exile from Poland has no place for his wose but the bot the foot of the altar of the Bread of Heaven.

During the hours when New York is gay with parties and balls and theatrical amusements, the holiest of rites is going on in Indian Ocean and among the sable tribes of Africa, whose souls are as dear to the Saviour who once died for all and who is now daily offered for all.

Strange uses for Paper.

Paper car wheels are composed entirely of paper pulp pressed under a weight of six tons, and then fastened by means of hard steel tire put on them, when they are ready for use. Lady collars and cuffs are as high as to the shoulders of an ordinary man. Under treatment they are as tough as thickness required. If the tire should wear or fall off the wheel, or the train from the track, there would be danger of their breaking, as they are very flexible, and would spring. A paper ball can be rendered so solid that nothing but a diamond tool can make an indentation into it. At the mill is a square block of compressed paper fastened on a turning lathe, and so hard, that, if a fine steel chisel is held against it when it is moving, instead of cutting the paper it will turn the chisel into a hundred pieces. The strength is astonishing. You can take a fifty note of the Bank of England, twist it into a kind of rope, suspend 336 pounds upon one end of it, and it will not injure it in the slightest degree. Bath tubs and pots are formed by compressing the paper made out of lines fibres and sheets of that is, painted over with composition which becomes a part thereof, and is fire-proof. The tube last indefinitely, never leak, and, put in the fire, will not burn up. You can put on them with a hammer and not injure them. Plates compressed and annealed are durable; you can not only wash, but drop them upon the floor and stand upon them. The York are to be used for any practical purpose, and the knife can cut them as easily as sharp. Paper can be substituted for wood, manufactured into picture frames and colored like walnut, cherry, and the like.

Bedsteads are fashioned the same as car wheels, only of long strips instead of rings. They are very beautiful and lasting. Cooking utensils are also made of paper, and it is impossible to burn them out. They are lighter than tin.

Boxes are formed of paper, and are literally constructed of and furnished with every convenience in paper. The printing press, type, and all the fixtures of the office could be connected out of this material, before observing the use of the paper. A complete steam engine can be thus manufactured and do all required duty. Clothes and shoes will come in the future. Twenty-nine years are needed to transfer linen from into a car wheel.

—A Philadelphian deserted his wife to go off with another woman. After being away a month, he wrote back that he was repentant, and would return if assured of a welcome. The wife replied: "Come home—you will be warmly received." And so he was—by the officer who was on hand to arrest him.

How the States were Named.

At a recent meeting of the American Antiquarian Society, Hamilton B. Staples, read a paper concerning the origin of the names of the States of the Union. From among other facts are taken the following:

The name California first originated in the imagination of the author of a Spanish romance, "Las Sergas de Esplandian." Here the island of California, where great abundance of gold and precious stones is found, is ruled over by a queen, and was peopled by the terrikey now embraced in this state by some of Spaniards with Cortes, who, no doubt, had read this sensational romance.

Oregon was a name formerly given to an imaginary river in the West. Carver, an American traveler, mentions it in 1763, in describing the river he evidently confounded it with the Missouri, but the name was finally applied to the present State of that name

New Hampshire was named from Hampshire county, of England, by John Mason, of the Plymouth Company, to whom the territory was originally granted by the English Government.

The State of Massachusetts was named from the Indian tribe, the Kotzes or Kuos, and the Massachusetts signifies "the blue mountain" or "the great mountain." Indeed, the hills "at," meaning at or near, "wadchusah," mountains or hills, and the suffix "at," meaning at or near.

There are many conflicting opinions concerning the origin of the name Rhode Island. Some believe it to have been given by the ancient isle of Rhodes; others from the Dutch, Roode Eylandt, signifying red island—at night she have been called Roodt Island or Roodeland Island, being near the harbor.

Connecticut, spelled in an Indian dialect, is Quinnehtukqut, signifying "land on a long tidal-river."

New York is named from the Duke of York the original grantee. In the charter of Pennsylvania it is called "Penn the woods" the name of the Connecticut river to the east side of the Delaware Bay.

The territory of New Jersey was given by royal charter to Sir George Cartaret and Lord Berkley; Cartaret, in England's great civil war, had bravely defended the Isle of Jersey, in the British Channel, and his ancestors had come from that island in commemoration of the fact.

Pennsylvania was founded by William Penn, and it is the only State named from its founder. The suffix "sylvania" signifying "forest land," is most descriptive of the general character of the country.

Three counties of the south part of Pennsylvania were formerly territories of that State. In 1701 they were granted a separate charter, and named Delaware after Lord De Lawar, who first explored the bay into which the river empties.

Maryland was named from Queen Henrietta Maria, the wife of Charles the first. Terra Maria—meaning land of Mary, or Mary's land.

Virginia was called in honor of Queen Elizabeth as she was called "Virgin Queen." The territory of the Carolinas was granted to the French settlers in 1663, and was named after Charles I. of France.

King George II of England was sponsor for the Southern State of Georgia.

The name Maine was given to that State descriptively, since the original charter it was considered "the Mayne Land of New England."

Vermont is also a descriptive name, being formed from two French words, "vert" and "mont," meaning green mountain.

Kentucky is from Kristucker, and Indian Shawnee word, signifying "land of the river" or "long river."

Mississippi, Chippewa for the Indian Messipee, meaning "father of waters," Tennessee, Cherokee, "Tanasi," signifying "the river of the river of that river.

Tennessee is supposed to have been named from Tanasi, one of the chief towns of the Cherokee Indians, situated on the banks of the Tennessee river.

The name Minnesota is from the Indian Minisotah, meaning "colored water."

The State of Nevada is said to have been named from the Sierra Nevada Mountains, which way, and is to have been named from the Sierra Nevadas of Granada, Spain.

Nebraska takes its name from the Nebraska river. The name is of Indian origin, meaning "shallow river."

Kansas is the name derived from its principal river. A tribe of Indians, formerly in that vicinity, bore the name of the Kansas or Kaws, and the State is probably named after them.

The origin of the name of the peninsular State of Florida is told by historians as follows: In 1512 the Spanish Ponce de Leon sailed to the west in search of the "fountain of youth." He first saw land on "Easter of Flowers," on account of the richness and quantity of the flowers. Under its use possession, he called it Florida.

Alabama is named from an ancient Indian tribe of the Mississippi Valley. The name itself signifies "we rest."

Ohio takes its name from the river on the southern boundary. The name is from the Wyandotte Indian dialect, in which, and means "scoutring great."

Missouri was also named from a river. The word is from the Indian Min-ne-sho, they, signifying "muddy water."

The name Wisconsin is of French-Indian origin. It was formerly spelled Ouis consin, meaning "westward flowing."

Illinois is derived from the Delaware Indian word, "Illini" or "Lenni," meaning "real man," and the soft French termination "ois."

The name Michigan comes from the Indian words of Algonquin and Chippewa origin, "Mishe, great and "gan, lake."

Louisiana is called in honor Louis XIV. of France and was formerly applied to all the French possessions in the Mississippi Valley.

The word Arkansas is of Indian stock. A tribe of Indians who had rebelled and separated from the Kosas nation, were celebrated for the fine quality of their bows. From this they were called Arcor Bow Indians, which finally shortened.

Few States have been named from their original discoverers. The names of La Salle, Cabot, De Soto, Marquette, Coronado and Ponce are waiting to be incorporated into history by naming some new State in their honor.

Tit For Tat.

Young lady recently asked a gentleman the meaning of the word surrogate, and he explained it to her as "a gate through lodging, and one pint of good rye married." Then "I imagine," said the young lady, "that it is a corruption of sorrogate, meaning "you are right, miss," her informant, "a woman is an abbreviation of woe to man.

—An old man at West Cheshire, Conn., has made all his property over to his wife, on the condition that she gives him food, clothes, lodging, and one pint of good rye every day as long as he lives.

—Brook's Spool Cotton, soft finish (as well a glace finish, is manufactured exclusively for Leighton Worsted Works. Try it on machine and will use no other. For sale by all dry goods stores.

Table Manners.

There are some people who should never join a company at dinner, unless their arms are skewered at their sides like trussed fowls, for then they will not put out their neighbors' eyes with their elbows. There are others who should be deprived of the privilege of using their knives, for then they would not spoil everybody's dinner with an account of the last medicine they took, interspersed with comparisons between the relative merits of rhubarb and castor oil, powders and pills. A unusual of good behavior while at table ought to be dealt with the same as other crimes that affect the protection of society, or a printed list of rules slipped into the napkin "Turn your head away when you cough." "Do not breathe into your glass" "Do not fidget at table;" "Avoid talking about medicines, false teeth, or the state of your stomach" "Never criticise the food at a table where you are a guest;" "Breathe gently, no snoring allowed" "It is considered ill-mannered to pick your teeth or clean your nails at the table;" and most of other things which are not to be done. If it would seem a breach of good manners to place such a reminder before a guest, what must be the delicacy of a guest who would practice any of these things? It is not from courtesy so much as carelessness that they do so. They simply carry the manners of the camp into the court. There are many little touches of etiquette in vogue now at table which can be learned by observation, but the common rules of proper behavior are always the same. Ignorance of them proclaims ourselves if it does not may itself. The country man who, dining in company, saw a dish travel for the first time, attracted the attention of the whole table by the remark that it had evidently lost its "Don't drink lemonade, waiter; take it away and bring me a bowl of punch." Ignorance of the world at a moment and observed others he would have discovered its use.

A writer on table etiquette says

"The secret of good manners is to assure you desired to prolong, rather than a duty to be got rid of as quickly as possible.

Don't bring your prejudices, your dislikes, your annoyances, your just misfortunes and your bad digestion to the table. That would spoil the best of dinners.

Respect the hour of meals. You have no right to injure the temper of the cook, destroy the flavor of the viands and the comfort of the family by your want of punctuality.

Our Girl.

Question.—Would Our Girl marry a good young blacksmith?

Answer—Good gracious, you ought to know better than to ask such a question.

Q.—But we suppose for the time being that we do not know any better. Hence the question.

A.—Well, now come to think it over, there are some blacksmiths that we would be Our Girl might marry the young blacksmith. He would be a good husband, and he would work and hard a great many men to work for him, she might marry the young man, though she would be sorry to see not called a blacksmith.

Q.—Why, what's the matter with a blacksmith? He is a very good trade.

A.—Yes, there are certain conditions under which Our Girl might marry the young blacksmith. If he were rich and did not work at his trade and hired a great many men to work for him, she might marry the young man, though she would wish he was not called a blacksmith.

Q.—But the young blacksmith is handsome and well educated?

A.—Yes, he has a horse for a living.

Q.—Well, is not that an honest way of earning a living?

A.—Yes, it is honest, but not elegant. Some people don't seem to have as much money as our Girl wants.

Q.—How much does Our Girl want?

A.—Well, she wants a gentleman who will become a nuisance. The gallant Englishman kept a bulldog. Having caught one of his little successors, he ordered him to be a cart and set the dog upon him. "Hite Him, Fido!" he cried, and the astonishing lad ran off at the front door. Up and by he said.

"Darn 'em! You never can tell where to find 'em.

Now Titles are Won.

The sanguinary experience related in the following comes from a Virginia gentleman:

"Here is a good story for Mr. Lincoln," said a secession preacher in this State (Virginia) at beaguering a military title upon a prominent claim to the Presidency. Some time ago I had the following conversation with a little boy, who is a very pretty gentleman, belonging, of course, to the twelve generation of the aristocracy. I saw one of the first families in Virginia. Well, I was talking with him about the battle, and had without such a keen sense of humor that I enjoyed it very much, I laughed because it happened to be at his own expense. I said to him "Johnny, did you see many people killed in the battle?" "Oh! no; I was not in the battle at all. I had business to attend to." "Why, what business?" "Why, I was served in 1812?" "No, sir; that time I was just the age of you." "Well, I was young then." "I suppose, then, you were a colonel of volunteers in the war of 1812?" "No, sir; I never was." "You are strong again, sir. I never was in Mexico." "Oh! I see now that the piping times of peace have spoiled you." "Well, I was in the militia." "Well, I suppose you got the title of colonel?" "Why, that's what I was going to tell you. I was too young to be a colonel or major, or even a captain." "Well, what was you?" "Why, I was a drummer." "Well, I suppose you got your title of major." "Why, I was a little too young to be a major." "Well, what was you?" "Why, I was a fifer." "Well, I suppose you got your title of captain." "No you said before."

"Well, what was you?" "Why, I was a fifer." "Well, I suppose you got your title of colonel." "No, sir, I was a fifer." "Well, what was you?" "Why, I was a fifer." "Well, I suppose you got your title of major." "No, sir, I was a fifer." "Well, what was you?" "Why, I was a fifer." "Well, I suppose you got your title of captain." "No, sir, I was a fifer." "

THE MONITOR.
TWENTY-FIFTH YEAR OF PUBLICATION)
WEDNESDAY, JULY 12, 1882.

PASTORAL LETTER — FROM HIS GRACE —

ARCHBISHOP ALEMANY, O. P.

TO THE CLERGY AND LAITY OF THE DIOCESE OF SAN FRANCISCO:

Dearly Beloved — It is with holy pride and sentiments of gratitude that we look back a hundred years and venerate the arrival on this coast of apostolic men for the first time—men who came from afar off and brought to California the gold it had never yielded to know—the gold of charity, the love of God and man—the treasure of Christianity. The gentile natives looked with admiration at men who had no other business but to do them good, to teach them how to till the land, to build houses, to lay aside what was belonging to them, to love each other like brothers, and to be elevated to the high rank of civilized Christians, until some of their children journeyed to Europe to be educated for the Priesthood in the Colleges of the Propaganda in Rome to come back the first native Priests of California. The consolation or anticipation of the Missionaries blunted the hopes and fair prospects entertained, just when a providential accident attracted large numbers to our mines from almost every part of the world providentially that proved Missionaries same also from various parts of Europe to labor for the spiritual wants of the large heterogeneous population appearing at once in the country. Among these pioneers we owe especial debt of gratitude to the Island of Saints and of Missionaries, the holy land of the Apostles St. Patrick. For ever dating years the diocese of San Francisco has constantly received a fresh supply of young, able and zealous clergy from the Missionary Colleges of Ireland, and not only that diocese, but all California and even the Territory of Utah have been mainly blessed with such ministrations from that apostolic country.

Now, however, the Churches on this coast are knocking daily more numerous. Lately we had the consolation to bless four new ones within five successive Sundays. Hence, it cannot be expected that we can continue to obtain from abroad the necessary supply of Priests. We believe, therefore, that the time has arrived for carrying into effect the holy wishes of the Fathers of Baltimore, who, as early as 1833, in their synodical deliberations, recognized and highly commended by the Holy Father, desired the erection of Seminaries as a work of the utmost importance to the welfare of the Church (Tit.171). And in the first Plenary Council, held in 1852, the Bishops of these Provinces are advised to join with the other Prelates of their respective Province, to establish at least one provincial Seminary, when not having, or not able to have, a special one of their own. Hence, in the last Plenary Council of 1866, the Bishops assembled the following: "Whereas diocesan Seminaries are wanted in almost every Province, we have accepted the proposition of the Most Reverend Prefect of the Holy See, according to the following instruction of the Sacred Congregation of the Propaganda, of Jan. 20, 1865: "All dioceses and vicariates should be used in creating, as soon as it be possible, Seminaries for Seminarists whenever they are yet wanting, in which ecclesiastical students may be educated and trained by Secular Priests." Hereupon Fathers of the Council of 1866 decreed: Inasmuch as the Holy See has found, as it will be observed, on the close examination of the General Council of Trent, which provides that all Cathedral Churches should establish, according to odcasie and instruct in ecclesiastical discipline a certain number of students, in a College, to be selected by the Bishop (Sess. 23, c. 18), and that when poverty prevents, that such Bishop should have his Seminary, the Provincial Council should provide that one should be established for the whole province—(c. 4.) The provisions of the Council of Trent are in perfect harmony with the spirit and practice of the Church from the remotest antiquity. For, as Benedict XIV., writes, Const. 16, Romanis, observes: "From the practice of ancient discipline, any one destined to the ecclesiastical office and holy orders was obliged to be educated in the Seminary of the Bishop, who that might obtain an accurate knowledge of his disposition, conduct, morals and progress." (De Syn. Dioec. L. II., c. 2, n. 3.) In fact, even without quoting the decrees of Councils, or instructions from the See of the Prince of the Apostles, we all can easily understand the paramount importance of providing the Seminary Colleges, for the necessary administration of churches and the welfare of souls. For, if for the ministry of the Altar, even for the military art is learned in military academies, and medical colleges are every where deemed necessary, that young men may acquire in them the science of medicine, with which to overcome or alleviate human life; how much more should we not provide ecclesiastical institutions, to train young levites in the art of all arts, the best of all sciences, the salvation of souls, the redemption of the human mind from error, and of the heart from the spiritual disease tending to its total ruin! "Good and laborious Priests" says the great Pope Benedict XIV., "are not born, but made; and in order that they be made ready, it should be the chief and continuous care of the Bishops." This is particularly applicable to our times, when numberless sects, dividers, scandalizers and errors are distracting the Christian mind, and when indifferentism and passion combine with much encouragement and little or no opposition. Hence we recognize it our chief duty, as the great Pastoral residents us, to provide a nursery of ecclesiastical students, who may devote a certain number of years to obtain the necessary knowledge of philosophy and theology, of ecclesiastical history and Biblical learning, and who may at the same time acquire a more ecclesiastical spirit of piety and self mortification—a true charity and zeal for the salvation of the souls which Christ purchased at the price of His Blood, and, therefore, in order to do our duty to God, and to you, that in union with other Prelates we have undertaken the noble and meritorious work of the Spiritual elements of the Mission of San Jose, where, with the Divine blessing, we expect to lay the corner stone of the contemplated edifice on the third Sunday of the month, the 13th instant. After prudent advice, chiefly from eminent directors of Rome, we have secured the precious services of learned and holy professors to conduct the institution, which we hope to open by next October. We event now in the country many good Christian families blessed with dutiful and religious sons; we are blessed with many Colleges, where numerous young men receive an excellent literary education and thorough Christian spirit; and we hope and pray that some of them will be called by Almighty God to minister at his holy altar, and that they, like young Samuel, will readily answer the call. Finally, we should direct your attention to the fact, that the construction of the large Seminary, and its furnishing and support, will necessarily require an unusual expenditure, and that we should request that the instant annual Seminary collection be also unusually large. The increasing number of churches demands a corresponding large number of Priests; the present case cannot remain ministering all the time; death is thinning the number rather fast; consequently they who value their faith, the ministration of the sacred word of God to them and their children, the receiving of the Holy Sacraments, and especially the comforts of religion when about to depart this life and meet their Judge, should enable or with their generous donations to meet the necessary expenditure of the great work before us. We therefore direct, that the respective Pastors will take up the Annual Collection for the Seminary on any Sunday during this month, having duly exhorted the faithful the Sunday previous.

Your humble and devoted brother in Christ,

✠ JOSEPH SADOC, O.P.,
Arch'bp of San Francisco.

SAN FRANCISCO, July 1, 1882.

A Word of Warning to Catholic Parents.

The highest ambition of a Catholic father or mother ought to be the desire to so mould their children's lives that when they grow up to man's estate they will not become apostates to their faith and thus forfeit their chance for heaven. All Catholic parents should feel the awful responsibility which rests upon them of returning pure and unsullied to Almighty God the innocent souls lent to them, so that heaven may be peopled with saints; and Catholic parents who reflect upon this all-important matter must admit that Catholic education is the best means for the preservation of the purity of their children's morals, as well as the surest means of preserving the faith in their souls as they may be saved hereafter.

Public school education may be good enough for those who do not feel as keenly as Catholic parents do the wonderful trust enunciated by our Blessed Redeemer when he declared the gaining of the whole world did not profit a man anything if, thereby, he lost his own soul. And the loss of Catholic faith in children means the loss of love for parents in this life and the loss of the love of God in the world to come.

Catholic parents who love their children are buoyed up with the hope of meeting their offspring in heaven, but how can this be affected if they are educated without the knowledge of God and by teachers who delight in corrupting the minds of Catholic children and ridiculing the pure waters of their Christian baptism! Let not such parents lay the flattering unction to their souls that they can assuage the anger of God, which they by stoons as to worldly policy, if their children's souls are lost through lack of knowing the truths which their religion teaches. Rather would they sacrifice their worldly pelf by sending them to Catholic schools, than to the public school, when they have Catholic schools as convenient to their residence. Such parents wantonly fly in the face of God by so doing, and if they see their children grow up a curse to them instead of a blessing; if they see them mock at the divine mysteries of their faith and scorn the Sacraments, then, indeed, they will begin to realize the torments of the damned in the despair which will seize their souls at the hour of death.

The Pope commands Catholic parents to send their children to Catholic schools, the Bishops have all exhorted parents to the same end, the Pastors of the several churches in every See in the Union have spoken to the people from God's altar to save their children to the faith of their fathers by means of Catholic schools. Yet there are thousands of parents who think they know more about this all-important matter than either Pope, Prelate or priest, or they rebel against the commands of the Vicar of Christ and thereby bring upon themselves the anger of God and the anathemas of the Church.

The question for such parents to ponder over is this: Will the gratification of their own wills recompense them for the loss of the favor of God and the blessings of heaven gained through the prayers of their children? We can anticipate the answer, which would be decidedly in the negative. Every Catholic parent will admit that no amount of worldly wealth or worldly wisdom can compensate a Catholic for the loss of his faith, and the man or woman who ruins the soul of the child heaven has sent them and place it on the downward plane to hell, is the most unnatural of unnatural parents.

Catholic schools abound everywhere. The Jesuit Fathers and the Christian Brothers stand ready to save your beloved boy and to make him a man whom society and the State may be proud of, and whom God will love for his goodness. The Sisters of the Presentation, of Mercy, of Charity, of Notre Dame, of the Holy Names, of St. Dominic and St. Ursula stand ready, with open arms, to receive your virtuous girls and keep them as pure as angels, as pious as saints, and to return them to your household root fortified in that love of chastity and modesty which was first implanted in the true model for all maidens and mothers—MARY, the Immaculate Mother of God. Will the public school, or the Protestant school, do this? Answer, ye heart-broken fathers and mothers who have tried the experiment at the loss of your son's soul and your daughter's virtue. Answer, now, ye who will have to answer before the throne of God for that son who went to destruction through evil company, and that daughter who fell a victim to the fiend disguised in the shape of a graduate from a godless school. These are the wrecks which line the shores of life to-day, and many a happy home has been blighted, many a Catholic boy driven into wicked ways, simply because the Catholic school did not receive them at an age when they most needed the moral force of virtuous conviction which the Catholic teacher can alone impart.

Take our advice, then, Catholic parents, and patronize your Catholic schools, because, by doing so, you will obey God and love as from the start, and I gave him my mental." The Priest then told him the name of the family. "Yes" cried out the Priest, with trembling, "it was I who was saved from a watery grave. "And I," replied the Priest, with tears in his eyes, "am that poor man whose poor medal delivered from the death of the soul." The sick man shed tears, and said: "My dear Father, I pray you suspend anew from my breast the medal of the Mother of my God. To that this very instant I will go to Confession."

And he did confess, and holy peace was restored to his soul, and it went with that soul a-to the Mercy Seat, where the Father of All-Merciful God. Here is a clear and consoling proof that our sweet Lady of Mercy, the good Mother listens and gives to, even in our last moments, that Jesus whom we had the misfortune to lose by our sins.

SANTA FE, July 5th, 1882.

EDITOR OF THE MONITOR:

Dear Sir—Only yesterday I received the Mon. from of the 21st of June, containing the "Letter of the Holy Father," addressed to the Clergy, where I had an article headed "Poem in New Mexico." I strongly suspect this can be the same Mr. Wade who made a rabid attack on the article in the N. Y. Times under the heading of "Dreamers as Dilettanti." The same fellow, or one, who went round the country in the northern part of the Territory, and wrote a lengthy article against the Jesuits, and the Sisters of Charity, and a number of kicks where they did the most good. This, no doubt, is what he calls "American Spirit and Journalism."

I could not live into that compound of lies as contained in the article "Poem in New Mexico," and I wonder how the Mon. could have given it a place in its very repeat sanctities. They probably have never known that there is a Commandment which says: "Thou shalt not bear false witness against thy neighbor."

WHAT ARE THE FACTS IN NEW MEXICO?

I like among that much abused people, and know not the Poem. It is true, like everywhere else, that the richer part of the population have servants, hired for wages; if that is what he calls "Peons," you find some in New Mexico, as you find them in New York and everywhere.

Let this line come forward, let her know name, and not, like a coward, throw in the dark and hide. Let him come forward and say where and to whom he paid a great price for an abandoned girl, and some forward and declare where he has seen "a possession," sended by a cancelling ticket rapidly fitting a receive (presumably, for the purpose of attracting Heaven's attention to the earth's needs and provocations), by priests and Sisters of Charity, and Christian Brothers, and Christian Ladies, and Christian Gentlemen, and groups of all kinds are abundant and good.

WHERE IS SEATTLE,

A short time ago, I called at the Sisters' hospital and found the new structure fairly under way, when finished it will be among the fine and valuable institutions of that growing and prosperous town. The site is magnificent, and the view from the bay will be grand. The old institution now contains twenty-five patients; the new hospital will accommodate one hundred as soon as the Sister's school in Seattle is also appreciated and growing in the confidence of the people. The Catholics of Seattle are also building a new church, which, when finished, will be the finest in the city. Just think—

THE VERY BAY ARE

The Presbyterian, Congregationalists, Episcopalians, Unitarians, and other denominations, had church property, organized congregations, churches, etc., and the Catholics numbered half, few, without church property, but two-thirds of them the largest congregation, and pay more taxes upon church property, and property, as noted in religious uses, than all the other denominations combined. They have church, school, and hospital, and the good work goes on; a perfect of religion burns and the true faith grows strong. For all other of which, I have, in the article, knowing that he would not permit such a scurrilous scribbler to pass unpublished. We were not disappointed, as our good friend has sent us the following refutation of the calumniating charges against the race of people amidst whom he has labored for years, and against the religion which the Mexican people practiced even long before Protestantism was manufactured in the machiavelia brain of a maudlin monk

JAMES H. DEVOTAY,
Parish Priest of Guadalupe.

A WELCOME LETTER FROM WASHINGTON TERRITORY.

Catholic Matters in the Northwest—Churches, Schools and Hospitals Multiplying Rapid Growth at Catholic Congregations.

OLYMPIA, W. T., June 28, 1882.

EDITOR OF THE MONITOR:

Dear Sir—Catholic news in these parts has been rather meager of late. The Sisters' school, which I have proved a success, it has been well attended since its opening. The final, if any, is, they haven't room enough to accommodate those who wish to attend; the excuse hope for remedy. The school has just closed for a short vacation, and we will miss the Sisters for a while, as they have gone to Vancouver. The little ones are making preparations for their First Communion and Confirmation. Happy will be the day when the Sisters have made friends every where.

OUR CATHOLIC POPULATION

Grows daily, and the outlook for the School ourselves in Seattle, and Washington in general, is grand. Help of all kinds is in demand, especially trained and intelligent help. Our population is increasing rapidly, and the people in most cases are fast being occupied and acquiring value. The weather is exceedingly pleasant, and crops of all kinds are abundant and good.

WHERE IS SEATTLE,

A short time ago, I called at the Sisters' hospital and found the new structure fairly under way, when finished it will be among the fine and valuable institutions of that growing and prosperous town. The site is magnificent, and the view from the bay will be grand. The old institution now contains twenty-five patients; the new hospital will accommodate one hundred as soon as the Sister's school in Seattle is also appreciated and growing in the confidence of the people. The Catholics of Seattle are also building a new church, which, when finished, will be the finest in the city. Just think—

THE VERY BAY ARE

The Presbyterian, Congregationalists, Episcopalians, Unitarians, and other denominations, had church property, organized congregations, churches, etc., and the Catholics numbered half, few, without church property, but two-thirds of them the largest congregation, and pay more taxes upon church property, and property, as noted in religious uses, than all the other denominations combined. They have church, school, and hospital, and the good work goes on; a perfect of religion burns and the true faith grows strong. For all other of which, I have, in the article, knowing that he would not permit such a scurrilous scribbler to pass unpublished. We were not disappointed, as our good friend has sent us the following refutation of the calumniating charges against the race of people amidst whom he has labored for years, and against the religion which the Mexican people practiced even long before Protestantism was manufactured in the machiavelia brain of a maudlin monk

JAMES H. DEVOTAY,
Parish Priest of Guadalupe.

A WELCOME LETTER FROM WASHINGTON TERRITORY.

Catholic Matters in the Northwest—Churches, Schools and Hospitals Multiplying Rapid Growth at Catholic Congregations.

OLYMPIA, W. T., June 28, 1882.

EDITOR OF THE MONITOR:

Dear Sir—Catholic news in these parts has been rather meager of late. The Sisters' school, which I have proved a success, it has been well attended since its opening. The final, if any, is, they haven't room enough to accommodate those who wish to attend; the excuse hope for remedy. The school has just closed for a short vacation, and we will miss the Sisters for a while, as they have gone to Vancouver. The little ones are making preparations for their First Communion and Confirmation. Happy will be the day when the Sisters have made friends every where.

OUR CATHOLIC POPULATION

Grows daily, and the outlook for the School ourselves in Seattle, and Washington in general, is grand. Help of all kinds is in demand, especially trained and intelligent help. Our population is increasing rapidly, and the people in most cases are fast being occupied and acquiring value. The weather is exceedingly pleasant, and crops of all kinds are abundant and good.

WHERE IS SEATTLE,

A short time ago, I called at the Sisters' hospital and found the new structure fairly under way, when finished it will be among the fine and valuable institutions of that growing and prosperous town. The site is magnificent, and the view from the bay will be grand. The old institution now contains twenty-five patients; the new hos-

Correspondence.

LETTER FROM NEW MEXICO.

How Calumnies Are Connected Against the Catholic Church. A Priest Replies to the Slander of the N. Y. "Sun" and S. F. "Chronicle."

Last month we found in the columns of the Chronicle, of this city, a letter copied from the New York Sun, in which the writer gave vent to some of the worst calumnies we ever saw in print regarding the priests and the people of New Mexico. We at once determined to test the truth of the allegations of the slandering scribe, and, having an old acquaintance among the priests of New Mexico, we forwarded to them the article, knowing that he would not permit such a scurrilous scribbler to pass unpublished. We were not disappointed, as our good friend has sent us the following refutation of the calumniating charges against the race of people amidst whom he has labored for years, and against the religion which the Mexican people practiced even long before Protestantism was manufactured in the machiavelia brain of a maudlin monk

SANTA FE, July 5th, 1882.

EDITOR OF THE MONITOR:

Dear Sir—Only yesterday I received the Mon. from of the 21st of June, containing the "Letter of the Holy Father," addressed to the Clergy, where I had an article headed "Poem in New Mexico." I strongly suspect this can be the same Mr. Wade who made a rabid attack on the article in the N. Y. Times under the heading of "Dreamers as Dilettanti." The same fellow, or one, who went round the country in the northern part of the Territory, and wrote a lengthy article against the Jesuits, and the Sisters of Charity, and a number of kicks where they did the most good. This, no doubt, is what he calls "American Spirit and Journalism."

I could not live into that compound of lies as contained in the article "Poem in New Mexico," and I wonder how the Mon. could have given it a place in its very repeat sanctities. They probably have never known that there is a Commandment which says: "Thou shalt not bear false witness against thy neighbor."

WHAT ARE THE FACTS IN NEW MEXICO?

I like among that much abused people, and know not the Poem. It is true, like everywhere else, that the richer part of the population have servants, hired for wages; if that is what he calls "Peons," you find some in New Mexico, as you find them in New York and everywhere.

Let this line come forward, let her know name, and not, like a coward, throw in the dark and hide. Let him come forward and say where and to whom he paid a great price for an abandoned girl, and some forward and declare where he has seen "a possession," sended by a cancelling ticket rapidly fitting a receive (presumably, for the purpose of attracting Heaven's attention to the earth's needs and provocations), by priests and Sisters of Charity, and Christian Brothers, and Christian Ladies, and Christian Gentlemen, and groups of all kinds are abundant and good.

WHERE IS SEATTLE,

A short time ago, I called at the Sisters' hospital and found the new structure fairly under way, when finished it will be among the fine and valuable institutions of that growing and prosperous town. The site is magnificent, and the view from the bay will be grand. The old institution now contains twenty-five patients; the new hos-

DEVOTION TO THE BLESSED VIRGIN.

TREASURE OF MARY—THIRD DOLLOR CONTINUED.

(Translated for the Monitor from the French "La Vierge.")

Since God he's impose! His Sovereign will on the Mother of His Son, we should, weak creatures that we are, instead of seeking to oppose Her, we should submit ourselves to His presence and adore Him. Still, as the motive which upon us to have decreed, "Let us make Him a helper like unto Himself" permitted us, we can, in a manner, be Her helper. By this third Dolor, God willed, as far as it was possible, that Mary should be comprehend all the misery of sinners. It was necessary that the Redeemer should be the Mercy and the sanctuary of compassion to such an extent that the complacence of God could scarcely be equal to the compassion. The victims given over to His justice, but, in order that pity should be impressed, so to speak, on her heart, in inefficable characters, the Redeemer willed to suffer the unfortunate sin. But how could that be since Mary is immaculate, since she is the stainless and unsullied Virgin?

THAT PROBLEM THE DOLOR

that produced Mary, in bring nothing else than the loss of Jesus, Mary will know what will be the sorrow of sin, and will understand what one is by feeling in all its immensity. Hence, Hereafter, if Calvary is to be for her the memorial of the sorrows of her Son, Calvary will be for sinners by the grief which the loss of Jesus made her suffer for three days. What salutary lessons will we draw from these meditations! We will learn in the first place, that the loss of Jesus by sin is the greatest of all evils; add to it eternity, and you will have hell. Nothing is less frequent and common is not this misfortune! Jesus, Mary, and Joseph, alone, are the only capable of experiencing spiritual consolation, or of giving joy, after having contained such a loss! On the contrary, after the triumph of Mary and Joseph, should not that soul be most anxious to go in search of Jesus, to look for Him in joy and grief, to seek Him with perseverance and without rest until she shall have found Him! If most afflicted heart of Mary, then, we are in a small degree, these unfortunate souls partake of your third sorrow, in order that they may seek Him whom they have lost, that they may make a robust relaxation for Him until they shall have found Him. Another lesson contained in is the comforting truth: the mercy of the Mother of God towards sinners is as immense as the abyss of the blind Dolor, and therefore our nothing is lost to her, and ought to be so to herself when we ask for the conversion of a sinner. This point is most important, and we cannot insist too strongly on it. Hence, in order to be a crown in to this confidence, this sentiment so profound, so efficacious, the blessed source of graces and of salvation, we will relate here an example that it will calculated to fix our attention on this great truth. It is a fact that was published some time ago in the Journal of the Missions.

THIS SORROW OF MARY

"A man fell dangerously sick and was brought to the hospital. The Priest who visited him was shocked to see the unfortunate man had walked in the ways of crime and infidelity. He tried then, by all the means that his soul could suggest to win him back to repentance; but all his efforts were in vain. The good Priest was nothing desisted at seeing his first attempts fail, but said to him: "Do you not wish to confide in the Queen of Heaven, the Mother of Mercy, and in the Sanctuary of this confidence, will you not permit me to place upon you the medal of the Immaculate Mary?" The sinner shook his head and said: "Of what avail is that, Father? Do then on the Saints help me?" Still, he did not refuse the medal. "Ah, well," replied the minister of God, "let me relate to you

A SHORT STORY—

It is most true. About eighteen years ago, a young man saved, at the peril of his own life, a child who was on the point of being drowned. The grateful parents lauded the savior of their child with magnificent presents; the child himself offered what he held most dear—a medal of the Mother of God, which he had always worn on his neck. The young man, innocent, pious and angelic look of the child, deeply touched him who had just escaped his life. Up to that moment he had unfortunately glided into upon also, but from that moment he entered into himself, and he became another man for the grace of God. The sick man heard all this with astonishment, and all at once interrupted the Priest, saying: "Stop a moment, Reverend Father, I, in all sixteen years ago since I had the accident of which you speak; it was at 2——, a young man from the water, and I gave him my medal." The Priest then told him the name of the family. "Yes" cried out the sick man, trembingly, "it was I who was saved from a watery grave. "And I," replied the Priest, with tears in his eyes, "am that poor man whose poor medal delivered from the death of the soul." The sick man shed tears, and said: "My dear Father, I pray you suspend anew from my breast the medal of the Mother of my God. To that this very instant I will go to Confession."

And he did confess, and holy peace was restored to his soul, and it went with that soul a-to the Mercy Seat, where the Father of All-Merciful God. Here is a clear and consoling proof that our sweet Lady of Mercy, the good Mother listens and gives to, even in our last moments, that Jesus whom we had the misfortune to lose by our sins.

BRIDES OF CHRIST.

Beautiful Ceremony of Taking the Veil in the Sisters of Mercy and the Presentation Orders.

The beautiful chapel attached to St. Mary's Hospital presented on Thursday last a lively scene as the sunny rays streaming through the large congregation assembled to witness the impressive ceremony of taking the veil by the several novices of the Order of Mercy who had fully determined to give up the world and to devote their lives to the service of God by the practice of works of charity and mercy. The ceremony of receiving the veil is familiar to many readers of the Monitor, but it is necessary to say that the recipients of this great badge of a bride of Christ are not consecrated to religious life who were residents of this city and Oakland, viz: Miss Mary Dunn, in religion Sister Mary Dolores; Miss Mary O'Brien, in religion Sister Mary Bernard; and Miss Helena Hogan, in religion Sister Mary Amata. The ceremony was witnessed by a large number of relatives, friends and acquaintances among the invited to witness the edifying ceremony, and all the conducted by excited the congratulations of parents and friends who gave their thanks that He had found them worthy of so a sublime dignity of esteem, so His service and sanctifying their lives by the holiest vocation that can adorn the love of the Christian heart.

A ceremony of kindred character took place last week in the Presentation Convent, Sacramento, where—after the cruel many two years' duration of wearing the white—Miss Miss Ellen Conway received the veil of Sister Mary Stanislaus, had the happiness of making her final vows and achieving the blessed consummation of her desires in the Presentation Order. Very Rev. J. Prendergast officiated on the occasion and delivered a very appropriate discourse upon the duties and obligations of the ceremonies a very pleasant reunion took place among the many friends of the young lady novice.

THE LATE ROBERT SHERRY.

Resolutions Passed by the Council of the Land League.

NEW YORK, July 6.—The Council of Seven appointed by the Chicago Convention, the Land League Executive, and Dublin, convened in the Home Executive, met to-day in conference, and it is stated:

Resolved, That the Executive of the Irish National Land League of Ireland be requested to delegate Parnell and others of their number to proceed to Ireland at once to take the proper steps of perfecting a union or confederation of the Irish Land League of America with that of Ireland, in their struggle for freedom of the land, and for self-government.

Resolved, As Ireland is now passing through a crisis which strains to the utmost the general and particular sympathy of the Irish people, and calls upon them to rally to the end their great energies, and to concentrate their efforts in their several organizations, we therefore recommend to the Irish people in the Irish people to fight to the end their great cause.

The Conference thanked, Parnell for his efforts in America, and Parnell left with the Committee this evening suggestions for the formation of an Irish-American Federal Union, which will visit July 15th for France, where he will attend the Land League Congress, and report upon the adjournment of the British Parliament.

"LEISURE HOURS."

This is the title of a new Department which we have added to the Monitor this week, where will be found a variety of Stories, Sketches and popular Articles to amuse and interest those among our readers who are fond of that particular fancy. This Department will be supplied by our lady contributors whose taste and experience will qualifies him for the task and we trust that our Catholic youth will assist him by contributing so as to make this column interesting. We will give prizes at Christmas to those who contribute most frequently and also to those who guess the greatest number of puzzles.

— Five hundred fresh planets, offering twenty thousand pounds reward for the discovery of the Mayor of Shrewsbury and Birks have been posted in Ireland.

FATHER JANIPERO SERRA.

Searching for His Grave—A Visit to the Mission of San Carlos—The Tomb of the First Missionary.

[FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.]

MONTEREY, Cal., July 5th, 1882.

EDITOR OF THE MONITOR:

Dear Sir—In this great national holiday, when all seemed to be in the sound of rejoicing, I think I cannot contribute more to the interest of the occasion than by giving you an account of a very important historical investigation which was made here yesterday with the view of ascertaining the burial place of the apostolic Franciscan, founder of the missions of Upper California, whose apostolic labors in this land already entitles him to a prominent place in the history of the Catholic Church on the Pacific Coast. All readers of history are aware of the fact that the Franciscan Fathers were the successors of the Jesuits in the good work of propagating the faith among the Indian tribes on the California portion of this coast, and this work they carried on with a zeal which marked their labors as truly apostolic, hence I appoint a short sketch of the life of this great missionary. Father Junipero was a native of Majorca, where he was born November 24th, 1731. He subsequently became Doctor of Divinity in his native Moor, but having learned that there were thousands of souls to be saved on this coast, he gave up his chair of divinity in order to devote his whole energies to the propagation of the true faith among the Indians of California.

FATHER JUNIPERO SERRA

ON THE 19TH OF AUGUST, 1769, he sailed from San Diego, in company with twenty other Missionaries of the Order of St. Francis, and, after a long and tedious voyage, he landed at Monterey, where he first planted the cross, the first ever seen in the city of Monterey—a descendant of some fifteen hundred miles—where he subsequently made his home.

The recital of Father Serra's labors in found in the numerous annals of the order, and, in this letter, so I will refer to the last hours of this saintly missionary whose death in time recalled to the Monterey people the loss of a father, and a great benefactor. He died at the place and in charge of Father Crespi, the Sister of the mission church of St. Charles Borromeo.

LAST HOURS OF FATHER SERRA.

Are interesting the principal events in the life of the Superior of the Franciscans, the Record states that Father Serra died a most exemplary death, fortified by all the sacraments of the Church, and surrounded by his companions in Order. He finally went to his reward on the feast of St. Augustine, Doctor of the Church, on the 28th day of August, 1784, and that his funeral obsequies took place on Monday, the Franciscan Fathers and Don Christoval Ala, Governor of the province, being present, and achieved in Monterey Bay. His remains were buried in the church of San Carlos del Carmelo, in the chapel side, under the altar of our Lady of Dolors, with all the functions prescribed by the Ritual.

The mission church wherein the remains of a great missionary repose gradually fell into decay, and, when the Spanish rule ceased, it was in a rude publish accumulated over the spot where Father Serra lay buried so that it was impossible to discover the place, and every attempt was made for that purpose in 1853.

THE SEARCH WAS ATTEMPTED to be made here yesterday in the presence of many citizens and the corps of the St. Patrick's Guards of San Francisco, who accompanied the remains of Father Junipero Lopez who died in San Jose, and, Father Junipero Serra, the Bishop of Monterey, Rev. Father Kelly, Rev. Father Lopez who died in San Jose, and

Farm and Home.

Bran Beds for the Babies.

A French doctor has invented a new bed for babies which holds them safe in the body and prevents them from ever giving any trouble at night to their attendants. The gentleman has subjected his system to the most trying of all tests, for he has applied it to all his own children, and considers that the life of one of them is entirely owing to its use. The idea is to fill the greater part of the cradle with bran and immerse the legs and part of the body of the child in this novel, covering them over for the usual way, but fastening down the non-napping parts of the cradle so that the bran cannot escape. Why this change of tactics should have the effect of taking away from the infant his usual desire to howl during a part of every night is a question which we will have rather to explain for themselves after they have tried the system. In the meantime, until that trial has been made it is only civil to believe the testimony of Drs. Bourgeois and Vigouroux, who in two French papers of some authority declare that such is the invariable result. This is not, however, the only advantage to be expected from the system. The bran is supposed to have a warming and stimulating influence similar to any kind of cotton or cloth, and to allow children of the more sickly kind to be nursed without taking off the bedclothes, which is the usual thing. They are thus kept in their bran beds, and always 'quit them with regret,' when removed at the age of five, to one of a different kind.

A Pleasant Experiment with Salt.

Do you want to grow salt, and at the same time have an interesting, handsome ornament? The proceeding is a novel chemical experiment that may be tried by any one. Put in a goblet one teaspoonful of salt and one spoonful of bluing; fill the goblet two-thirds full of water and set it in a position where it will have plenty of warmth and sunlight. In a little while sparkling crystals will commence forming on the outside of the glass, and it is both novel and interesting sight to watch it gradually growing day by day until the outside of the goblet is entirely covered with a beautiful white crystals. Another variation of this beautiful experiment would be to take a goblet with the base broken off and fasten it in the center of a thin piece of board, which may be round, square or oblong. After crystals have formed on the board, set it on a tray and bracket it in place. A bright holiday or birthday card in front of it; this will hide the base, on which no crystals will have formed. After this is done fill the goblet with flowers or dried grasses, and you will have a vase which will be comparatively little, and in reality adds to the beauty of the room.

How Food is Turned into Blood.

Dr. Dio Lewis thus discusses the nonplussed question of by which food is turned into blood:

"To make the process of digestion simple, let us say that it begins in the mouth and ends in the lungs. A man swallows a mouthful of bread. We follow it down his stomach down through the esophagus to his stomach. It now, by a peculiar motion of the muscles of the stomach, is moved about in the stomach, and, as it tumbles here and there in the stomach, and is thus kneaded, opens the forehead, and enters the blood.

"After a couple of hours of revolving about within the stomach, the bread is changed into something that looks like butter-milk. This is chyme. Now, the gate at the right end of the stomach opens and the chyme, little by little, passes through the first part of the intestine. There two new liquids are added to it, one from the liver—the bile, the other from the pancreas—the pancreatic juice. These liquids cause a marvelous change in the liquid bread which make it resemble milk. How it is known so chyle, the chyme is now called, which—open within the intestine, such up this milk or chyle, carrying it to a small canal—the thoracic duct which lies upon the backbone, and through it runs up to the upper part of the chest and is there joined to a vein just under the left collar bone. Through this vein it runs up to the heart, and is then forced into the lungs, where it comes in contact with the air, and a wonderful change comes over it. This is produced by the addition of oxygen to the milk like fluid. For a given quantity of the chyle a still larger quantity of oxygen is added, and the compound which results is the substance from the blood and the oxygen is the nutriment which supplies the waste of the system. What takes place in the lungs is more important than anything that precedes it, in the process of the blood.

"For example, a man may live upon fried salt pork, hot cornbread and molasses, yet (I don't know of a worse diet), if he lives on the Western plains and breathes pure air, he will have a purer blood a finer, healthier skin, and will be freer from humors than any other man who lives upon the choicest grains and fruits, but who constantly breathes the air of a close, furnace-heated room. In other words, we may truly say, that, in considering the great function of digestion, the lungs really play a more important part than the stomach itself.

"It is really vital that the first and last chapter of digestion should be well done. Blood—they will not last, breathe well. If we fail."

Hints To Housekeepers.

BEAN FOR BREAKFAST.—A appetizing way to serve eggs for breakfast is to mellow them. Boil them hard, chop them not too fine. Line a pudding dish with a layer of cream, then a layer of cold boiled bacon, or bits of fried ham chopped fine, then a layer of eggs; and so on until the dish is full. Season with cream and a little butter, season with pepper and salt, set in a hot oven for ten minutes, or longer. When thoroughly heated take out and send to the table in the dish, or a portion of buttered toast. Pour a little boiling water over the toast after it is buttered.

LEMON MARMALADE.—Best the yolks of three eggs and mix with them half a pint of milk; slip slices of bread into the mixture, then try them a delicate brown in boiling butter. Take the whites of the eggs, beat them to a froth, add to them three ounces of white sugar and the juice of a small lemon. Strain in a small saucepan of boiling water, and serve as a sauce over the toast.

SCALLOPED POTATOES.—Scallloped potatoes make a nice dish for tea. Prepare in this proportion: Two cups of mashed potatoes, two tablespoonfuls of cream or milk, and one of melted butter; salt and pepper to taste. Slice the potatoes, butter, and cream together, adding one raw egg. If the potatoes seem too moist, heat in a few fine bread crumbs. Bake in a hot oven for ten minutes, taking care to have the top a rich brown.

AN OPEN LETTER.

Some Outspoken Statements of Great Value from Patrons of the Highest Standing.

When the people of America become so thoroughly aroused, and on a subject of such serious importance as the preservation of their lives and health, it is but natural that the ones who have been largely instrumental in the origin of this movement should speak frankly and directly to the people most interested. It is for this reason that we thus come before the public and make the following revelations:

Every careful observer who has sought to keep pace with the march of events has noted the alarming increase of certain peculiar physical troubles within the past few years. These troubles have come at unexpected moments and in a most treacherous way. They have manifested themselves in innumerable forms, but they have always had the same cause. They have not afflicted the minor parts of the body, but have gone direct to the strongholds of the system and their work has usually been as prompt as it is fatal. Their treacherous and deceptive nature has often prevented a careful analysis of what means them, and, as a result, intense suffering and final disaster have usually ensued. The real cause, however, has been a derangement of the kidneys, and all of these troubles are, in fact, the first symptoms of the terrible Bright's disease, which has crept upon the dark shadow over so many homes in the land and is increasing wonderfully year by year. The fatality of this disease is greater than that of any other one disease in the world ever, that this disease is the result of blood poisoning. This poisoning is brought about by wasted and unhealthy kidneys that permit the poison to remain in the blood, instead of throwing it from the system. But it is equally evident to all who have studied into the effects and have become conversant with the facts, that if the kidneys are strong and healthy they will not be affected by Bright's disease. To purify a stream we must go to its source, and to cure a disease we must remove its cause. It being true, therefore, that nine-tenths of all human ailments are caused by disorder of the kidneys or liver, the only certain way to cure these troubles is by treating the organs which cause them. How intimately the kidneys are associated with the entire system may be understood from the fact that over 1,000 ounces of blood pass through them every hour, being more than 200 gallons, or nearly one ton in the course of twenty-four hours. This vast mass of living fluid is sent to every part of the body, and if the kidneys are diseased the impurities that are in the blood are not removed, and hence pass through the veins, carrying disease in some one of its many terrible forms. The horror which accompanies a diseased condition of the vital organs, the kidneys and liver cannot be described in print, while the dangers surrounding them are even greater than the agony. And yet a person may be troubled for months without knowing the cause of the disease that has attacked him. Some of the symptoms of the first stages, any one of which indicates disordered kidneys or liver are these: Pains in the back and around the loins, severe headaches, dizziness, disturbed eyes, a coated tongue and a dry mouth, loss of appetite, sallow complexion, indigestion (the stomach never is in order when the kidneys or liver are deranged), a dryness of the skin, nervousness, night sweats, muscular debility, despondency, a tired feeling constantly at night, pulling or bearing in the back, and a dull, heavy pain in the region of the kidneys, or, in other words, the entire system is in a most troublesome condition. The urine may be in color almost any shade of the rainbow, and may be thick and ropy, or it may be thin and watery, or it may be of a high color, and have a sediment or a fine sediment, or it may be in the shape of a mucous, or it may contain small particles of matter. Bright's Disease, Diabetes, Gravel, Stone in the Bladder, Dropsy, Swelling of the Limbs, Suppressed Urine, Retention of Urine, Frequent Urination, Inflammation of the Bladder,

THE DEMOCRACY.

ROUSING RATIFICATION MEETING ON SATURDAY NIGHT.

Speeches of Several of the Candidates.

Great Enthusiasm and General Rejoicing.

The booming of guns on Saturday night last attracted an immense throng of Democrats to Union Hall to join the great ratification meeting. The hall itself was beautifully decorated with red, white and blue streamers hung from the centre of the ceiling to the balconies and stage, and again from the balconies to the chandeliers. Along the balcony front were looped-colors, the arches being tastefully set off with banners, shields and fans, while from the ceilings hung Japanese parasols, evergreen baskets, colored globes, flags and banners. By the glare of the burning bonfires, with the colored banners and transparencies overhead, and to the strains of martial music, big Democratic Clubs began to march in from the outlying districts, and as they neared its from surrounding streets, they were greeted with hearty cheers, which continued as they filed into the hall. Rousing applause was given when a transparency was placed on the stage bearing the inscription: "Hon. Isaac Kowalski, Mr. Stoneman, The People's Choice. Democratic Club No. 48, Western Addition."

Gen. Stoneman, James A. Johnson and the Vice-Presidents were escorted to the platform to strains from a band of music and could the deafening cheers and applause of the vast assembly. The meeting was first obtained John H. Wise, member of the Democratic State Central Committee, called the meeting to order.

Mr. Johnson announced as the Secretaries of the evening Mr. G. Maley, of the State Central Committee, and J. T. Forgerty, of the 10th Ward.

OPENING THE MEETING.

J. H. Wise, in calling the meeting to order, said: It is my pleasing duty, as the Chairman of the State Central Committee, to organize this meeting for the purpose of ratifying the nominations made by the Democratic Convention which assembled at Ione on June 20th to give you a platform in the interests of the Democratic Party and of the people, a platform which is non-monopoly and against sumptuary law. It has been the part of the Democratic Party, whenever a great question comes up, to take sides in the interests of the people; and you can get your rights under any other banner except that of the Democratic Party. (Applause). We have, in our nominations, selected men who really are in advance of the platform; men who, if elected, will carry out the wishes of the people. For the purpose I am here to organize this meeting and to introduce to you a gentleman who belongs to the Democratic Party; a gentleman who has never faltered in his duty—the Hon. J. A. Johnson—as the President of this meeting.

GOVERNOR JOHNSON'S REMARKS.

Mr. Johnson, who was received with a great demonstration of applause, said: Gentlemen, I am extremely thankful for the honor conferred upon me by the gentlemen who have called me to assume this meeting by calling upon me to preside. I did not know till I had actually taken the hall that this great honor was in reserve for me. Yet I am nevertheless somewhat flattered in prashed to me to make the opening address in organizing this meeting. We have assembled here for the purpose of ratifying the platform and ticket, elected by the Chairman of the State Central Committee, prior to the meeting of the San Jose Convention. Now I am do my duty, so far as I can, in the position I occupy, and I am pointed by simply saying that I most heartily endorse the entire ticket from head to tail. (Applause).

The Secretary then read letters from Messrs. Gibson, Cox, Cornelius, G. J. Carpenter, W. P. Humphreys, Wm. Irwin and others, fully endorsing the platform and presidential nominees for the ensuing term of the Democratic Party for the year next November. The Chairman then introduced Gen. Stoneman, whose nomination for Governor, which was made at some length, and whose remarks were very enthusiastically received.

JOHN DAGGETT.

John Daggett, candidate for Lieutenant-Governor, when introduced, after paying a few words of praise to General Stoneman, said: It is no disparagement to the men who met and proposed General Stoneman at San Jose, to speak in these high terms of him. His opponents are his strongest admirers, because he is honest. You are all familiar with the platform adopted at San Jose. It is a platform of anti-monopoly and anti-Chinese platform. He then referred to the fight which he had engaged in before the Legislature, and received the applause of the audience by recounting the manner in which the Democrats had defeated that measure in the State Legislature, despite the pressure of an extra session brought to bear in favor of the Johnson bill.

W. W. FOOTE.

W. W. Foote, of Alameda, nominee for Railroad Commissioner for the Third District, John R. Glascock, candidate for County Jud. C. Shortall, and E. C. Marshall, candidate for Attorney-General, next evoked great enthusiasm by delivering stirring speeches which were

HON. CHARLES SUMNER,

[illegible] Congressman, who had served long and faithfully, and Congressman Cowd Hayes and a gang of their followers went to San Jose purposely to prevent his nomination, still he was elected. He did not propose to use language bitter or soft soap in speaking of the Central Pacific Railroad monopoly. It is time that some one who had never set his moustache with the soap and champagne lathed on Nob Hill went to Congress. He (Sumner) and I'm going there. I will put into the law of the land that which will make it possible for me to go to New York for $60, instead of $1200 to go across the bay for five cents, instead of fifteen.

At the conclusion of Mr. Sumner's address the audience dispersed with three cheers for General Stoneman.

During the evening the utmost order was maintained, and the hearty reception that greeted the speakers, and letters from absent candidates and endorsers of the platform and nominees, evidenced the unanimity of the Democrats in the third of the platform, not a dissenting voice being heard, but, on the contrary, hearty and frequent applause, in the spirit of the sentiments expressed by the speakers.

—Persons who purchase promises for family use, or in large quantities for the use of a club, should be careful to see that the second page of the monthly prize list of Bancroft & Co. contains a full description of the beauty and the feeling during the ninety days' period they will present in the prize-holder. Their prize book is a work of art, the text, which good sense, high, elevated and patriotic sentiment, is what attracts the attention of the reader.

THE WEEK'S NEWS

—FROM—

IRELAND.

A PARLIAMENTARY SQUABBLE.

The Repression Bill in the Commons—General News.

LONDON, July 7.—In the Commons this afternoon, during the debate on the reported Repression bill, Gladstone and the Government had take sneerings, sneers and sneers to Parliament, to urge action against secret societies.

Previous to the vote John Bright said that if the amendment was rejected the people throughout Ireland would feel that at any moment their homes could be invaded. The Irish members, unfortunately, were absent, in the full confidence that the Government would redeem its pledge. If the House was determined to make the law more severe than the Government desired, the result would be injurious to Ireland.

Sir Michael Hicks Beach accused the Government of having two policies in the Cabinet, which accusation Bright denied.

Gladstone said that, while he was reluctant to oppose the Government, he did not feel convinced by the arguments in favor of Trevelyn's amendment.

W. O. Forster said he should support the Government, as he believed the proposed amendment would satisfy the well-considered opinions of the Irish Government. When the Speaker was announced Gladstone and his colleagues were accompanied by several Irish members, and the announcement was received with a transparency was placed on the stage bearing the inscription: "Hon. Isaac Kowalski, Mr. Stoneman, The People's Choice. Democratic Club No. 48, Western Addition."

Gen. Stoneman, James A. Johnson and the Vice-Presidents were escorted to the platform to strains from a band of music and could the deafening cheers and applause of the vast assembly. The meeting was first obtained John H. Wise, member of the Democratic State Central Committee, called the meeting to order.

Mr. Johnson announced as the Secretaries of the evening Mr. G. Maley, of the State Central Committee, and J. T. Forgerty, of the 10th Ward.

OPENING THE MEETING.

J. H. Wise, in calling the meeting to order, said: It is my pleasing duty, as the Chairman of the State Central Committee, to organize this meeting for the purpose of ratifying the nominations made by the Democratic Convention which assembled at Ione on June 20th to give you a platform in the interests of the Democratic Party and of the people, a platform which is non-monopoly and against sumptuary law. It has been the part of the Democratic Party, whenever a great question comes up, to take sides in the interests of the people; and you can't get your rights under any other banner except that of the Democratic Party. (Applause). We have, in our nominations, selected men who really are in advance of the platform; men who, if elected, will carry out the wishes of the people. For the purpose I am here to organize this meeting and to introduce to you a gentleman who belongs to the Democratic Party; a gentleman who has never faltered in his duty—the Hon. J. A. Johnson—as the President of this meeting.

GOVERNOR JOHNSON'S REMARKS.

Mr. Johnson, who was received with a great demonstration of applause, said: Gentlemen, I am extremely thankful for the honor conferred upon me by the gentlemen who have called me to assume this meeting by calling upon me to preside. I did not know till I had actually taken the hall that this great honor was in reserve for me. Yet I am nevertheless somewhat flattered in prashed to me to make the opening address in organizing this meeting. We have assembled here for the purpose of ratifying the platform and ticket, elected by the Chairman of the State Central Committee, prior to the meeting of the San Jose Convention. Now I am do my duty, so far as I can, in the position I occupy, and I am pointed by simply saying that I most heartily endorse the entire ticket from head to tail. (Applause).

The Secretary then read letters from Messrs. Gibson, Cox, Cornelius, G. J. Carpenter, W. P. Humphreys, Wm. Irwin and others, fully endorsing the platform and presidential nominees for the ensuing term of the Democratic Party for the year next November. The Chairman then introduced Gen. Stoneman, whose nomination for Governor, which was made at some length, and whose remarks were very enthusiastically received.

JOHN DAGGETT.

John Daggett, candidate for Lieutenant-Governor, when introduced, after paying a few words of praise to General Stoneman, said: It is no disparagement to the men who met and proposed General Stoneman at San Jose, to speak in these high terms of him. His opponents are his strongest admirers, because he is honest. You are all familiar with the platform adopted at San Jose. It is a platform of anti-monopoly and anti-Chinese platform. He then referred to the fight which he had engaged in before the Legislature, and received the applause of the audience by recounting the manner in which the Democrats had defeated that measure in the State Legislature, despite the pressure of an extra session brought to bear in favor of the Johnson bill.

W. W. FOOTE.

W. W. Foote, of Alameda, nominee for Railroad Commissioner for the Third District, John R. Glascock, candidate for County Jud. C. Shortall, and E. C. Marshall, candidate for Attorney-General, next evoked great enthusiasm by delivering stirring speeches which were

HON. CHARLES SUMNER,

[illegible] Congressman, who had served long and faithfully, and Congressman Cowd Hayes and a gang of their followers went to San Jose purposely to prevent his nomination, still he was elected. He did not propose to use language bitter or soft soap in speaking of the Central Pacific Railroad monopoly. It is time that some one who had never set his moustache with the soap and champagne lathed on Nob Hill went to Congress. He (Sumner) and I'm going there. I will put into the law of the land that which will make it possible for me to go to New York for $60, instead of $1200 to go across the bay for five cents, instead of fifteen.

At the conclusion of Mr. Sumner's address the audience dispersed with three cheers for General Stoneman.

During the evening the utmost order was maintained, and the hearty reception that greeted the speakers, and letters from absent candidates and endorsers of the platform and nominees, evidenced the unanimity of the Democrats in the third of the platform, not a dissenting voice being heard, but, on the contrary, hearty and frequent applause, in the spirit of the sentiments expressed by the speakers.

—Persons who purchase promises for family use, or in large quantities for the use of a club, should be careful to see that the second page of the monthly prize list of Bancroft & Co. contains a full description of the beauty and the feeling during the ninety days' period they will present in the prize-holder. Their prize book is a work of art, the text, which good sense, high, elevated and patriotic sentiment, is what attracts the attention of the reader.

—Persons who purchase promises for family use, or in large quantities for the use of a club, should be careful to see that the second page of the monthly prize list of Bancroft & Co. contains a full description of the beauty and the feeling during the ninety days' period they will present in the prize-holder. Their prize book is a work of art, the text, which good sense, high, elevated and patriotic sentiment, is what attracts the attention of the reader.

DAVITT IN NEW YORK.

He Addresses a Great Open-Air Mass Meeting.

NEW YORK, July 8.—At a meeting of the Davitt Land League, which Davitt attended before the opening of the regular meeting, the following sentiment from Paris:

Kindly report to Davitt that Parnell, Dillon and others propose to organize committees through Ireland to raise funds to support the evicted and fight evictions. The committee's headquarters will be permanent, and will be called the Land League funds. Anxious for your approval; time pressing. Cable reply.

(Signed) EGAN.

Davitt said this telegram proved Parnell did not think he would cause a split in the party.

Nevertheless, the meeting passed by fully twenty the second people gathered in Union square, opposite the City Hall, and was opened by the member of the Irish National Land League, who read a letter from Davitt, congratulating the Irish and American Land Leagues on their determination to assist the patriots evicted under the Coercion bill, and to see that they were provided with long and hard against the Land Bill, which, he said, he had not welcomed. Their banners bore legends such as "Down with Landlords and Bailiffs," "Down with Land." At 9 o'clock Davitt arrived on the platform from the Church of the Holy Innocents, where he had been addressing a Land League meeting. Jeremiah Murphy, President of the Freight Handlers' Union, stepping to the front of the platform, announced that the meeting was open, and nominated Robert Blissert for Chairman. A Michigan land reformer, who came from the Labor Club in Davitt.

Davitt in the course of his speech said there was one sentiment in the address which gave him great pleasure, it was that the Irish Land Leaguers were fighting the cause of labor and monopoly throughout the world. The land war in Ireland, he said, can be justly called a labor movement. It is an uprising of the laborers of Ireland against the labor system of a monopoly that has confiscated the fruits of labor since that system of tenure was first introduced into Ireland, viz.: Rents not based upon labor, but rents as were the fruits of Irish absentee landlords. I have declared that in the struggle for land reform I am the friend of the people. [Cheers.] To-day we are half-way to Ireland to victory. There is no longer the distinct labor movement between the Irish and American people. The cause of American laborers is the cause of the Irish people. We are fighting for the right to build up the land, they intended from the beginning

Poetry.

(FOR THE MONITOR.)

WOULDST THOU WIN A DEATHLESS NAME?

BY REV. F. A. TREACY.

And thou wouldst win a deathless name
On battle fields where heroes meet,
And swerve in flashing fury flame,
And nor it blink with smoke and heat.
Aims! there man contends with man—
He brother—in the bloody strife.
And also sealed the kindred clan
Man struggle hard for limb and life.

In learning wouldst thou win renown,
In wisdom's ways wouldst thou be lauded,
And have thy name in light go down
To ages? Be thy wish fulfilled!
But man was made to look aloft,
His soul upon the tasks of earth
His aim are set—may sphere soft
Waft his soul back to heaven's shore.

My son for nobler souls the prayer
Were given them—to bless the Lord,
To see in Him or in souls, or inner,
For He will be thy rich reward!
His sacred Heart are yearns for thee,
He looks on thee with kindly smile
O serve thy Master faithfully
Avoiding crime and hate, and guile.

Literary Miscellany.

Nellie's Secret.

BY MRS. E. BURKE COLLINS.

"For love will fly out of the window
When poverty comes in at the door."

"Do you mean it, Nellie?"

John Walsingham's handsome face wore a troubled look, as he asked the question, pausing, meanwhile, on the threshold of his neat little home cosily nestled in the side hill day's work in the dingy little law office, down town.

Nellie Walsingham, his brown eyed little wife, of six months' standing, glanced up into his face as she paused in her work of removing the breakfast dishes from the round table, and burst into a merry, ringing laugh which did one good to hear.

"Yes foolish boy!" she cried burying her face in shade to chase away his anxious look with the kiss which she bestowed upon him, "do you think that I could mean it? No indeed, And I will never sing that song again, if it distresses you. It is a cruel, unkind song, anyway, and certainly not applicable to us.

"Heaven forbid!" cried the young man, drawing his pretty wife closer to his heart; "for oh, Nellie dear, I have been troubling myself greatly for fear you may have repented marrying a poor man, and—"

"Hush!" she interrupted, a little hand upon her husband's lips. "Don't say that, John! Don't even think of such a dreadful thing again, when you know, my darling, that you are all I have in this wide world, and not all the treasures on this earth could compensate your loss. No, dear, I married you for yourself, and not for wealth or position; and I have only one regret, and that is my disappointment from my family. But I pray for it to be as it is, rather than give you up. That I never shall do so long as we both shall live."

He stooped and kissed her fondly, his eyes full of tender love, which were no longer his anxious, troubled.

"God bless you my wife!" he muttered, and there was a gleam of heart emotion in his dark eye as he turned from her present.

He hurried away down the pretty gravel walk, Nellie's eyes following him fondly.

For a few moments Nellie Walsingham stood her ground, with folded arms, gently retracting form; then a smile rippled on her red lips.

"Dear old John!" she said softly and tenderly, "he does not know that I am trying to help him. He does not know that I am turning my musical education to account, and have already earned half a dozen music scholars. He only thinks I am too school discover my secret in some way, and I do so want to surprise him.

She turned to her homely task of washing up the breakfast dishes humming gaily and warbling the beautiful words of the "Benediction."

"May God bless thee, my beloved—

"May God bless thee."

When everything was done—the dishes carefully arranged in the airy little pantry, the house swept and dusted, and all little tasks completed, and the vases filled with fresh flowers, Nellie arrayed herself in her very prettiest suit of grey cashmere and left the house.

It had been a long scheme of hers to surprise her husband with a musical evening and unexpected by her husband. She wanted to surprise him on the birthday morning—it was not far distant now—and laying in his hands a neat little roll of bills, "of

"Here, John! is my contribution toward the general fund." Take it and get that nice suit of clothes, so long coveted; then there will be money left for your wife to buy the pens and that bonnet will be off your mind."

With this new ambition in her heart, Nellie had decided to apply for a few musical scholars, and had met with decided success.

Her marriage with John Walsingham had furnished a subject for nine-days' wonder—half-pent before. Everybody knew her family, and had warned against her foolish wishes; but even they could not deny that John was good, and honest, and respectable, and only looked vexed, the little cottage in which they now resided hemmed in by the little girls, and the children of the lady who lived next door to her—the sister of Lionel Hurst's wife.

The cloud vanished from John Walsingham's brow.

"Is Lionel married?" he cried. "I did not know it, Nellie!"

"Why, he was married while he was abroad, a year before we were married quietly at home."

"John Walsingham thoroughly humbled and ashamed of himself, drew Nellie into his bosom and poured out to Nellie the whole story, and how wrong and culpable he had been.

But, thank God! the shadows were all gone now, and never again while he lived was John Walsingham base enough to stoop to such meanness.

It was a hard lesson, for he had suffered cruelly, but it left a deathless impression on his soul, and he ever to all husbands and wives is to "have no secrets from each other."

—A boy died in Philadelphia of hydrophobia. He was dead to struggles a bit of froth from his lips flew into his father's eyes. The father was bitten in the cheek, and he imagined he had become inoculated with the disease. He felt all the symptoms, gave the peculiar cough resembling barks, and writhed in agony. A physician assured him that hydrophobia could not possibly have developed in a few hours, nor from such a cause, but that made no difference. Powerful doses of chloral were required to quiet him, and he was left raving frenzy by the violence of the attack.

stammered; "and I am going to Mrs. Hurst's on a little business."

Now it happened, unfortunately for Nellie Walsingham, that the husband of the lady mentioned was possessed of a brother—Lionel Hurst, by name—a tall, handsome young man, who had once simply adored Nellie, and Aunt Marshlands knew it. She bowed stiffly and passed on, leaving Nellie to proceed to Mrs. Hurst's.

"Curious!" mused the spinster, who had never had a love affair in her life and was always scenting trouble where it did not exist. "What in the world can Nellie be visiting at Mrs. Hurst's for, and that Lionel there, too! I never did believe in Nellie. She was too vain; and then she married that John Walsingham as poor as Job's turkey! Now, what can she be going to Mrs. Hurst's for, if it is not to see Lionel! I declare I believe it is my duty to tell John! Not that I care anything in particular for him, but duty is duty, and I never shirk from duty."

So the scandalized spinster proceeded straight to John's office and to the mysterious privacy of the "consulting" room.

"John," began the old mischief-maker at once, "I have called on a little matter which I feel it my duty to attend to."

All sorts of possibilities flashed into John's mind. Had she come to preach him a sermon and present him with a tract, as she had done before.

"What is it Miss Marshlands?" he asked courteously.

"Well?"

The lady deposited her parasol upon an adjacent desk, and sat down, built upright, in a chair.

"I thought," she when on, "that it was no more than right to ask you a question. Do you know where Nellie is this morning?"

John smiled.

"Guess of a slim little figure in a neat linen Gabrielle, with spotless collar and cuffs, with curls inclined to jump into a rebellious mass behind the little ears, busily engaged in her simple avocations, confronted him.

"Why, yes," he responded smiling in spite of himself. "Nellie is at home, Miss Marshlands. I left her washing breakfast dishes."

"Little you know about it," cried the spinster with a distinctful sniff. "I just met her going to Mrs. Hurst's to see Lionel. I saw him waiting at the gate for her, and I thought—here she hesitated, awed by the enormous enormity of John's face, just as she turned the corner of the street where her pupils resided, she beheld coming towards her the tall, portly form of her maiden aunt, Miss Marshlands.

Aunt Marshlands! exclaimed Nellie, aste ever, "how very unfortunate! What ever brings Aunt Marshlands out here! I wonder! She often comes to ask me a lesson and questions; and if I tell her what my errand is there, she will be sure to go home to tell John and that will end all my carefully planned surprise. Besides, she will never rest until she has informed papa, and they will consider that John is forcing me to work for either! Oh, dear! I wish I had thought of it!"

Miss Marshlands was very near. There was no possible chance to beat a retreat. Nellie sighed wearily, and nerved herself for the inevitable.

"Good morning, Nellie," said her aunt, assuming before her, half form drawn up to a genuflex.

"How do you do?" she continued, sweetly "and where are you going, my dear? Nellie thought of the wolf in Red Riding Hood as she paused to answer the question.

"Quite well thank you auntie," she

CHINESE CRUELTY.

Fearful Sufferings of a Catholic Priest

While private here in America can praise the duties of their ministry without let or hindrance, we are sometimes apt to forget what our brethren are suffering in distant climes for their faith and religion. Letters have just been received from a lady missionary in China, which remind our readers of the days of Nero or Diocletian for anything else. We will make an extract from the first letter addressed to Mgr. Chausse by the Rev. Father Bergeon.

"Stripped of my garments, I am in the hands of the executioner, who is preparing to put me to death. I have become the wheel of Christ; God be praised! My chapel is burnt, my Christian robbed, the ministers of the altar scattered. Some want to burn me, others to cast me into the river, others to behead me. I have nothing left in the world; my whole body is but one vast wound, but one great sore, and my thoughts are drawn to dwell upon the tenth station of the way of the cross. I have but one chance. I will beg the favor of being executed at Yoo-hang, where dwells a mandarin who may possibly save my life," etc.

The second letter, which reached the Bishop a day or two after, contains the following:

"I was dead and behold I live.

I arrived at Kwang-tong-wen out, my body all torn and bruised, in company with the mandarin who saved my life. Oh! what agony to find herself all naked in the presence of a numerous assembly! Even almost all my hair was torn out; so that all I have in the world now I owe to the charity of the public. Father Tchong, thinking I had been martyred, hastened here to secure my remains."

In a third letter, written somewhat later, Father Bergeon gives a more detailed account of what he suffered. We will, however, spare our readers the details.

"A dozen men, or rather wild beasts, threw themselves upon me, dragging me from my hand and board, and the clothes from my body, which they began to divide among their various parts. I was then suspended by what hair was yet left me, and then pounded on to the village gate to be beheaded. My naked body was one mass of blood and mud, and my members black from repeated blows. Having arrived at the gate, they paused to discuss the particular kind of death I was to undergo. Many sought to have me burnt alive, but those in favor of decapitation prevailed, so I was compelled to kneel down and to wait in huge my hands tied behind my back. Nothing was left me although to move my block, while they prepared the fatal knife. And in future, madam, I advise you to attend to you own business—to the exclusion of mine."

"Hush!" cried the spinster, drawing form drawn up to its full proportions.

"I see you think of such a dreadful thing again, when you know, my darling, that you are all I have in this wide world, and not all the treasures on this earth could compensate your loss. No, dear, I married you for yourself, and not for wealth or position; and I have only one regret, and that is my disappointment from my family. But I pray for it to be as it is, rather than give you up. That I never shall do so long as we both shall live."

He stooped and kissed her fondly, his eyes full of tender love, which were no longer his anxious, troubled.

"God bless you my wife!" he muttered, and there was a gleam of heart emotion in his dark eye as he turned from her present.

He hurried away down the pretty gravel walk, Nellie's eyes following him fondly.

For a few moments Nellie Walsingham stood her ground, with folded arms, gently retracting form; then a smile rippled on her red lips.

"Dear old John!" she said softly and tenderly, "he does not know that I am trying to help him. He does not know that I am turning my musical education to account, and have already earned half a dozen music scholars. He only thinks I am too school discover my secret in some way, and I do so want to surprise him.

She turned to her homely task of washing up the breakfast dishes humming gaily and warbling the beautiful words of the "Benediction."

"May God bless thee, my beloved—

"May God bless thee."

When everything was done—the dishes carefully arranged in the airy little pantry, the house swept and dusted, and all little tasks completed, and the vases filled with fresh flowers, Nellie arrayed herself in her very prettiest suit of grey cashmere and left the house.

It had been a long scheme of hers to surprise her husband with a musical evening and unexpected by her husband. She wanted to surprise him on the birthday morning—it was not far distant now—and laying in his hands a neat little roll of bills, "of

"Here, John! is my contribution toward the general fund." Take it and get that nice suit of clothes, so long coveted; then there will be money left for your wife to buy the pens and that bonnet will be off your mind."

With this new ambition in her heart, Nellie had decided to apply for a few musical scholars, and had met with decided success.

Her marriage with John Walsingham had furnished a subject for nine-days' wonder—half-pent before. Everybody knew her family, and had warned against her foolish wishes; but even they could not deny that John was good, and honest, and respectable, and only looked vexed, the little cottage in which they now resided hemmed in by the little girls, and the children of the lady who lived next door to her—the sister of Lionel Hurst's wife.

The cloud vanished from John Walsingham's brow.

"Is Lionel married?" he cried. "I did not know it, Nellie!"

"Why, he was married while he was abroad, a year before we were married quietly at home."

"John Walsingham thoroughly humbled and ashamed of himself, drew Nellie into his bosom and poured out to Nellie the whole story, and how wrong and culpable he had been.

But, thank God! the shadows were all gone now, and never again while he lived was John Walsingham base enough to stoop to such meanness.

It was a hard lesson, for he had suffered cruelly, but it left a deathless impression on his soul, and he ever to all husbands and wives is to "have no secrets from each other."

The Smuggler of Innisheen and the Cantire Sailors.

Captain Willoughby was the commander of a fine little cutter which cruised, chiefly, from Lough Swilley, round the coast of Innisheen, in the county of Donegal, on the northern shore of Ireland. Innisheen, Head, as it is now called, is not forty miles distant from Cantire, and was once the kingdom of O'Donnyl. There was always a great connection between the Celtic population of these two places; and, just as Cantire, although a peninsula, was accounted an island, and reckoned among the Hebrides on southern isles that gave the title to the Bishopric of Sodor and Man, so also that old kingdom of Innisheen was account. An island, although it was really a peninsula; for the two lochs that bound it on the east and west are nearly thirty miles in length, and at their southerly extremity, are within a few miles of each other. Thus, Innisheen had a seaboard as extensive as that of Cantire; and perhaps from this fact, its inhabitants were exceedingly rigorous in carrying on the trade of illicit distillation. It was to prevent the smuggling traffic that Captain Willoughby's cutter was stationed off that part of the Irish coast; and, as he had a preference for Cumpbelian sailors, he had his little vessel entirely manned by them. Yet, as the sailors were not commissioned to make a prize of smuggled goods, they did not priately seek to interfere with the contraband manufacture of whisky or to annoy the smugglers in any way, although they were occasionally called upon to accompany their officers and to defend them when attacked.

One day, when Captain Willoughby's Cantire sailors were lying off Innisheen, they were ordered to row ashore to go ashore with the officers in order to make a boarch. They did so, and, on entering a lone lochan, they found a man very busy distilling whisky.

"Ho, ho!" says the Irishman, "coms in, my Scotch boys! faiks, ye have caught me very nasty at my work, and if the revenue rials will belong to ye, my boys: all the whisky will be still, and the worms, bad, and tall, it'll all be yours, my boys. Sure, my dear Scotch boys! I'm running the precious stuff, and it would be a shame and a wickedness to destroy it. And so, my dear boys, if ye'll just for a little while sit till the whisky is distilled then yell have all the spirit, and the materials as well; and I will have them all retained for me to go, and ready prepared for ye to take away. And now, my dear Scotch boys, business is business, all the world over; but why should it stop us from enjoying ourselves while we are able? So, instead of spilling the precious stuff, which would be a wicked thing to do, I would advise ye to make yourselves comfortable until the whisky is ready. And there are skin seats for ye, my dear boys, where yo can sit at ease and watch me at work; and I'll teach ye all the secrets of my trade for pastime while waiting for the whisky to ripe. Sure, here's some employment for ye, my dear Scotch boys; so let us be happy while we may, and the business shall be business all the same."

Upon this invitation, the officers were greatly amused with the man; but, as they were not indifferent to a drop of whisky after their walk, they sat down, and gave their soldiers permission to do the same, while the Innisheen man very politely set before them a large bottle of whisky, and gave each of them "a refreshment." Very soon, they relished it so well that they sat drank and made merry, while he went on with his distilling, singing, and talking, and laughing, and cracking his jokes, and telling them queer anecdotes. At last, he said, jocularly, "Now, my Scotch lads, outside of the door, and he did the same with all the other seaside.

"Now, my dear Scotch boys," he said, "I've shown you how to make whisky, and taught ye all my secrets, and I'll show ye the thing. So let us part good friends, and shake hands before I go out of the door, or the bumper at parting.

So they had their parting glass in a very friendly way; and when the Cantire sailors went outside, neither whisky nor still could be seen. "Where are the materials gone to?" they asked.

"Well, my dear Scotch boys, there is more than one way," said the Irishman smiling. "I put them all there; and, if they are not there now, why then, my dear Scotch boys, they must have been spirited away by the little fairies."

By the little folks, he meant the fairies: but, in reality, they were the man's own children, who he had trained ready for the emergency. And, as the Cantire sailors could not have found out the secret of our fairies, they had to go away without them and confess that the Innisheen fairies had got the better of them.

Glass Eyes.

Quite a business is done in glass eyes. From the leading dealer in the West, a firm which makes solid glass eyes for the trade, it is learned that there are as many as a thousand wearers of them in Chicago, and that from 600 to 800 eyes are sold there every year. The best eyes are made at Urf, in Germany, the manufacture extending for that place on account of the occurrence there of fine silicon and other minerals needed in the business. The German eyes are shaped like corneas, and are made of a material which is a little softer than that used in France. At Urf are made also vast quantities of eyes for taxidermists in mounting birds, animals, and other natural history specimens, besides a vast quantity of glass marbles, known to boys as agates. The artificial eye is a delicate shell or cone, very light and thin and concave so as to fit over what is left of the eyeball. The shell is cut from a hollow ball or bubble of glass, the iris is blown in, and then the whole is delicately decorated. The trade in Chicago has undergone a curious change. Twenty years ago there were sold many more dark eyes than light, but now the proportion of sale of dark eyes has been perceptibly dying out. Few people all are light now, and twenty light to one dark. In Boston the percentage is even larger, about thirty-five blue or light eyes to one brown, while on the other hand in New Orleans, fifty brown or dark eyes, whose colour is thought by the change of color in Chicago, of courses, fashion has nothing to do with it. No one has yet deceived that question satisfactorily.

The Date of the Crucifixion.

A correspondent of the Liverpool Catholic Times says:

"Referring to the letter signed "M. B." a year issue of 28th ult., I should like to call the attention of your readers to the following extracts from a MS. work, the name have had for some years:

"Here Kalb, the German 'seraut, in a work recently published, shows that there was a total eclipse of the moon concomitantly with the Crucifixion, which occurred when Julius Cesar was assassinated—in the 15th of March, B. C. 44. He has also calculated the Jewish calendar to A. D. 31, and the result of his researches fully confirm the facts recorded by the Evangelists of the wonderful physical events that accompanied the Crucifixion. Astronomical calculations prove, without a shadow of doubt, that on the 15th of the Jewish month Nisan (April 6th,) there was a total eclipse of the sun, which was accompanied in all probability by the earthquake; when the veil of the Temple was rent from the top to the bottom, and the earth did quake and the rock rent." Matthew xxvii. 51. While St. Luke describes the eclipse in these words:—And it was the sixth hour (noon,) and there was darkness over all the land till the ninth hour (three o'clock p.m.), and the sun was darkened." Luke xxiii. 44.

"This mode of reckoning corresponds perfectly with the result of another calculation our author made by reckoning backward from the great eclipse of 1842, allowing for the difference the old and new style, which also gives April 6th as the date of the new moon in the year A. D. 31. As the vernal equinox of that year fell on March 25th, and the Jews always fixed Sabbath and celebrated their Frih Passch, or the Feast of the Passover, on the following new moon, it is clear April 6th was identical with Nisan 15 of the Jewish calendar, which, moreover, was on Friday, the Parasceve, or day of preparation for the Sabbath, and the sprung with Hebrew Talmud. Thus by the united testimony of astronomy, archæology, tradition and biblical history, there can be but little doubt that the date of the Crucifixion was April 6th, A. D. 31. I am, etc.,

"A DUBLIN READER.

A Useful Sign in France.

In France every small town has its mayor and its municipal council. Until within the last six months, the mayors of all the larger towns used to be appointed by the Government. Directly the present ministry came into office, four months ago, its home secretary, M. Goblet, brought in a bill for the election of all mayors by the municipal council, and this bill has now become law. The consequence has been in a somewhat inconvenient character, as we gather from a lamentation to which a French paper—the Patriot de l'Ouest—gives the expression. Only fancy! in as many as 256 places, chiefly in Brittany, the Radical mayors have been turned out and Catholics put in their places; and what is more, in some of those same places the Catholic mayors have been deprived of religion to the school boards. The cry of derision of the paper referred to is truly heartrending. It remains to be the admiration of our readers: "The snake of clericalism, which was thought to have been killed, lives and grows back stretched. Ultramontanes are appointed chief mayors, and clerical priests are sent back to the school from which they had been successfully turned out. What is to become of the next municipal elections, if clericalism triumphs and Republicanism gives place to it? It is evidently a crusade to find the native hue of Radical resolution thus sicklied o'er with the pale cast, not of thought, but of fear. If the Radicals of France will but pull together, there is nothing but what the apprehensions of the Radical paper may be verified.

SNORING.

Some Stories Told for the Amusement of our Readers.

It was in a Baltimore and Ohio sleeper on a train for New York last night. (Sunday night) and they had in the aid of an ink bottle. In the sleeping car people slept. Or tried to.

Some of them slept, like Christian men and women, peacefully and sweetly and quietly.

Others slept like brass bands, malignantly, hideously, fiendishly, as though it was their mission to keep everybody else awake. Of these, the man in lower number three was the "bass." When it came to a square snore with variations, you wanted to count your three" in, with a full hand and a pocket full of rocks.

We never heard anything snore like him. It was the most systematic snoring that was done, even on one of those Congressmen's days. Regular as the ticking of a clock, he snored and snored and snored, and snored, and snored,

THE MONITOR.
TWENTY-FOUR YEARS OF PUBLICATION
WEDNESDAY, JULY 19, 1882.

The Massacre of St. Bartholomew.

The sectarian press has the persistent perseverance of the devil in reiterating stale calumnies against the Catholic Church for the sole purpose of propagating prejudice in the minds of the present generation, and thus engendering hate against the Church of Christ. This fact was forcibly brought out last week in the columns of the California Christian Advocate, wherein we find the usual fabulous account of the massacre of St. Bartholomew, a historical question which has been perverted into a calumny against the Papacy by designing and disreputable Protestant writers, upon the principle that a falsehood persistently adhered to will pass for truth in course of time.

The occasion which gives rise to the Advocate's criticism upon the massacre of St. Bartholomew, is the contemplated erection of a monument in France to Admiral Coligny, whom the Advocate pours forth its vituperation upon the Admiral, and then pitches into Popery after this fashion:

"France commemorates the pure life and heroic death of Admiral Coligny, leader of the Huguenots, and the first martyr of the great massacre of Sunday, August 24, 1572, in which 100,000 true Christians were destroyed by order of the vile and corrupt King Charles IX., at the instigation of his infamous mother, Catharine de Medici. At the joyful news of this massacre of Protestants, Rome was greatly excited. The Pope gave public thanks, the Cardinals wore new, the guns of St. Angelo were fired, and the whole papal court was thrown into transports of joy."

In order that Catholic readers may have a thorough understanding of the truth regarding the massacre of St. Bartholomew, we intend going over the whole ground as far as we can up the columns which this very anti-Christian Advocate has publicly dismembered.

The massacre took place three hundred and ten years ago, when Charles IX. reigned in France, and it has been made a hobby of hate by all the ignorant and vicious writers who have contributed to the pages of the "Encyclopedia" from that day to that. Such an eminent historian as Grotius, however, is never consulted by these hackney writers, who do not desire that historical truth should expose their venal falsehood, because they desire to keep alive the fire of prejudice by branding the minds of their victims from the vicious mouths of corrupt-minded, unscrupulous writers antagonistic to the Church.

The plain truth revealed by history is this: The Calvinists in France, just like their co-religionists in Scotland, were a bloodthirsty, persecuting sect; they desired to make Calvinism the national religion, and for this purpose they plotted the murder of the French King and his mother, during the festivities which were to accompany the marriage of the King of Navarre with Margaret, the sister of Charles IX. But, to accompany the death of the monarch was high treason, punishable with death, they determined to make Admiral Coligny and his fellow-conspirators the victims. Accordingly, orders were given by Charles IX. that they should be massacred. Here are his words on that unfortunate occasion:

"Since you think it proper to kill the Admiral, let it be; but also let all the Huguenots in France perish with him, that there may not be one left in France to reproach me with his death; give the order at once!"

The soldiers were accordingly let loose, and the massacre followed. The Advocate states the number killed as 100,000, but, as usual with all evangelical errorists, it tells about ninety per cent. of falsehood to ten per cent. of truth. La Popelinière, a French writer unquestionably beyond all suspicion of dishonesty, speaks of one thousand as having been massacred in Paris, and says that the number killed in the other cities was quite small. In the Martyrology of the Huguenots (published in 1581, nine years after the occurrence, and received with entire satisfaction by the Calvinistic Churches), the number is given as 16,150, after explicitly rejecting the common report that 30,000 had perished. When, however, the names of the victims were counted up, it was found that they number but seven hundred and eighty-six.

It must be borne in mind, also, in mitigation of this massacre, that the Protestants had previously massacred a vast number of Catholics in France. Marshal Montgomery, for instance, caused 3,000 Catholics to be massacred at Orthez. It is also a well-established fact that nearly three hundred monks were either murdered, thrown down into deep wells, or buried alive by these same brutal and blood-thirsty Calvinists, who, not content with slaughtering the people and killing the priests, but they also destroyed nearly fifty magnificent cathedrals, and five hundred Catholic churches were destroyed by these demons in their diabolical efforts to root out the Cross of Christ from the soil of France.

When the news of the massacre of the Calvinists reached Rome, it was reported at the Vatican to Pope Gregory that the King of France had just escaped a fearful conspiracy against his life. A French Cardinal, then in Rome, asked permission of the Pontiff to offer up thanksgiving to God for the preservation of the life of his sovereign, which permission the Pope cheerfully granted, and Te Deum was sung in the conclave of the cardinals; but when, in the course of time, the whole truth was learned by the Pope, he at once issued a Bull, condemning in the severest terms the horrible massacre.

These facts, therefore, completely demolish the fanatical fiction published by the Advocate, and prove that the Catholic Church had no more connection with the massacre of St. Bartholomew than it had with the massacre of Glencoe, or the massacre of Wexford, when Cromwell's cruel soldiers disembowelled the hundreds of Catholic women who were praying to God for succor as they knelt around the public cross in the market place.

Nor did the Pope give public thanks, as the Advocate viciously says; nor were the guns of St. Angelo fired; nor was the whole papal court (with a little jug to show its Protestant prejudice,) "thrown into transports of joy." All this rubbish is the result of that beautiful bigotry which the Advocate is endeavoring to keep alive, but which the Morrison is determined to squelch every time the sectarian scribes attempt to belime the Catholic Church with their venomous slobber.

The "Ignorant" Irish.

The Protestant press never tires of telling untruths regarding the Catholic Church, and not the least among the falsehoods they so frequently fulminate may be classed the indictment which declares that "the Catholic Church is opposed to education," while the fact is that the very people who make use of this calumny cannot turn their eyes in any direction of the horizon without resting on them upon the cupola of some Catholic school house that has been built by Catholic donations, that is supported by Catholic pupils, and out of which the State annually wrings its quota of taxation, just as if education was a luxury which Catholics should not indulge in without paying dearly for the privilege.

Whenever such sectarian enemies of the Catholic Church are beaten in argument upon this point, and they begin to realize the fact that nearly all great men through all ages of Christianity were Catholics, they then resort to their last argument by saying: "Look at the Irish—they are nearly all Catholics—yet you must admit that they are ignorant!" Here, again, our enemies evince their ignorance, because a sightless man should not be blamed for being blind if his enemy has put his eyes out, and, in this manner, any "ignorance" attributable to the Irish people is due entirely to the penal laws passed by England, wherein it was declared a crime to teach the children even in the rudimentary branches of education. But even in this respect the Irish people in the present day are different from past generations, and, thanks to the Irish Bishops, there are few countries in the world better supplied with schools than Ireland. And that children attend them is attested by the fact proved from statistics that at this period Ireland is sending more children to school—according to population—than any other country, the United States not excepted!

This may appear almost incredible, even to our own readers, but the figures which we append prove the truth of our assertions. The population of Ireland is at present about five millions and a half, out of which there are 1,022,000 children attending school, being more than one-fifth of the entire population. This is an educational fact without a parallel, and when we take into consideration that a large portion of a large part of the Irish people, it redounds all the more to their credit that, amidst all their privations, they appreciate the blessings of Christian education.

Hereafter, then, we hope the bigoted bodies who hate them will refrain from prefixing the word "ignorant" to the cognomen Irish, as we have shown that they are very likely in the future to show a greater percentage of educated people, according to population, than any other nationality in the world.

Here, in the United States, some of the ripest scholars and the most erudite students are men of Irish extraction, and when it is brought into competition with other nationalities the Celtic intellect invariably proves its strength and brilliancy. This fact was forcibly illustrated during the recent examinations at Harvard University, one of the highest educational institutions in the land, where, at the latest Commencement exercises, that time-honored University conferred degrees upon the following Irish-Americans:

DOCTOR OF LAWS [LL.D.].
Hon. Charles O'Conor, New York.

DOCTOR OF MEDICINE [M. D].
Thomas Addis Emmet, New York.
Benedict Donovan.
Stephen Lawrence Gallagher.
Thomas Joseph Lawler.
Herbert Wilson McLaughlin, A. B.
John Gavin Morris, A. B.
William Francis Norris.
Andrew Francis Shea.
John Francis Sullivan.
Henry Lee Swasey.

BACHELOR OF LAWS [LL. B.].
Philip Edward Brady.
Frank Burke.
Edward Francis Johnson, A. B.
Thomas Minnehan, A. B.
James Byrne, A. B. (cum laude).

MASTER OF ARTS [A. M.]
John Newton Johnson, A. B.

BACHELOR OF ARTS [A. B].
Gaston Edward Nagle.
Joseph Gilloly.
James William Brown.
David Chatterdone Garrett.
Henry Francis Hyde.
Walter Lyman Kittredge.
Edward Valentine McDonald.
Clifton Hodges Mills.
William Thomas McKeon.
William Henry McKendry.

These names prove that the enviable distinction which Ireland once enjoyed as the land of saints and scholars has not been forfeited by reason of the emigration or exiled. A few years ago, when a portion of the Fenians in many of literary brightness which once burned so purely in Ireland may again be rekindled under the fag of this free Republic whose literary character will be well retained by its children of Irish-American birth.

"My son," said a Christian father "when you were born everyone around smiled and seemed happy, you alone were in tears. Try to lead such a life that when you die you may be filled with joy and peace, and all those who know you may sincerely lament your departure from the world."

—When Sergeant Shee, for some years M. P. for Kilkenny, was appointed Judge of the Court of Common Pleas, some twenty years ago, there was rather an angry opposition from Protestant protest, as he was the first Roman Catholic placed on the English bench since the reformation. Recently two Roman Catholics, Matthew and Daly, have been raised to the bench, with public approbation.

Save the Children.

"Suffer the little children to come unto Me, and forbid them not. For of such is the Kingdom of God."—Mark x. 14.

Now that Catholic schools are about to open in every portion of the coast, these words of our Blessed Redeemer become invested with additional importance to Catholic parents, and we beg of them, as they cherish their own and their children's salvation, to hearken to the counsel given by the Son of God, and to send their children to schools where God is ever present, where His holy name is invoked in prayer, and where the children and teachers who are assembled there in prayer do not feel as in the midst of them. Catholic parents are simply and merely the temporary custodians of their children. Parents and children alike must die, and it is the solemn duty of every Catholic parent to restore the souls of their children to God as pure and unsullied as when they received them from the baptismal font of the Catholic Church. Parents can only perform this duty by sending their children to Catholic schools. It can never be done through any other agency; hence, the only way to save the souls of Catholic children is to have them instructed thoroughly and constantly by conscientious Catholic teachers whose sole vocation is to elevate, enlighten and purify those who are placed under their charge.

Italian Insults to the Pope.

At a recent consistory Pope Leo XIII. declared that "the position of the Church in Italy was becoming worse than ever, and the tone of the Roman press countenanced by the Italian Government gives full encouragement to these sad expressions of the Holy Father. The foulest insults are flung at the Church through the columns of newspapers antagonistic to all religion, and the most ribald insults are cast at Catholics on account of their fidelity to their faith. Alluding to the death of the immoral and infidel Garibaldi, the Lapa della Democrazia writes: "If the Vatican has not heard and understood that in the Garibaldian procession there was seen the funeral of the Papacy, it will see and understand it in a short time. This expression of hate was rather too much even for the Italian Tazzi, the acerrimus defamier of Pius IX., during a lecture recently delivered in Rome on Garibaldi, wherein that infamous brawler told his hearers that "He himself did not believe in God, but if he did, he would be inclined to believe in Garibaldi as a messenger from heaven invested with all divine grandeur. Garibaldi was a hero who ennobled humanity. Italy, who has mourning for Garibaldi was over, should destroy the Vatican, and vomit forth the Pope and his black satellites. The fugitives should find no refuge anywhere. He would answer for France, a country which never would receive those whom Italy vomited forth. In this manner, Italy would only fulfil a sacred duty, that of ensuring the last will and testament of Garibaldi."

From the foregoing extract Catholics can form some idea of the amount of Christian charity possessed by the anti-Catholic element in Italy; but what make the matter worse is that all this insulting opposition to the Church is permitted by a Government which professes to respect the legal compact known as the Papal Guarantees, but which have never been observed in the least by the swindling, cowardly Italian Government, because it stands in dread of the stiletto of the revolutionary faction of its own people. Pius IX. was a prisoner long before his happy death, his successor is a prisoner still, and it would seem as if the enemies of the Papacy meant to keep the Pontiff in that position until the people were goaded to rebellion, when some excuse would be framed for raising a revolution against religion, and then the doom of the present Pontiff would be martyrdom, by poison—because it must be very evident to every reflecting mind that the pusillanimous Government which is too weak to prevent the indignities perpetrated against the sides of Pius IX. a year ago, is in no condition to cope with a mob of assassins when they safely forth bent on the destruction of a Pontiff whose downfall has been the theme of a thousand infidel presses throughout Europe for many years past.

Look at the question in any light we may, there is no disguising the fact that there is an element in Italy which is prepared to assault the Vatican, to break down its doors, and to drag the occupant of the sacred Pontiff through the streets of Rome. Meanwhile the Italian authorities would be too cowardly to interfere, and when the brutal deed was consummated the foul stain would be covered up under the convenient cloak of European diplomacy.

The Land League Convention.

We publish this week the proceedings of the Land League Convention held last week in Oakland, and we regret to find that it was not as numerously attended as the Convention held last year. It is a lamentable fact, also, that many of the Branches have become disorganized and a general apathy seems to have come over the enthusiastic spirit formerly manifested among the patriotic element of the Irish people. This is not the way to right the wrongs of Ireland. We must persevere as patriots if we desire to see Ireland disenthralled. Already the Land League has half achieved Irish independence, and is hath now is to lose the great good it has already accomplished. We hope, therefore, the old enthusiastic spirit, so natural to the Celtic race, will be revived in California, that those patriotic offices will be immediately filled to keep up the status of the Land League, that generous contributions may continue to flow into the funds, so that should any emergency arise in the near future the Irish people may be thoroughly organized to effect a settlement of the difficult question which was never yet satisfactorily settled, and which will be assuredly effected if the Land League preserves its organization and perseveres in its legitimate course.

DEVOTION TO THE BLESSED VIRGIN.

THE SORROWS OF MARY—FOURTH DOLOR.

[Translated for the Monitor from the French "La Vrai.]

The first three Dolors of Mary occurred in the infancy of Jesus, and the last four during his Passion. These three were historical of already twenty years between the third and the fourth Dolor (from the twelfth to the thirty-third year of Jesus.) But we are not to suppose or assert that Mary had nothing to suffer all this time. The meditation we have given on the first Dolor has fully enlightened us on this point. Even the tranquil habitation of Nazareth Mary was the Mother of Sorrows. To live in the midst of the world, surrounded by a perfidious people, and of the whole human race, was for her immeasurable Heart a terrible torture, and so much the more so, as her Divine Son, (she knew it well,) was to be the bloody victim of this universal persecution. In her domestic solitude, disembodied Noah, who continued to build the ark whilst all around him men were dancing on the ruins of the world; there was the difference, however, between Noah and Mary: he formed his ark of wood and made the doors of wood, whilst she built the ark of the divine flesh of Jesus whose holy openings were to be one day His numerous and gaping wounds. She never tried Abraham, who prepared his only son for immolation: there is also a difference between Abraham and Mary; for, in the solemn preparation for his sacrifice lasted only some hours, whereas here continued for many long years the period, however, between the third and the fourth Dolor was, relatively, a season of calm and repose. It is in comparison with the sorrows of sorrow that burst upon the Holy Virgin during the passion of our Lord. Conformably to the practice of the Church, we will divide these new sufferings into four principal ones, the first of which is called, "the Meeting of our Lord by His Blessed Mother as He was carrying His Cross." The Evangelists do not mention it, but tradition and private revelations fully make up for their silence on this point.

No sooner had the sentence of death been pronounced on the God-Man by the Pharisees of Judea than the streets of Jerusalem began to resound with the noise of the preparations necessary for the terrible execution. Then it was that Mary went forth from her quiet abode in order to accompany her Son to the place of torture. On a former occasion, when her Son enjoyed a triumphal entry into Jerusalem, she humbly approached herself to her loved parent; but now that her Son is about to be led to death, she will brave the public gaze, and confront all dangers. What must not have been the anguish and torture of the Mother at the moment when her only Son, the love and joy of her heart, was being condemned to death? Will she have courage enough, now that she bears, from the most accabled part of her habitation, the noise of the drums commingled with the shouts and malediction of the pour face, to rise, go out and witness the execution of her adorable Son? Can human strength be ex, ed to go that distance? Let us call to mind the condition of poor Hagar, in her hour what is Holy Scriptures say of her. When that unfortunate Mother saw that her little Ismael was about to die of thirst in the Desert, she placed him near the trunk of a tree, and then withdrew herself a distance of a stone's throw from him, in order that she might not see the fruit of her womb perish. But very different from Hagar's conduct is that of Mary, thanks to the grace of God. Mary, in her maternal tenderness for us. She goes out then from her retreat accompanied by St. John and Mary Magdalen. The streets are crowded with people who, like the waves of a tempestuous sea, move more impetuously to the mountain of Calvary. The disciple whom Jesus love conducts the poor Mother through that dense crowd to the place of the Crucifixion, lest perhaps, in her agonizing faintness, she should fall to the ground, and be trampled upon by the crowd. Lastly, the first part of the journey, the trip through this end of the route proved to be delightful, as the streets were in excellent condition and the fresh morning air was laden with the perfumes of the odoriferous eucalyptus. Arriving at Mission San José we found the congregation assembled in the church listening to a sermon in the Spanish language, which we could not understand

Farm and Home.

Not a Modern Romance.

PORANA—My dear, I must question business again to-night.

Reuben—My dear, you didn't find it necessary to go away from me on business almost every night before we were married.

P.—No, my dear, but my business then was to marry you.

R.—And you helped my company than!

P.—I did, my dear. I wasn't sure of you as I am now, my dear.

R.—Well, you are candid enough at any rate.

P.—I am, my dear; let us be honest with each other. You see we've talked each other out. You know me all through and I know you.

R.—And home is a dull place, I suppose. And I'm not as interesting as before you married me.

P.—You put the case disagreeably plain, my dear. There is no need of serving up the truth raw in that fashion. But that's the size of it when you take the trimmings off.

R.—Very well, my dear, I'm going out, too. I may be out till two A. M.; possibly till three.

P.—Where—where are you going, my dear?

R.—To see a person on business.

P.—A person, a man or a woman? But it's a woman, of course. And why so late?

R.—It's a person, my dear. And it's business. Business is business, you know.

P.—But a respectable woman has no business to be out with a person at such an hour. Above all, a wife.

R.—And why a wife any less than a husband, my dear?

P.—Because—because it ain't the thing, you know. A man's business keeps him out late. At least some men's business does.

R.—And honest men mine does, my dear. Same for the gander is same for the goose, my dear. You were interesting before I married you. But now we know each other all through, you know. We see too much of each other. Same for the gander ought to be the goose's sauce, hadn't it, my dear? Same principle. Good bye. I'm off for premier salds and partures never.

P.—No you don't, my dear.

R.—Yes I do.

P.—Yes go out of that door and you don't come in again, my dear.

R.—I don't want to, my dear.

P.—What!

R.—I don't want to, my dear, I've got a thousand dollars of my own, and if my door is locked when I return I shall hire a house of my own and look you out, my dear. Same for the gander is same for the goose.

P.—O come now, my dear, this is all nonsense. You won't do any such thing. Come, be sensible now.

R.—I am sensible, my dear. In fact, I've just got possession of my senses, as Mr. French says. I can do it and I will. You know my will enough for that, don't you, my dear?

P.—My dear, I think I won't go out tonight.

R.—Neither will I, my dear.—Graphic.

A Reform in Educating Catholic Girls.

In the report of the Irish Catholic Colonisation Society it is announced that Bishop O'Connor will establish a school in one of the colonies, to be under the care of the Sisters of Mercy, where the girls will be taught to cook and to make their own clothes. This is a move in the direction of making the school practical. The Catholic school ought to be, first, thoroughly Catholic; second, thoroughly practical. The school that teaches girls best how to help their mothers is a praiseworthy school. The girl that can "board" Alaska with public-school inability, but who can not sew a button on her own frock, and who scorns to mend her little brother's trousers is too common. The supply of this kind of girls is greater than the demand. There are too many of her. Mothers ought to teach their girls at home. They do not because it is easier to work themselves than to teach. The whole aim of fitting a child for real life fallows the school; and the school—a Catholic school—follows the public school method as closely as it can, and cultivates shabby gentility and sham elegance; consequently, the mother fries the ham and eggs, sews the little brother's trousers, and hurries to a premature grave, while the youthful scholar decorates pottery in the newest and most hideous manner, or is allowed to panic over consumption. In this way she is prepared for a life of matrimonial uselessness and misery.

It does not always follow that the parent who sends his daughter to an academy intends that she shall live in decorative idleness. And even where fortune turns her school so suddenly, it is the more necessary that even the daughters of rich fathers should know how to use their hands in the household work, and to understand the internal economy of the household. Our schools for the poor teach the "elegies," our schools for the rich prepare young girls for society. The practical arts are neglected in both schools. Go to the convent-schools in any of the schools. You will find exhibited, "Views on the Rhine," "Rodolph Dies Dafying His Enemies," "Madonna, after Raphael," tumbledown Trays, meaningless scenes that rare never on sea or land, exhibited with pardonable pride; you will hear essays on "Cicero's Orations," "Sitting the lessons of Hope," "The Philosophy of Life," and other important topics; you will likewise hear "Les Demoiselles de la Couronne," for two pieces. But few of the young ladies thus exhibited to admiring friends will be able, if suddenly invited them to earn a living, would be able to do anything but stand behind a counter with their hair done up in the newest fashion.—New York Freeman.

Agriculture for Girls.

France has an agricultural school for girls. One of the chief is near Rouen, which is said to have begun with a capital of one franc, by a Sister of Charity and two little discharged prisoner girls, and to be now worth $100,000. This establishment has 300 girls from eight to eighteen years of age. The farm entirely cultivated by them, is over 400 acres in extent. The staff of teachers consists of twenty-five sisters. Many times one model of the French Agricultural Society has been awarded to this establishment at Durostel, and the pupils are in great demand all over Normandy on account of their skill. They are as shrewd, gardeners, farm managers, dairy-women, and laundresses. Each girl has, on leaving, a small sum of money earned in spare hours. If they want a home they are always return to Durstel.

A Happy Combination.

Below command of Jamaica sloop, smart-wind trading craft, and best French brandy, Dr. Pierce's Purgent of Sweet-wood is a specific for all "remote complaints," diarrhoea, dysentery, bloody-flux, and kindred affections.

MISCELLANEOUS.

A NOTED BUT UNTITLED WOMAN.

[From the Boston Globe.]

Mrs. Lydia E. Pinkham, of Lynn, Mass., who shows all other women things they ought to be thinking about, "Queen of Health" is not her title, but she is entitled to it, and her dominion is constantly decided by her court, which is composed of a bi-weekly, and is obliged to keep the half mediums, to help her answer the large correspondence which daily pours in upon her, each bearing its quota of tension of suffering, or joy and relaxes from health. Vegetable Compound is a medicine for good and well purposes. I have personally investigated it and am satisfied of the truth of this.

On account of its proven merits it is recommended and prescribed by the best physicians in the country. Cite says: "It works like a charm and saves much pain. It will cure entirely 3-4 cases of failing of the uterus, Leucorrhœa, irregular and painful menstruation, Dysmenorrhœa, Spinal weakness, Sexual weakness, Sleeplessness, All Nervous Ills, and the consequent mental worry, and it is especially adapted to the Change of Life."

It permeates every portion of the system, and gives new life and vigor. It removes faintness, flatulency, destroys all craving for stimulants, and relieves weakness of the stomach. It cures Bloating, Headache, Nervous Prostration, General Debility, Sleeplessness, Depression and Indigestion. That feeling of bearing down, causing pain, weight and backache, is always permanently cured by its use. It will at all times, and under all circumstances, act in harmony with the laws of that system the female delicate.

It costs only $1. Or, if you prefer it, in form of Lozenges, sent on receipt of price, $1 for a package, or six packages for $5, and will be sent by mail, free, to any place in the United States where they can not be obtained. Trade supplied; sent by mail free extra at C. O. D.

LITHOGRAPHERS. BOOKBINDERS

P. E. DOUCHERTY & CO.,

STEAM

BOOK AND JOB PRINTERS,

412 Commerce St., and 411 Clay St.

Between Sansome and Battery.

FIRE!! FIRE!!

JNO. R. SIMS & SON,

Manufacturers of all kinds of Fireproof Doors and Window Blinds.

SHUTTERS, BURGLAR PROOF SAFE VAULTS AND Jalousies, wrought iron pinsters and bonnet, wrought iron cast iron Railings, Balconies, Bolts, Gratings, The Sashes, Anchor and other architectural iron work, at the OLD ESTABLISHED WORKS, 511 to 517 Mission street, between Fremont and First streets, San Francisco. Telephone, or any place on the Pacific coast, attended to with promptness and despatch.

Messrs. SIMS appreciate the past Fireman's patronage of their friends, and feel that they can return to merit it in the future. For the information of strangers, they beg to state that their Fireproof Doors and Window Blinds to big protection, during the conflagration of the fire, which lately reduced the Iron Work sent to them every year in California, Oregon, Victoria and Australia, indeed, and to be seen in some of the best buildings of San Francisco, fully attest.

ALSO—A very large lot of second hand Shutters, to arrive shortly, and for sale at the Works.

Nos. 128 and 130 Beale street.

BANKING HOUSES.

R. H. McDonald, PRESIDENT. San Francisco, Cal.

PACIFIC BANK

Established 1863.

CAPITAL STOCK $1,000,000.00

Surplus 420,447.74

San Francisco, Feb. 9, 1882.

Report of the Bank Commissioners for the State of California to the Hon. J. E. Pleasant, Governor of California, pursuant to the provisions of the Bank Act, which requires the report to be signed and verified by the officers of the Pacific Bank, and to submit the following statement of its condition:

Very respectfully, your obedient servants,

STATE OF CALIFORNIA } Bank Commissioner's
CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO } ss. office of Pacific Bank.

ROBERT WATT, Vice-President, and for State of California.

W. F. WATT, Cashier.

RESOURCES.

Bank Premises	$150,000.00
Other Real Estate	2,382.33
Gold Coin and Bullion	635,777.83
Legal Tender Notes and Specie	67,000.00
Loans on Real Estate	167,146.67
Loans on Bonds, Stocks, Warrants and Bank Stock	154,856.00
Loans on other securities
Drafts, Wheat Market, Commercial Paper, Bills Receivable, and Personal Security	466,414.09
Bank Stock	1,039,047.19
Due from Banks	299,216.48
Due from Bank Bankers	849,024.23
Cash on hand	1,264.21
Collection Account	2,288.21
Total Assets	$3,507,549.30

LIABILITIES.

Capital paid up	$1,000,000.00
Surplus Fund	420,447.74
Due Depositors	1,240,017.56
Due Banks	1,000,000.00
Interest Collected	17,157.25
Rents, Exchange, etc.	29,972.25
Dividend Account	1,000.00
Total Liabilities	$3,507,549.30

R. H. McDonald, PRES't.

Jos. A. Donohoe, San Francisco. | Rudolph Kleis, New York.

DONOHOE, KELLY & CO.

SAN FRANCISCO.

EUGENE, KELLY & CO.

NEW YORK.

BANKERS.

EXCHANGE ON

NEW YORK, LONDON, AND BANK IRELAND (Dublin),

Payable at all the Branches

AND IN EVERY COUNTY TOWN IN IRELAND

MISCELLANEOUS.

A manufacturer has offered to any person who will take the agency for his Patent Spring Suspender Shoulder Brace, Black Rubber mounted, a salary of $1,000 to order.

Cut Shape and Stationed Rubber Suspenders.

San Francisco.

DR. CLARK

JOHNSON'S

Indian Blood Syrup.

[TRADE MARK.]

CURES Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint, Fever & Ague, Rheumatism, Gravel, Heart Disease, Biliousness, Nervous Debility, etc.

The Best REMEDY KNOWN to Man!

12,000,000 Bottles

HAVE BEEN SOLD SINCE 1863.

This Syrup possesses Varied Properties.

It stimulates the healthy action of the system, which removes the decayed and decaying matter from the blood, and restores the healthy circulation. When this is accomplished, the patient is on the road to health. Nature will do the balance. It acts on Nature's laws, and cures by laying the foundation of food.

It acts upon the Liver.
It acts upon the Bowels.
It acts upon the Blood.
It Purifies the Blood.
It Regulates the Nervous System.
It Invigorates the Stomach.
It Invigorates, Strengthens and Invigorates.
It removes all the Old Decayed and Putrid matter.
It renews the power of the skin and induces a healthy perspiration.

It purifies the breathing skin, or pulses in the blood, which generates Scurvy, Erysipelas, and all Humors, Blotches, Pimples and Eruptions.

It Cures all diseases originating in a sedentary and it can be taken by the most delicate lady, or by the good and feeble, as it may bring comfortably the mother free the hum and egg, sews the little brother's trousers, and hurries to a premature grave, while the youthful scholar decorates pottery in the newest and most hideous manner, or is allowed to panic over consumption. In this way she is prepared for a life of matrimonial uselessness and misery.

WATERVILLE, Le Sueur Co., Minn.

A trial of Dr. Clark Johnson's Indian Blood Syrup has greatly benefited my wife for Sore Eyes, of long standing.

T. Y. ATHERTON.

PASO ROBLES, CAL.

Being a sufferer from Liver Complaint, I was induced to try Dr. Clark Johnson's Indian Blood Syrup, a short trial of which completely cured me.

GRUELLE B. GRUELLE.

PASO ROBLES, CAL.

After a fair trial of Dr. Clark Johnson's Indian Blood Syrup, I am satisfied that it is a valuable family medicine.

W. SMITH.

SACRAMENTO CITY, SACRAMENTO CO., CAL.

I was troubled with Dyspepsia and Kidney Disease, for years, and found no relief until I tried Dr. Clark Johnson's Indian Blood Syrup which effected a perfect cure.

MRS. H. WITTFIRE.

WEBSTER, COLUSA CO., CAL.

I was severely afflicted with Disease of the Stomach and Kidneys, and the use of Dr. Clark Johnson's Indian Blood Syrup has completely cured me. I advise all similarly afflicted to try it.

MRS. M. WHITESIDE.

Agents wanted for the sale of the Indian Blood Syrup in every town or village, in which I have no Agent. Particulars given on application.

DRUGGISTS SELL IT.

Laboratory 77 West 3rd st., N.Y.City

DAVID DRADY,

230 Fourth Street,

Importer and Dealer in Fine Mouldings, Mirrors and Pictures.

Framing and Regilding done at Reasonable Prices

A. F. KNORP,

Mechanics' Mill,

411 MISSION STREET

(New Premises)

BEYOND FLORIDE. SAN FRANCISCO.

MANUFACTURER TOORDER DOORS, BOOK CASES, Cornices, Cabinets, Sashes, and every Description of Interior Finish for Churches, Offices, Stores, Halls, Dwellings, Vessels, etc. Also, Turning, Scroll Sawing, and Moulding done to order.

Jobbing promptly attended to.

CHICKERING

PIANOS.

B. CURTAZ, AGENT,

No. 20 O'Farrell Street.

$96 A week in your own town. Terms and $5 outfit free. Address H. HALLETT & CO., Portland, Me.

MISCELLANEOUS.

AS CARROLL. W. H. TILTON.

CARROLL & TILTON,

Respectfully announce that they have opened

THE LARGE STORE,

873 Market Street,

WITH A LINE OF

GENT'S AND BOY'S

CLOTHING,

FURNISHING GOODS,

HATS, CAPS, ETC.

Having been in this business many years, we can promise that all goods will be as represented.

We buy for Cash and sell as low as possible.

CARROLL & TILTON,

873 Market Street, opp. Powell,

And late with JONES & CO.,

J. O'KANE,

MANUFACTURER AND IMPORTER OF

Harness, Saddles, Whips, Blankets, Boots, Etc.

767 MARKET ST.

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIFORNIA.

Special attention given to the manufacture of "Boots" of all kinds for horses. Our refer to all the principal horse owners throughout the Pacific Coast.

N. S. M. possesses unique opportunity in this branch of business in largely due to careful observation and the valuable suggestions of the most skilled "horsemen" in the United States. The benefits of which revert to the buyer of goods from this house. Agent for the celebrated Hale Agent for the A. J. Weaver Celebrated Horse Goods. Agent for the celebrated "Davis" and "Tolman" Top Buggies. Repairing done with neatness and despatch. Always on hand with the finest assortment of English Leather and Goodall's Saddles, bridles, whips, spurs, bits and 5th rate saddles.

JOHN O'KANE.

ESTABLISHED 1864.

J. COONEY,

PRACTICAL

Painter and Whitener.

SIGNS NEATLY EXECUTED.

NO. 113 FOURTH STREET,

San Francisco, Cal.

Jobbing, in all its branches, promptly attended to

H. N. COOK,

MANUFACTURER OF

OAK-TANNED

LEATHER BELTING & HOSE,

405 Market Street,

SAN FRANCISCO

SATISFACTION GUARANTEED.

The Finest Lacing in Cut Strings, or Sides always on Hand.

MAIL, EXPRESS AND BULLION BAGS.

Goods shipped to all parts of the State. Shipps supplied at Wholesale Rates.

No Pay in Advance!

GREAT ELECTRIC HAIR TONIC,

Warranted to Cure Baldness!

120 TYLER STREET, S. F.

TO THE LADIES.

For Cheap and Handsome Hats and Bonnets go to

MRS. SWANTON'S,

1217 Stockton street.

An Extraordinary Razor

HAS BEEN INVENTED BY THE QUEEN'S CUTLER, called the "Queen's Razor," and is the most FLEXIBLE or NEVER TO REQUIRE GRINDING, and a lather never forms in the hollow of the blade, a piece of valve, making shaving quite a luxury. It is CERTAINLY THE GREAT LUXURY of shaving using the razor, also guaranteed PERFECTION. It is delicate enough to shave the face of a lady. Sent to any address on receipt of 50 cents in stamps. Address, MATHAN JOSEPH, 541 City street, San Francisco, the only place in the United States where they can obtained. Trade supplied; sent by mail free extra at C. O. D.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Ladies' Cents' and Children's STRAW HATS From 50c. upwards. Factory 753 Mission St., opposite St. Patrick's Church.

HATS MADE TO ORDER. OLD HATS MADE NEW. Ever woman friendly present at the "Bonnet Star" Hat Manufactory of the Pacific Coast.

PARENT'S HAIR BALSAM

A perfect dressing combining all the qualities desired in an elegant hair dressing.

It promotes a healthy growth, prevents the hair from falling, and restores Gray Hair to its youthful color.

Ladies find it invaluable for keeping the hair in any desired position.

Sold by all druggists.

PARKER'S GINGER TONIC

If you are wasting away with Consumption, Age, or any disease or weakness, you will find the Tonic a high invigorating Medicine that Never intoxicates. Many drunkards have cured themselves by its use. It is 40 times as drinks or drugs. Large Bottles Selling $1 Size.

NOTICE OF REMOVAL.

JERRY LOWNEY & SON

HAVE REMOVED THEIR CARRIAGE FACTORY to the rear of their Warerooms, 1123 Market st. Flat Springs, Shafts, Spokes and Felloes of carriages and wagons, the shortest made to order, and repairing promptly attended to.

CHEAPEST PLACE

To Buy New and Second Hand Machines.

All kinds; rented $1 per month; needles for all machines, 25 cents per dozen.

SINGER OFFICE, 121 FOURTH STREET.

OTTO RATTO,

Fashionable Hatter,

326 MONTGOMERY AVENUE,

Between Broadway and Vallejo, Sts., S. F.

HATS MADE TO ORDER.

TAILORS.

John Kavanagh,

MERCHANT TAILOR,

6 New Montgomery Street,

PALACE HOTEL, S. F.

The Making of Clergymen' Cassocks a Specialty.

N. SWEENY,

MERCHANT TAILOR

41 Second street,

(Opposite Jesuit street.) SAN FRANCISCO

Cassocks and Clerical Clothing a Specialty.

D. LETER & CO.,

69 Fourth Street, S. F.,

Merchant Tailors,

Business Suits to Order, from	$20 00
Pants	5 00
Fine Dress Suits	35 00
Black Doeskin Pants	7 00

Perfect Fit Guaranteed Or No Sale.

M. FITZPATRICK

TO THE

BOSS Tailor,

Of the Pacific Coast,

36 1-2 FOURTH STREET,

Corner of Jessie San Francisco

Go there for your CLOTHES. You are sure to be suited and don't you forget it.

THOMAS DRADY,

MERCHANT TAILOR

No. 6 Third Street,

Near Market, S. F.

E. F. WILTON,

MERCHANT

TAILOR,

12 Stockton Street,

NEAR MARKET ST., SAN FRANCISCO

JOHN HICKEY,

Merchant Tailor,

933 Market Street,

Between Fifth and Sixth streets. San Francisco.

Business Suits to order from	$20
Pants "	5
Fine Dress Suits "	35
Black Doeskin Pants	7

DENNIS REDMOND.

MERCHANT TAILOR,

No. 606 Hayes street.

Perfect fit and good work guaranteed.

PETER SHORT

DRAPER AND TAILOR,

No. 1 Montgomery St. Masonic Temple

All the Latest Fashions in Suitings JUST ARRIVED.

Dress Suits to Order. $35
Business Suits to Order. 30

PENRSSON & PAUL,

Merchant Tailors.

205 FOURTH STREET, S. F.

Suits Made to Order from $25.00 Upwards. Pants to order from $6.00 Upwards.

PERFECT FIT GUARANTEED.

BELLS ETC.

SENCELY BELL FOUNDRY.

BEST QUALITY OF BELLS.

BUCKEYE BELL FOUNDRY.

BLYMYER MFG CO. BELLS

Church, School, Fire alarm, Factory bells, Chimes and Peals. Warranted satisfactory. Prices and catalogue free.

CINCINNATI, O.

NOTICE OF REMOVAL.

JERRY LOWNEY & SON

HAVE REMOVED THEIR CARRIAGE FACTORY to the rear of their Warerooms, 1123 Market st. Flat Springs, Shafts, Spokes and Felloes of carriages and wagons, the shortest made to order, and repairing promptly attended to.

CHEAPEST PLACE

To Buy New and Second Hand Machines.

All kinds; rented $1 per month; needles for all machines, 25 cents per dozen.

SINGER OFFICE, 121 FOURTH STREET.

OTTO RATTO,

Fashionable Hatter,

326 MONTGOMERY AVENUE,

Between Broadway and Vallejo, Sts., S. F.

HATS MADE TO ORDER.

NEW FRANKLIN HOTEL.

The Best Hotel in San Francisco

Cor. Sansome and Pacific streets.

H. CURRAN, Proprietor.

THIS WELL KNOWN AND FAVORITE HOTEL IS SITUATED IN A MOST CENTRAL AND DESIRABLE location and offers good accommodations to families and the traveling public, and is the nearest Hotel to the business portion of the city.

Board and Room per week, $6 to $7. Room per night, 50c. Free Coach to and from the Hotel.

MEDICAL REMEDIES.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla

is a compound of the virtues of sarsaparilla, stillingia, mandrake, yellow dock, with the iodide of potash and iron, all powerful blood-making, blood-cleansing, and blood-vitalizing elements. It is the purest, safest, and most effectual alterative medicine known or available to the public. The science of medicine and chemistry have never produced so valuable a remedy, nor one so potent to cure all disease resulting from impure blood. It cures Scrofula and Scrofulous Humors, Erysipelas, Eruptions, Rose, or St. Anthony's Fire, Pimples, and Face-grubs, Tetters, Blotches, Boils, Tumors, Tetter, Humors, Salt Rheum, Scald-head, Ring-worm, Ulcers, Sores, Rheumatism, Mercurial Disease, Neuralgia, Female Weaknesses and Irregularities, Jaundice, Affections of the Liver, Dyspepsia, Emaciation, and General Debility.

By its searching and cleansing qualities it purges out the foul corruptions which contaminate the blood and cause derangement and decay. It stimulates and rejuvenates the vital functions, promotes energy and strength, restores and preserves health, and infuses new life and vigor throughout the whole system. No sufferer from any disease which arises from impurity of the blood should despair who will give Ayer's Sarsaparilla a fair trial.

It is folly to experiment with the numerous low-priced mixtures of cheap materials, and without medicinal virtues, offered as blood-purifiers, while disease becomes more firmly fixed on the patient. Ayer's Sarsaparilla—of all the alterative or curative powers, that it is by far the best, cheapest, and most reliable blood-purifier known. Physicians know its composition, and prescribe it. It has been widely used for forty years, and has won the unqualified confidence of millions who it has benefited.

Prepared by Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Practical and Analytical Chemists, Lowell, Mass.

SOLD BY ALL DRUGGISTS EVERYWHERE.

NEW RICH BLOOD!

Purgent Purgative Pills make New Rich Blood, and will completely change the blood in the entire system in three months. Any person who will take one Purgent Pill each night from one to twenty-one nights, will receive a thing of the possible. Sent by mail for 2 letter stamps.

Address Purgent Pill Co., Boston, Mass. Formerly Bangor, Me.

MISCELLANEOUS.

WITH

FIVE DOLLARS

YOU CAN BUY A SMALL

U. S. INTERNAL REVENUE 5% FLORIN

GOVERNMENT BOND,

ISSUE OF 1868

These bonds are guaranteed by the Imperial Government of Germany, are payable in gold at the end of 3 per cent. per annum—payable semi-annually.

They are redeemable at par semi-annually, in which 100 large premiums of 60,000, 10,000, 5,000, etc., Scrip and Bonds.

Every Auction 1,000 Bond, which does not draw one of the large premiums, is sure to be redeemed with at least 120 Florins.

as there are no blanks, and every bond is of a drawing.

The next drawing takes place on the 1ST OF AUGUST, 1882,

and every bond bought of us on or before the 1st of August, is entitled to the same premium that may be drawn thereon on that date.

Out of town orders sent in Amount Letters, inclosing $5, will secure one of these bonds for the best drawing.

For orders, circulars, or any other information, address

INTERNATIONAL BANKING CO.,

No. 158 Broadway, New York City.

Representative in 1878.

N. B.—In writing to us, please state you saw this in the SAN FRANCISCO MONITOR.

NOTICE OF REMOVAL.

JERRY LOWNEY & SON

HAVE REMOVED THEIR CARRIAGE FACTORY to the rear of their Warerooms, 1123 Market st. Flat Springs, Shafts, Spokes and Felloes of carriages and wagons, the shortest made to order, and repairing promptly attended to.

CHEAPEST PLACE

To Buy New and Second Hand Machines.

All kinds; rented $1 per month; needles for all machines, 25 cents per dozen.

SINGER OFFICE, 121 FOURTH STREET.

OTTO RATTO,

Fashionable Hatter,

326 MONTGOMERY AVENUE,

Between Broadway and Vallejo, Sts., S. F.

HATS MADE TO ORDER.

WOOD AND COAL.

COAL. COAL. COAL

2,240 LBS. TO THE TON

Full Weight and Quality Guaranteed.

Coke and Kindling Wood Constantly on hand at very LOWEST Prices.

T. J. SMITH,

Cor. Haverith and Market Sts.

COAL! COAL!

At Very Lowest Prices.

—ALSO—

All Kinds of Kindling Fuel. Try it.

MARK HEYWOOD,

718 Folsom street.

COAL. COAL.

Lowest Rates.

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL

THOMAS MORTON,

630 Geary Street, San Francisco.

Telephone number, 1112.

DUNDEE COAL CO.

NO COMBINATION.

GREAT REDUCTION

FOREIGN & DOMESTIC COAL

Cole at Our Prices Reduced.

J. FLYNN,

1118 and 1119, Stanton Street.

J. M. JOHNSON,

DEALER IN ALL KINDS OF

Wood, Coal & Charcoal

YARD AT 113 GOLDEN GATE AVENUE.

Office at 200 Sutter St., nr. Kearny

Orders left at "Bulletin" Station, 638 Montgomery street, will receive prompt attention. Telephone connections.

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS.

LOVERS OF MUSIC

Are Respectfully Invited to see the Wonderful Improved

FAY PIANOS

SUPERIOR TO ALL OTHERS.

1729 Mission, opp. Woodward's.

Agents for sale of pianos, or purchasing from manufacturers, Second hand Pianos taken in part payment.

KNABE

PIANO

"For beauty of tone, touch and action have never seen their equal."

"The Knabe" is absolutely the best Piano made.

A. L. BANCROFT & CO.

721 Market Street, S.

SOLE AGENTS FOR THE PACIFIC COAST.

PIANOS

Fine Tuning and Repairing a specialty. Second hand Pianos. HALLET & DAVIS PIANOS. Montgomery Street, under Palace Hotel, S. F.

The Golden Palace

TEA STORE

227 And 229 Second Street,

San Francisco, California.

Has Been Greatly Enlarged to Accommodate the Increased Patronage.

THE CHOICEST GROCERIES ONLY KEPT IN STOCK and sold at prices fully competitive with those of the cheapest. Every article in the house is guaranteed to be as represented, or money will be cheerfully refunded. Goods delivered free to any part of the city. Orders from country will receive the same prompt attention as if personally present. Reference given and terms sent if desired.

Tea on rolls but one year outset with Dr. Price's Cream Baking Powder. It leads to one-half the Potatoes.

We are supported, by a contingent from home, to publish, by official authority, a continuation of the street survey Tyler Square, Oakland, Pittsburg, and been incorporated, in any way, connected, by the Holy See, in any rightful particular.—N. Y. Freeman's Journal.

OUR MODERN BAKERS extra choice New Orleans sugar just sold and sold at 10c. Cash, or exchange for the order of that well known firm of Cole & Co., of Sansome st., Cash Grocers, and sample it. Sold in quantities to suit wholesale retailers.

Happy Management.

"How do you manage," said a lady to her husband, "to appear so happy all the time? I always have Fisher's Ginger Tonic handy," was the reply, "and I take it when I feel faintly in health and spirits." See Ads.

Burnha Cotton Garden Hose

Families will find this a first-class article. It is more proof, lasting, and is the cheapest in the market. Sold by all the leading hardware houses. Ask for Burnha's Cotton Garden Hose. Manufactured by the Burnha Rubber Co., Boston. Mass. It is only by such a method that Cotton Hose can be made and remained.

Lots of many years with A. F. Jones & Co., Sansome street, and Fifth and Howard streets, has just left San Francisco. Tamales, enchiladas, tacos, etc., Sundays. Half prepared to carry orders for balls, banquets and parties promptly attended to. Fine wines and liquors constantly on hand.

Boston Lady friends of ours who have purchased cloaks, suits, underwear, etc., for themselves, from Mrs. Mulvey's, in Boston, have perfectly satisfied with style, fit and price. We have also purchased for ourselves and underwear, etc., and were perfectly satisfied in a trifling expense.

Owen Rosella who so long kept the Columbia Lager Market street, is now keeping the Bay Lager House, Potrero near the Gas House, Rolling Mills and Spreckles Sugar Refinery. The Bay Lager House is commodious and has all the latest appliances, hot and cold water baths etc. Rosella's record as a caterer for the past period of years in San Francisco is a sufficient guarantee that he will be well on a hotel keeper on the Potrero.

Our country readers when visiting the city will find the Brooklyn Hotel, Bush Street, the cheapest, most convenient, and most economical hotel in the city. The rates have been reduced to $1, $1.25 and $1.50 a day; the hotel is adjacent to all the wholesale houses, places of amusement, and the proprietors, Brannan & Fisher—Christ all treat attention to the comfort of their guests.

C. F. Wyse & Co., proprietors of the Tyler Coal and Yard, 649 Mission street, between 3rd and 4th sts, make it a rule to deliver more than 2,240 lbs. as the ton of Coal, and yet charge less than dealers who deliver short weight. Orders left at short weight and slaty coal, will receive prompt attention. Tyler Coal is the choicest of the Coal they furnish their customers, and if you need share a trial order and will be pleased that it pays to deal with a firm who prefers to work honesty in all their dealings.

The National Surgical Institute, 319 Bush street, is the Western Division of the N. S. Institute of Indianapolis and Philadelphia, which has been established for the treatment of Deformities, diseases of the spine, hip, knee, and all Chronic Diseases. Dr. J. Sullivan, surgeon and dentist. Call and see patients, and convalescents. Reference given and terms sent if desired.

Iron no rivals but cure your enteric with Dr. Price's Catarrh Remedy, before it leads to consumption. Sold by druggists.

MEDICAL.

DRS. FRENCH & PETERSON,

Oculists and Aurists,

(Graduates of N. Y. Opthalmic Hospital.

319 GEARY STREET, S. F.

DR. C. O. O'DONNELL,

Office and Residence:

N. W. cor. Kearny and Washington Streets, S. F.

DR. WEBB

HAS REMOVED THE

1023 MISSION STREET,

Bet. Sixth and Seventh.

Of the Mr. John Sullivan's row of houses.

DR. J. G. McELROY,

OFFICE AND RESIDENCE,

832 HOWARD ST.,

San Francisco

OFFICE HOURS: 1 to 4 P. M.

DR. JORDAN'S

Educational Institution

OF

Natural History and Anatomy.

OPEN TO THE PUBLIC.

731 MARKET STREET, 731

Opposite Lapont street.

NEURALGIA CURED IN A FEW MINUTES.

A valuable book in English, German, Spanish or Italian sent free to any address. Private office, $11 Geary street.

DENTISTS.

LIVE AND LET LIVE

Splendid Set of Teeth, only $7.

AT THE DENTAL ROOMS OF T. BOLTON, 904 Market street.

$7 a Set for Teeth.

BOLTON & PERRY.

DENTISTS,

941 Market Street, (old Lonis Building).

UNDERTAKERS.

REMOVAL.

WM. J. MALLADY,

General Undertaker and Coffin Furnisher,

HAS REMOVED TO

733 MISSION STREET, 733

(Opposite Grand Opera House.)

Selling undertaker and personal transportation to any part of the world. The latest supplied with all sizes of Undertaking goods at the Lowest Prices.

Orders attended to at all hours, day or night.

ATKINS MASSEY,

UNDERTAKER

PRACTICAL FURNISHING UNDERTAKER, Metallic Burial Cases always on hand, and Agents for Fisk's Metallic Burial Cases.

Everything necessary for funerals kept constantly on hand. Orders from country will receive prompt attention, at moderate charges.

Office—601 Sacramento street, between Kearny and Webb.

C. O'CONNOR & SHEEHY,

UNDERTAKERS,

767 Mission Street,

Bet. Third and Fourth. San Francisco

Every Requisite for Funerals furnished at the Lowest Rates, and in the Best Manner.

TEL. PLEASANT. R. J. GALLAGHER.

FLANAGAN & GALLACHER,

UNDERTAKERS,

No. 10 FIFTH STREET, Opposite the Lincoln School.

EVERYTHING NECESSARY FOR FUNERALS kept constantly on hand. Orders from the country will receive prompt attention, at moderate charges.

S. F. & N. P. R. R.

SAN FRANCISCO AND NORTH PACIFIC RAILROAD

Commencing Monday, April Sed, 1882, and until further notice Trains will leave San Francisco:

7.10 A. M. Daily (Sundays excepted) via San Rafael, from Market street wharf for Petaluma, Santa Rosa, Healdsburg, Cloverdale, Ukiah and way stations. Stages connect at Healdsburg for Skaggs Springs, at Cloverdale for the Geysers, Kelsey ville, Soda Bay, Lakeport, Upper Lake, and the Springs.

DAILY, EXCEPT SUNDAY.

2.30 P. M. via Donahue, from Washington street wharf.

4.50 P. M. via San Rafael, from Market street wharf, Sundays only.

SUNDAY EXCURSIONS.

8.30 A. M. (Sundays only), via Donahue, from Washington street wharf, for Cloverdale and way stations, and round trip tickets to Santa Rosa, $1.50; Santa Rosa, $1; Healdsburg, $1; Cloverdale, $2.50; Geyserville, $3. Returning will arrive in San Francisco at 5:45 P. M.

8.10 (Sundays only), via San Rafael from Market street wharf, for Miller's Parlors, Sausalito, and Point Tiburon. Returning will arrive in San Francisco at 7:40 P. M.

ARTHUR HUGHES, PETER J. MCGLYNN, Gen. Manager. Gen. Pass. Agent.

SAVE MONEY.

SEND YOUR ADDRESS TO H. A. SMITH, 516 Pine st., San Francisco, Cal., for "Home Circle" containing 1000 Choice Receipts, Valuable Information, and a Beautiful Chromo (free). Each contains a gift worth $1, $2 or $5, Sample, 25 (2c. stamp) best pillow sc. Ten, 50c. each receipt to be free for 50c. or $1 box; everything the best, everything the cheapest, only sent free on receipt of 50c. or $1 box. Ad. and will save you hundreds of dollars in family expenses.

DOORS BOUGHT AND SOLD BY A BOURGOIN 1000 Montgomery street.

$72 A week, $12 a day at home easily made. Costly Outfit free. Address TRUE & CO., Augusta, Me.

MONITOR MENTION.

Very Rev. Joseph Wirth and Rev. Peter Kramer, both Redemptorists, celebrated the silver jubilee of their priesthood, at St. Peter's church, Philadelphia, on the 5th ult.

Best Pictures taken at the Imperial, 724½ Market street.

Pianos, all makers, $50 to $250. Tuning, Repairing. Tobin, 17 Tork.

Cheap, stylish and perfect-fitting suits from $20 up also, patterns out to measure. Mosser, 108 Ninth street, up stairs.

Carpet beating and whitewashing, 335 Tyler, Railroad tracks, 21st and Telegraph avenue; telephone, 7126. Cooklin Bros.

I'm in Love, very comical, cards only 10 cents per set! "The Famous" 1206 Fox St near Market.

Dr. Fielding's Russia Salve in the house use Fielding's Russia Salve in the stable, use it.

Before you buy a Piano call at E. Dunn & Co., 116 Market street and examine the improved Instruments below New York factory prices.

Don't miss the sale of boots and shoes at 1217 Market street. The review of the tariff reduction is no-rent. Sold boots be, order, M. D. A. Hanlyn.

Robert Bell, upholstering, lace curtain, and repairing. Cabinet making in all its branches, 1117 Ellis street, First class workmanship and reasonable charges. Repairing a specialty and promptly attended to.

The celebrated Vegetable Compound for females, which, within a few years, has grown into such a world-wide reputation, is the production of Mrs. Lydia E. Pinkham known to every one of the civilized world as the most successful and well known female practitioner in the treatment of the many ailments and complaints peculiar to her sex. It is a medicine which has proved to be a specific for all those ailments and complaints which are peculiar to woman, and which are the cause of so much misery and premature decay. It is a medicine which has proved itself to be a boon to women, and which, if taken according to the directions, will do all that is claimed for it. It restores the mother, it gives vigor and strength to the female system, it gives tone to the nervous system, it gives a healthy and vigorous appetite, it gives a healthy and vigorous body, it gives a healthy and vigorous mind, it gives a healthy and v

WAR IN EGYPT.

ALEXANDRIA DESTROYED.

Shocking Scenes of Pillage.

The Convicts Massacre the People.

The Arabs Abandon Alexandria.

LONDON, July 17 h.—The Standard's correspondent on board the Invincible, telegraphing at 9 o'clock this morning, says: The whole civil population and troops have withdrawn. The whole Grand Square is burned. The Hafiera, which went to discover the meaning of the last flag of truce last evening, could discover nobody on board the Egyptian vessel Mahrouse, or in the arsenal.

The correspondent accompanied an officer to the shore in the steam pinnace. The purveyor of the fleet, who was one of the party and who was well acquainted with the town, then landed and proceeded a considerable distance. All was perfectly silent but for the roar of the flames. It is believed that Arabi Pasha has concentrated his forces beyond the city to oppose British advance.

The work of the ships is now over, and further action must be taken. Fully half the town is burning. There will be a landing in force to investigate the condition of things, and if possible to render aid. It will probably be three or four hours before this landing can be effected.

A dispatch to the Times confirms the statement that a body of marines and sailors was dued to be landed. It is now says that the hold of the Egyptian army is at Rosetta, forty miles northwest of Alexandria, but by all Oriental probability night miles south-east of Alexandria. The sailors had joined in the work of the ship before leaving.

In a telegram sent at 7:35 a. m., Admiral Seymour confirms the report of the evacuation of Alexandria by the Egyptian garrison, which withdrew under the fire of the British fleet, and joined the rebels in the interior. The Admiral says the Egyptian troops have not been instructed to invite the Khedive to assert his authority. The landing of the British forces for police purposes was to be in concert with the Khedive or any native authority in Alexandria, and any of the European men-of-war crews to be invited to assist.

Protests were made from the Consularates of Greece against the brilliance of these proceedings.

The Khedive, replying to the question, said the Government had not yet been informed where Arabi Pasha is.

Hotheiss asked why the Government had not been willing to protect the terrified crowds in Alexandria.

Cherif replied that the Government could not have anticipated them.

At the Bourse, last, Rent Greaville, Further Secretary, stated that if the fleet at Alexandria bombed the defenses of town they would be sent. There was, he said, no reason to believe that any of the guns powers contained the bombarding of Alexandria as other than an act of self-defense.

The Burning City.

CAIRO, Alexandria, July 14.—[Via A. R.—Fire in the city is still raging, and it is now are seen running about with terrified faces.

Fire is now in the Grand Square, the Custom House has been burned and Christian quarter is burning wildly, have been massacred.

The rebels set the European quarter on fire. From the part they were defending the European quarter, they fired the shots and excited attacks and guns. Scenes of fugitives were witnessed by hundreds to death in that night. The European quarters is all in flames and the great square is a mass of ruins. All the public buildings are destroyed, and nothing European seems to remain standing. The Greek Consulate, Serai and stable have been fired within the last two hours into the hands of the rebels. Some European broke out, in hopes that they may save the Egypt there. This that all the Europeans perish in the fire. The rebels are in the Grand Square, and the Custom House is burning. The Grand Square is the scene of the massacre of hundreds of European captives, then to break out. The Court House of the International Tribunal, the Grand Square, the Custom House, Grand Bank is also preserved. The street of the Grand Square is many dead and great number of Turkish. But very few Italian have been killed. The bodies of the troops deserted during the bombardment.

The Russian Manoeuvres.

LONDON, July 16.—An Alexandria special says: The number of persons massacred by the rebels is estimated at 1,000.

Female Friends.

LONDON, July 14.—A correspondent on the Bosphorus, Alexandria, says: Women were seen firing the houses with petroleum.

The Sultan Wants to Make Peace.

ALEXANDRIA, July 14.—[Via A. R.—A correspondent with Arabi Pasha at Kafr Dawar, has been imprisoned on stake and showing great anxiety to be landed. French Consul House, Mr. Khedive. The Consul confirmed the report that Arabi Pasha had ordered the murder of the Khedive, and asserted that Arabi had ordered the cutting of the town before putting it. The Arabs have been seized with plunder and beaten thoroughly. Natives Arabs have been arrested with a large quantity of loot in their possession. The Arabs landed dirty marines under command of Captain Cochrane.

VIEWS OF COMMANDER GORRINGE.

An American Opinion of the Bombardment of Alexandria.

CHICAGO, July 14.—The Times' special from New York says: Lieutenant-Commander Gorringe, who spent over eight months in Alexandria, preparing to remove the obelisk, has been interviewed by a World reporter. He thinks the bombardment a brutal and inexplicable act; that the British Government wanted a pretext for war as the National Party in Egypt to get control of the Suez Canal. England, he says, will have no difficulty in subduing the Egyptian Army in a short time after bombline on land begin, unless the Admirals and generals should continue to make such mistakes as have been made by Admiral Seymour. "I cannot conceive," says he, "how it was possible for him to let Arabi Bey and the Egyptian Army escape from Alexandria as he did. That army could not have escaped from the fortifications without having attained themselves to the guns of the British fleet, in such a way as to ensure their own destruction. If any attempt was made to destroy them." He further says: "It will, doubtless, take

MILLIONS OF DOLLARS TO REPAIR

The damages to the fortifications. The English squadron and the Levantine Christian settlement which is larger than the other two together, are composed largely of fine city blocks, and the losses from the conflagration must be considerable." "What part do you suppose Arabi Pasha and his soldiers had in the firing party and atrocities which have followed?"

"Nothing; I think the perpetrators belong to the same class of Levantine Christians and Maltese Englishmen, who were forestorers of the recent massacres last year. As he has an army to oppose any movement he may make, Arabi has no risks in dividing his forces. I think he is going with a detachment of troops to the Suez Canal, with the intention of destroying it. Another detachment is retreating to Cairo, intending to make a stand there. The British have now done their worst until they have had time to land in force. They have

NOT WAITED ENOUGH

In the Nile for gunboats to ascend the river to Cairo. Even at high water there is not more than five or six feet of water on the bar at the mouth, while the smallest of the English gunboats draw from six to twelve feet. It will be land most depend for future operation entirely on what we have from Malta. As he has an army to oppose any movement he may make, Arabi has no risks in dividing his forces. I think he is going with a detachment of troops to the Suez Canal, with the intention of destroying it. Another detachment is retreating to Cairo, intending to make a stand there. The British have now done their worst until they have had time to land in force. They have

NOT WAITED ENOUGH

In the Nile for gunboats to ascend the river to Cairo. Even at high water there is not more than five or six feet of water on the bar at the mouth, while the smallest of the English gunboats draw from six to twelve feet. It will be land most depend for future operation entirely on what we have from Malta. As he has an army to oppose any movement he may make, Arabi has no risks in dividing his forces. I think he is going with a detachment of troops to the Suez Canal, with the intention of destroying it. Another detachment is retreating to Cairo, intending to make a stand there. The British have now done their worst until they have had time to land in force. They have

THE MARKET FOR WHEAT.

The most important question with our farmers now is what price can they get for their wheat. The United States is prepared to buy wheat at a fair price. The last report of the Agricultural Department at Washington, giving the condition of the crop up to June 1st, warranted the expectation that the wheat crop this year will be large to the great crop of 1880. The condition of the crop throughout the country generally is decidedly improved since June 1st, as shown by the June bulletin. The price of wheat will depend upon the foreign market for the large surplus in this country, so that it behoves our farmers to know what are the prospects of the foreign market. It is reasonable to think that the British wheat will not exceed the average, which is Farmer Gray's crop will probably fall short of the average. There have been in Europe and some parts of Russia, from which regions we have been accustomed to receive large supplies. If this opinion that good prices are likely to prevail, it is well to know that we should be disturbance in Egypt, much in your Egypt, which is the source of the cotton crop, and which is the source of the cotton crop, and which is the source of the cotton crop, and

Poetry.

(For the Monitor.)

SUNSET OVER THE SEA.

Far from the maddening hamlets of men
Forgetting and forgot,
When spent, yet dazzled, some again
I seek this silent spot.

God's beauty now the scene doth crown
With holy peace and rest,
Silence the golden sun thus down
To kiss the western sea.

In splendor through the Summer skies,
The golden sun hath lived,
That seen as fields of paradise
And pathway up to God.

As if in love the ocean smiles
Wooed by the gentle breeze;
Full sweet with fragrance from the isles,
Of sunny southern seas.

Upon the deep a lone sea bird
Flits by on weary wing
And in the silence nearest is heard
Save ocean's murmuring.

Alas, the twilight expires
With sunny side vanished,
To chase the golden sun that thus
Adorn the eastland.

And all the glorious of paradise
Is blushing on the sea.
The same—sunlight, moonlight, and the skies—
The matter plane of God!

Oh! all the brilliance in these Filled with Thy mystery,
The chiefest but a voice divine
Of song sung in unity.

Overawed with Thy beauty now I view
Like the Israelite of old,
Thou draw the spirit nearer to
The God that shall unfold.

O let this sunset dwell in my heart
Till in my soul shall be,
This beauty as a superscript
Of holiness in Thee.

E. M., Villejo, Cal.

Literary Miscellany.

Father is Coming.

A TRUE STORY WITH A MORAL.

"Hush, Nellie; father is coming.

There was an instant hush in the merry laugh of the golden-haired Nellie; the away smile died away from her lips, and a chill, as of ice, passed over her heart.

And all because "Father is coming."

The door opened, and "father" entered. He was a man who had, perhaps, attained the age of thirty years. In his features there was no refinement, and you could read in every line of his face tokens of a will that bended not to mortal and passed at no trifling block. Had you met him, however, in his place of business, you would have found him a different sort of man entirely. Stepping in one of his cozy office chairs, and conversing with his customers on matters of business, you would have been charmed by the kind, considerate, and even by his generosity. There was over a smile upon his face, and a word of cheer for every one.

He greeted those who called in such a kind and cordial manner, that the stranger would feel at home in his presence.

"Mr. Parker is a most excellent man." And the customers of Mr. Parker, who having called upon Mr. Parker at his place of business, back to his old allegiance the task might have been an easy one. The co. . . . fishness and worldly ways may not have completely covered his heart. But she gave herself up to his side, without an attempt to stem it. The current at first was not strong, but what a few weeks could have changed its course and returned it to its natural channel. But the few words had not been said. The seal on her lips had done more to close the fountain than all else. She had forgotten a wife's first duty, and hence all the ills that had followed.

So grew up a partial estrangement of heart. Their sympathies were not in common, their feelings were not the same. Not that they were wanting in husband's duty and wifely faith. But there was a link, once possessed, but now lost. Could it be found and restored to its position, perfect harmony would be the result. Happiness would again brood over the heartstone, and peace spread her white unsullied wings over them.

But the lost link. Where was it? Could a reward be offered for it? Could they, by a liberal offer, search and find the precious pearl? Under what rubbish of years did it lay hid? "Father is coming."

As he entered, the mother whispered to Nellie and the child leaves the room. She returns in a moment and makes some reply. Mr. Parker looks on but says nothing.

"Dinner will soon be served", and his wife in answer to the thought that evidently engrossed his attention at that moment.

He seated himself by the window, picked up a paper, and commenced reading. The lonely way in which he unfolded it showed his irritation at the delay; but he forgot that in the morning he had left no word as to the hour of his return and the usual hour for dining had not arrived. Hitherto no lessons or thoughtlessness, or whatever you choose to call it, was to blame. But this he could not see, and he was in heart, laid the responsibility upon the shoulders of his wife. He relaxed at Nellie had been to the kitchen with a word to the servant.

A few moments passed in silence, each busy with their own thoughts.

He was vexed at the delays; she conscious of giving to offence, was irritated at his obtuse manner, gave up all idea of conciliatory measures, and so widened the breach.

If at fault, surely she was pardonable.

At last the dinner bell sounded.

The meal was soon over, and Mr. Parker rose from the table, took his hat, and was about having when his wife said:

"What time will you be home this evening?"

"I cannot tell, was the reponse. "My business may detain me longer than usual. Why do you ask the question?"

"I thought of taking Nellie out to see Aunt Emma."

"Well, you can be at home when I return."

"If I know at what hour you would come up, you."

Mr. Parker paused. Then remarking "Well, be home early, at any rate, left the room.

The uncertainty of the reply almost tempted Mrs. Parker to adhere to her intention, and pay the visit contemplated. For a moment she pondered over it, and thought how pleasant it would be, if she would remain at home even at the mandate of the tyrannic Mr. Nellie. The child loved her fashion; it brought a tear to her eye we need not wonder, and in the heart-ache of one the other paid visit.

"Never mind, mother, I can wait."

"Hush, darling," was all the mother could reply.

A devout man, now deceased, used to say that Mass was his harbor of refuge, and that during that brief half-hour he felted himself to be secure from the allurements and temptations in which he was profoundly engaged all day. He would far rather have missed his breakfast than have missed mass.

It is said that all the Catholic Kings of England, except perhaps Rufus and John, heard Mass daily. Henry VIII. is only days heard three or four Masses daily.

We read in the life of St. John the Almoner of two kings made who had been brought up at the same school, and had both much the same advantages. One of them married, and had many children and nephews to provide for, but was so successful in everything that he not only provided for his current wants, but also invested a good sum of money every year for his children. The other was always in difficulties. He was scarcely ever able to pay his bills, and in all respects the world was against him. One day meeting the prosperous companion of his early youth, he asked him how it was that he was blessed in all he undertook, whereas he himself had never succeeded in earning a decent maintenance. "I will call on morrow morning and show you the secret of all my success", was the reply. He called early in the morning and asked the poor man to be company him to church. The poor man was astonished; the prosperous tradesman called again the next day with a similar invitation, and he went. Well, said the poor man to himself, "if all I have to do to get out of my present miserable state is to go to church, I can well afford to try the new way to church." Precisely so," said the prosperous tradesman, "I never go to bed nor rise without having first been to Mass; and try to act up strictly to the injunction of our Lord, "Seek ye first the Kingdom of God and His justice, and all things shall be added unto you" (Mat. vi. 33.) The poor man followed the advice he had received, and God then speedily blessed him, giving him as ease and prosperity even in this life such as he had never enjoyed before.

These are examples of temporal blessings rewarded by hearing Mass; but, though temporal blessings are not always the fruit of the Mass instead, unspeakable blessings are its natural fruit, such as you will never appreciate until you contemplate them in the light of heavenly glory.

Thank God, we have many examples of large bands of industrious people and men of business going daily to Mass. All testify to the fact that it has been their pride; it has been their joy; it has been their loss.

To be within reach of daily Mass during life, and voluntarily to throw away this inestimable privilege and its blessings, is folly, great enough to set the soul wondering at its blindness for all eternity.—Bishop Vaughan.

Dust on your Glasses.

I don't often put on my glasses to examine Katy's work; but one morning, long since, I did so upon entering a room she had been sweeping.

"Did you forget to open the windows when you swept, Katy?" I inquired; "there is very much dust."

"I think there is dust on your eyeglasses, mamma," she said, modestly.

And sure enough, the eye-glasses were at fault. . . . and now I always wipe them, and . . . . . get the sunlight and glass, the dust and mist, out of my own eyes.

"I am glad it was the glasses, and not me this time."

"That sought was a good lesson," I said to myself, upon leaving the room, and one I shall remember long in life.

In the evening Katy came to me with some kindness to do, her face all aglow and so sad-eyed, and she had said so-and-so. When her story was finished, I said, smilingly:

"There is dust on your glasses, Katy, or you would not see blemishes."

She understood me, and left the room.

I said the incident to the children, and it is quite common to hear them say to each other.

"Oh, there is dust on your glasses."

Sometimes I am referred to.

"Mamma, Harry has dust on his glasses; can's he rub it off?"

When I hear a person criticising another, condemning, perhaps, a correct action he knows nothing about, drawing inferences from something he does not understand, I think, "There's dust on your glasses; rub it off." The truth is, everybody sees clearly years when they cast aspersions. I said so to John one day, some little matter coming up that concerned both the master and servant.

"There are some people I wish would come in rich, and others I wish they were So, and Mrs. Second So, they are always ready to pick at some one, to slur, to hint; I never can stand them."

"I think my son John has a cow bit on his glasses just now."

He laughed and asked—

"What is a bee's bee?"

"Keep your own well rubbed up, and you will not know whether others need it bee."

"I will," he replied.

I think, as a family, we are all profiting by that little incident, and through life will never forget the morning of "There is dust on your glasses."

A Big Country

The census of agriculture will show that there are 500 million acres in farms and 287 million acres of improved land. The value of the farms amounts to $10,197,161,000, or five times the national debt; rains of farm implements $1,000,000,000. There are 10,207,000 horses in the country, or one to every five human beings, about the same proportion as in 1870. A little above 4,000,000 working oxen, 2,443,000 cows, 47,000,000 swine and 16,812,000 sheep and lambs. In 1860 there were 2,154,000 working oxen in the country, more than double the present number. Apparently the ox "must go." Horses and mules are more adaptable to modern agricultural machinery. It is fortunate in some respects that it is so, for we cannot do not eat the beef and veal. We could be glad to have had a good deal plenitier than it is. Other staples, cotton and rice, do not eat the 22,468,000 as against 13,756,000 in 1870.

Sayings of the Wise.

A bad book is a thief of the worst kind. All is not sun that is pleasant to the eye. An empty purse is heavy. A new broom makes a man wise too late.

A few of words is no proof of wisdom.

A wise man aims at nothing out of his reach.

A man may be great by chance, but never good by chance.

One that knows how to speak, knows also when to be silent.

Avoid a slanderer as you would a serpent.

A moment of time is a moment of mercy.

And sure enough, the eye-glasses were at fault. . . . and now I always wipe them, and . . . . . get the sunlight and glass, the dust and mist, out of my own eyes.

"I am glad it was the glasses, and not me this time."

"That sought was a good lesson," I said to myself, upon leaving the room, and one I shall remember long in life.

In the evening Katy came to me with some kindness to do, her face all aglow and so sad-eyed, and she had said so-and-so. When her story was finished, I said, smilingly:

"There is dust on your glasses, Katy, or you would not see blemishes."

She understood me, and left the room.

I said the incident to the children, and it is quite common to hear them say to each other.

"Oh, there is dust on your glasses."

Sometimes I am referred to.

"Mamma, Harry has dust on his glasses; can's he rub it off?"

When I hear a person criticising another, condemning, perhaps, a correct action he knows nothing about, drawing inferences from something he does not understand, I think, "There's dust on your glasses; rub it off." The truth is, everybody sees clearly years when they cast aspersions. I said so to John one day, some little matter coming up that concerned both the master and servant.

"There are some people I wish would come in rich, and others I wish they were So, and Mrs. Second So, they are always ready to pick at some one, to slur, to hint; I never can stand them."

"I think my son John has a cow bit on his glasses just now."

He laughed and asked—

"What is a bee's bee?"

"Keep your own well rubbed up, and you will not know whether others need it bee."

"I will," he replied.

I think, as a family, we are all profiting by that little incident, and through life will never forget the morning of "There is dust on your glasses."

The Pope and the Comets.

More credulous and a great deal more simple hearted than the ancients, our ancestors no doubt would have noted, as something great, the recent comet, and, the number of comets that have appeared in the heavens since 1870, it is a little strange in Cole's of the prophecy attributed to St. Malachy, has been noted on the Chair of St. Peter. Another new comet, as most of our readers will remember, was discovered the morning of the death of Pius IX. not unlikely to prove a bright and conspicuous light in the heavens, some even anticipating that it would be visible while during the daylight. The time of its nearest approach to our globe, as calculated approximately from its first observations, is set down for the middle of the month. For comets, about which observations have been recorded, have approached so nearly within the orbit of the earth as to enable to approach. Would not astrologers of days gone by have found in such appearance of this light in the heavens to the sun betokened that the Lumen in Coelo was approaching brighter times? And, without trusting to the astrological absurdities, would it be too curious to argue that there are signs that the efforts of Leo XIII. to recall the nations of the earth to their allegiance to the Chair of Peter.—Catholic Progress.

Colds—Ammen's Cough Syrup.

Ask to see large bottle—Ammen's Cough Syrup.

RELIGIOUS SCHOOLS.

A Methodist Bishop Denounces the Experiment of Separating Religion from Education.

The following is the address of Bishop Wiley, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, delivered recently at the Central Methodist church, Detroit:

President T. B. Fiske introduced Bishop Wiley, who said that this country would compare favorably with other countries in educational matters. In proportion to the number of inhabitants we have more institutions devoted to the advancement of education than any other nation. One of the essential elements of our American life is the problem of education. Where undertaken a new movement in the line of education, it has passed through periods of history, education and religion have been married. At the present day we are trying the experiment of divorce. All the education of the world has come from the Church. All our educational institutions had their origin in the Church. Within sixteen years after the Pilgrims landed upon Plymouth Rock they laid the foundations of what is now the great institution known as Harvard College. All higher education comes from the Church. Our State institutions are divorced from religion, and every where we find what may be called sacrilegious schools. It is claimed that we must have no Methodism in the public schools because "Catholicism" is not admitted, and the Jewish faith kept out. Consequently we are building what are known as "secularist" schools and colleges, and a synonymous term would be "unchristian." The Bible and religion are excluded, and the literature admitted is not only admitted, but taught to the students. Infidelity teach no republicanism, perhaps, they certainly teach no godliness, and it is impossible to make a godly, religious man out of a student who has no religion in his education. Christian thoughts are carefully excluded from the schools of to-day, and instead of religious teaching other branches of literature are introduced. The mind is made to concentrate not the heart or the soul, only the mind.

The heart is filled with mentally educated men; brilliant in intellect, but with no religion. Wanting in their education, the children should be educated upon all sides of their nature, so that they may be symmetrical men. The speaker knew where a school had even gone so far as to throw aside the Bible as a school-book because it contained a reference to God. Our schools have become godless, with every vestige of religion banished therefrom. The State must do, perhaps, just what it is doing. It may be impracticable, may be impossible for the State to foster one religion to the exclusion of others. It may be true that if the State is to foster Protestantism, it must also foster "Catholicism," and Judaism. But the speaker saw no other way. Unless we give the whole matter of education attention the higher education will and must be given into sectarian hands. It is the duty of the friends of every Christian denomination to provide schools for the furthering of Christian education. The different denominations cannot unite on one style of school, but you can establish a Methodist school and do good work in your way. You may have we have public schools and the high schools, but there is some of the Christian thoughts in these schools that are needed. There is no religion in these schools. You must fit up and make institutions of religious learning.

The Church must either deliver all the education over to the State to the exclusion of religion or take up the work and establish institutions of a sectarian character. We are to be taxed by the State for support of the undenominational colleges, but can pay for the support of your own schools and colleges. He questioned the correctness of the assertion that a teacher can instruct two hundred and fifty students as well as three hundred, and he thought he should much prefer that a son of his should be a member of a class of twenty-five than of three hundred. The speaker was in one the great, crowded State institutions. A better, more symmetrical education can be obtained where the numbers are less and instruction better.

Bishop Wiley noted that when God set men to work it was not to provide for their material welfare, but that they might eat. It is the business of man in his more perfect development to acquire wealth, and enormous accumulations have already been made. Put a little skill and thought into anything, and it will yield an increase. Put a little more, and the useless worthless one is increased, perhaps, a hundred, thousand fold. "There's dust on your glasses; rub it off." The truth is, everybody sees clearly years when they cast aspersions. I said so to John one day, some little matter coming up that concerned both the master and servant.

"There are some people I wish would come in rich, and others I wish they were So, and Mrs. Second So, they are always ready to pick at some one, to slur, to hint; I never can stand them."

"I think my son John has a cow bit on his glasses just now."

He laughed and asked—

"What is a bee's bee?"

"Keep your own well rubbed up, and you will not know whether others need it bee."

"I will," he replied.

I think, as a family, we are all profiting by that little incident, and through life will never forget the morning of "There is dust on your glasses."

On the Advantage of Hearing Mass.

Frightful Immorality in the New England States.

The Rev. Dr. Leonard W. Bacon has an article in the current Princeton Review in which he avers that "actual polygamy prevails among the New Englanders to a greater extent than among the Mohammedans." There is no difference now but most people will be inclined to regard as capital, but which Mr. Bacon calls trifling. It is that among the Mormons or Mohammedans polygamy is simultaneous, while in New England it is consecutive. The law of the New England States is supreme. It prohibits and punishes polygamy in the strictest terms, and none of these is openly practiced. But Mr. Bacon appeals to what he regards a higher than the New England law—to that, namely, of the New Testament, which does not authorize divorce, save upon the ground of adultery, and then the separation does not affect the obligation of marriage during the life time of either party. Wherefore it is only by judicial license, not by Divine permission, that New England commits polygamy and polyandry. "In the New England States," says Mr. Bacon, "we have the first instance, perhaps, of a polygamous people whose laws and habits are carried out tolerably and consistently without regard to sex—who first, and by a concerted act, forbid the marriage of women." In Connecticut, alone, according to Mr. Bacon, "the annual issue of the total number of marriages," and the number is increasing in the last decade, and is fast approaching when "every shall depart" between the sexes. Well, said the "apostolic delegates from the Latter-Day Saints shall be received into the Church of Christ at the national council of Congregationalists, and Methodist Bishops from New Haven shall be consecrated to the peculiar sacharist of the Deseret temple."

A Catholic Clergyman on Anti-Irish Persecution.

The South Staffordshire Chronicle, of May 8th, says: "On Sunday morning, instead of delivering the usual services at the Wolverhampton Town Hall, Father Vaughan spoke at some length in reference to the recent massacre of the Irish, and said the following extract from his address:—

Since ever I was able to form an opinion about what I read or saw, one constant stream of obloquy has been poured on the Catholic Church and the Irish people—one which my over Irish and recreant Irishmen who have lived; but my earliest recollections, I have lived in a country where the Irish represented him as praying upon the most situation a leading Roman journal says: "Full of confidence we shall continue the good fight, convinced of the infallibility that never a word worthy of being remembered was spoken by a Protestant in that place. He was at once indicted for infringing the law referred to and the police magistrate sentenced him to a fine of ten francs. The prosecutor Abba did not pay the penalty, but was sent to prison for two days in default. Mgr. Horewski was consecrated Bishop thirty-four years ago. Three Bishops are now in exile. Mgr. Feliński, Archbishop of Warsaw, Mgr. Krasinsky, Bishop of Podlachia, and Mgr. Zarwinski, coadjutor of Mgr. Feliński. The two first are at Wiatka, in Siberia; and Mgr. Harcinski is at Kostroma. Fifteen new Polish Bishops will be appointed at the next Consistory; and it is to be hoped that the Russian rulers will be speedily restored to their widowed dioceses.

The Church in South Africa.

The Most Rev. John Leonard, Bishop of Grandriqua, c.p.t., and Vicar Apostolic of the Western District of the Cape of Good Hope, is now on a visit to the Archbishop of the Holy See, visiting various cities of Europe on business connected with his diocese. He was recently arrived in London.

The Bishop has left some idea of the spiritual and temporal needs of his Lordship's vast diocese. Speaking of the progress of the present year the vicarate was about 30,000 square miles in extent, or nearly as large as Ireland; and the two adjacent district there are at present only ten priests in the whole. Overlooking some of the present year, the Holy See placed under Dr. Leonard's jurisdiction, in addition to the foregoing, an extra district of upwards of 40,000 square miles, called the Central District, and he has two priests now confined to his care are more than 10,000 square miles, and the two islands, viz., St. Helena, 1700 miles, and Ascension, 2200 miles from the Bishop's residence at Cape Town. For these two districts he has only ten priests, whilst poor Catholics are to be found in the remotest portions of them, viz., as far north as the banks of the Congo, and as far south as the valley of Knysna, as well as on the islands of St. Helena and Ascension. The entire population of the vicarate is 1,000,000, of whom not 500 are Catholics, and they many of them are scattered, living as labourers or servants on farms at great distances from the nearest priest, and, of course, almost lost to the Church. Many of the children who have been baptized as Catholics have never seen a Catholic church, and, in fact, unless the missionary staff is largely increased, must be left without priests for upwards of two years without having had an opportunity of receiving the sacraments of Penance and the Blessed Eucharist, and it is to be feared that some have died without the consolations of Religion. Dr. Leonard writes: To remedy in part at least this and state of things, and in obedience to our Holy Father, in XIII., I have already secured 28 volunteers for the missionary work in my extensive diocese, amongst whom are four priests, three deacons, the remainder lay students, and one fourth-year priestly student, and, in addition to the above mentioned, there are other priests and students ready to volunteer for the work as soon as I shall feel myself justified in entrusting their services, and able to provide for their necessary expenses to Africa.—Ibid.

Queer French Laws.

France contains about thirty-six million Catholics, and only just 600,000 Protestants. It is to say, there are 36,000,000 Protestant to every sixty Catholics. Yet strange to say there is a law, dated the 14th Germinal of the year X. of the Republican era, or in other words, April 4th, 1802, according to which no Catholic procession may be held in places where there exists a Protestant church. Now, some Catholic villages have churches, parish priest at Charenton, arrested a protestant at that place. He was at once indicted for infringing the law referred to and the police magistrate sentenced him to a fine of ten francs. The prosecutor Abba did not pay the penalty, but was sent to prison for two days in default. Mgr. Horewski was consecrated Bishop thirty-four years ago. Three Bishops are now in exile. Mgr. Feliński, Archbishop of Warsaw, Mgr. Krasinsky, Bishop of Podlachia, and Mgr. Zarwinski, coadjutor of Mgr. Feliński. The two first are at Wiatka, in Siberia; and Mgr. Harcinski is at Kostroma. Fifteen new Polish Bishops will be appointed at the next Consistory; and it is to be hoped that the Russian rulers will be speedily restored to their widowed dioceses.

Rome.

Rome is now in some sense the capital of the spiritual and temporal needs of his Lordship's vast diocese. Speaking of the progress of the present year the vicarate was about 30,000 square miles in extent, or nearly as large as Ireland; and the two adjacent district there are at present only ten priests in the whole. Overlooking some of the present year, the Holy See placed under Dr. Leonard's jurisdiction, in addition to the foregoing, an extra district of upwards of 40,000 square miles, called the Central District, and he has two priests now confined to his care are more than 10,000 square miles, and the two islands, viz., St. Helena, 1700 miles, and Ascension, 2200 miles from the Bishop's residence at Cape Town. For these two districts he has only ten priests, whilst poor Catholics are to be found in the remotest portions of them, viz., as far north as the banks of the Congo, and as far south as the valley of Knysna, as well as on the islands of St. Helena and Ascension. The entire population of the vicarate is 1,000,000, of whom not 500 are Catholics, and they many of them are scattered, living as labourers or servants on farms at great distances from the nearest priest, and, of course, almost lost to the Church. Many of the children who have been baptized as Catholics have never seen a Catholic church, and, in fact, unless the missionary staff is largely increased, must be left without priests for upwards of two years without having had an opportunity of receiving the sacraments of Penance and the Blessed Eucharist, and it is to be feared that some have died without the consolations of Religion. Dr. Leonard writes: To remedy in part at least this and state of things, and in obedience to our Holy Father, in XIII., I have already secured 28 volunteers for the missionary work in my extensive diocese, amongst whom are four priests, three deacons, the remainder lay students, and one fourth-year priestly student, and, in addition to the above mentioned, there are other priests and students ready to volunteer for the work as soon as I shall feel myself justified in entrusting their services, and able to provide for their necessary expenses to Africa.—Ibid.

Queer French Laws.

France contains about thirty-six million Catholics, and only just 600,000 Protestants. It is to say, there are 36,000,000 Protestant to every sixty Catholics. Yet strange to say there is a law, dated the 14th Germinal of the year X. of the Republican era, or in other words, April 4th, 1802, according to which no Catholic procession may be held in places where there exists a Protestant church. Now, some Catholic villages have churches, parish priest at Charenton, arrested a protestant at that place. He was at once indicted for infringing the law referred to and the police magistrate sentenced him to a fine of ten francs. The prosecutor Abba did not pay the penalty, but was sent to prison for two days in default. Mgr. Horewski was consecrated Bishop thirty-four years ago. Three Bishops are now in exile. Mgr. Feliński, Archbishop of Warsaw, Mgr. Krasinsky, Bishop of Podlachia, and Mgr. Zarwinski, coadjutor of Mgr. Feliński. The two first are at Wiatka, in Siberia; and Mgr. Harcinski is at Kostroma. Fifteen new Polish Bishops will be appointed at the next Consistory; and it is to be hoped that the Russian rulers will be speedily restored to their widowed dioceses.

A NEW DEPARTURE

IN THE GROCERY TRADE!

LOW RENTS

The Cause of Low Prices

The Long-Established Firm

SBARBORO & CO.

Still in the Lead!!

MESSRS. SBARBORO & CO.

Who have done business at

531 WASHINGTON ST. 531

During the past thirty years, again desire to remind the public who purchase

GROCERIES

That their great business success has achieved through the adoption of correct business principles among which were the following:

1. To Purchase all our Goods for Cash.
2. Give Honest Weight and Full Measure.

These have been the Cardinal points which have made the House of

MESSRS. SBARBORO & CO.

The constant resort of customers who can appreciate the fact that they can purchase to advantage at

FRESHER, PURER AND CHEAPER

Groceries than from any other store in the city hence our customers are constantly with us because we give them good value for their outlay.

OUR PRICE CURRENT

Is changed every week to suit the fluctuations in the market, so that readers of the MONITOR, commencing this column every week will find the our prices are within a shade as low as Groceries can be purchased for by the ounce.

SBARBORO & CO'S. PRICE CURRENT LIST FOR JULY, 1886.

SUGARS.—REDUCED.

Cubes,	9 lb.	1dollr
A. Granulated	9 "	1 "
Dry Granulated	9 "	1 "
Extra C.	9 "	1 "
Golden D.	9 "	1 "
Island, in bags,	9 "	1 "

AT REFINERY RATES.

Raw Cuban 9 lbs.

COFFEE.

Choice Rio Coffee, Green, 8c. 1 lb.
Fine Java Coffee, Green, 9 lb.
Fresh Roasted Coffee, 9 lb.
Fresh Ground Coffee, 9 lb.

TEA.—NEW CROP JUST ARRIVED.

Black Oolong Tea (choice) 9 lb.
Black Oolong Tea (fine flavor) 9 lb.
Mixed Green and Black Tea, 9 lb.
Japan Tea (mixed Nibs) 9 lb.
Green Young Hyson Tea, 9 lb.
Green Young Hyson Tea, 9 lb.

CANNED GOODS.

Tomatoes, 2 cans,
Tomatoes, 3 cans,
Assorted Pie Fruit, 2 cans,
Assorted Pie Fruit, 3 cans,
Pineapples, 2 cans,
Pineapples, 3 cans,
Jams and Jellies, 2 cans,

EXTRACTS.

Assorted Flavoring Extracts, 9 doz.

VEGETABLES.

Tomatoes, 2 cans,
Beans, 2 cans,
Corn, 2 cans,
Assorted Vegetables, 2 cans,
Peas, 2 cans,
Pumpkin, 2 cans,
Succotash, 2 cans,
Asparagus, 2 cans,
Beans, 2 cans,

PROVISIONS.

Lard, 9 lb.
Lard, 9 lb.
Hams, 9 lb.

FISH.

Mackerel, Mackerel, 9 cans,
Mackerel, 9 cans,
Salmon, 2 cans,
Salmon, 3 cans,
Sardines, 2 cans,
Sardines, 3 cans,
Salmon Bonless, 1 lb

PICKLES.

Assorted Pickles, 9 bottle,
Pickles, 9 lb.
Pickles, 9 lb.

MEAL.

Meale of all kinds, 9 lb.

FLOUR.

Harlem Lake kit is a large supply of Flour kept constantly on hand at the lowest market price.

N. B.—The Manager of our house having TWENTY-FIVE YEARS' EXPERIENCE in the grocery business in this city, and being expert in buying large stocks of goods, is a guarantee that under his management we are able to sell first class GROCERIES CHEAPER than any other house on this Coast. Examine our goods and prices before purchasing your supplies. Just judge for yourself. Economy is the result trading with us. Wealth is the result of economy. All orders promptly and carefully filled and delivered to any part of the city, Oakland, Alameda free of charge. Country orders solicited and made a specialty and shipped free of charge.

SEND FOR OUR PRICE LIST

SBARBORO & CO.

S. SBARBORO, Manager.

Family Fun.

What Stopped Him

Some weeks since, while a party of Detroit young men were running a railroad line down in Indiana, the survey carried them across a small village. The chief of the survey a small stake was driven into a grove, and before it was removed and carried ahead a lathy, long-legged Hoosier overhauled the men, peeled of his coat, and danced around as he piled out:

"Show me the man who dared drive that stake into that grove."

"We are going to remove it," quietly replied one of the party.

"I don't care if you are—show me the man."

"Well, I'm the man, and what are you going to do about it?" said the big man of the lot as he stepped out.

"Didn't you know that was my wife's grave?" asked the Hoosier with a considerable fall to his voice.

"No, sir."

"Well, it is, sir—my first wife's grave."

"And what of that?"

"What of that!—Why—why, sir, if I hadn't married a second one about a month ago and kinder forgot my grief, I'd take this marvel of a stake and lay you with it! It's lucky for you fellers—mighty lucky for you that I don't feel half as bad as I do."

What Conducted His Wife.

Mr. Blank was so enthusiastic, and what most amused his acquaintances, over the dying words of some of the great men who had lived on the earth. He had a book in which he noted the last words of all the great philosophers, statesmen, warriors and other celebrities that had ever been reported. He was addicted to quoting "Head of the Angels," Lawrence; "This is the last of earth," John Quincy Adams; "I still live," Daniel Webster, and so on. At length his friends became tired of hearing his name every time came to die, and he failed to find a statesman, or warrior, or philosopher "last dying words," such as should reverberate down the coming centuries, and they may be from time. As he had never been a warrior, or a statesman, or a great philosopher, he died at last of a fat old tavern.

"Every man's life is the body in a state of tension. Some are more particularly on the stretch than others, and particularly of those of the fingers. It is conceded that the vibration of the fibres in those organs is communicated to the shell, it propagates them as the hollow body of a violin, and sometimes the shell begins to hum. The little girl unnerved these kindly attentions with a recent state, such apparently unfeeling and unjust as to be of them, she exclaimed, in a voice loud enough to be heard all through the car, "Mamma, I really believe that old fool is trying to make love to me." The old gentleman stopped at once.

Every Ladder has two ends.

When a small boy I was carrying a not very large ladder, when there was a crash. An unlucky movement had brought the rear smith. He had broken a window, and was scared of scolding us, my father made me stay, and said very quietly, "Look here, my son; there is one thing I wish you to remember; that is, every ladder has two ends." I had learned a lesson that, though many years have gone. Don't we carry many things which have two ends, and we need? When I see a young man getting into bad ways, I think of my father's words of the ladder, the one pointed toward pleasure, and that he does not know the other end, the parents' hearts. Many a young girl carries a ladder in the shape of a fashion, and she does not know the other end of it, a foolish pride at the forward end of the ladder, and she does not see is crushing modesty and friendship behind her. Every ladder has two ends, my boy. Ay! yes, every ladder has two ends, and it is a thing to be remembered in more than one way.

The Boy Whose Mother Cuts His Hair.

You can always tell a boy whose mother cuts his hair. Not because the edges of it are all in a heap, but because the edges of it are all in a heap, but you can tell it by the way he carries his head, and the stiffness of his shoulders. When a fond mother has to cut her boy's hair, she generally says, "Now, I'm coming." Why don't you go to sleep, and let a fellow alone?" Then he sits up straight as a stick, and sits there scratching himself, and absently gazing on his last garment hanging on the wall, and thinks how pretty it would be if he could be a Sioux Indian, and have his head shaved, and have a tomahawk with a tuft of hair on it, and be a chief, and have a wife with a blanket on her back, and be able to go to war and come home and have a big time with his wife and children

THE MONITOR.
TWENTY-FOUR YEARS OF PUBLICATION
WEDNESDAY, JULY 26, 1882.

Killing off Papery with Poetry!

This is, indeed, a wonderful age of the world! New inventions meet us on every side; new religions and novel ideas are of everyday development, but the telephone, the electric light, and all other astonishing inventions pale into insignificance before the gigantic idea of a California feminine Don Quixote who proposes to put an end to Papery through the powerful influence of her poetic pen! Poor woman, how we pity her readers! What a fearful "slaughtering of the innocents" there will be ere she shoot who pursue her disguised dose! The death-rate will increase; mortuary statistics will be magnified immensely, because, although this poor, deluded lady may not succeed in killing off Papery, her "poetry"—save the mark!—will be certain death to all who take it even in small doses! It will, in fact, be a repetition of the tragedy enacted by Goldsmith in his "Elegy on the Death of a Mad Dog."

The dog, in gain his private ends,
Went mad and bit the man.
The man recovered from the bite,
The dog it was that died.

But if Goldsmith had to write on the present political pamphlet, he would paraphrase the subject something after this fashion:

The poet, to gain her private ends,
A pamphlet of "poetic" myths did slit,
But lo! when it to make amends—
Killed every one who read it!

No doubt every reader is eagerly anxious to know the name

Of the wonderful dame, so we will keep the secret no longer, but give the title page of the no-Papery poetic pamphlet which scoops up at sea as it lays on the dark as we write. Here it is:

DOUBT FREES, or Songs of Warning for the Laodicean people. By Ellen A. Dunnigan.

This title—like the fair poet herself, no doubt—is brief, brilliant and beautiful, but we are somewhat of the opinion that if she can attempts at poetry before we had been killed the title page would have told the truth, and Mrs. Pittsinger's "bugle pants" would not have sounded so much like the outer-vocalings of a sick cat spitting at Catholics!

PRIEST-WRITTEN PLEDGES for Protestants who Hate Popes, Papery and Poetry,

We open the pamphlet with fear and trembling, because we are one of those horrible monsters of whom, Mrs. Pittsinger's poetic muse says:

"Yo cannot serve the Pope of Rome,
And be an Freedom's self at home!"

What a fearful sin! Fancy the way of telling American Papists to "clear out," "absolutely," "right-upon-end-off" and when Mrs. Pittsinger—the poetic angel—sings she means it! But we have the pamphlet open at last. It has been defiled by Popish fingers as we see the sentence—

"Your own souls to barter away!"

The first "poem"—save the mark again!—is another red fire, provocative-of-laughter, red paper pitch-plaster for the entire confusion of Popish piousty from of the Jesuitess continent! The heroic heats of the Holy Roman Church Catholic Church are called it "Nunn, Ye Americans!" inspired thereto, no doubt, by the martial trick had been—or "Nunn Up Willie Rally and Rally Ah-ga-ri vid Me."

The fair poet, however, has failed to put any also to her "Songs of Warning," so we pity at 3 hour how to sing them until lastly by an hour on almost obsolete air entitled "The Tune the Old Cow Died of," and, song to this metre, the verse of Mrs. Pittsinger reads like Milton's stanzas sharpened on a grindstone! But we do not mean to kill off our readers by laying any of Mrs. Pittsinger's glittering gems before them in full, or it might bring upon them "a sudden and unprovided death"—from which the Lord deliver us! Rotha Montrose, poetic will have to be satisfied with the substitution of Pittsingerian poetical perspicuity which we shall parade for their positions.

Miss Pittsinger—like all prejudiced people, whether positional paradoxes or not—is particularly severe in the Jesuits, and she has "a poem"—save the mark again!—called "The Jesuit," which (she says) was criticised by Archbishop Purcell. This, however, is only a partial license indulged in by that clever comedy known in public relations as "gifted authors," people who generally themselves that an entrance is not admitted when covered over with the cloak of poetic license. Of course every Catholic and every intelligent Protestant, for that matter—need not be told that Archbishop Purcell's time was too precious to read such a rhapsody as this publication. The Archbishop's consideration of Mrs. Pittsinger's parody on poetry prefaced—"The Jesuits"—

"Yonder, in the dark and crime
Dwell an age of darkness alone,
Where the light of the world is gone
Such job the price of its redemption had."

We (do our "Papal ignorance," no doubt) know of no Jesuits who "dwell in crime and dark job the price of its redemption had."

Why do our "Papal ignorance," no doubt, always left the impress of their feet, but Mrs Pittsinger turns the Jesuit into an aerobat and has him walking on his hands! Another verse has the Jesuit

"Pitting the Jesuit into an Pope's Bull against the Bible!"

Why, Mrs. Pittsinger, we thought the Jesuit was a Jesuit, and the Bible was the Bible! Pope's Bull against the Bible!

Farm and Home.

THE HOUSEHOLD.

CREAM FRITTERS.—If you have sold corn starch pudding stiff enough to cut into slices, dip them in cracker dust and eggs and fry them, laying them on brown paper to free them from grease after they are fried; serve them with powdered sugar.

HOMINY FRITTERS.—Boil three cups and half a pint of milk with a pint of cold boiled hominy until all the ingredients are smoothly blended and form a thick batter; drop by the tablespoonful into plenty of smoking hot fat, fry brown, drain on brown paper, and serve hot with maple syrup, powdered sugar, or cream.

TURNIP HASH.—Mince very fine a teaspoonful of onions, brown it in a tablespoonful of butter, stir in it a tablespoonful of flour, and let that brown; then add a pint of gravy, broth or water, and the cold boiled meat in small thick slices; season it with salt and pepper and heat it; draw the pan to the side of the fire and stir in the yolks of two raw eggs and serve the hash at once; toast may be placed under the hash.

FRENCH HASH PEASANT.—Cut cold broad pudding in small slices half an inch thick; dip them first in powdered crackers or cracker dust, then in beaten egg and again in cracker dust; fry them light brown in sufficient smoking hot fat to float them; when they are fried take them out of the fat with a skimmer; lay them on brown paper for a moment to free them from fat, and serve them hot, dusted with powdered sugar.

GREEN CUSTARDS.—Moisten two cupfuls of stale cake with a custard made of one pint of milk, four eggs and two tablespoonfuls of sugar; put it into buttered cups, set them in a pan with enough hot water to reach half way to the brim, and bake in a moderate oven until the custard is firm. They may be served in cups, or may be turned out and dusted with powdered sugar; any kind of a pudding sauce preferred may be served with them.

CHEESE FRITTERS WITH SMALL ONIONS.—Melt in a saucepan three ounces of butter with half an ounce of flour, stir and fry a little, add three pints of small green peas, a bunch of parsley without aromats, a pint of water and a dozen small white onions; set to boil, cover and cook half an hour, remove the parsley, dish with a layer of the yolks of three eggs, a teaspoonful of sugar and three ounces of butter in small bits, mingle well by slightly tossing the mass pan, pour into a hollow dish and serve.

Kentucky Horses.

It is claimed that the fastest horses in the world have been bred in the neighborhood of Lexington, Ky. Among the more notable are Mand Stone, better known as Maud S., record 2:10; Westwood, 2:12; Woodford Mambrino, 2:24; Trinket, 2:19; Dolmen, 2:21; John Morgan, 2:24; Indemnity, 2:21, and Voltaire, 2:21.

The number of superior carriage, saddle and trotting horses sent out from this part of Kentucky is very great. A prominent breeder recently added the record of their ancestry. He replied: "There is a combination of causes. The great majority of horses bred and raised here have good blood in them, and you will find the ancestors of most of them back in the east. The best strains of running and trotting blood have been taken from here; other States, however, have failed to produce the desired results. There is something in the blue grass, the water, the climate, and the general climatic influences, and we have a judicious breeding and training. We force our horses to a gait when they are 1 year old, and at 3 years old they are pretty well developed. The Northern men, however, always improve them." "How long have Kentucky horses held their high fame?" was the next breeder replied: "No one horsebreeder, but the same man who have lived here eighty-five years, and they state that, from their earliest childhood, they have heard of the superiority of our horses. Their fathers before them had the same story to tell. The fact is that somewhere in the past there was brought into this State a pure strain of thoroughbred, derived from the best stock of the mother world, and it has transmitted the qualities from sire to son to the present. It is a lamentable fact that we have not the exact date upon which to base a history of the Kentucky horse."

Never Frighten Children.

Many children are very sensitive to sights and sounds. They may have strength enough to conceal their emotions when others are present, and they may perhaps appear to appear scared when others are only amused, but they carry their impressions to their beds, sleep is driven away from their pillows, or when it comes, horrid dreams come also, and the wakeful child turns from side to side in excessive fear of what it has seen. The child starts in eyes, but the image is there, and he is awake and terrified in the dark and to the utmost eyes as if the sun were shining. And more so, because with the return of light more than half the horror dies out. In my childhood a nurse did up up in a dark closet by way of punishment. I remember hearing close to the door, in awful horror of what might be in the back part of it, every moment trembling lest I should be seized by some fearful being in the darkness. There is no one thing which parents should more carefully guard against than they treat their children in the dark of a storm, than the scenes of frightening them. The shock given by fright, when the system is delicate, and, as it ought, very sensitive, may be fatal in early life, or may make life if spared a sad misery.

Cheerful Farmers.

It is one of the advantages of farm life, that being away from the busy cities where men pass each other in striving against time or living, there is less to tempt them to become selfish. Hence it is that country people are, as a rule, friendly, generous and universally happy. Should a person visit a farm, when the system is delicate, fretful, and sensitive, may be fatal. In early life, or may make life if spared a sad misery.

Cheerful Farmers.

It is one of the advantages of farm life, that being away from the busy cities where men pass each other in striving against time or living, there is less to tempt them to become selfish. Hence it is that country people are, as a rule, friendly, generous and universally happy. Should a person visit a farm, when the system is delicate, fretful, and sensitive, may be fatal. In early life, or may make life if spared a sad misery.

MISCELLANEOUS.

LYDIA E. PINKHAM'S VEGETABLE COMPOUND.

A Sure Cure for all FEMALE WEAKNESSES, including Leucorrhœa, Irregular and Painful Menstruation, Inflammation and Ulceration of the Womb, Flooding, ETC.

LARGE BOTTLES, $1.00.

☞ Pleasant to the taste, stimulates and invigorates the entire system, and gives tone and vigor to the whole system. It will cure Leucorrhœa in its worst form, all ordinary kidney complaints, and is especially adapted to the change of life.

☞ Sold by all Druggists, or sent by mail, in form of Pills, on receipt of $1.00.

☞ Mrs. Pinkham's Liver Pills, 25c. per box.

☞ Mrs. Pinkham's Sanative Wash, 25c. per box.

☞ Mrs. Pinkham's Pamphlet, mailed free.

☞ Lydia E. Pinkham's Liver Pills, 25c. per box.

☞ Lydia E. Pinkham's Sanative Wash, 25c. per box.

☞ Lydia E

LAST WORDS OF DAVITT.

[CONCLUDED FROM FIRST PAGE.]

organisation of the Land League!" Mr. Davitt spoke enthusiastically of the wide-spread

INFLUENCE OF THE LAND LEAGUE,

And of the wonderful spirit of unity now prevailing in it. He rested his hopes for the rescue of Ireland in that organization, the first that had included all classes of the Irish people priests and laymen, Protestants and Catholics and Orangemen, men, women and children. He did not think that such an organization could be defeated by the latest scheme of the landlords.

As for plans for the future, Mr. Davitt said that if the men of Irish leaders had not been prepared, he would abstain out one on his way across the Atlantic, and he had no doubt it would meet with the approbation of his associates. But one thing he promised, which was that there should be no discussion between himself and the other leaders. He would retire and never be heard of in the same again rather, than have such a much. He had no doubt that there would be a prompt conference of Parnell, Dillon, Egan and others, and that they would secure victory for ireland and Liberty.

Mr. Parnell spoke next. However hot the night might be, she remarked, it was hotter at Ligandrin. She expressed the opinion that Turkey would come to the aid of Egypt, and that Russia is behind Turkey, and that disaster to the British arms may be expected in the outcome of the war.

Speeches were made by Mr. Redmond, Dr. McGlynn, and others, and it was after 11 p. m. when the meeting adjourned with cheers for Michael Davitt and Irish nationhood and freedom.

BISHOP WATTERSON ON THE WAR PATH.

A Broadside for Military and Naval Bigots.

A Bishop that Will Not be Bullied.

During the past week there has been in progress a lively discussion between Bishop John A. Watterson, of the Columbus Diocese, and the Ex-Soldiers and Sailors' Association of Franklin County. Thomas Lechie, a Catholic and a member of the Association, died in destitute circumstances, and the Association, having given him attention during his illness; arranged to attend his funeral in body. They with their lodges, banners and martial music. Many communications were received by President R. M. Nell, from Father Fitzgerald, pastor of the Cathedral, to the effect that the Non-Catholic Society would be allowed to participate as a body, and invited to participate in the funeral ceremonies, however, one intense, and at their meeting on Thursday night of last week they broke out of strong resolutions condemning the action of Bishop Watterson, and holding responsible for the course taken toward them. These resolutions were published in the Columbus Dispatch of Friday, New Bishop Watterson comes boot at the veterans in a letter in which he informs them that they have left the Soldiers' Home, Dayton, Ohio, to make the Soldiers' Home, Dayton, Ohio, to make the Soldiers' Home, Dayton, Ohio, to make

Poetry.

[FOR THE MONITOR.]

QUEENSTOWN VESPER BELL.

The evening sun was shining bright
Over Queenstown's lovely bay,
And sweetly tolled the Vesper Bell
Who called men to pray.
Yes, from that grand Cathedral above,
With a tone of honour and trust,
The faithful they are summoned forth,
And at God's shrine bend.

And though it sounded loud and clear,
And heard for miles and away,
Many there are who hear it not,
They are callous far away.
Yes, many a generous hand and heart,
Who struggled hard to spare
And nobly helped to build that church,
Have crossed the deep blue sea.

Ah! many a one who laid the stone
With relict and patriot Kanon,
Are hidden in a foreign land,
On mountain hill and plain.
They will not hear that Vesper Bell,
Nor in street Sunday's day,
Yet at its silver bell their love
To my their evening prayer.

Their hot hearts we know is hard,
Their love is turned to ice,
But God may want them when they're gone
To spread his holy faith,
Isn't some of their thoughts right well,
Indeed and I do pray
I noted from the lovely Cove of Cork
Home twenty years ago.

Now when 'tomth the Australian gum-tree
I am to take a rest,
Mother and sisters, I shall be writing you,
As it was down in old Erin,
When you will pray or some thoughts to them!
Not on the image of Jesus,
Not on the image of Mary,
Unto my own dear home.

So, while you go into the Church,
And before the altar pray,
Do not forget your absent friends,
Who now are far away.
Yes, some of you will pray for them,
Both favorably and warm,
"O God bless our absent friends,
Yes, bless that Vesper Bell."

A. M., Cork.

Literary Miscellany.

An Ark of Safety.

The Wreck of St. Johnn—A Story of the Secret Floods.

For many days the rain had fallen in gentlem, heavy torrents, and from every quarter, the streams of brooks and stream rushing with unwonted swiftness, and sweeping up a deep, human murmur, which was also a sign of the coming of the rains of the mighty, swollen rivers.

In the Island lies the splash of waves; then came the convulsive threat, that seemed almost wrenching the village, as the great waves, with which the village lay, in its greatest height between at that point, and from its foundations, and floated away on the bosom of the angry stream.

Many hours have been thankful for the natural site in the land placing them in a safer position.

"Look at the river very high, grandfather," asked Ruth Bequine, a timid second fisherman's daughter.

She was a young girl of fifteen years, looked at the time with preparations for the morning meal, but pausing now as she spoke to look toward her grandfather as he sat quietly, lost in his large chair looking intently without.

Both were nearer to him, laying her hand on his shoulder.

"Look, look! look very, very high!" she repeated, "and these seem to be so near, grandfather, so near!"

"It is turned," he replied, "and the tide is up, and the current is so rapid, and the wind so high, and the star-like light above our upon them. "As I live" cried the young girl, "it is the old fisherman's cabin, and that bell could never ring like that from the motion of the water; there are living souls within calling for help! To the rescue, men; out with the ropes and skiffs!"

Five minutes more and strong, brave hands were out in the stream, all unknown to the two anxious ones within; heavy oars were being securely fastened to the bell building, and, with the bell still tolling, the old church was rapidly towed away, and have like break in the cliffs. And suddenly, with a startling shock, it stood still, and with a frightened, beating heart, Ruth gazed anxiously from the little window. Could it be possible? Was the sound of the bell on which they were safely moored? And the lights and moving figures—had God really sent help so soon.

Hastily, softly, the descended the rickety stairs, crying jyfully, "We are saved, grandfather! thank God, we are saved."

A sudden light in the doorway, and the next moment kindly voices were breaking the long silence, and hastening to assure the two lonely figures, and guided by kindly, helpful hands Ruth and the old man were found themselves by the hospitable might have climbed, but never the old man by her side; and not once did the thought of escape apart from him enter the brave girl's mind.

With a heart beating wildly with fear, Ruth raised her eyes to the cloud-covered sky, half breathing a prayer for aid, while the trembling one beside her uttered a half-long groan. Suddenly a ray of hope quickened her senses. A little higher up on the left, somewhat elevated above the path before them, stood the old church, untouched as yet by the water, looking in silent pity upon the scene of desolation surrounding it. It was possible that safety might be found there; even though the waves should reach it, might not the strong foundation on which it had stood so long prove invincible?

"The church, grandfather, the church!" cried Ruth, in tones of hope and encouragement. "Surely we will be safe there;" and the next moment they were hurrying over the at open interstices, and finding but a feeble resistance in the old lock, they soon stood within the silent church.

Was it that the soothing spirit of prayer still hovered like incense about the place, or was it the thought of the ever abiding presence of God in this His house, that seemed to impart a sudden calm to the old man? Silently he sank within one of the old fashioned high pews, and Ruth, half in fear of their thoughts right well.

Dubrey and I do pray.

I noted from the lovely Cove of Cork
Home twenty years ago.

Now when 'tomth the Australian gum-tree
I am to take a rest,
Mother and sisters, I shall be writing you,
As it was down in old Erin,
When you will pray or some thoughts to them!
Not on the image of Jesus,
Not on the image of Mary,
Unto my own dear home.

So, while you go into the Church,
And before the altar pray,
Do not forget your absent friends,
Who now are far away.
Yes, some of you will pray for them,
Both favorably and warm,
"O God bless our absent friends,
Yes, bless that Vesper Bell."

A. M., Cork.

Literary Miscellany.

An Ark of Safety.

The Wreck of St. Johnn—A Story of the Secret Floods.

For many days the rain had fallen in gentlem, heavy torrents, and from every quarter, the streams of brooks and stream rushing with unwonted swiftness, and sweeping up a deep, human murmur, which was also a sign of the coming of the rains of the mighty, swollen rivers.

In the Island lies the splash of waves; then came the convulsive threat, that seemed almost wrenching the village, as the great waves, with which the village lay, in its greatest height between at that point, and from its foundations, and floated away on the bosom of the angry stream.

Many hours have been thankful for the natural site in the land placing them in a safer position.

"Look at the river very high, grandfather," asked Ruth Bequine, a timid second fisherman's daughter.

She was a young girl of fifteen years, looked at the time with preparations for the morning meal, but pausing now as she spoke to look toward her grandfather as he sat quietly, lost in his large chair looking intently without.

Both were nearer to him, laying her hand on his shoulder.

"Look, look! look very, very high!" she repeated, "and these seem to be so near, so near!"

"It is turned," he replied, "and the tide is up, and the current is so rapid, and the wind so high, and the star-like light above our upon them. "As I live" cried the young girl, "it is the old fisherman's cabin, and that bell could never ring like that from the motion of the water; there are living souls within calling for help! To the rescue, men; out with the ropes and skiffs!"

Five minutes more and strong, brave hands were out in the stream, all unknown to the two anxious ones within; heavy oars were being securely fastened to the bell building, and, with the bell still tolling, the old church was rapidly towed away, and have like break in the cliffs. And suddenly, with a startling shock, it stood still, and with a frightened, beating heart, Ruth gazed anxiously from the little window. Could it be possible? Was the sound of the bell on which they were safely moored? And the lights and moving figures—had God really sent help so soon.

Hastily, softly, the descended the rickety stairs, crying jyfully, "We are saved, grandfather! thank God, we are saved."

A sudden light in the doorway, and the next moment kindly voices were breaking the long silence, and hastening to assure the two lonely figures, and guided by kindly, helpful hands Ruth and the old man were found themselves by the hospitable friends of a little hamlet a short distance back from the dangerous river. And here they made new friends and a new home, as day dawn slowly broke, and the two were picked up and rescued from the ruins of Chesterbrook.

SAVING A STOWAWAY.

A Deed of Heroism to Save a Stranger.

The steamship Cyprian, Captain John A. Strachan, recently left the Mersey bound for Boston and the Mediterranean port. Aboard her, besides her paid and articled crew, there was a wretched little stowaway, whom nobody seemed to know. At the time the Cyprian left the port it was blowing half a gale of wind, and as soon as she got outside it increased to a hurricane. Hatches were soon battened down, and seas dashed over her with such force that very soon the only safe place was the waist of the ship. For some hours the vessel had been laboring with these tremendous seas, when suddenly her fore steering gear gave way. Luckily they could still steer from the after-part of the boat, and so they kept her up to the wind for a while.

But very soon another catastrophe darkened the horizon of hope, for not long afterwards the engineer stood quietly on deck to inform the officer on watch that one of the boiler-tubes had burst and extinguished the fire adjoining it. No one now had time to notice the stowaway, who had crept out of his hole and was crawlin along in his fine shown at sea.

The other boiler was all right, and with this and the first one, which had been patched up, they managed to get along pretty well, but, however, they determined to make a second attempt to find the stowaway, who had crept out of his hole and was crawlin along in his fine shown at sea.

The other boiler was all right, and with this and the first one, which had been patched up, they managed to get along pretty well, but, however, they determined to make a second attempt to find the stowaway, who had crept out of his hole and was crawlin along in his fine shown at sea.

Still hard brave crew tried to save her. A few reefs were let out of an after sail to get her head up to the wind, but she fell off again and was in the act of steering, power, and was after so was shipped, washing into her engine-room drowning out her fires.

Now, indeed, all hope had fled.

Gradually the steamship had drifted nearer and nearer the rocks of that fearful-looking Welsh coast. The lifeboats were served out, one falling, of course, to the brave captain who had tried so hard to save his ship.

At last the steamer grounded on a rock off North Stack, and two miles from the shore. There were two hundred people on that shore ready and willing to save them who were of no service. The distress signal could not be recognized, and not even a life-boat could live in that angry surf. It was then, indeed, a case of "every man for himself and God for us all." Of that terrible scene of Byron's commending:

"Then rose from a a to sky the wild farewell,
Then shrieked the timid, and stood still the brave."

Those who had lifeboats on strong hand-rung overboard, and those who had not seized a spar or a plank and leaped into that angry sea that was everywhere raging around them.

The engineer's boy said good-by to his companions, and leaped, trusting to a life-buoy, and an oar, while two firemen who went down below were never seen again.

Meanwhile what was John Alexander Stratton, aged thirty, second engineer of Great Crosby, near Liverpool, doing?

Doing what has made his name familiar in our mouths as household words; made it a name to be handed down with reverence to our children as one worthy to stand beside that of the American hero pilot, who stood at the wheel while the fire scorched the flesh from his bones, and burned his eyeballs out.

There he stood with his lifebelt around him ready to spring, the last man on board if he had a little thing that comes crawling along by the life line!

It is a boy.

"Who are you?" demands the captain.

"Please, sir, I'm the stowaway."

"The stowaway!"

"A few days ago he was a little monk—a boy, who had he been discovered, would have had to pay for his folly by paying the distinct work aboard, but now he was a fellow-creature.

"Stop! not one more for words; this lad shall be a life—he saved. "Here, said the captain, deliberately unbuckling his lifebelt—his life—and lashing it securely around the lad. "Now, lad, take this! Jump!"

Over went the stowaway, lifted like a cork upon the waves, and over went the captain, satisfied by long watching and anxiety, but struggling with all the force of his own great well. But swimming was impossible in such a sea. The boatswain, struggling for his own life, dashed at the helm, and, as he did, a mill stone fell from the bows and they both went down, and were never seen again.

Then perished a hero.

The stowaway, with the lifebelt round him, was flung battered, but alive, on the Welsh coast, to tell the story of his saviour's heroism.

Second Extraordinary Escape at Pensacola.

What a comfort it is to a broken-hearted mother to know that twenty-five hundred escapes follow the one she lies in the cemetery! The ghastly, gruesome things they call "casualty" often cost hundreds of lives, yet there is a man opposite all his little savings to pet his dead wife in one, does he not know, if he be allowed to think, that she, herself, would have thought it far better that their money should be spent for the children? Can a fine funeral stone to a dead woman for an unkind word! If in, some other life she knows what is done here, would it not please her better to know that that thousand dollars had been given to some one she loved who needed it—her mother or her sister? It may be said that a very rich man, at any rate, should not be criticised for spending money lavishly on such a time, but this is a mistake. He has a plain duty in the matter which he should not disregard. He has no right to spend money in a fashion which will be a burden to his poor neighbor. Because grief is immortal, and never cannot cease, the time of good people should protect them and not impose on their helplessness. It may be a little hard for a rich man to pay five hundred dollars for the burying of his child, but it is a crime that for him to make the poor man next door say in the bitterness of morning, "He loved his child no better than I loved mine; now they are dead, there shall be no difference between them." Many a hard workingman has denied himself for years to keep up a small life insurance, and has died singing to the thought that his family would be left with the thousand dollars to live on. Six months after the death of the husband and father, the insurance and the undertaker's bill will have exhausted the last dollar of it. The infamous of this fashion is the lower classes of society every observer knows to be simply destructive. It is the duty of a good citizen to use his influence against this folly, and show it to be a baseless fraud. Now this, it may be said in regard to the fitness of things, few people should not spend altogether more than a hundred dollars.—Indianapolis Herald.

History of the Sunflower.

No flower for a long time has become so popular and so personal to the southwest. It has climed into our favor, and taken possession of our homes, our gardens and our dress, and in every where the sentimel of art and fashion—and of right, for it is not only a decorative and useful flower, but been a good religious character, being as a Christian flower dedicated to the Sun, Apollo, St. Louis (King) and St. Andrain, and, as a pagan emblem, the sacred flower of the ancient Peruvians, who were worshipers of the sun.

Its resemblance to the gold of day and its supposed homage to the rising sun made it their emblem of faith, and on this account it was greatly used in their religious ceremonies, and the virgins who officiated in temple of the sun were covered with sunflowers made of pure gold, and carried them in their hands, and fastened their robes with them.

In Persia and other lands of the East the sunflower is the emblem of constancy in love and there are many poetical allusions in Eastern literature to the flower that always turns its face towards the sun.

The first mention we have of it in England is from Gerard, in 1596, when he tells us that in his garden he had one that grew to the hight of fourteen feet, which produce flowers measuring sixteen inches over. In Spain and Mexico they grow to the hight of twenty feet in diameter, and a single flower producing 3,262 seeds.

Miss Pinkerton's "instructed this fact in his beautiful [illegible] of "Sunflowers," in which a maiden is reasoning up to the flower, which she still fail to show her. The whole purpose of the picture is evidently intended to make the spectator feel the great hight of the plant. Browning calls the flower a "foolish mimic sun." Darwin gives it a better character, for he says it

"climbs the upland lawn,
And bows in homage to the rising dawn."

Moore uses it as a comparison of constancy, for he says:

"As the sunflower turns to her god, when he sets,
The same look which she turned when he rose."

But Blake gave it a sad, longing character, and in two short, exquisite verses makes you feel quite differently to the great yellow flower:

Ah! Sunflower, weary of time,
Who countest the steps of the sun,
Seeking after the golden clime
Where the traveler's journey is done.
Where the youth pined away with desire,
And the pale virgin shrouded in snow,
Arise from their graves and aspire
Where my Sunflower wishes to go.

Botanical authorities say that there are nearly fifty species. Among those which are best known are the tall sunflower of Peru and Mexico, its perennial, native of Virginia, and the dwarf sunflower, brought in late as 1759 from Egypt. The seeds, when peeled, taste like sweet almond. They make an excellent bread of them in Portugal, and during the late war, in Southern States, they were substituted for coffee in many Southern cities. They are good food for poultry, and the oil pressed from them is frequently used in place of olive oil for salads; it can also be burned in the lamp, and is splendid for soap making.

The stems and flowers when burned produce a good potash, and many a housewife in Texas has experimented with the burning of sunflower to obtain the potash for her family baking with as much care as she did the baking itself.

In Texas the sunflower pulled at sundown with a wish is sure to bring the wish true before the next sunset (so the Indians say), and in our true Texas will have a garden without at least one of these "golden suns" in it. To drain of dollar signifies that you will be rich before the year is out, and if he has this dream, will never rest until he has planted a field of sunflowers for the omen. And in some parts of the South a query will not let you go into the house without a sunflower that has been pulled before it is perfect, or one that has in any way faded.

A Strange Story.

There is a very strange story reported from East Boston. On Friday, the 13th instant, there died at the residence of Amos B. Perkins, 167 Webster street, a young lady named Hattie O. Craig, lacking a few days only of being twenty-four years of age. Her death was preceded by a sickness of nearly a year, and the disease of which she died was clearly of a consumptive nature. Many of the circumstances following the death and preceding the burial of the young lady are of a peculiarly interesting if not of a distressing nature. On the morning of the 13th, the day of her decease, she seemed to be rapidly nearing the end, and her friends were assembled to witness her last. The eyes of the young lady were tenderly closed by her sorrowing grandmother, and the body was placed upon the sweeping father. He remained for about half an hour in the chamber of death, and then took his leave with reluctance. Just as he had turned his back upon the beloved form he was startled by a movement on the body and an exclamation simultaneously of "Papa, papa, please don't leave me!" When he turned around he saw, with delight and astonishment, that his daughter was not a corpse, but an actual, living and conscious being, endowed with as much intellect and strength as at any time during the last half of her sickness. Of course there was no great joy and consternation among the family and friends. When she had become somewhat calm Miss Craig, with a smile and consciousness again beyond description, said:

"Oh, papa, dear, do you know where I have been?"

"No, Hattie; tell me where you have been; let me know all about it; answer the overjoyed father.

"Oh, papa, I have seen heaven, and I am to have my health restored to me on certain conditions," she answered in great glee.

"What are these conditions, and are you willing to tell them? I asked the father.

"Yes, papa; certainly, she."

"But what are they, dear?" still queried the parent.

"I cannot tell them to you now, papa. But, oh, I saw such beautiful things in heaven.

"Tell me, won't you, all about who and what you saw! Come, now, that's a good girl!"

"Oh, I saw them all, papa, and I'm going to heaven again, when I don't let them put me into the ground until you are sure I am dead."

Hattie, the rest of the day, up to six o'clock in the evening, the poor girl was alternately in a conscious and delirious condition. At six o'clock she seemed to have died. There was no change in the body for three days, and several physicians concurred that the body be kept from the tomb. On the fourth day, however, there were unmistakable signs of death and the interment took place.—Boston Herald.

—New Orleans Sugar.—The best cut sugar in the market for preserving and family use. Try it. For sale in quantities not less than a barrel at Chalmers & Co's, 121 Washington street, at wholesale price.

A Relic of O'connell.

Derryrane rejoices in many memorials of the Liberator, but the Relic of "Dull Dan" that all visitors, and especially Irishmen, are most anxious to see, is in the oblong mahogany box lying on the table of his Main-tin-dee Chamge in 1438-39. His altar was one of the most important at Paris, and the time was one of singular excitement and sadness. The English were in possession of the heart of the country, occupying Cherrenne, Fontoine and Meaux, and making raids to Saint Denis, while the plague breaking out at Paris swept away 50,00 victims. It was not a time for encouraging, but the Prior regarded his hotelier, a steward, as remiss, after all allowance made, and removed him, whereon the steward brought suit to be reinstated. The Prior was a systematic man, and kept his books very carefully, jotting down what there was on the table every day and the price of everything purchased at the markets, and those books for a period of many years were produced in the course of the lawsuit. More by token, the Prior, though a great lover and judging 30,000 souls in his care, did not disdain to select and bargain for his own fish, now a lordly carp, anon a prime eel. In 1405 he had entertained thirty-six guests at dinner, and amongst other things there were two pasties, six fat geese, twelve capons, four dozen young chickens, and great joints of beef and mutton, the whole washing 10 litres. Fresh salmon, fine spices and exquisite sweetmeats, were the delicacies of the time. But in 1436 the Christmas dinner given by the Prior cost 10 sous—all he had to spend, and he was ashamed of his face was, as a rule, salt and pickled herrings. The Prior was a great friend to his friends to a little blowout at the Tavern of the Golden Lion, but thought he put a good face on it before company he uttered lamentation in the books as to the difficulty of the times must have been largely exaggerated; the second, that the manners of the time were simple, since among the Prior's guests, who sat at the same table, were not only doctors, lawyers and churchmen, but the very humblest of friends, and even his own butcher. It was the custom then, as in olden times, for guests to bring their bread and wine with them when asked to dinner, and at the tavern entertainments each paid his own reckoning York-shire fashion.

A Rev. Justice of Peace.

The Rev. Joshua Peter Boddish, who was formerly associate with the Parlor Fathers as their church of St. Paul's, Rye, and is in West-Fifty-ninth street, New York, but who now holds the position of Chancellor of the Archdiocese of Boston, has been appointed Justice of Peace by Governor Long, of Massachusetts. [illegible] who is an American by birth, is a convert to the Roman Catholic Church, and was formerly an Episcopal clergyman. He has been in Rome for a year, and while connected with the Paulist Fathers here, he organized a literary society for young men, which was a very flourishing institution. Since his arrival in Boston he has been very active in the promotion of good work of the Illouse of the Guardian Angel, institution somewhat similar to Father Drumgoole's Home, in New York. He has also tended efficient service to the cause of temperance, and has organized in Boston, like other large cities, is cursed. Yet, they will resist soon, and the next time the editor dons them they will resit and the lazy fellows who say they will resist, apparently have a confused notion as to the real meaning of the word, and a confused idea that that settles it.—Cincinnati Saturday Night.

A NEW DEPARTURE

IN THE GROCERY TRADE!

LOW RENTS

The Cause of Low Prices!

The Long-Established Firm of

SBARBORO & CO.

Still in the Lead!!!

MESSRS. SBARBORO & CO.,

Who have done business at

531 WASHINGTON ST. 531

During the past thirty years, again desire to remind the public who purchase

GROCERIES

That their great business success has been achieved through the adoption of covrrn business principles among which were the following:

1. To Purchase all our Goods for Cash.
2. Sell Quickly at Small Profits.
3. Give Honest Weight and Full Measure.

These have been the Cardinal points which have made the House of

MESSRS. SBARBORO & CO.,

The constant resort of customers who can appreciate the fact that they can purchase from them

FRESHER, PURER AND CHEAPER

Groceries than from any other store in the city, leaves our customers are constantly with us because we give them good value for their cash.

OUR PRICE CURRENT

Is changed every week to suit the fluctuations of the market, so that readers of the MONITOR by consulting this column every week will find that our prices are within a shade as low as Groceries can be purchased for by the ounce.

SBARBORO & CO'S. PRICE CURRENT LIST FOR AUGUST, 1886.

SUGARS.—REDUCED.

Cuba,	9 lb. bags	100 cts
Cuba,	10 lb. bags	100 cts
Dry Granulated	9 lb. bags	100 cts
Extra C.	9 lb. bags	100 cts
Golden D.	9 lb. bags	100 cts
Island,	9 lb. bags	100 cts
Powdered	9 lb. bags	100 cts

CANNED GOODS.

Pineapple, 2 lbs.	21 cents
Crushed, (cans) 2 lb.	21 cents
Sliced, (cans) 2 lb.	21 cents
Assorted Table Fruit, 2 lbs.	21 cents
Green Corn, 2 lbs.	21 cents
Peas and Jellies, 2 lbs.	21 cents

Assorted Preserving Extracts, 2 lbs. 21 cents

MISCELLANEOUS.

Crackers, 2 lbs.	21 cents
Cracked Wheat, 2 lbs.	21 cents
Starch, 3 lbs.	21 cents
Sal Soda (Washing), 3 lbs. 4 packages	21 cents
Rice, 3 lbs.	21 cents
Tapioca, 3 lbs.	21 cents
Sago, 3 lbs.	21 cents
Soap, assorted, 6 lbs.	21 cents
Brooms, assorted, 2 lbs.	21 cents
Tea Kettles, 2 lbs.	21 cents
Tea Kettles, 3 lbs.	21 cents
Tea Kettles, 4 lbs.	21 cents
Tea Kettles, 5 lbs.	21 cents
Tea Kettles,

THE MONITOR.

TWENTY-FIFTH YEAR OF PUBLICATION.

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 3, 1881.

REMOVAL.

THE "MONITOR" OFFICE

Will hereafter be located at

636 Clay Street, 636

A few doors nearer Dupont than our former location.

Another American Cardinal.

The growing importance of the Catholic Church in America has influenced the Pope to elevate another member of the American Episcopate to the dignity of the College of Cardinals. The choice of the Sovereign Pontiff, on this occasion, has fallen upon Most Rev. Patrick A. Feehan, Archbishop of Chicago, who has the honor to be the first Prelate selected for this great dignity from the great West.

Archbishop Feehan is a native of Ireland, where he received his education and was ordained for the priesthood. In 1866 he was consecrated Bishop of Nashville, Tennessee, where he labored with great zeal and success for the propagation of the faith, until September, 1880, when he was transferred to the Archiepiscopal See of Chicago, to succeed Bishop Foley, who died the previous year.

During the brief period of Archbishop Feehan's labors in Illinois, he has worked wonders in the progress of the Faith. New churches have been created, new parishes formed, school houses and asylums have been built, and his whole field of missionary labor has been placed in a state of religious cultivation that gives courage to priests and people alike to labor for the glory of God. Within the past year Archbishop Feehan has laid the corner-stone or performed the ceremony of consecration of twelve churches in Chicago or its environs; he has also administered the Sacrament of Confirmation to 30,000 persons, among whom even numerous German immigrants, who died from their land where no Catholic Bishop was permitted to administer the Sacraments of the Church. In the matter of Catholic education much has also been accomplished, as may be inferred from the fact that 20,000 Catholic children are saved to the Faith in Catholic schools. Rome, therefore, in selecting Most Rev. Patrick A. Feehan, D. D., for the new dignity of the Cardinalate, has paid a merited tribute to one of the most zealous Prelates in the Church, and also honored the Catholicity of the whole West by this notable selection for the Sacred College.

Catholics and the Bible.

The other day, while reading the life of M. Dupont, a layman, known as "The Bible Christian," I was greatly struck with the signal contradiction which it gives to the state but reiterated calumny that Catholics are forbidden to read the Bible. That great servant of God was but a simple layman, yet M. L'Abbé Janvier relates in his life the following testimony regarding his fidelity to the Bible and to the knowledge he possessed of all the books of the Bible:

"In the middle of the room there stood, for his own particular use, a large desk like a school pulpit, upon which at all times lay upon two folios, open, the Bible in Latin, the other in French, marked there by tacks in order to feel the exact spot of any text which he wished to use, given by his Holiness Pius IX. to the Archbishop of Armagh. The Bishop have to send me consultation whatever of the Latin Fathers.

Again, "the third resolution," says your correspondent:

"I forbade any curate to attend any meeting, either in or out of his own parish, without the consent of his superior.

This, too, contains a misstatement. There is no such resolution.

The truth is, that the regulation actually set forth in the Circular concerning the attendance of curates at public meetings will be found to prove to be a very harmless affair indeed, especially when it is borne in mind that in some of a diocese comprising nearly one hundred priests it will be impossible for all to be present at any meeting, the priests of the Diocese, who, I feel convinced, will never interfere with the civil rights and liberty of his subject without people and without cause, I remain, my dear sir, your faithful servant,

✠ T. W. CHERE,
Archbishop of Cashel.

Typical French Priests.

Notwithstanding the fact that the infidel element in the French Government has done its worst to drive the Catholic priesthood from the soil of France, it is gratifying to know that there yet remain in that land a number of priests who are so devoted to the cause of Christ, that the Government shall acknowledge their worth whenever occasion offers. At the recent annual distribution of prizes at the Jesuit College, Academy, two such noble specimens of sanctity as Abbes Fabre and Petitjean were presented with first-class prizes, the former for his historical work on "The Youth of Flanders," the great Catholic preacher of the seventeenth century, and the latter for his heroism, skill and extraordinary charity. In bestowing upon Abbé Petitjean this tribute of the Academy to his great moral worth, the President said:

"This sturdy priest, who is now 73 years old, has spent all his life in seeking to relieve the sufferings of the poor. He himself studied medicine in order to give more efficiency to his efforts. He treats patients who suffer from typhoid fever; and when the cholera was raging in Germany, he went there on purpose to study its symptoms so as to assist his own people in France. Twice the cholera appeared in the two parishes of which Abbé Petitjean has administered. In one parish alone, he saved the lives of 800 people. He has appeared in the double character of the village priest, who does good both in words and works. How often does a poor man knock at the door of the presbytery and carry away from it not only sound advice, but also the last coin of the poor priest, who is, perhaps, poorer than the man on whom he bestows his charity."

The picture thus drawn of this exemplary priest is not confined to France, as such apostolic men abound in every country in the world, but it is gratifying to find the French authorities compelled to do honor to a class for whom the Government evinces a degree of hatred that makes Catholics in other countries wonder.

Another brave French priest is the Abbe Fortier, the chaplain of the prison de la Santé. He was present as military chaplain at the murderous battle of Gravelotte in 1870. The French wounded had been placed in a church which was made a target of the Prussian shells. Abbe Fortier, who attending on the dying, perceiving the state of things, resolutely went through a rain of fire to plant the Geneva banner on the steeple of the church. Directly he had done this the Prussian fire ceased. For this act of heroism he received the Cross of the Legion of Honor. A few weeks ago, two convicts escaped from the prison de la Santé. He looked for the police, but there were none in sight. So the Abbe, a man over 70, took the law into his own hands and fetched each of the scoundrels a box on the ear that could be heard within fifty yards' distance. The fellows had the cheek to change the feeble old priest with an assault; but the policeman who supervised said that it served them right, and refused to take the charge. Well done, Abbe Fortier!

Month of the Heart of Mary.

One of the greatest differences between true and false religion is that the former dedicates every minute to Almighty God, whilst the latter thinks that an occasional honor one month is sufficient to devote time to devote to what is generally called "the worship of God." The true religion, represented by the Catholic Church alone, keeps alive the perpetual adoration of Almighty God. Her cloistered monks and nuns throughout the whole Christian world are constantly engaged in prayer and meditation before the sacred shrine of the Most Holy. The Church herself has dedicated every day in the year to the glory of God through the veneration of His saints, and the months of the year are rendered memorable by being dedicated to some of the highest and holiest objects of Christian love and adoration. Thus, for instance, the month of August is known as the calendar of the Church as the MONTH OF THE HEART OF MARY, just as Jesus is known as the month of the Sacred Heart of JESUS, and July as the month of the Most Precious Blood.

The foundation of this beautiful devotion dates back many centuries, but it was brought prominently into notice by Pope Pius VII., who created a solidity of the Holy Heart of Mary in the church of St. Eustachius, at Rome. An arch-confraternity was afterwards established in Paris, since which time the devotion has spread far and wide throughout the world and recently have followed the practice of this beautiful custom of dedicating August to the Heart of Mary.

Re-opening of Catholic Schools.

Ere this number of the MONITOR reaches all its readers nearly all the Catholic schools in this diocese will have resumed studies, and we hope that Catholic parents and guardians will send their children and wards to them not only for the sake of the salvation of the souls of the children themselves, but also that such parents or guardians may be able to account to Almighty God for the precious souls then committed to their care. Catholic parents have a moral responsibility resting upon them in this matter that does not pertain to Protestant parents, and the Catholic parents who expected to take charge of his children by having them educated under Protestant or godless teachers, will be just as unsuccessful as if he tried to transform pebbles into gold.

The schools in this State under Catholic supervision, are so good in point of facility, that we cannot recommend them to the world, and their superiority over the public schools consists in the fact that they inculcate religious morals into the minds of children, and without this knowledge of God and His attributes boys and girls will grow up into educated moneytrocities who will deny the existence of that very God whose bounties they have received from long past ages. The conflict of the day is between Religion and Infidelity; the school room is the battlefield, and we trust a contest so Catholic parent should hesitate for one moment upon which side to cast his children. God Himself has said "He who is not with Me is against Me," and the Catholic parent who goes against the will of God assumes a responsibility which is the past has caused hell to be created and filled with the souls of those who became reprobates to the designs of Almighty God.

A GREAT CATHOLIC WRITER DEAD.

Mr. W. G. Ward, the subject of a great, skilful, and valiant controversialist, on the 7th ult., at Netherhall House, Hampstead. The deceased was born in London on the 21st of August, 1812. He was born in London on the 21st of August, 1812, and in 1845 he joined the Catholic Church. He entered on his Academic career at Oriel College, Oxford, in 1834, and in 1837 he gained the Ireland Scholarship, and in 1838 he gained the Ireland Scholarship, and in 1839 he gained the Ireland Scholarship, and in 1840 he gained the Ireland Scholarship, and in 1841 he gained the Ireland Scholarship, and in

Farm and Home.

The Potato.

There exists some diversity of opinion as to the original native of the potato. Mr. Parkes states that it was carried to England in 1565, by Sir John Hawkins, from Santa Fe de Bogota, where it was found growing wild, at an elevation of from 8,000 to 12,000 feet above the ocean in elevated valleys surrounded by high mountains, and above the range of Indian corn. It is generally conceded that Sir Walter Raleigh's men not only carried tobacco to England, but also took the potato over in 1586; while there are many who hold that it was introduced into Spain at an earlier date than that last given. All, however, seem to agree that it is one of America's products, some saying it is a native of Chili or Peru, others of the mountainous districts of tropical or subtropical America. It was first cultivated in Spain, where it spread into the Netherlands Burgundy and Italy, as a garden curiosity, but soon became in the latter country a common article of food. However, its progress generally was slow, and it is only within a hundred years that its cultivation was undertaken, even in Ireland. And the reports one of three singular circumstances in connection with the common use of the potato—namely, that it should be called the Irish potato. The cannot have come about in any other way than that seen after its introduction into Ireland it became the principal sustenance of many of the peasantry of that country, and has remained such ever since to a great extent.

Before Marriage and After.

Before marriage the young girl will generally listen or have some idea when the young gentleman will come to see her; she thinks great care to look neat and pleasing, waiting to receive him in a tastefully arranged room. And what of the youth? Sometimes much more "out of order" (as he is apt to term it) he may feel, he will dress in his best, look his very best, and start for the home of his love. They meet with a shake of hands and a pleasant smile, have an agreeable evening's visit, then part with a kind good-night. I do not say that it is wrong if there is true love in it; but how different it is from the home in after years. We too often miss the sweet free and pleasing appearance of the young girl in the wife. And the youth, whose only aim was to please his lady-love, now seems to have forgotten all the little courtesies and gentle attentions that are needed just as much in the husband as in the lover to make home happy. He finds many other things to look after, and others many hours and thoughtless words. You may see the wife of only a month or two in a shrinking down her somewhat, the home in disorder, and it nearly time for her husband to come home. It is no wonder that he is unhappy; and even tries to give a little advice sometimes. It leads no excuse for her. She may have plenty to do, and more than she can accomplish; still the man, if she will, always look neat, and meet him with a smile.

Then, on the other hand, the wife may try hard to keep the sweet girlish ways of her days before marriage, and yet have all that is demanded. "Now we are married, and Mary most not expect to be the same as before. I may not live for love ways as there is so much coming on me as head of the house." He takes no notice of the nicely kept rooms, and the nice dinner just to his taste, and the loving wife who has kept herself at the door with a smile of welcome home.

How to Introduce People.

"I do dislike to introduce people to each other," said Bro to me, one day last week.

"Why, pray? It seems to be a simple affair."

"Well, when I have it to do, I stammer and blush, and feel so awkward. I never know who should be mentioned first, and I will myself out of the room.

"I think I can make it plain to you," I said. "You invite Mabel Tompkins to spend an afternoon with you. She has some beau at your house before, and your mother has never met her. When you enter the sitting room, all you have to do is to say, Mother, this is my friend Mabel, Miss Tompkins, my mother." If you wish to be more elaborate, you may say to your Aunt Lucy, 'Aunt Lucy, permit me to present Mabel Tompkins; Miss Tompkins, Miss Tompkins. And while you introduce Mabel to your father or brother, or an elderly gentleman, naming the most distinguished personage first, you present you mother last of all. Mabel will bow and say, 'I am happy to meet Miss Brown,' or 'I am happy to meet you, Mr. Brown,' or 'I am happy to meet you, Aunt Lucy,' and then the younger are supposed to the old, and inferiors in age, position, or influence are presumed to superior. Do very useful when, in your own house, you are introduced to your friend, and offer your hand. If any from home a bow is commonly sufficient recognition of an introduction. In performing an introduction, speak both names with perfect distinctness.

Burns and Scalds.

The following recipe for the treatment of burns and scalds, which recently appeared in the Boston Commonwealth, may be useful to some of our readers:—

For burns and scalds a good application, that can always be obtained, is cooking soda. Sprinkle the burnt surface at once with the powder, and cover it with a wet cloth, or moisten the burnt part in soda water, strong brine, or soap suds. A good salve for subsequent application is sweet oil and spermaceti ointment, which is most tempting. The thing to be done is to protect the burnt surface against the influence of the air. The most ready application to make at once is a tablespoonful of unsalted lard, the white of one egg, and a teaspoonful of cooking soda well mixed. Burns or scalds upon the face are best treated by applying mucilage or gum arabic. It forms a complete covering, and obviates the use of rags. Dipping the injured surface for an hour or more, until a thick artificial skin has been formed, is the treatment that the condition of the burnt surface can be seen from day to day. It effectually soothes off, and leaves a new skin, perfectly smooth and fair.

—The Terry organs are so popular, enforced application from usual. They sell in "State Street" Chicago, Illinois. The St. James Church that 1,000,000 people ought to be heard to have.

MISCELLANEOUS.

MRS. LYDIA E. PINKHAM, OF LYNN, MASS.,

Health of Women is One Hope of Our Race.

Send for Pamphlet Life's Delight

LYDIA E. PINKHAM'S VEGETABLE COMPOUND,

As a Positive Cure

for all those Painful Complaints and Weaknesses so common to our best female population.

It will cure entirely the worst form of Female Complaints, all ovarian troubles, Inflammation and Ulceration, Falling and Displacements, and the consequent Spinal Weakness, and is particularly adapted to the Change of Life.

It will cheer and cool hours from the worst to all, and relieve pain in almost every case. The tendency to cancerous growth can be checked very speedily by its use.

It removes faintness, flatulency, destroys all craving for stimulants, and relieves weakness of the stomach. It cures Bloating, Headaches, Nervous Prostration, General Debility, Sleeplessness, Depression and Indigestion.

That feeling of bearing down, causing pain, weight and backache, is always permanently cured by its use. It will at all times and under all circumstances act in harmony with the laws that govern the female system.

For the cure of Kidney Complaints of either sex the compound is unsurpassed.

LYDIA E. PINKHAM'S VEGETABLE COMPOUND is prepared at 23 and 25 Western Avenue, Lynn, Mass. Price $1. Six bottles for $5, sent by mail in the form of pills, also in the form of lozenges, on receipt of price, $1 per box for either. Mrs. Pinkham freely answers all letters of inquiry. Send for pamphlet. Address as above. Mention this paper.

To family should be without LYDIA E. PINKHAM'S LIVER PILLS. They cure constipation, biliousness, and torpidity of the liver. 25 cents per box.

☞ Sold by all Druggists. ☜

CURES Dyspepsia, Liver Diseases, Fever & Ague, Fever, Jaundice, Biliousness, Nervous Debility, etc.

The Best REMEDY KNOWN to Man!

12,000,000 Bottles

This Syrup possesses Varied Properties.

It permeates the entire system, and in its passage to the various organs it cleanses, invigorates and stimulates. It is the great blood purifier, and by its action upon the liver, lungs, skin, kidneys, bowels, and other secretory organs, it carries off the impurities of the blood and leaves no cause for complaint to lay the foundation for disease.

It possesses the laxative qualities of a potent cathartic, and is a most valuable substitute for pills, being free from their griping effects, and may be taken by the most delicate without fear of ill effects.

It stimulates the secretory organs and functionates the system, so that the Liver, Lungs, Skin, Kidneys, Bowels, and other secretory organs are made to pour forth the impurities of the blood and system, and thus the foundation for disease is broken up and a healthy action established throughout the system.

Wherever it has been introduced it has been received with the utmost favor, and those who have used it once are its warm friends ever after.

It is compounded from Sarsaparilla, Mandrake, Dandelion, Mandrake, Dandelion, Cascara Sagrada, Senna, Rhubarb, Aloes, Prickly Ash, Ginger, Cloves, Cinnamon, Nutmeg, Allspice, Cardamon, Coriander, Capsicum, Anise, Alcohol, Water, Sugar, Glycerine, Pepsin, Iron, Quinine, Potassium, Lithia, Phosphorus, Calcium, Magnesia, Manganese, Iodine, Bromine, Chlorine, Silica, Gentian, Leptandra, Iris, Cascara Sagrada, Stillingia, Phytolacca, Xanthoxylum, Jaborandi, Cimicifuga, Cinchona, Aromatics

St. Ignatius of Loyola.

Beautiful Historic Discourse by Father Tom Burke.

A NOBLE DEFENCE OF THE JESUITS BY THE GREAT IRISH DOMINICAN.

How Persecution Serves to Propagate the Catholic Church.

On the last occasion of the feast of St. Ignatius Loyola, the founder of the Society of Jesus, the Jesuit Fathers of the church of the Immaculate Conception, Farm street, London, invited Father Tom Burke to preach upon the memoirs of their founder, and the result was the following masterly historical discourse delivered in the presence of a crowded congregation over assembled within the walls of that church.

The Rev. Thomas Burke, O. P., ascended the pulpit at the conclusion of the first gospel. He had taken his text from the ninth chapter of the Acts of the Apostles: "And the Lord said: This man is a vessel of election, to carry my name before the Gentiles, kings and those and the children of Israel. For I will show him how he must suffer for my name" (Acts ix., 15).

Father Burke, in the course of a sermon of great eloquence, showed how God makes ready for upward of an hour and a half, said the Jesuit Fathers, several times recorded in the history of the Church were those of St. Paul, St. Jerome, and St. Ignatius of Loyola. Paul of Tarsus, from a fierce persecutor of the infant Church of Jesus Christ, became the instrument of her apostleship. Jerome became the greatest of the Church's scholars, and Ignatius, the Catholic vessel, was the stalwart; St. Ignatius, who was a soldier, and naturally given up to thoughts of worldly honor and glory, became the greatest hero of the Church in modern times. Ignatius was called the warrior's saint, he clothed himself in the armor of God, he girt his loins with truth, he put on the breastplate of justice, and in his strong right hand that mighty sword which is the spirit of the Word of God he strike and slew his fiery darts of the most wicked one. Then he appears in the great battle of the Church during the first three centuries, standing in the front and thickest of the fight, covered with honor, crowned with great glory, his right hand wielding his sword, the smoke of battle ever ascending from it, and on his crest, his helmet which beats him wait still he had accomplished the work assigned to him in the battle of the field, the man of God presented to Nineveh, when he preached penance, he was the man of God, he was the man of God, he was the man of God

Poetry.

(FOR THE MONITOR.)

A MAGNOLIA BLOSSOM.

A fair white blossom from Convent garden brought Fragrant and dewy in its perfect form,
Pure as some Alpine peak, untouched more
Or beauty of a child's unsullied thought
In this one pure by Poetry's fairies wrought,
Wild notes of poesy and fancy, gleam bright,
Uplifted heaved within the sun's warm light,
Till every petal glows with splendor fraught.
A sweet symphonic fresh with the world's cheer
An Angel whisper in the heart, and lo!
When fainting under the burdens of each day,
Gloomy despondency, and sorrow, and woe,
We turn then only murmur, "Passover
We view the crown yet safely does the part."

MARCELLA A. FITZSHALL.

Mossy Woodland, Cal., July, 1862.

(FOR THE MONITOR.)

THE FONT OF LIFE.

Far Calvary's lowly mountain,
In the olden time gave birth
To a vessel now sparkling fountain
Whose streams surround e'er the earth.
Pale vines that quaffed its showers,
In honor and glory grew,
And plants of sweet flower
Sprang up beside its brow.

But the waters of this fountain
We dwell on in our sorrow
They flowed from Calvary's mountain
In cold—not crystal—flow
And the vessel from whence came
The vine so lightly bow
Are the hearts of men made fairer
O Passover Record by thee.

San Francisco, August, 1862.

Literary Miscellany.

"Wearing of the Green."

"So you are really going to Ireland, old fellow, and at such a time?"

"Yes. Why not.

"Look out for the Fenians! See that they don't capture, and hang you as a British hangman."

"Bosh! There are no Fenians."

"Oh, aren't there though! Yes, and Fenianism too—just ask Gerald Barrymore!"

"Why, I am going over to Gerald Barrymore! I am going to spend the time with him—hunt and course and fish, and all the rest of it.

"Well, I say there are Fenians no end.

"Don't believe a word of it, although I am sure he thinks it if he says so. There isn't pluck enough in the Irishmen to make anything like a formidable movement of any kind. I'll undertake to carry any band of Fenians that may come in my way with this cane."

"Handsome, gentlemanly cane, farewell! If you should fall a victim to your rashness, I'll write your epitaph!"

"Thank you, my dear fellow! That is indeed adding a new terror to death. It will make me doubly careful of my precious existence!"

So the two friends parted, smiling. The dialogue took place one hot bright day of the year eighteen hundred and twenty-three, in the heart of London—the Temple Garden, at Pat's old friend Lawrence Gerald's, chum of Pat's at College, and friend and fellow pupil of Addison and Steele and Sir Roger de Coverly; of Roth, Spalding, and Barrymore, young barristers; Lawrence Gerald himself a bit over-sanguine in his newspapers and magazines; being a member of the Irish Brigade, and one of the late Court of Volunteer Corps, familiarly known at the Bar's Green as "Pat's."

Lawrence Spalding was a tall athletic young fellow, who delighted in the drilling of his fellow students, and the privilege—new, strange and dear to young lawyers—of wearing the sword. He it was who, on the eve of a visit to Ireland, was pouring store of Parisienne and the saffron of Italy into the ears of his friend Gerald, who had never been in Ireland; and this was just the time when the air was alive with rumors of projected Fenian insurrection, and before any actual rising had taken place to divulge the real strength of the Irish Republican Party.

Strength! Lawrence Spalding was to be a guest of his old chum and fellow-student, Gerald Barrymore, a young Irishman who had eaten his way to the English bar, and hoped to distinguish himself there, although, unlike most of his compatriots, he was half-Saxon, half-Celt, and had Saxon blood actually circulating in his veins. Spalding was hoping to see Ireland, and to enjoy his friend's hospitality; longing to be introduced to his friend's beautiful sister, of whom he had heard so much.

Barrymore was going over to Ireland, that night. Lawrence was to follow in two or three days. Barrymore was to meet him in Dublin, and after a week or two, then they were to go on together to Barrymore's home in a mountainous sea-washed county, where, I guess your Dublin reader, but you had better not let guy of the men around you hear you speak of them as robbers."

"Then, if you are not robbers and outlaws, what the devil are you?"

"Patriots."

"Patriots be—blessed!" observed our British officer.

"You had better, for your own sake, sir, be silent. Out into the sunshine!"

Lawrence and Gerald were promptly lifted on the leader and another man got in their places. The word to march was given and the carriage went on. Lawrence could hardly believe his senses. He felt like a man in a dream—like the victim of a nightmare, when he found himself in the hands and cellar, tearing defiant magnanimously. As he turned round rather abruptly, his elbow struck against something behind. It was only a revolver, which one of the guards was carefully holding against his adversary's breast as a little measure of precaution.

"I'm the prisoner of Mr. Spalding—sir! I'm the prisoner of Mr. Spalding—sir! I'm the prisoner of Mr. Spalding—sir! I'm the prisoner of Mr. Spalding—sir!" Lawrence repeated to his friend, that his captors might not understand, "that is the meaning of all this! Is it a dream. Is it a practical joke, or a piece of mummery! Why are these men armed?"

"Mr. Barrymore has no difficulty in comprehending," said the man with the sword, in French, and with excellent accent. "He understands his country, although he refuses to fight for her cause, and has degenerated so far from the patriotism of his ancestors as to throw himself the enemy of her flag. Mr. Barrymore was offered a command only the other day, and he refused. He will have to answer for his desertion."

Lawrence looked at Gerald. "They did offer me a command," said Barrymore, coolly. "Of course I declined. I am a loyal man. Now I am in their power. Let them do as they choose.—they are quite capable of it."

Again Lawrence mentally asked himself, "Am I dreaming! Am I mad! Is this the year 1867! Was I reading the Times this morning!"

He gave up the whole conundrum in despair.

A dense hour or two passed away, and Lawrence actually fell asleep. He only woke when some of his captors were lifting him out of the carriage. He now found himself standing on the edge of a grassy lawn or field in front of a large and gloomy ruined castle. There were cannon at the gates of the castle and on the roof, and a green flag floated on the spire. Near the castle was a whole mass of armed men. Lawrence could see the gun-barrels glittering in the autumn sunset.

"Bring up the prisoners at once," said a messenger who came down to meet the Fenian band and their captives.

"Is this Chief here?" asked the man with the sword

"No; the Chief's across the river. He's to attack in the morning sixty, I'm told. But she's here—behind the wave that has passed over you, I'm thinking!" and he stared glance at Lawrence and Gerald.

"Gentlemen," said the man with the sword, "you are about to be brought before the Chief's daughter. In the absence of the Chief she commands. For your own sake, I earnestly recommend prudence."

Gerald whispered his adventurous companion. Lawrence began to think the whole affair rather interesting. The two young men were led between armed ranks towards the crowd in front of the castle. As they passed the crowd divided, and a lady on horseback rode forward, then checked her horse, and with a commanding gesture indicated where the prisoners were to stand. She was a young woman, very handsome, with fair hair, and a superb form, and she sat her horse like a queen. In all his bewildered amazement, Gerald observed the deep-blue lustrous eyes, her clustering fair hair, her greenish costume, her full noble form, her fair face, a green riding-hat, and a cavalier hat with a green feather. She was a queen in her look, and a sweet king of her side.

"Am I imagining at a scene in the opera comique?" Lawrence asked of himself. The ropes which bound the prisoners were loosened, and the first two Lawrence saw of his freedom was to take off his hat and bow to the beautiful Amazon. She acknowledged his salute with grace and dignity!

"You are an Englishman?" she asked.

"I am an Englishman certainly. May I ask where I have the honor of addressing?"

"All that it concerns you to know, sir, is that I am at present in command of this castle and these Fenian soldiers. My name is unknown to you. Your friend is a traitor to his country!"

"Pray excuse me," said Lawrence, "if I ask you one question. Do you really mean to tell me, madame, that these fellows are Fenians—that there is a Fenian army?"

"Your ignorance, sir—the blind perverse ignorance of your countrymen—may perhaps be allowed to excuse your question; but I have no time to answer such folly. Look around you if you would learn. We are have something else to do. Gerald Barrymore!"

Her loud clear tone rang like a trumpet-call. Barrymore stood forward silently, and with bowed head.

"Gerald Barrymore, you have openly set your sword against a traitor to the cause of your country. You have refused to join us. You have done all you could to betray us to the enemy, to-day you actually dared to fire upon our boats. What have you to say why you should not die a traitor's death?"

"Madame—Madame—Lady Lawrence! can this be serious?"

"I have nothing to say," replied Gerald, coolly. "I am ready. Do your worst."

"Gerald Barrymore, I need not tell you that I would spare you if I could; that I would be glad if you let me to live one hour know only too well. But the time has come when we no longer hold any terms with traitors. This Englishman is only a foreign enemy—you are a renegade, a deserter, a traitor; and your doom is death."

"Heaven, what a fury!" thought Lawrence. Gerald, his dear friend aside, and broke out a into regular oration addressed to the Amazon. "It was a piece of impassioned declamation blended with high forensic argument. Never had Lawrence before known her eloquence to wax, and how he had inspired all the principles of constitutional, international and martial law. He was Erskine, Choate, Webster and Curran all in one. Utterly forgetting his principles he made his cause and his client and friend, and client, the devoted advocate actually beseeched the Judge to remove his sentence of death. Your friends were very soon round round the arms with sword cords, and rendered impossible of resistance.

The driver and postilion had from the beginning been Fenians. The postilion, in a loud voice, called out, "Are we to go?"

"You see gentlemen," said the swordman, "how useless was your resistance. If you had shot one of our men I probably would not have saved your lives.

"I suppose this is a common robbery," said Lawrence. "If so you had better rifle our pockets at once.

"As you are at Englishman, and of course ignorant of Ireland," said the leader, smiling, "I excuse your insolent remarks. But you had better not let guy of the men around hear you speak of them as robbers."

"Then, if you are not robbers and outlaws, what the devil are you?"

"Patriots."

"Patriots be—blessed!" observed our British officer.

"You had better, for your own sake, sir, be silent. Out into the sunshine!"

Lawrence and Gerald were promptly lifted on the leader and another man get in their places. The word to march was given and the carriage went on. Lawrence could hardly believe his senses. He felt like a man in a dream—like the victim of a nightmare, when he found himself in the hands and cellar, tearing defiant magnanimously. As he turned round rather abruptly, his elbow struck against something behind. It was only a revolver, which one of the guards was carefully holding against his adversary's breast as a little measure of precaution.

"I'm the prisoner of Mr. Spalding—sir! I'm the prisoner of Mr. Spalding—sir! I'm the prisoner of Mr. Spalding—sir! I'm the prisoner of Mr. Spalding—sir!" Lawrence repeated to his friend, that his captors might not understand, "that is the meaning of all this! Is it a dream. Is it a practical joke, or a piece of mummery! Why are these men armed?"

"Mr. Barrymore has no difficulty in comprehending," said the man with the sword, in French, and with excellent accent. "He understands his country, although he refuses to fight for her cause, and has degenerated so far from the patriotism of his ancestors as to throw himself the enemy of her flag. Mr. Barrymore was offered a command only the other day, and he refused. He will have to answer for his desertion."

Lawrence looked at Gerald. "They did offer me a command," said Barrymore, coolly. "Of course I declined. I am a loyal man. Now I am in their power. Let them do as they choose.—they are quite capable of it."

Again Lawrence mentally asked himself, "Am I dreaming! Am I mad! Is this Lowzon see Ammen's Cough Syrup.

Ask for Ammen's Cough Syrup.

Leisure Hours.

CAPT. R. HEADS, EDITOR.

All numbers of the MONITOR are entirely devoted to original contributions and selections for this department. Address all communications to

R. HEADS,
135 Bryant St., San Francisco Cal.

Answers to Leisure Hours No. 1.

1.—Flag-staff.
2. TAMED
AREA METER
ERIE
BAKED
3.—Mutes—Tombs.
4. CAST
PAROL
REPEAT MERESTONE
5.—Door-bound. CURACOA
CALCAVAN BANGLED CASTILE HARMONY
SARIGNY MITTENS

Puzzles by Palmiro Bruno No. 1, were solved by De Ville Macaire, Aspire, Mark, Specula, Hoey, Spice, Nic Frog, and Chin.

Best List.—De Ville Macaire.

NUMBER 1.

PROGRESSIVE SURGICAL.

1, 2, 3, a village of France.
4, 5, 6, a well known.
3, 4, 5, an earth worm.
2, 3, 4, a fresh water.
3, 4, 7, a small truck and in cost mines, (plur.)

The whole is a city of Prussia, province of Irish-Algiers.

Los Angeles, Cal. TRISTIN.

2.—SQUARE.

(To "Mack.")

1. The banks of a river used in tilting or other remedial encounters. 2. (Mly prax.). A Thai or harmonic or acclamation which affords rest for the eye, (See ante). 4. Blanking tracks. 5. The antitrack. 6. A Spanish commander.

San Francisco, Cal. NICE L. FRITZ.

3.—DIAMOND.

The martyr stood with noble mien,
Before his persecuting foes;
No fear amongst his ranks he saw,
To shield him from the tyrant's blows.
Upon his pyre he stood at bay,
To bring some secret from his breast,
But, remaining, he saw it was vain,
The more, the more the stoic they pressed.
(I, noble courage! Thou shalt be free.)
The extreme of pain, and death taken,
To keep his soul's fair habitation,
And as a martyr to have died.

Dubuque, Ill. ASPIRO.

4.—SQUARE.

1. A hay. 2. (Pers.) (Ism). 3. A military rotor is one among the ancient Greeks. 4. A certain copper coin. 5. To balance. 6. Pools of water.

Oakland, Cal. ELSIE.

5.—CHARADE.

A limpid, silvery sheet that flieth,
Excited in a thousand rills,
Rills on its brow—on sleep the lilies
And in the fold the shy violet hides.

The hopes of parents are collected
In same, the bearer of their name;
They are the warriors of my collection,
The propagators of my fame.

Wooed,
A time of reckoning of flowers;
A time of idioms and sense;
A time of darling and repentance;
A time of joyfulness and show.

San Francisco, Cal. MERTE SHORE.

6.—DOUBLE.

1. Scenes. 2. Indian canoe. 3. Fills with confusion or exhilaration. 4. Placed horizontally upon the back, as if swimming. 5. A representation or resuscitation. 6. One of the same kind. 7. Sometimes called.

For For each solution a prize.

Hillsdale, Kan. L.—HORAPIR.

Who should be proud, yet FEEL
The lungs to be free, and to inhale the breeze;
The tall pines are so grand.

Lebanon's famous tree.
The fir and cedar, and pine,
Here of these we see.

We prove the mountain top,
Yet beyond the valley
The mountains stand a very far
Off—Lebanon's famous tree.

Oakland, Cal. JUNIOR.

7.—SQUARE.

1. An American tropical plant. 2. No. 3. Ability. 4. A play in Hayes. 5. A wonderful soldier. 6. To strip, as a tree. 7. Sometimes called or conjured.

Newark, N. J. E. SUSAN.

8.—REVERSAL.

Onward fast, onward ever
Never heeded while I go,
Wind and rain, cold and fever,
Never pause until I can,
Onward I go, onward I go,
Onward I go to retirement never,
Onward forever, onward I go.
To the world's dolume I never pay heed,
I go, I go, never turning back,
Yet on the sewer I leave is my track.
Onward I go, onward I go,
Spending a dream, smiling at fortune,
Onward I go, onward I go,
Never stopping for rage or for liberty.
Onward I travel, through sunshine and storm,
Without a care, or a thought of the morrow,
Onward I travel, as hand in hand
To the unforgiving victims I leave in my Onward I go.
Until I consume the world at last.

San Francisco, Cal. NIC FROG.

10.—SQUARE.

1. A Rogues, (Gallop). 2. A mysterious kind of medicine. 3. Ability. 4. Place of resistance. 5. A sometime city of British India. 6. Pertaining to a Roman family, (river) (plu).

Pembroke, A. T. DE VILLE MACAIRE.

Or Answers and Solvers in four weeks.

Tete-a-Tete.

ASTRIN.—Your poetiods, as usual, are excellent.

ELSIE.—See price offered by "Mack" to puzzle No. 6.

BARBARA.—We are awaiting a batch from you.

The Pacific Press has suspended. Its successor will be moment by California puzzlers and solvers.

HALIFAX.—Cannot the Boston boys favor us with a few puzzles?

MIRNIE SHORE.—Your charade appears in this issue; thanks. Shall be pleased to have you visit Leisure Hours often.

CHIN.—Sorry to see that "The Orfet Mill" has not been running the last two weeks. A little encouragement will do it just the thing. "The Voyage of the Jessamie," a charade in five parts and concealed, by Mizzy, has just come as a conclusion to the "Young People." It was a very pretty piece of fancy, and I hope the publisher of the Lie (L. W. Dy Long and co-mates, Chas. Dickens, Esq., Proprietor) will take it.

Fellow Farmer.

"Where lies the Turtle so still,
Like the dove whose nest is Goose Quill,
Fine precise he writes,
Yet he's a Dunce in Puzzles,
Admire his talent and skill.

Idle Hours for July has arrived behind time. Our Mystic Art by "Herr Burr" is a neat poem. Copies of the "Idle Hours" can be had in several articles on the use of geographical words in puzzles. The editorials are good. Mystic Medley and Beech Nuts contains interesting poems from Mrs. "Macquenie" has good puzzles and a special prize tournament. Idle Hours is published and edited by A. C. Grubby, Waterloo, Ind., at the small cost of 25 cents per annum.

C. N. F.

—We recommend our readers to patronize the Red Blue Store Book and Shoe House, 11, Lessing's Building, cor. Sansome and Bush Streets, Bryant and Bryant, where it keeps on hand White Labor Boots and Shoes of a kinds at living rates.

—Brook's Spool Cotton, soft finish (as well as glass finish, is manufactured especially for sewing machine work. Try it on any machine and you will see no other. For sale by all dry goods dealers.

DON'T WASTE MONEY on trashy extracts when you can buy a perfume so delightful and lasting as Florentine Cologne.

Lowzon see Ammen's Cough Syrup.
Ask for Ammen's Cough Syrup.

The Elections in Belgium.

M. Frere-Orban and his colleagues have gained a new lease of power for four more years at least, by the result of the elections which took place in Belgium on Tuesday last. The Senate will now be composed of 32 Catholics and 37 Liberals, or a majority of five for the latter; while the Chamber will consist of 64 Catholics and 76 Liberals—the latter thus having a working majority of 12. The result is very disappointing. With the exception of Bruges and Soignies, where the Catholics have gained two fractional victories, all the attempts of the latter to wrest seats from their opponents have failed. At Antwerp the additional seat for the Chamber was carried by the Liberals by 3,698 votes against 3,624. At Brussels the Catholics and Independents made indeed a better fight than was expected, polling 7,784 votes against 8,323 scored by Liberals. At Soignies, where we received to predict that there would be a very close fight, the Catholic candidate was defeated by only one vote. At Ghent, where the excitement was intense, and where both parties strained every nerve to secure a triumph, the result was quite the reverse of the fate of the Ministry depended, the Catholics were in a majority during the early part of the day, but the elimination of so many rural voters during the past two years has left the Catholics powerless, and the Liberals won the four seats for the Senate by 3,775 votes against 3,225 while the eight seats for the Chamber of Deputies were also won by the Liberals with 3,720 votes, to the Catholic highest on the poll scoring 3,722.

The Church in Canada.

The Montreal True Witness says that as a result of the visit to Rome by His Lordship Bishop Fabre, the Holy See has actually sanctioned the project to divide the present diocese of Quebec into two dioceses. It was broke as the new Episcopal See, the Very Rev. N. Z. Lorrain having been appointed Bishop of Pontiac.

The Pope has made several new Catholic dioceses in Canada, the Archbishopric of Sarapta and Vicar Apostolic of Northern Canada, the Episcopal Sees of Pontiac and Sherbrooke of Peterboro, in the Province of Ontario. A new Vicarate Apostolic, to be called Pontiac, has been formed in the northwestern portions of the diocese of Ottawa, of which Mgr. Zephyrin Lorrain is named Titular; also a prefecture Apostolic in the Lower St. Lawrence region, to which Abbe Bossé has been appointed.

The new diocese of Peterboro takes from the diocese of Kingston the following parishes, Peterboro, Cobourg, Lindsay, Port Hope, Ennismore, Omemee, Bobcaygeon, Fenelon Falls, Minden, Haliburton. The counties taken off are North Cumberland, Dantham, Peterboro, Victoria. Peterboro will be the Episcopal city.

How Marshal Scott obtained his Murillo.

Of the thirteen Murillos which Marshal Scott managed to collect in Spain, one of them, an "Immaculate Conception," at the Marshal's sale in May, 1860, was bought by the French Government for £23,440! There is an amusing story how this celebrated picture which Scott secured his prize. In his pursuit of his John Moore he overtook two Franciscan friars who turned out, as he suspected them to be spies. On hearing that they were made a signal to one of her servants to which they responded, he ordered them to show him the way to the house, and he touched it with his lips.

A peal of laughter rent the air, and Lazarillo, who had disappeared and angry, saw Capuchin friars, who turned out, as he suspected, to be spies. He was sure that they were worse sons Sin Murillos in the convent to which they responded, he ordered them to show him the way to the house, and he touched it with his lips.

Scott hurried to meet the air, and Lazarillo, looking up amazed and angry, saw Gerald Barrymore and Lawrence Spalding, he had met in Dublin standing around, and holding their sides in uproarious laughter. "Gerald Barrymore!" cried Barrymore, "for the Fenian volunteer!" and oh, how uproariously echoed the Marshal's guests the invitation!

The Fenian Chieftainess had fled, leaving the echo of a silver peal of merry laughter behind her.

"Good Lord!" exclaimed Lawrence, pointedly, "I will stay by you—fight for you! I renounce everything for you! I am your friend for your sake! I will die for you, but I will not leave you!"

She took, without speaking, a green ribbon from her corsage and pinned it through his button-hole. At the same time she gave him a signal to one of her servants to which they responded, he ordered them to show him the way to the house, and he touched it with his lips.

A peal of laughter rent the air, and Lazarillo, who had disappeared and angry, saw

A NEW DEPARTURE
IN THE GROCERY TRADE!
LOW RENTS
The Cause of Low Prices!
The Long-Established Firm of
SBARBORO & CO.
Still in the Lead!!!
MESSRS. SBARBORO & CO.,
Who have done business at
531 WASHINGTON ST. 531
During the past thirty years, again desire to remind the public who purchase
GROCERIES
That their great business success has been achieved through the adoption of correct business principles among which were the following:
1. To Purchase all our Goods for Cash.
2. Sell Quickly at Small Profits.
3. Give Honest Weight and Full Measure.
These have been the Cardinal points which have made the House of MESSRS. SBARBORO & CO.,
The constant resort of customers who can appreciate the fact that they can purchase from them
FRESHER, PURER AND CHEAPER
Groceries than from any other store in the city, hence our customers are constantly with us because we give them good value for their cash.
OUR PRICE CURRENT
Is changed every week to suit the fluctuations of the market, so that readers of the MONITOR by consulting this column every week will find that our prices are within a shade as low as Groceries can be purchased for by the ounce.
SBARBORO & CO. PRICE CURRENT LIST FOR AUGUST, 1862.
SUGARS.—REDUCED.
Cube, A. Crushed
Dry Granulated
Extra C.
Golden D.
Island, in kags,
New Orleans White
AT REFINERY RATES.
COFFEE.
Costa Rica Coffee, Green, No. 1, P lb.
Costa Rica Coffee, Green, No. 2, P lb.
Fresh Roasted Coffee, P lb.
TEAS.—NEW CROP JUST ARRIVED.
Black English Breakfast Tea, P lb.
Mixed Green and Black Tea, P lb.
Fine Young Hyson Tea, P lb.
Green Young Hyson Tea, P lb.
Green Gunpowder Tea, P lb.
CANNED GOODS.
Tomatoes, P doz.
Oysters, (cans,) P doz.
American Ale Fruit, P doz.
Assorted Table Fruit, P doz.
Peaches, P doz.
Pears and Jellies, P doz.
TOBACCO.
Assorted Preserving Extracts, P doz.
MISCELLANEOUS.
Crackers, P box.
Soap, P lb.
Starch, P box.
Spices, (ground,) P bag.
Salt, P sack, (in 5s.)
Saleratus, P box.
Saleratus, P box.
Spices, assorted, P doz. bottles.
Sardines, P box.
Herd Soap, P lb.
Pickles, P doz.
Tags, P lb.
FRUITS.
French Prunes, P lb.
Spanish Prunes, P lb.
Raisins, P box.
Currants, P box.
Figs, P box.
Oranges, P box.
Lemons, P box.
FISH.
Pacific Mackerel, P doz.
Mackerel, (fresh,) P lb.
Herrings, smoked, P box.
CANDIES.
Lemonades Candies, P lb.
Mint Candies, P lb.
COCOA AND CHOCOLATE.
Cocoa and Chocolate, P lb.
PICKLES.
Worcester Sauce, P bottle.
Pickles, P jug.
Pickles, P doz.
MEAL.
Meale of all kinds, P lb.
FLOUR.
Having laid in a large supply of Flour before the recent rise we can furnish our customers with First Class Flour at the lowest market price.
N. B.—The MANAGER of our house having had TWENTY-FIVE YEARS EXPERIENCE in the business in this city, and being an expert in buying large stocks of goods, is a guarantee that under his management we are able to sell first class GROCERIES CHEAPER than any other house on this Coast. Examine our Price Current before purchasing your supplies, and judge for yourself. Economy is the result of trading with us. Wealth is the result of economy. All orders promptly and carefully filled and delivered to any part of the city, Oakland or Alameda free of charge. Country orders solicited and made a specialty and shipped free of charge.
SEND FOR OUR PRICE LIST.
SBARBORO & CO.
E. SBARBORO, Manager.

Family Fun.

Brudder Gardner on Aristocracy.

"When I shaks hands wid a stranger," said Brother Gardner, as silence fell upon the members, "I always feels a little curious wheder his great-grab fader was a cabinet officer or a cobbler; wheder his own great-father was a cooper or a statesman. De man I have to deal wid am de man bofe; he, or not de dun am' bosom an' nothin of his descenses. He may size up well, or he may run to remanate; he may be squar, or he may be a bilk, he may be honest, or he may have de right bower up his sleeve—dat am for me to find out. I don't propose to jine hands wid a stranger bekase his gran'father cum ober wid de pilgrims. Neither shall I give dollars to see a cow' my odder on de ground dat his uncle weighed a ton an' shock hands wid three different Presidents. What a man be am, as wheder he fiddler was a poet or a blacksmith, won't make him bet or no worse. Size up your man on his own personal shape. It dose' matter to you that sort of a beef has fader hadn' for how big his uncle's feet way; he am de man you am doin' business wid. Do pasun who stands from dis tentry on nothing but de record made by some relative half a century whose will lard in jail as soon as in good society."

A Useful Boy.

Not long since a smart seven-year old son of one of the preachers, after service was over and his family had returned home from church, said:

"Papa, do you ever look at me while you are preaching?"

The father, thinking he was a little hurt by such a question, replied:

"Certainly, my son, I often look at you and think of you when I do not notice me at all."

"But do you ever look and notice me at all?"

"Yes, I did, son, several times," said the father.

"Well, papa, did you see me wink at you on a three hours sermon?"

"No, my son. What did you wink at me for when I was preaching?"

"I winked at you, papa, to get you to stop; you were spinning it too long."

Where a Boy Excelled.

"Can't you manage to give my son one of the prizes at the exhibition?" asked a father of a teacher. "No, madam," was the reply; "your son will stand no chance; you obviously persist in idleness." "Oh, but, then," exclaimed the fond mamma, "if that's so, you can give him a prize for perseverance."

The Man and the Well Curb.

Did you hear the story of the man in a hotel who, meddling with the old style of bell-rops in bedrooms to see what it was, rang it unknowingly? It was a rare one, I guarantee!

"Well, how do you do," he said, accosting his hand to the astonished servant, when he thought a visitor, "sit down; what can I do for you?"

"Did you ring?" said the servant.

"Ring! Why no, I should rather have my shirt on bell horse."

Then the servant explained the bell-rop and left. After he had gone he thought he would try the bell-rops just for fun. He rang one for dinner, and thinking he had rung for dinner, and thinking he had rung for dinner, and thinking he had rung for dinner, he was greatly alarmed, looked and bolted his door, and sat up all night expecting the Grays at his door.

Boys and Girls.

The Hindoo girls are graceful and assiduously formed. From their earliest childhood they are accustomed to carry burthens on their heads. The water for family use is always brought by the girls carefully poised in this way. The exercise is said to strengthen the muscles of the back, while the chest is thrown forward. Two crooked backs are seen in Hindostan. Dr. H. Spray says this exercise of carrying small burthens on the head might be advantageously introduced into boarding schools and private families, and that it might supersede the present machinery of dumb bells, blackboard, skipping rope, etc. The young ladies ought to be taught to carry the jar as the Hindoo women do, without even touching it with their hands. The same practice of carrying water leads to precisely the same results in the south of Italy as India. A Neapolitan female peasant will carry on her head a vessel, full of water to her home, over a rough road, and not spill a drop of it; and the acquisition of this art gives her the same erect and elastic gait.

Girls, Beware of Dandies

The human mind is weak and easily led astray. This is true in every case, but in the matter of love it is peculiarly so. Young, thoughtless ladies come into consideration, and young gentlemen take advantage of it, and never lose sight of the establishment, which they believe to be the most favorable for their purpose. Of our day have a great predilection to finery and foppishness, and young ladies are very shortsighted as regards to fascinate their attention and devotion. Dandies, with all their finery, and their affected, finical manners, a studied vocabulary and other dandyish accomplishments are considered amongst the most unpleasant of characters and the most despicable of beings. Such gaudy and effeminate puppies are found in large numbers everywhere, and to guard against the evil consequences of them. Girls, beware of such dandies!

Cleanliness, propriety, and politeness we like to see observed by young men, and should be appreciated by young ladies. On the contrary, creates disgust and aversion in the eyes of all thinking people. Such and like clothes, with a gold watch chain, silk handkerchief, and the like, are very obtrusively pointed in idleness. Oh, but, then," exclaimed the fond mamma, "if that's so, you can give him a prize for perseverance."

Why he Means all Spice.

"What do you do with your cocoanut shells?" asked a reporter of a prominent candy manufacturer. "Sell them to be made into pipes?" and the cocoanut curiosity of the reporter was not quieted by his fellow statement that shells, when ground and used by spice-mon to adulterate pepper and other of their wares. Further investigation led to a visit to a factory where the shells are ground up is situated at the corner of Line street and the railroad in Camden, and is a one-story brick building, the capacity of the mill being 20 barrels of ground shells per day. The shells are brought to the factory in bags, and discharged in the ground floor. Here they are carefully scraped and put in great revolving events, which are constantly turned over beds of blazing coal. Some of the shells are roasted a light brown, others are as coal out crisp and black. After being carefully sorted, the dark shells are put in machines in the grinding department, and then ground to a fine powder like pepper. The brown shells are not ground so fine, and come from the mill looking exactly like ground coffee. This Camden factory is supposed to be the largest of its kind, and is a month. The shells cost very little, and milling is done at about 2 or 3 cents per pound.

A representative of a leading spice house, in speaking of this novel preparation, said that while his house had not used it, he supposed it was a harmless adulteration for spices. "We have our own method of adulteration," said he, "and sell to the trade probably more adulterated goods than pure. We can't help it. There is no pretence on our part that the lower grades of spices are pure. We simply sell the retailer what he wants. We have spices spice at almost any figure. Pepper, for instance, is low as sight and since cost, but it is as much something else as it is pepper. It would ruin trade to prohibit adulteration, and, besides, there are not enough of spices grown to supply the demand of the United States alone; if nothing but pure spices were sold. We are constantly making experiments to discover the cheapest and most foreign matter with which we can mix our goods in order to supply the demand for the grades."

The powder made from ground cocoanut shell has a fine color, and on account of its weight and appearance is considered by spice manufacturers to be choice adulterating material.

Tickling in Throat—Ammen's Cough Syrup.
Coughs—Ammen's Cough Syrup.
It cured my cold—Ammen's Cough Syrup.
Sore Cure—Ammen's Cough Syrup.
Consumptives use Ammen's Cough Syrup.
Pains in Chest—Ammen's Cough Syrup.
Great Discovery—Ammen's Cough Syrup.
Sore Throat—Ammen's Cough Syrup.
Consumption—Ammen's Cough Syrup.
Croup—Ammen's Cough Syrup.
Do not delay using Ammen's Cough Syrup.
Mixtures use Ammen's Cough Syrup.
Large bottle, $1.00—Ammen's Cough Syrup.
All druggists sell Ammen's Cough Syrup.

Our Young Folks.

Making Girls Straight.

The Hindoo girls are graceful and assiduously formed. From their earliest childhood they are accustomed to carry burthens on their heads. The water for family use is always brought by the girls carefully poised in this way. The exercise is said to strengthen the muscles of the back, while the chest is thrown forward. Two crooked backs are seen in Hindostan. Dr. H. Spray says this exercise of carrying small burthens on the head might be advantageously introduced into boarding schools and private families, and that it might supersede the present machinery of dumb bells, blackboard, skipping rope, etc. The young ladies ought to be taught to carry the jar as the Hindoo women do, without even touching it with their hands. The same practice of carrying water leads to precisely the same results in the south of Italy as India. A Neapolitan female peasant will carry on her head a vessel, full of water to her home, over a rough road, and not spill a drop of it; and the acquisition of this art gives her the same erect and elastic gait.

Girls, Beware of Dandies

The human mind is weak and easily led astray. This is true in every case, but in the matter of love it is peculiarly so. Young, thoughtless ladies come into consideration, and young gentlemen take advantage of it, and never lose sight of the establishment, which they believe to be the most favorable for their purpose. Of our day have a great predilection to finery and foppishness, and young ladies are very shortsighted as regards to fascinate their attention and devotion. Dandies, with all their finery, and their affected, finical manners, a studied vocabulary and other dandyish accomplishments are considered amongst the most unpleasant of characters and the most despicable of beings. Such gaudy and effeminate puppies are found in large numbers everywhere, and to guard against the evil consequences of them. Girls, beware of such dandies!

Cleanliness, propriety, and politeness we like to see observed by young men, and should be appreciated by young ladies. On the contrary, creates disgust and aversion in the eyes of all thinking people. Such and like clothes, with a gold watch chain, silk handkerchief, and the like, are very obtrusively pointed in idleness. Oh, but, then," exclaimed the fond mamma, "if that's so, you can give him a prize for perseverance."

Why he Means all Spice.

"What do you do with your cocoanut shells?" asked a reporter of a prominent candy manufacturer. "Sell them to be made into pipes?" and the cocoanut curiosity of the reporter was not quieted by his fellow statement that shells, when ground and used by spice-mon to adulterate pepper and other of their wares. Further investigation led to a visit to a factory where the shells are ground up is situated at the corner of Line street and the railroad in Camden, and is a one-story brick building, the capacity of the mill being 20 barrels of ground shells per day. The shells are brought to the factory in bags, and discharged in the ground floor. Here they are carefully scraped and put in great revolving events, which are constantly turned over beds of blazing coal. Some of the shells are roasted a light brown, others are as coal out crisp and black. After being carefully sorted, the dark shells are put in machines in the grinding department, and then ground to a fine powder like pepper. The brown shells are not ground so fine, and come from the mill looking exactly like ground coffee. This Camden factory is supposed to be the largest of its kind, and is a month. The shells cost very little, and milling is done at about 2 or 3 cents per pound.

A representative of a leading spice house, in speaking of this novel preparation, said that while his house had not used it, he supposed it was a harmless adulteration for spices. "We have our own method of adulteration," said he, "and sell to the trade probably more adulterated goods than pure. We can't help it. There is no pretence on our part that the lower grades of spices are pure. We simply sell the retailer what he wants. We have spices spice at almost any figure. Pepper, for instance, is low as sight and since cost, but it is as much something else as it is pepper. It would ruin trade to prohibit adulteration, and, besides, there are not enough of spices grown to supply the demand of the United States alone; if nothing but pure spices were sold. We are constantly making experiments to discover the cheapest and most foreign matter with which we can mix our goods in order to supply the demand for the grades."

The powder made from ground cocoanut shell has a fine color, and on account of its weight and appearance is considered by spice manufacturers to be choice adulterating material.

A FRENCH FIEND.
A BRUTAL DEED OF BLOOD.
Horrible Murder and Mutilation of a Priest on a Sick Call.
There is proceeding this week at one of the departments of the Seine a trial for murder which reveals one of the most remarkable crimes of all time. In a village high up in the mountains, where the Loire takes its rise, in an old chateau of the feudal century, with a neighboring parsonage of one story. At 7 o'clock on the evening of January, 1861, a man, of forbidding appearance, rang the bell of the parsonage, and on the door being opened by the priest's maid he entered, and told the priest, who was finishing his dinner, that he was wanted to administer the last Sacraments to one of his parishioners, who had been seriously wounded by a cow. The priest, Abbe Garnaud, felt some doubt about his visitor, but prepared the Sacred Elements, and then took a revolver from his dressing-case. "You don't need that," said the man, "we shall not need any one. Thieves find nothing to do here." To show his acquaintance with the neighborhood, the man said he had been an acolyte in a church at the foot of the mountain. They set out upon the wintry walk, along mountain paths so narrow in places that two men cannot pass each other. The Abbe was thinking, but he turned as frequently that his eye was always upon the strange man. They arrived at a particularly wild spot, and it dawned on the priest to stop upon a bridge stretching over a precipice, when, on looking back, he saw the strange man, with a pistol in his hand, upon him. To draw and fire his revolver was the work of a moment, and the shot appeared to be followed with the echo of its discharge. The strange man, however, raised his left arm, and said, "Retire, priest, I will go first to see how the sick woman is," he fled. Abbe Garnaud, possessed of the idea that a returnaway, returned home. Scarcely an hour after this the sick woman death was carried by the village in the valley, stopped at the priest's house, and, being admitted by the old housekeeper, exclaimed "Oh, Mr. Cure!" "Hring the Host quick

THE MONITOR.
TWENTY-FIFTH YEAR OF PUBLICATION
WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 9, 1882.

REMOVAL.

THE "MONITOR" OFFICE
Will hereafter be located at
636 Clay Street, 636
A few doors nearer Kearney than our former location.

Cowardly Catholics in Europe.

We hope every reader of the MONITOR will peruse Father Corrigan's letter, which we publish on the first page of the present issue, for the reasons that we think it will arouse many of them from the lethargy into which so many Catholics in California seem to have fallen regarding the dangers which threaten the Church in this country through the influence of an anti-Catholic press, a press that comprises within its representation some journals that are read every week in Catholic households to the detriment of all who read them, and which will eliminately lead to the same state of enlightenment that character—so many Catholics in Europe, unless something is done to check the evil. No person can be a habitual reader of Catholic journals and long retain that respect for the clergy and that reverence for his religion which is the distinguishing mark of a good Catholic. Papers that are constantly reviling religion, misrepresenting and surname at sacred rites, speaking contemptuously of the Pope, deriding Bishops and priests, and in many other ways doing the devil's dirty work, if admitted into Catholic families, will undermine the faith of youth, will weaken religion in the mature mind, and, in the end, will lead to the ruin of children of the Church into demons who will carry out the lessons they learned from the anti-Catholic press, by becoming the aiders and abettors of the enemies who are constantly crying out against the Catholic Church. What is it that has brought the people of Catholic Italy to that condition that they permit the Pope to remain a prisoner, that they permit priests to be assassinated and churches to be robbed without lifting a voice to proclaim the outrage or raising a hand to strike back the cowardly ruffians who thus dare to insult the dignity of God as represented in his anointed ministers? Father Corrigan answers the question by pointing to the poisonous literature poured from the Catholic press of Italy; the same is true of France and Spain, and every other Catholic country in Europe, with one notable exception—Ireland—glorious, heroic, martyred Ireland—amidst all her sorrows, has still the courage to strike back at the bigots who want to pull down the "Popish crew" and to populate it with some Satanic emblem. Unlike the Italians, or the French, or the Spaniards, the Irish Catholic race will rather no outrage to be perpetrated upon their religion or the representative that they are not ready to avenge, even at the sacrifice of their lives. Why this difference between Ireland never persecuted raised anti-Catholic publications to penetrate their homes, hence they remain unpolluted. In Ireland they know that "constant dropping will wear a stone," and they realize the fact that if they permit themselves to become familiar with the falsehoods and malignant assertions of the enemies of the Church, they will not be ready to redress her wrongs as if their minds are kept pure. Hence, the secret of Irish bravery in the cause of the Church and Italian toleration of infidel incidences, truly, says Father Corrigan, in a land where "the press is left in the hands of the enemies of all religion," and where daily assaults upon the sanctity of God's Church has the effect of effeminating the faith in the minds of thousands, and, once this fact is accomplished, it then becomes an easy matter for bigots and bullies to rob churches and insult priests, because they know that Catholic courage has been destroyed through the influence of an anti-Catholic press.

But it is not the laity alone who are thus affected by a bad press in Europe. Father Corrigan says that even the priests are in a state of lethargy regarding the necessity of having a press powerful enough to control public opinion in favor of the civil and religious rights of Catholic citizens. And the result is that a meagre minority rule roughshod over the majority, therefore are ridiculed, religious rites are mocked, priests are hell in contempt, and the diabolical element drives the fear of the devil into Catholic hearts that hitherto were sensitive only to the fear of God.

Precisely the same state of affairs will yet exist in this country if Catholics do not awaken to the necessity of building up the press that defends their faith. In these days, when everybody reads, the press is more powerful than the pulpit, its voice extends further, it is heard by people who would not be seen in a Catholic Church, and then it becomes a powerful auxiliary in defence of Catholic Faith. But, alas! there are in this country thousands of Catholics who would contribute to the support of anti-Catholic sheet in existence than patronize their own paper. The result is that such "Catholics" will not be found in the front rank of a money-making speculation; that they see no use for Popes, Prelates or Priests; that free schools are better than Catholic schools; that all religions are equally good; that hell is a mere mystical myth of the "dark ages," and that the devil is a "dead dock" filled by Protestant enlightenment. Where will such "Catholics" be found when the hour of persecution is sounded against the Catholic Church in these United States? They will be found in the fortunate ranks of the church burners, the mob leaders, and the most blood-thirsty among the whole crew of the outlaws against the Church of Christ. The worst enemies the Church of God has had to contend with were her own children, priests and people. Even in France, Italy and Spain, the robbers of churches and the assassins of priests are all renegade Catholics who have lost their religion through reading bad books and papers. "Like causes," says a wise maxim, "produce like results," and we in America need not expect that any miracle will intervene to save us from the curse of anti-Catholic literature. The cure rests with Catholics themselves; it can be effected by not patronizing the press that lampoons the Pope and brings the Bishops and priests into contempt; it can be done by supporting the Catholic press cheerfully, and by extending its influence by enlarging its circulation. These are simple remedies easily accomplished and well worthy of a trial in view of the monstrous evil that can be averted in the future.

Beecher on the Catholic Church.

The vagaries of Beecher's mind, added to his coloid character, detract materially from any expressions he may make use of in the pulpit or the press, still there is a certain curiosity to learn what the noisy and notorious clerical smart may have to say upon any topic upon which he may touch during his Sunday talks.

Among other pulpit themes Beecher recently selected that fruitful subject "The Roman Catholic Church," but, unlike most men of his cloth, he neither condemned nor misrepresented that non-Christian institution which has afforded so many "crumbs of comfort" for eternal downs both in and out of the pulpit during the past three centuries. Beecher, on the contrary, if we are to place any reliance whatever upon what he says—spoke rather patronizingly of the Church, and, to the end, he will have to the children of the Church into demons who will carry out the lessons they learned from the anti-Catholic press, by becoming the aiders and abettors of the enemies who are constantly crying out against the Catholic Church. What it is that has brought the people of Catholic Italy to that condition that they permit the Pope to remain a prisoner, that they permit priests to be assassinated and churches to be robbed without lifting a voice to proclaim the outrage or raising a hand to strike back the cowardly ruffians who thus dare to insult the dignity of God as represented in his anointed ministers? Father Corrigan answers the question by pointing to the poisonous literature poured from the Catholic press of Italy; the same is true of France and Spain, and every other Catholic country in Europe, with one notable exception—Ireland—glorious, heroic, martyred Ireland—amidst all her sorrows, has still the courage to strike back at the bigots who want to pull down the "Popish crew" and to populate it with some Satanic emblem. Unlike the Italians, or the French, or the Spaniards, the Irish Catholic race will rather no outrage to be perpetrated upon their religion or the representative that they are not ready to avenge, even at the sacrifice of their lives. Why this difference between Ireland never persecuted raised anti-Catholic publications to penetrate their homes, hence they remain unpolluted. In Ireland they know that "constant dropping will wear a stone," and they realize the fact that if they permit themselves to become familiar with the falsehoods and malignant assertions of the enemies of the Church, they will not be ready to redress her wrongs as if their minds are kept pure. Hence, the secret of Irish bravery in the cause of the Church and Italian toleration of infidel incidences, truly, says Father Corrigan, in a land where "the press is left in the hands of the enemies of all religion," and where daily assaults upon the sanctity of God's Church has the effect of effeminating the faith in the minds of thousands, and, once this fact is accomplished, it then becomes an easy matter for bigots and bullies to rob churches and insult priests, because they know that Catholic courage has been destroyed through the influence of an anti-Catholic press.

But it is not the laity alone who are thus affected by a bad press in Europe. Father Corrigan says that even the priests are in a state of lethargy regarding the necessity of having a press powerful enough to control public opinion in favor of the civil and religious rights of Catholic citizens. And the result is that a meagre minority rule roughshod over the majority, therefore are ridiculed, religious rites are mocked, priests are hell in contempt, and the diabolical element drives the fear of the devil into Catholic hearts that hitherto were sensitive only to the fear of God.

Precisely the same state of affairs will yet exist in this country if Catholics do not awaken to the necessity of building up the press that defends their faith. In these days, when everybody reads, the press is more powerful than the pulpit, its voice extends further, it is heard by people who would not be seen in a Catholic Church, and then it becomes a powerful auxiliary in defence of Catholic Faith. But, alas! there are in this country thousands of Catholics who would contribute to the support of anti-Catholic sheet in existence than patronize their own paper. The result is that such "Catholics" will not be found in the front rank of a money-making speculation; that they see no use for Popes, Prelates or Priests; that free schools are better than Catholic schools; that all religions are equally good; that hell is a mere mystical myth of the "dark ages," and that the devil is a "dead dock" filled by Protestant enlightenment. Where will such "Catholics" be found when the hour of persecution is sounded against the Catholic Church in these United States? They will be found in the fortunate ranks of the church burners, the mob leaders, and the most blood-thirsty among the whole crew of the outlaws against the Church of Christ. The worst enemies the Church of God has had to contend with were her own children, priests and people. Even in France, Italy and Spain, the robbers of churches and the assassins of priests are all renegade Catholics who have lost their religion through reading bad books and papers.

"Like causes," says a wise maxim, "produce like results," and we in America need not expect that any miracle will intervene to save us from the curse of anti-Catholic literature. The cure rests with Catholics themselves; it can be effected by not patronizing the press that lampoons the Pope and brings the Bishops and priests into contempt; it can be done by supporting the Catholic press cheerfully, and by extending its influence by enlarging its circulation. These are simple remedies easily accomplished and well worthy of a trial in view of the monstrous evil that can be averted in the future.

The Pope to the Irish Bishops.

Last week we published a letter from Archbishop Croke in which he gave several reasons in proof of the assertion that the Ladies' Land League was not condemned by the Irish Hierarchy. Since that letter was published our Irish exchanges have come to hand, containing the text of the Letter addressed to the Irish Bishops, and which formed the basis of their action in recommending a code of rules for the government of the secular and regular clergy in regard to their attendance at public meetings, in their address the Prelates give the following directions and admonition:

"That we may effectually carry out the instructions conveyed to us by the letter from Propaganda, and thus provide, as far as in us lies, against the dangers pointed out in the paragraph marked No. 2 in that letter, we resolve as follows:

"1. That the rule already existing in some dioceses, prohibiting priests from attending public meetings outside their respective parishes, without the express consent of the parish priest of the parish in which such meetings are to be held, is hereby made general and obligatory of every diocese in Ireland.

"2. That the curate or curates of a parish where a public meeting is to be held shall not attend such meetings without the express consent of the parish priest of said parish.

"As difference of opinion may arise amongst the clergy on the expediency of attending any particular public meeting, that the matter be referred to the Ordinary of the diocese in which such meeting is proposed to be held, and that, pending his decision, no action whatever is to be taken by the priests in question.

"You will easily believe, Very Rev. and Rev. Dear Brethren, that in issuing the foregoing instructions our only aim is to secure the good of the Church, the honor of the clergy, and to promote the happiness of our Christian people, and that we carry out its faith are at the present moment exposed to many dangers, and if these dangers are to be averted, the priests and people of Ireland must be bound into one by mutual consideration for each other, and mutual confidence. The enemies of the one and of the other will endeavor by every means in their power to detach the people from the guidance of the clergy, and to this end they will gladly avail themselves of the slightest indication on the part of the priesthood.

"Nothing, therefore, should ever fall from the lips of God's ministers that would wound the queenly virtue of divine charity. Nothing should ever mark the action of the pastor of souls which could estrange from his confidence a single member of the flock committed to his care. Nothing should be tolerated in God's house that could render the attendance of any one—rich or poor, friend or foe—an indelicate or embarrassing. Nothing should be done that could lower the respect of Ireland from that reverent which is the safeguard of their modesty, and the impregnable fortress of their virtue—that respect for which God has invested them. Of the good model of true womanly dignity and virtue it is found that even in the worst days of Ireland's trial, the Irish maiden of chastity she traveled on her way even fearlessness. Thanks to God, we have in our midst multitudes of holy women engaged in deeds of highest charity, and of such liberal alms for their soul's sake, than to spend extravagantly for useless display and let the poor soul linger in Limbo forgotten in its misery and abandonment by those who should remember it in their prayers and through the offices of the Church.

New England Polygamy.

The wide prevalence in New England of its characteristic form of polygamy—polygamy of spectral lineage—says Leonard W. Cronkhite of the Princeton Review, naturally gives rise to many social complications such as can be illustrated best by facts and incidents. Take the following example from a rural town in eastern Massachusetts. Nothing in the story is fictitious except the names. Emily Brown, now about 60 years old, comes of good New England stock, her sire of a rich New England farmer, she was married to Albert Knight. The Superior Court for the county where they lived gave them the necessary license, and each of them married again. Emily Brown Knight's second choice was Carlous Williams, a minor, whom she bought away from his father for that purpose. Double marriage papers were prepared by the Superior Court, and Williams married another woman with whom (having a less remarkable temperament than the bride of his extreme youth) he is still living. Emily Brown Knight Williams was married to Judson Phelps; and presently once more to Mr. and Mrs. Phelps the Superior Court issued the double license, which, was acted on by both parties. Mr. Phelps who, seems to have been a very fine character, disappointed hearts, married a woman who had deserted her second husband, having been deserted by her first. Mrs. Emily Brown Knight Williams Phelps, who was married to Tobias Thomas, on occasion of which solemnity the divine blessing was invoked upon the auspicious union, the fervent and appropriate prayer by one of the officiating clergymen being that "as in the present moment no further change of name has been reported from Mrs. Emily Brown Knight Willes Phelps Thomas, we invoke only one step more to make her the mistress of the woman at Jacob's well, there is no reason whatever to doubt that, in the company of her husbands and about eight upon a new object and be reciprocated, the Superior Court would show the this Government than it is in these dominions where the bishop and the clergy combat in favor of the League? Why, indeed! The Pope, I am told, has authorized special indulgences in the reply reported to this question.

THREE WORKING IRISH PATRIOTS.

The three chief officers of the Irish Parliamentary party, T. P. O'Connor, Justin McCarthy, and Thomas Sexton, are now visiting the situation in Ireland in the Keg. The Sun, of New York, of Monday, in a report of the New York Cable, Monday, of the New York Herald, of Monday of the New York Cable Chronicle—Mr. Cowan's paper, Dublin—the following interesting and well-written account of their work—over some do plans—and the scene—the Irish Land Question, and Parliamentary opinion on Ireland has of late been considerably modified. A year ago the Land question was described as the Gordian knot of Ireland, now they regard it as a means of the key stone from some English journals. The world does certainly move.

The Catholic Magazine has resumed publication as a Quarterly. It will continue to be edited by Rev. James Hickey, 117 Lake street, New York, and will be furnished to subscribers at $1 per year. The publishers say: "We are now prepared to issue each number promptly, and will carry on business without the slightest irregularity or delay. Monthly publications will be resumed as soon as possible. Those who subscribe for the Magazine will receive the numbers of the Quarterly, and we hope it will meet with the approbation, as the pluck and talent of the old weekly deserve it.

DEVOTION TO THE BLESSED VIRGIN.

THE SORROWS OF MARY—FIFTH DOLOR.

FIRST ARTICLE.

[Translated for the MONITOR from the French "La Vrai.]

"Behold Mother! . . . Now there stood by the Cross of Jesus His Mother" (John 19:26). This is all the Gospel tells us of the Fifth Dolor. This brevity of description when there is question of so sacred, and so illustrated beauty, is in the Old Testament the Spirit of God seems to have made it a point, every time the occasion presented itself, to describe the man under the manner the affections of a mother when brought on her by the sufferings or death of a beloved son. How affecting is not the description of Agar born with desolation at the sight of her little Ismael dying in the desert? How impressive is not the picture of Sephora, the wife of Moses, when she sees that she is constrained to make a sacrifice of her husband's circumcision! And when she saw his blood flowing, she could not help exclaiming her husband in this harsh manner: "A bloody spouse thou art to me, because of the circumcision." (Exodus 4:26). How touching the Holy Scripture depicts the inconsolent dolors of Anna, the mother of the young Tobias, which she endured by reason of his absence from her! She wept unceasingly, and she could not restrain her tears, and said: "Woe, woe is me, my son! why did we send thee to go to a strange country, the light of our eyes, the staff of our old age, the comfort of our life, the hope of our posterity?" (Tobias 10:6). Another scene not less moving than the one just referred to is described in the Second Book of Kings XXI. 10, etc. It is the unknown Rizpha, the mother of the two youths of royal blood, who had been put to death, and whose corpses are represented as having accompanied the immortal victims to the place of their execution, as having spread sackcloth on the rock, and as having remained seated for a long time close to the instrument of the torture of her cherished children, to drive away the birds of prey from hovering before by the mouth of the prophet Jeremias (31:15) the lamentations of the mothers of Bethlehem: "A voice in Rama was heard, lamentation and great mourning; Rachel bewailing her sons and will not be comforted, because they are not." (Matth. 2:18). And now when there is question of the most atrocious torture of the most sacred Victim hung on the mountain of Golgotha, we read only "Behold your mother!" Behold your mother! Behold your mother! Strange, wonderful silence, which is also noticeable in many other places of the Holy Scriptures, and precisely under circumstances the most stirring.

"Thou, therefore, Fidate book Jesus, and Jesus Christ, Jesus (Ib. 11) Jesus, Jesus, Jesus,

Farm and Home.

Canning Fruits and Vegetables.

Having the cans, or jars, the operation is simple. The fruit, whatever it may be, in a syrup just strong enough to properly sweeten it, is brought to the boiling point, and when the air has all been expelled from it it is at once placed in the jars, previously warmed with hot water, and when these are well filled the cover is screwed down tight. Good jars, well filled with boiling fruit, and promptly covered by screwing down the cans, will insure success. Many years ago, when canning was not as general as it is now, we showed how any common, wide-mouthed bottle could be used, but all present jars made for the purpose are so cheap that it is not necessary to resort to any makeshifts. Among the first things to be put up in this manner is rhubarb. This can be readily canned, and green gooseberries may be treated in the same manner. Strawberries and raspberries come next, and are better preserved in the same manner than by any other, but these, especially the strawberry, while vastly better when preserved thus than in any other manner, seem far short of retaining their original flavor. Peaches are easily preserved thus, and are nearly perfect, as are pears, especially the Bartlett, apples and quinces. One who has run up the volume in this manner will never preserve it according to the old pound-for-pound method. All the highly-flavored vegetables, preserved by canning, make a finer dish than any other can be produced in any other manner. The usual process is, to cook the fruit, of whatever kind, in a syrup made of four ounces of sugar, to a pint of water. When the fruit is cooked tender, remove it from the fire, and add to the syrup to fill every crevice; if there are bubbles of air, add these to the syrup; if there is a space left that the jar is to be full of fruit and syrup, and up to the top before the cap is screwed on. While fruits are easily preserved in the family, vegetables are more difficult. We have many inquiries about preserving green peas, green corn and tomatoes. Those who make a business of canning, find green corn and tomatoes are the most difficult things to preserve. They can only be put up in cans by long boiling process, not practicable in families. If any of our readers have found a method by which either corn or peas can be preserved by any process practicable in the family, we ask them to communicate it, for the benefit of others. Last autumn we made an experiment with tomatoes. Thoroughly ripe fruit was cooked as for the table, omitting butter and all other seasoning, and put up in ordinary fruit jars. About three out of twelve failed, but those which succeeded were much better than the tomatoes purchased in the same.

Lemons.

Lemons are a most valuable fruit, not only for cooking, but also for medicinal purposes and the toilet. If the juice of a lemon is taken every morning before breakfast, for two or three weeks in the spring time, it will prevent the disagreeable feeling of weakness and want of energy peculiar to the season. Lemon juice, mixed with sugar, and a little salt, will remove iron mould from linen, and ink stains, if lemon juice, with pulp attached, if bound upon a corn, will relieve it in a few days. It is also an excellent thing for the chilblains and fever, and if a teaspoonful of sugar and a pinch of salt is added to the juice of the pulp and eaten with the spoon every morning, it will break up constipation. Lemon juice, if used as a lotion in removing freckles and sun-burn, should be diluted with twice as much water, and the hands and neck of milk water in the morning. It is also valuable for the complexion, taken in the morning, fasting, in conjunction, perhaps or liquids. Place a slice of lemon in each eye of the camphor in a wineglass and squeeze some lemon juice upon it; if it is otherwise in a bad state, you will find the lemon will be tasteless and would utterly ruin the complexion. For much-sun tanned faces it is recommended, the pulpy portion left adhered to drink freely of lemonade, and to rub the clear juice if palatable, it will remove the juice of lemons is of decided influence.

Good Sensations.

Don't live in the back end of your house. The boys will prefer the saloon to the like-lihood. Don't be afraid of the coal bill or the wood pile. It is cheaper to have a warm parlor than to be crippled with rheumatism and lumbago and shoe of the grumbler. Pull the blinds up for the genuine, old honest sun for the poor, that years may be the lesser of money. In a dying world don't stand on ceremony, but ventilate and light your children's bodies are more valuable than fine furniture, best curtains and Brussels carpets, and their souls are of eternal worth. Don't starve to-day, to rot to-morrow. Don't bend and sorrow for years that you may be possessed in your graves. Be your own doctor and Tilbury, and the use of Dr. Clark Johnson's Indian Blood Syrup has conquered and Dr. Clark Johnson's Indian Blood Syrup has conquered. Dr. Clark Johnson's Indian Blood Syrup is a remedy. Jas. M. WHITBRIDE.

Agents wanted for the sale of the Indian Blood Syrup in every town or village, in which I have no Agent. Particulars given on application.

DRUGGISTS SELL IT.

Laboratory 77 West 3rd st, N.Y. City

MISCELLANEOUS.

LYDIA E. PINKHAM'S VEGETABLE COMPOUND.

Is a Positive Cure

For all those Painful Complaints and Weaknesses so common in our best female population.

A Medicine for Women, invented by a Woman. Prepared by a Woman.

This invigorating Medicine destroys that craving for stimulants, gives strength and vigor, and imparts to the system, at this critical period, such vigor that it carries the sufferer through it with comparatively little suffering. It has been the means of saving many from premature graves. It is the only medicine of which this can be truthfully said. It cures Leucorrhœa, Irregular and Painful Menstruation, Inflammation and Ulceration of the Uterus, Flooding, Prolapsus, Falling and Displacements, and the consequent spinal weakness, and is especially adapted to the Change of Life.

It cures Gravel, Dropsical Swellings, Nervous Prostration, Sleeplessness, Depression and Indigestion.

It cures Bloating, Flatulence, Stomach Weakness, Nervous Headache, Nervous Irritability, Sudden Rushes of Heat, Dizziness, Sleeplessness, Depression and Indigestion.

It cures Kidney Complaints of either sex.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Blood Purifier, combining the tonic properties of the best Blood Purifiers, is unsurpassed by any medicine in the world. It cures Scrofula, Scrofulous Humors, Swelling, Boils, Tumors, Tetter, Salt Rheum, Erysipelas, Pimples, Blotches, Eruptions, Jaundice, Rheumatism, Dyspepsia, Loss of Appetite, Feel Sleepy and Stupid, Bitterness, Headache, Loss of Memory, Numbness, Biliousness, Dizziness, Rheumatism, Eruptions and Skin Diseases, Dropsy, Tumors, Worms, Neuralgia, Colic, Griping, Diarrhœa, Dysentery, Gout, Piles, Disorders of the Liver, and all other diseases resulting from a disordered state of the digestive apparatus.

A Sure Disease Pill that has no equal.

While gentle in their action, these Pills are the most thorough and searching cathartic that can be employed, and never give pain unless the bowels are inflamed, and then their influence is healing. They stimulate the appetite and digestive organs, they operate to purify and enrich the blood, and impart renewed health and vigor to the whole system.

Prepared by Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Practical and Analytical Chemists, Lowell, Mass.

SOLD BY ALL DRUGGISTS EVERYWHERE.

NEW RICH BLOOD!

Will cure your Scrofulous Complaint, Boils, Pimples, Blotches, Tetter, Salt Rheum, Ulcers, Sores, Swellings, Tumors, Neuralgia, Rheumatism, Gout, Dropsy, Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint, Dizziness, Sleeplessness, Depression and Indigestion, if you take Dr. Clark Johnson's Indian Blood Syrup. It cures Ulcers in the Throat and Mouth, Ulcerated Sore Throat, Ulcerated Consumption, Scrofulous Abscesses, Tumors, Tetter, Salt Rheum, Erysipelas, Pimples, Blotches, Eruptions, Jaundice, Rheumatism, Dyspepsia, Loss of Appetite, Feel Sleepy and Stupid, Bitterness, Headache, Loss of Memory, Numbness, Biliousness, Dizziness, Rheumatism, Eruptions and Skin Diseases, Dropsy, Tumors, Worms, Neuralgia, Colic, Griping, Diarrhœa, Dysentery, Gout, Piles, Disorders of the Liver, and all other diseases resulting from a disordered state of the digestive apparatus.

Dr. Clark Johnson's Indian Blood Syrup has proved a remedy for Ulcerated

ARCHBISHOP CROKE AT PALLASGREEN.

Great Devotion at a Grand Mission.

A number of the Irish Vincentian Fathers are at present giving missions throughout Ireland, and it is gratifying to learn that the fire of divine faith burns yet brightly in the breasts of the Irish people, as evinced by the following description of the closing scene of the mission at Pallasgreen, where Archbishop Croke was present. Alluding to that memorable occasion Finperary says: On Sunday a great mission, which during the past three weeks was conducted with such wonderful success in the parish of Pallasgreen, by the Vincentian Fathers of Sunday's Well, Cork, was brought to a close under fitting and peculiar circumstances. Unusual importance was lent to the proceedings by the fact that the Most Rev. Dr. Croke the Archbishop of Cashel travelled on Saturday evening from his episcopal home to be present at and take part in the final ceremony of one of the greatest Missions which has taken place for a long time in the large district comprising New Pallas, Old Pallas, Nicker, Ballyragget, which at one time enjoyed a fashion fighting celebrity, but which is now one of the most peaceable, well-disposed, and law-abiding parts of the kingdom. The parish church of Nicker was the place selected for the religious ceremonies, and when visited on Sunday the village presented a scene which will not soon be forgotten. The roads at each side for a considerable distance were lined with people even the single fields had to be utilized for the accommodation of vehicles. At the commencement of the proceedings the great window, which will not soon be forgotten by Pallasgreen, the invocation Father Burke, Father Hanley and Rev. Fathers Rogers, Father Hanley and Rev. Fathers Rogers, Father Dwyer, and Oakley. His Grace the Archbishop and twenty priests dined in the evening with the Rev. Father, Ryan, the worthy and hospitable pastor of the parish.

A Parish Mission.

It is a parish mission to undergo a course of Father Kelly's Celtic Tonic. Dr. Kelly's Celtic Tonic is the best tonic for restoration. Price 50c.

Lift Down.

Remarkable cures have been effected by Smith's Cinque Tonic. Several of San Francisco's best citizens have been cured by it. Cinque Tonic is a new preparation for Malaria, Fever and Ague, and the best household remedy. 1443 Fifth Street.

—Remnants Salves is unrivalled for its speedy healing qualities. Ask your druggist for it. Sc.

—Mrs. Marion Tisdale, Attorney-at-Law, Probate Law a specialty. 1017 Market St., San Francisco.

Cable—Ammen's Cough Syrup.

Ask to see large bottle—Ammen's Cough Syrup.

Tell your friends of Ammen's Cough Syrup.

NERVOUS DEBILITY.

A CURE GUARANTEED.

DR. S. C. WHITE'S NERVE AND BRAIN TREATMENT, a specific for Hysteria, Dizziness, Convulsions, Nervous Headache, Nervous Prostration, Nervous Debility, Nervous Weakness, Mental Depression, Softening of the Brain, Decay and Death, One box will cure recent cases. Each box contains one month's treatment. $1 a box, or six boxes for $5 (not to cure but to cure). I guarantee a cure with each $5 order received by me to cure any of the above cases. Pamphlet free to any address. Sold by druggists everywhere. Agency for the Pacific Coast, 1016 Market, S.F. Sold by Sherman, Clay & Co., Sacramento; Kohler & Chase, Oakland. Orders sent by mail to Agents will receive the money if the treatment does not relieve cure. Guarantee issued only through the agency. Beware of worthless imitations. C. RENHARD & CO., wholesale druggists, agents Pacific Coast, 638 Market, S.F.

—Does it take cream meaning any quantity, then the 14-0 office hereafter that our new edition on at 606 Clay street.

CATHOLIC NEWS IN BRIEF.

—St. Patrick's Church, Danville, Ill., was burned to the ground Thursday night week. Loss $30,000; fully insured.

—A new Catholic Church was dedicated on the 12th of July in Lexington, Sanilac County Mich.

—The death of Mr. Joseph Aloysius Hansom, the architect and inventor of the Hansom cab, is announced from London. He was a Catholic. May his soul rest in peace. Amen.

—A number of juvenile immigrants, sent out by Cardinal Manning to the Bishop of Ottawa, in charge of Lord Archbald Douglas, have arrived in Ottawa, and will be sent to the bonds with Catholic families in Canada —Mgr. Parnard, Bishop of Anton, has received a long letter from the Pope congratulating him on his election to the French Academy, and bestowing his Apostolic blessing on the Bishop and the faithful of his diocese.

—The corner-stone of the new St. Peter's church, Mount Clemens, Mich., was laid on the 4th ult., by Very Rev. P. Heunaert, V. G. of the diocese of Detroit. It is reported that the church will be finished during the present season, and will cost about $18,000.

—On the Fourth of July the corner-stone of the new Church of St. Peter at Mt. Clemens, Mich., was laid by the Very Rev. Peter Hennaert, Vicar-General and Chancellor of the Detroit Diocese. The attendance was very large.

—The Dominican Sisters, of St. Louis, have purchased ninety feet of land on Fourth Avenue, near Mitchell Street, for the purpose erecting an hospital thereon. It is not expected the building will be commenced before next Spring.

—A short time ago about thirty unpublished and forgotten letters of St. Teresa were discovered, in different parts of Spain, by Father Leon and Marcello of the Society of Jesus. These letters have been included in a French translation of St. Teresa's letters which those Fathers have recently made and published.

—A moral monument in the memory of the late Bishop Foley is to be erected in the Cathedral of the Holy Name, Chicago, Ill. The order for the monument was given by the clergy of the diocese of Chicago to Mr. William Starr. The monument itself is of the Gothic order, in the Italian and Colonial marble, and forms the niche for the lifeless bust of the bishop.

—Sister Mary Antoine Corrie died last week at the New York Foundling Asylum. The deceased was a niece of the venerable Mother M. Jerome Ely, Superiorss of the Sisters of Charity at Mount St. Vincent, on the Hudson, N. Y. She entered the community in 1848 at the early age of sixteen years, and had consequently spent thirty-four years in religion.

—The physicians of Baltimore have purchased a house for the Sisters of La Bon Secours, which the Sisters will repurchase for themselves when their means permit. Mass was celebrated in it for the first time on the 5th ult., by the Most Rev. Archbishop Gibbons. The Sisters' service as nurses are most highly esteemed by the Protestants as well as the Catholics of Baltimore.

—The Church of the Visitation, at Kingsbridge, near the Bronx, was dedicated on the 9th by Archbishop Williams. His Grace was assisted by the Rev. Wilson, Rector of Patrick, of Milton, and the Rev. Hugh P. Smyth, Waymouth. After the dedication pontifical vespers were sung, and Mass was celebrated by Father Fitzpatrick, and an address was delivered by Father Williams McQuaid of Abington.

—The Sisters of the Holy Cross are about establishing a hospital in the city of South Bend, Indiana. The old church of St. Joseph, on Lowell Heights, will be used until the new building can be been erected. The plans for the new hospital are very elaborate, and the new building is to cost upwards of $60,000. The Very Rev. Father Corby will have entire supervision of the work and the hospital, intending to make it a model structure of its kind.

—Rev. R. J. Sorelle, S.J., assistant pastor of St. Ignatius Church, Baltimore, on Sunday, August 6th, celebrated the fifteenth anniversary of his ordination to the priesthood. The celebration took place at the residence of the Society of Jesus at Fredrick, where Father Sorrin officiated at Mass, which was attended by several of the friends of the aged priest. Father Sorrin is one of a representative of a past generation. He was born in Philadelphia, September the 6th, 1806, and consequently is in his 76th year. His parents were Irish Roman Catholics, and the humble walks of life.

—The Benedictine, both monks and sisters, are accomplishing great things for God's honor among the Chippewa Indians, in Becker county, Minn. Not long since, their church was dedicated by Right Rev. Abbot Edelbrock, and the Indians prepared themselves for the event by a Solemn Tridium. Right Rev. Bishop Seidenbush, the agent of the reservation, Major Lane and his family, and over ten Protestant Episcopal ministers (whose congregation had deserted him for the Catholic communion of the day) were interesting witnesses of the dedication.

—The Rev. Father Matthew Hoet, pastor of the little German Catholic Church of St. Boniface, at Second avenue and and Forty-Seventh street, has decided to build a larger church on the same site. Work commenced in still be one of the handsomest churches east of Third Avenue. The old church was purchased by Father Hoet in 1869, and was then a frame structure 60 feet by 20, which had for some time previous been used as a carpenter shop. Father Hoet, however, soon remodelled it into its present shape and on October 17th, 1869, it was solemnly dedicated by the late Archbishop Hughes.

—The annual pilgrimage to Ainetten, the little village of St. Benedict Joseph Labre, was celebrated recently. Masses were said from daybreak in the neighborhood of Ainetten and in the houses where the saint was born. At 11 a.m. Solemn High Mass was celebrated by Mgr. Deguerry, Archbishop of Cambrai, in the meadow adjoining the house, an eloquent sermon being afterwards preached by Father Picard, the well-known organizer of religious pilgrimages. In the afternoon a splendid procession took place from the parish church to the house of the saint, and the function concluded with Solemn Benediction of the Blessed Sacrament and veneration of the relics of the great French pilgrim saint.

COMPOUND OXYGEN

THE TREATMENT OF CHRONIC DISEASES BY COMPOUND OXYGEN. A Compound of Oxygen with the Vitalizing Agents of the Vegetable Kingdom. Its Mode of Action Explained. Its Effects Upon the Various Diseases Treated. Its Effects Upon the Human Organism. Its Effects Upon Disease Germs. Its Effects Upon Pain. Its Effects Upon Nutrition. Its Effects Upon Nervous Diseases. Its Effects Upon Weak Lungs. Its Effects Upon Consumption. Its Effects Upon Asthma. Its Effects Upon Bronchitis. Its Effects Upon Catarrh. Its Effects Upon Neuralgia. Its Effects Upon Headache. Its Effects Upon Dyspepsia. Its Effects Upon Liver Complaint. Its Effects Upon Kidney Disease. Its Effects Upon Debility. Its Effects Upon Nervous Prostration. Its Effects Upon Sleeplessness. Its Effects Upon Old Age. Its Effects Upon Children. Its Effects Upon Both Sexes. Its Effects Upon Both Colors. Its Effects Upon Both Extremes of Life. Its Effects Upon Both Extremes of Disease. Its Effects Upon Both Extremes of Pain. Its Effects Upon Both Extremes of Weakness. Its Effects Upon Both Extremes of Nervousness. Its Effects Upon Both Extremes of Sleeplessness. Its Effects Upon Both Extremes of Old Age. Its Effects Upon Both Extremes of Children. Its Effects Upon Both Extremes of Both Sexes. Its Effects Upon Both Extremes of Both Colors. Its Effects Upon Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Life. Its Effects Upon Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Disease. Its Effects Upon Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Pain. Its Effects Upon Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Weakness. Its Effects Upon Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Nervousness. Its Effects Upon Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Sleeplessness. Its Effects Upon Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Old Age. Its Effects Upon Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Children. Its Effects Upon Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Both Sexes. Its Effects Upon Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Both Colors. Its Effects Upon Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Life. Its Effects Upon Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Disease. Its Effects Upon Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Pain. Its Effects Upon Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Weakness. Its Effects Upon Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Nervousness. Its Effects Upon Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Sleeplessness. Its Effects Upon Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Old Age. Its Effects Upon Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Children. Its Effects Upon Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Both Sexes. Its Effects Upon Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Both Colors. Its Effects Upon Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Life. Its Effects Upon Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Disease. Its Effects Upon Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Pain. Its Effects Upon Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Weakness. Its Effects Upon Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Nervousness. Its Effects Upon Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Sleeplessness. Its Effects Upon Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Old Age. Its Effects Upon Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Children. Its Effects Upon Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Both Sexes. Its Effects Upon Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Both Colors. Its Effects Upon Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Life. Its Effects Upon Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Disease. Its Effects Upon Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Pain. Its Effects Upon Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Weakness. Its Effects Upon Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Nervousness. Its Effects Upon Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Sleeplessness. Its Effects Upon Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Old Age. Its Effects Upon Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Children. Its Effects Upon Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Both Sexes. Its Effects Upon Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Both Colors. Its Effects Upon Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Life. Its Effects Upon Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Disease. Its Effects Upon Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Pain. Its Effects Upon Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Weakness. Its Effects Upon Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Nervousness. Its Effects Upon Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Sleeplessness. Its Effects Upon Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Old Age. Its Effects Upon Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Children. Its Effects Upon Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Both Extremes of Both Sexes. Its Effects Upon Both Extremes of Poetry.

[For our Monitor.]

THE ASSUMPTION OF OUR LADY.

Lo! the mighty heavens are opened and a train Poured forth in golden glory from the shining courts above,
Where the white-winged Angels hasten forth clads with rapturous gladness,
To hail their Queen, our Mother, with a peaceful and reverent love.

Aye, they come to hear her from us, she who for our sake has suffered
In her life long years and sorrows that her Son, our Saviour
Bore for our sins, that Christ and hunger for the souls that sorrowed and repented Him
Yet the great sins and sorrows that His sacred body bore.

Now she goes to share His triumph in the kingdom of His Father,
Loving yet her earthly children with a love both strong and deep;
Yes, in Heaven we still may claim her, were we not benighted by sin,
In Christ's hour of awful anguish, on a precious trust in Mary!

O ye Angel hosts attendant our Lady's blest
Yet whom happy yet we near her in that hour of Ye rejoice that we have rallied by the banner of Ye rejoice that we have rallied by the banner of Ye shout in joy that the numbers worthy such a glorious crown.

But the words of pious mothers, and the visions
Have portrayed by royal pageant, Mill with Pages in wisdom of teaching Christ-guidance,
We behold the Queen of Angels by her subject Upward borne hold sounding anthems to her everlasting on. Mary! turned divine towards Oh! the scene of rapture thrilling through her Mary! the Immaculate, and that Love and rapture thrilling, filling every fibre of
As clothed with awful splendor the Trinity appears Where compeers hosts are chanting in the mandates of the Lord.

Well may the Angels turn to her with looks of trust reverence,
Well may they reflected the bright name that the bestow,
Thus the Father for surpassing all that human thought can fathom,
At the throne of Deity, upon her great Lordship.

Ah! you God they phone with pity on the earth
then unity explained,
And we hail the Queen of Heaven, Queen of Our Mother's throne!
Ask for us the gifts and graces she can give to penitent sinners,
And the consolation and courage needed for our sorrow to atone.

"Queen of Angels," lovely handing in thy power
Ah! we ask, we ask, Queen of Heart, and bend, and fit to serve thee; happy if we may but claim
Thy first Son's unfaltering mercy this great boon, thy mercy
To be reached with those who humbly seek to glorify thy name.

In the joy of thy Assumption we would not be Thus with us in Sight and beauty, purity and Mother, Mother
Make us worthy of the rescues Jesus paid for us on Calvary,
Lead us on Life's rugged pathway subject to thy Amen, amen!

By the glorious mention on this day of days
Our Mother,
Do we hail the Queen of Heaven, Queen of Angels and of Saints,
Queen of the Kingdom where the praise of God forever
Is the Angels forever trumpeting all the fairest Sweet poesies.

Then, we pray, our exile over in this world of
And sorrow,
Thy Son, our Saviour, thy merciful
Will bring us home to Heaven, Mary!
We may hear with hearts rejoicing the great
Amen! Alleluia.

MARCELLA A. FITZGERALD.
Stony Wexford, Aug. 15th, 1898.

Literary Miscellany.

THE MINERS' NOVENA AND WHAT CAME OF IT.

BY M. BELL.

"Mary," called Mrs. Treherne from the top of the stairs, "do you know what time it is? Nearly seven o'clock, and the school will be crowded to-night, as Father Gerald is going to preach. Come up at once, child, and put on your things."

"Very well, mother. I'll come up if you wish it, but indeed I see no reason why I have to going to-night," answered Mary, loth to leave the fire to which she was seated.

"Nonsense, it will do you good to go; and maybe you'll get there the novena to your patron saint over soon, Mary, dear."

Then urged, Mary rose with a sigh to do as her mother bidden, for she knew that she had no heart for going out on that evening, the level above, and the explanation.

She had been to High Mass that morning, and the news she had heard on her way home had left her heart with grief and anxiety.

Mary Treherne was twenty years of age, a lovely, very dark-eyed girl, and, reserved in such commanding settling day, but intense in her nature had been of settled unexpected. Her engagement to Jack Pengear, a miner in the tin mines in Cornwall, where the country is chiefly explored by little tin mines, being an active, energetic young man, had engagement to get married as soon as he could, and they had been happy, from their childhood, in the thought of their future home together. And her daughter, from being broken in work as a plain, simple girl, but on the shoes and sent forth to the world of pleasure, and of work, and that, in truth, was the way in which she had met Jack Pengear, by the rough way in a coal-mine, and he looked after the one and had the care of the Jack's duty, they worked in Field Cove, where John Pengear was employed underground in the mines, and John was a Catholic, and Mary was a Protestant, a Catholic, and so engaged, living with his mother, Mary had been in the habit of going to Mass, to degrees on Sunday and spring up between these two young people which had ripened into a mutual attachment. And now John was anxious to marry and settle down. But he was in the seventy-fourth Psalm, which he had often read at Vespers, came to his mind, "Thy promises exceedingly bright from the east, nor from the west, nor from the south," and there, miserable, his thoughts turned to index running east to west, and so on. He tried to recall the rest of the Psalm, but the words of the sixth verse kept so continually recurring in his mind that he could think of nothing else. Tossing restlessly about, his brain being too active to admit of sleep, he lay awake for hours in spite of all his efforts to compose his thoughts. At length towards morning he fell asleep, and dreamed he was down in a mine going through the level to his pitch; he had a compass in his hand, and he he would be lost unless he could find his way out. "Promotion cometh neither from the east, nor the west, nor the south." "Well, could it mean?" he asked himself. He looked at the compass, he was going east, leaving the shaft behind west, and there was his pitch on the right hand side of the level south. Again came the voice. "For promotion cometh," etc. What about the north, then? he thought. He turned his left and saw that the north side of the level had not been touched, it was hard killas or granite rock. No vein could exist in such ground, yet, "Promotion cometh neither from the east, nor from the west, nor from the south," etc., and with a start Peter awoke. At breakfast his wife said to him, "There is a pitch, is it not, Peter?"

"Yes, it is, thank God."

"What have you got to receive this time."

"About fifteen shillings for the whole month, that's all.

"Then you will give up the pitch, won't you?"

"No; I have determined to try it on another month or two," replied Peter in such a firm, quiet tone that his wife saw well that it would be useless to urge him further; and when she put into his hand the little pocket containing his dinner, he surprised her a little by saying, "You can boil that ham you have in pickle, Mary, for to-morrow's dinner, and don't be afraid; I expect there will be another coming soon or than you imagine."

When he arrived at the mine he went down as usual with John, who had come straight from Mass. There was the hard granite rock on the north side opposite where they worked, looking as he had seen it in his dream.

"What are you going to do to-day, uncle?" asked John. "Have you had any answer to your novena?"

"I have believed I have, and so I am going to take again, and shall drive in here on the north side."

"What?" cried John. "I hope you are not infatuated! I should as soon think of cross-cutting in an old quarry as of driving in there."

"Perhaps so, my boy, but I have a notion that the old saying is true, you know, about the last one to get a chance. I am going to take the pitch for two months. Would you like to join me or not?"

"Oh, certainly, I do not intend to give it up till the end of the month, if I can, but I'd see what ground you have for your decision."

"Ay, you must wait a while, and I will tell you all when I have cut the lode, but I have been praying earnestly, and you think I have been answered. Have you remembered our Novena?"

"No, I have had, and Mary is joining, too, but I fear I have not much faith in it."

"Well, as you have had no answer, I advise you to follow me, and we shall cut a good lode yet that will make our fortunes."

I propose that we take on two more with us, as we shall have some tough work in cutting through that stiff rock. What do you think of me asking Jacob Pengear to join us with two men? He is a good fellow, and I should like to give him a lift."

"Yes, do, answered John; "in fact, do ask him, as you think best; I leave it entirely in your hands."

When the men gathered round the office that afternoon for the setting, Jacob said to Peter, "Well, how's the pitch looking?"

"As bad as ever apparently; it has been a dead failure so far."

"Are you going to throw it up, then?"

"No, Jacob not yet."

"What, do you think you have just loosened a lode?"

"No but don't you mind what you said last Sunday about God answering our prayer?"

"Yes, to be sure I do."

"Well, we are diligently making our Novena, and I believe I have got an answer already and that we are going to cut a good lode, and make our fortunes."

"That I will, indeed, and thank you kindly. God grant that we may find a good vein of copper."

The trut-rock bargains having been all settled in the setting-book, the captain came up to the tributs side and read out, "Peter Polgrey, a pitch to work in the east side of the mighty fathom level east, to go ten fathoms east the north vein west of the main shaft, and ten fathoms above the level, by two men, the month, at—shillings, and the usual to be passed on pay for copper ore."

"Eighteen shillings, sir," shouted Peter. "Eighteen shillings! I repeated the captain, in a tone of surprise. "Don't you generally pay 20 pitch again? Fifteen shillings, you know, is our highest price."

"Capper," replied Peter, "this a poor piece of ground as it is, and no good to at that price. But if you will let us go four months instead of two months, we will stick to my price, and put in a bit of cross-cut north."

"Do you mean in that piece of hard rocky ground?" asked the captain in astonishment.

"Yes, Captain," answered Peter, "we are willing to try it."

"Well, I suppose you have a right to consider conditions if you like. By four men then for four months, at fifteen shillings in the month, is it?"

"Yes, that's it, sir, put down, Jacob, and Tom Pengear, and thus the bargain was duly entered.

"Now, John, we must just go at it smart, said Peter, as they went to the pitch next morning. They worked in some or shafts, two of them in a core, Jacob and his son relieving the others when they had been down eight hours. Vigorously enough they worked not only that day, but all through the week till Saturday afternoon came, and no lode was yet found. It had got out somewhere that Peter was engaging a new party, and he had to encounter a good deal of good natured raillery on the subject.

"Well, Peter, we have spent a good new little stock of money still down, and no copper appears to reward us, and I for fear he had entered into the agreement too hastily, for there would be if things went on in this way to the end of the two months! In fact, he would be unlucky if he got his money back, and he remembered our Novena."

"Well, I have had Mary is joining, too, but I fear I have not much faith in it."

"Well, as you have had no answer, I advise you to follow me, and we shall cut a good lode yet that will make our fortunes.

I propose that we take on two more with us, as we shall have some tough work in cutting through that stiff rock. What do you think of me asking Jacob Pengear to join us with two men? He is a good fellow, and I should like to give him a lift."

"Yes, do," answered John; "in fact, do ask him, as you think best; I leave it entirely in your hands."

When the men gathered round the office that afternoon for the setting, Jacob said to Peter, "Well, how's the pitch looking?"

"As bad as ever apparently; it has been a dead failure so far."

"Are you going to throw it up, then?"

"No, Jacob not yet."

"What, do you think you have just loosened a lode?"

"No but don't you mind what you said last Sunday about God answering our prayer?"

"Yes, to be sure I do."

"Well, we are diligently making our Novena, and I believe I have got an answer already and that we are going to cut a good lode, and make our fortunes."

"That I will, indeed, and thank you kindly. God grant that we may find a good vein of copper."

The trut-rock bargains having been all settled in the setting-book, the captain came up to the tributs side and read out, "Peter Polgrey, a pitch to work in the east side of the mighty fathom level east, to go ten fathoms east the north vein west of the main shaft, and ten fathoms above the level, by two men, the month, at—shillings, and the usual to be passed on pay for copper ore."

"Eighteen shillings, sir," shouted Peter. "Eighteen shillings! I repeated the captain, in a tone of surprise. "Don't you generally pay 20 pitch again? Fifteen shillings, you know, is our highest price."

"Capper," replied Peter, "this a poor piece of ground as it is, and no good to at that price. But if you will let us go four months instead of two months, we will stick to my price, and put in a bit of cross-cut north."

"Do you mean in that piece of hard rocky ground?" asked the captain in astonishment.

"Yes, Captain," answered Peter, "we are willing to try it."

"Well, I suppose you have a right to consider conditions if you like. By four men then for four months, at fifteen shillings in the month, is it?"

"Yes, that's it, put down, Jacob, and Tom Pengear."

"Who are your partners?"

"John Pengear, Jacob and Tom Pengear,"

THE MONITOR.

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 28, 1861.

The Immaculate Conception and the Miracles of Lourdes.

FIRST ARTICLE.

When the unknown non-Catholic mailed to our address a copy of Scribner's Magazine for November, 1858, and desired that she should "please read these pages carefully at leisure," we can imagine what a smile of triumph played around his mouth as he inserted John's head and placed on an article that would send our belief in the miracles of Lourdes scudding out of the light of such a literary comet. We ask our unknown friend, however, not to be too sanguine, as we shall show up the fallacy of the magazine article so fully that it will lose all its prestige in the eyes even of Protestants.

But in order to accomplish this feat without worrying our readers, we intend to take up the matter in slices, and select for the first course this extract from the article in question. Alluding to a legend which the writer records relative to the chateau of Lourdes, he says:

"This chateau, however, is quite overshadowed by the 'miraculous' events which took place here in the winter of 1858, and which the tradition to these occurrences. It may not be amiss here, before we enter into the details of the marvellous, to remind the reader of the Immaculate Conception, which was promulgated by Pius IX., with a bull formerly of transport. The Roman Catholic doctrine is, that the Virgin Mary, conceived without the stain of original sin, was endowed without any trace of evil, and, in consequence, was endowed with all the gifts and graces which are the necessary adjuncts of the mother of Jesus was the second person of the Godhead, and, consequently, the Virgin Mary was the mother of God. The Catholics say that an angel was sent from heaven as the ambassador of Almighty God to declare to her that she was "full of grace"—not in the Scriptures! Go too, then untutored scribe, and study are thou not out to insult common Catholic intelligence with such rubbish.

Non-Catholic writers seem to lose sight of the fact that Almighty God is Omniscient as well as well as Omnipresent and Omnipotent. They seem to forget that God knew before all time that Mary of Nazareth was to be the Mother of the second person of the Blessed Trinity, and it was in view of and through the merits of Jesus Christ that she was preserved specially from the stain of original sin. In worldly affairs, even, we do not select an impure receptacle for a precious object of great purity. In like manner Almighty God decreed, from all ages, that Mary was to be the purest of creatures, the one mortal without spot or blemish, perfect in purity and virginity, because she was destined to become the Mother of the Eternal Word made flesh. This, we are satisfied, puts equinoxes upon the literary critic whose crowning criticism in Scribner is a disgrace to whoever perpetrated it.

The scribbler in Scribner next informs the world that what he falsely calls "this peculiar doctrine of the Mother of Jesus" was engineered in by "most of the Catholic any great extent." Poor, silly scribe, he could not name a single Bishop or priest in the Catholic Church who did not firmly, fully and gladly give unreserved allegiance to this grand doctrine of the Immaculate character of the ever-glorious Mother of God—of whom not only the sacred Scriptures, but the saints throughout all ages, speak in the most exalted terms of honor ever applied to a human being. And he can forget the exhaustion of joy that shed their rays over the whole Christian world, as on that memorable 8th of December, 1854, when Pius the Great proclaimed the definition of the dogma of the Immaculate Conception, and with what bonanza of joy it was received by the 200,000,000 Catholics scattered throughout every portion of the civilized world! Why, the poor scribe who could deny such a historical fact must be entirely so ignorant of the definition of the word "enthusiasm" as he is of the definition of the dogma itself.

This polisher of the first difficulties placed in our path by the prejudiced Protestant writer in Scribner, and next week we intend to consider whether the miracle at Lourdes was made to order or not.

"St. Patrick was a Methodist!"

A Rev. D. Kew delivered a lecture on Ireland in the Howard street Methodist church on Tuesday night week, in the course of which he told his hearers that > St. Patrick was a Methodist!

> Who cares if Methodist people,
> And can be both a Methodist church,
> But on it built an steeple!

This bold, beautiful and bold-faced assertion—swinging and Joshua Ben-Nun-like—ply to just such a declaration made in his hearing by some pneumbulating preacher of the Kew kind. Father Tom was traveling by railroad from Cork to Dublin when some love-lorn evangelical, who had his wife by his side, announced, with the usual impertinence peculiar to swaddling preachers, that "St. Patrick was a Methodist! I'm sir, there's no disputing the fact! A Methodist preacher just like me!" Father Darby turned his twinkling eyes upon the little-tongued traveler, and remarked, in his usual dry way, "Well, sir, it is very curious that in all his travels we never read of St. Patrick taking his wife with him!" At this only the people roared, and the poor preacher edited like a bantam rooster that had lost his tail! And that is about as near a Methodist as St. Patrick ever got to be.

ATTEMPT TO ASSASSINATE AN ARCHBISHOP.

A subtogram from Melbourne says that Archbishop J. A. Goold, of Melbourne, was fired at and slightly wounded on Sunday last. His assailant was arrested and is said to be named O'Farrell, and a brother of the man who attempted to assassinate the Duke of Edinburg at Sydney in March, 1868.

Hon. C. Harlson's Address at the Mechanics' Institute.

We are indebted to Hon. C. Harlson for a pamphlet copy of his address before the Mechanics' Institute, of this city, at its opening last week, and we must say that it is the most musty and mythical document of the kind we ever encountered. The writer begins with a tedious school-boy essay on pre-Adamite existence, the garbled which is mere probability and pleasantly all having as much connection with a mechanics' institute as a farce game has with a flying machine! The writer next passes from nature to the shortcomings of the first man, on whom he bestows the grandiloquent title of "our inexperienced and untaught progenitor," whom he ludicrously accuses of not having "any opportunity of learning by experiment, by precept or books, that all stones and bodies of matter, wherever located in the realms of nature, are governed by uniform laws, undeviating order and exact proportions." Poor Adam! How he must have felt the loss of Hon. C. Harlson's erudition as he wandered through Paradise! Mr. Adam, too, might have had many a useful lesson upon hygiene, hydrostatics, and hydrophobia, even, if a little Harlsonian had been present when Eve took to her dreary, daily existence! Poor, unfortunate people, who had to die without any knowledge of the steam plow or the sewing machine! Well, well, as the Hon. Harlson would say—the chivalry of the Adamic aristocracy was so rampant as only illusive to the transhcent operations of enchanted atmospheric combinations!

The loose, careless and illogical manner in which Hon. C. H. talks about Adam and his peculiar surroundings and situation, reminds us very much of the position in which a certain colored preacher placed himself by indulging too freely in original ideas pertaining to "our inexperienced and untaught progenitor." This negro preacher once told his congregation that tale, with a fatal result:

> "My brethe, when de Sun was, Adam, was created, he was made ob clay and set up agin de palins to dry. "De you say," said one of the congregation, rising a bit, "that Mr. Adam was made of wet clay an set up agin de palins to dry?" "Yes, sar! I do. "Dat yo hands de palins?" "Set down, sar," said the preacher with some heat, "you have had your say, let dis sinner get into de pulpit and hab his sermon!" "I violate o de, and a cer de body pollute, and dat sinner shall be hurled to hell."

Having taken his unfortunate hearers down, down, derry down, into the subterraneous strata of the pleiocene period—are redatory prints were placed upon the unrestrial formation—he then reverses his linguistic lever and sends them up skyward. With the wonders of the firmament he then delights to revel as he fans his weather eye upon the fifty million stars scattered throughout the aerelian hemisphere where Aurora sits enthroned in her mantle of gold as "Uranus plows the other seventeen hundred and seventy millions of miles from the common sun." Poor Herschel, in regard to Uranus, rides Neptune, with its satellites, moving in indescribable splendor and velocity at the rate of eight hundred and fifty millions of miles from one common sun!" Whew! What a majestic mind Hon. C. H. must possess to tell us all this news from the nebulæ! The scope presented is actually more grovous than the green and red bills of Robinson's circus! Mechanics who "eat onions" Hon. C. H. will doubtless evoke Isaac Newton's from Natomas street and Herschel's from Hayes' Valley!

Having descended from the heavenly spheres with the degree of dignity usually attributed to a returning rocket-stick, the Hon. C. H. next treats of mundane matters, [illegible] relating to public opinion and government, in which we are assured that "the discoverer, advanced state and changed relations of the world have rendered the theories and opinions of the preceding seem absurd, preposterous, and sometimes zeal." Just so. In view of which we suggest that the next generation will consider the mechanics who lived in this city in 1862 a set of noodles for listening to such an absurd and preposterous address as that stilled and stiffened from epithalistic ovum contained in this pamphlet!

Having thus treated his hearers to a glimpse of heaven, a sight of "hades" and a disquisition on the disciplinary duties of diurnal authority, Hon. C. H. switches off his linguistic locomotive and runs it into the old rut of "heresy and sorcery." Shade of Dr. Pastine! What a medley of misconceived and monsurious mush! Here we have the usual hodge-podge of Protestant preachers and pedagogues regarding "death by fagot, fire and the stake, and by the cruel inquisition." Why, one would imagine Hon. C. H. was a Methodist minister seeking to counteract the religious influence of a Catholic mission! How we sympathize with the ever-to-be-pitied poor mechanics who had to pay [illegible] "sermons!"

Why, in the last [illegible] years [illegible] fagots, fire and the stake, and by the inquisition has [illegible] convenient History, [illegible] the judge [illegible] sentenced to death 31,912 persons, [illegible] 17,659 in effigy, [illegible] 291,450. It is less than [illegible] the fearful [illegible] of political [illegible] Spaniards and [illegible] We quote in all Board of Managers [illegible] to consider the [illegible] graph contains the [illegible] today before the [illegible] know that when Cath[illegible] Church they will [illegible] Manager for permitting [illegible] display of certain [illegible] sion. Catholics contrib[illegible] towards the Exhibition, [illegible] person, and they claim [illegible] success. The cottage, [illegible] petrated upon their feelings by this blast of bombastic bile is all the more uncalled for, and we hope it will maybe repeated in the Pulpit.

When talking about witchcraft and sorcery, and calling false statistics from French history, the Hon. C. Harlson should have remembered that he said not have gone beyond his own native New England for facts regarding fires, fagots, or burning witches!

Woe to the poor man, who, during the days of Puritanical power in New England, dared to hold his own views in opposition to the civil authority. He was persecuted by those "enlightened" evangelicals after this fashion, as described by an American writer:

> "They enforced their tenets home to heathen, converting or banishing every heretical Quaker, and Anabaptist, for daring to them the liberty of conscience, which they had proved to legislate nothing more than that every man should think as he pleased in matters of religion, provided he thought right, but whoever thinks wrong, deserves to be punished. Now, as they (the majority) were infallibly right, it followed of course that all who differed from them must be wrong, and consequently deserve to be punished. A violator of law, and a corrupt body politic, must also be hurled to hell. Puritans pursue with implacable hatred the witches—and the wizards—and the witch Harlson forgot to tell—mechanics of San Francisco anything about those terrible deeds done in the name of Christ! Hon. C. H. Adam was blamed by Hon. C. H. because he had the misfortune to be born before printing was invented, or he could not have read "books," but the same excuse does not hold good for Hon. C. H. Harlson, because he will be enough of material in the lives of the poor, cruelly persecuted Roger Williams, Richard Waterman, Ann Hutchinson, and a large number of other "pestilent heretics" to fill volumes, to make the very hairs stand on the heads of all the men in Mechanics' Pavilion!

Now since this est Colonial history, was Hon. C. Harlson:

> "The Quaker women, their sex set at nought, were stripped naked, and beaten in the public streets, in case of their resistance, by the judges, sentenced to death, and executed. Hanging was the mildest punishment of political offenders. Scourgings and stripes.

Farm and Home.

Canning Fruit.

If young housekeepers will strictly follow the excellent directions which we publish, they will never be troubled by the "working" of their canned fruits. To the old and experienced housekeeper, says a writer in the Country Gentleman, "who has put up her fifty and sixty, or a hundred cans a year for many years, and has learned to do it with little work and less worry, anything said on this subject seems to be a foolish waste of words, but to the novice, to whom it seems a difficult undertaking, uncertain of success, a few suggestions may not come amiss. In the first place, before running your room with the fire for the canning, have the fruit picked over and everything in readiness; the cans clean, covers, rubbers and ladle at hand that you may avoid all hurry at the time of filling and sealing. Use only such cans as are reliable, with covers that are not worn out or bent or turned up on the edges. It is the very poorest economy to make use of cans which are risky or uncertain; as ten to one you will lose both labor and fruit. Use no rubbers that have become hard or otherwise imperfect from long use. Have good fruit, good sugar where you sweeten at all, heat enough to eject the air, and fill full, but not full enough to slop over. If any jars have been spilled or dropped on the top of the can, wipe it off carefully with a damp cloth. If after filling the fruit seems to contain air bubbles press a silver fork into the jar and bring as many as possible to the surface. Wipe the rubbers out of hot water, put on the cover and screw down. When your can has cooled a little, or at most or thereabouts, screw down the top again, and so continue the tightening process till cool, or till it can be made to move no farther; then set away in a cool, dry place, and not molest till wanted for table.

Feeding Horses.

The horse has the smallest stomach, in proportion to its size, of any other animal. This space is completely filled by four quarts of oats and the saliva that goes into the stomach with it. Horses are generally overfed and fed often enough. For a horse with moderate work six or eight quarts of bruised oats and ten pounds of hay are sufficient. This should be fed in three meals and it better if fed in four. A horse's digestion is very rapid, and there he is hungry sooner than a man. When he is hungry he is lowspirited and grows out very rapidly. Water fills the stomach, lowers the temperature and dilutes the gastric juice; therefore a horse should not drink immediately before eating. Neither should he be watered immediately after eating, because he will drink too much and force out the contents of the stomach into the large intestine, which will cause colic. Scouring is also caused by too much water. Scouring can be prevented by putting half a dozen pebbles half the size of an egg into the manger with the oats. Give only a moderate drink of water to a horse. A horse drinks a bucket of water at a draught, and he is very quieting effect on a fidgety horse. Blankets are always more

MISCELLANEOUS.

TIN! ASPHALTUM!!

ROOFS

Have Stands at Lower Salesroom, 104 Kearny Street, and GUARANTEED when so ordered.

107 MARKET STREET

Bell, Vacuum and Force Pumps.

OFFICE OF THE MANUFACTURER, H. G. FISKE.

WOMAN CAN BEST UNDERSTAND SYMPATHIZE WITH WOMAN, AND HEALTH OF WOMAN IS THE HOPE OF THE RACE.

Yours for Health, Lydia E. Pinkham

LYDIA E. PINKHAM'S VEGETABLE COMPOUND.

A Sure Cure for all FEMALE WEAKNESSES, Including Leucorrhœa, Irregular and Painful Menstruation, Inflammation and Ulceration of the Womb, Gravel, Dropsy, Flooding, Fluxes, Prolapsus, Falling and Displacements, Spinal Weakness, and the Blues, Hot Flashes, Sleeplessness, Nervous Debility, etc.

LAPSUS UTERI, &c.

It permeates the whole system, and immediately acts upon the seat of the complaint, or organ of disease, in the same mysterious way that electricity does, and the relief and cure are almost instantaneous. While in the hands of her family and friends she is universally recommended as the ministering angel to woman, she is also a public benefactor, in that she has placed within the reach of all, the means of restoring health and happiness, at a trifling cost.

PRICE $1.00. Sold by all Druggists.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Liver Pills, 25 cents.

DR. CLARK JOHNSON'S Indian Blood Syrup.

CURES Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint, Fever & Ague, Rheumatism, Dropsy, Blotches, Nervous Debility, etc.

The Best REMEDY KNOWN to Man! 12,000,000 Bottles 8 each SINCE 1858.

The Syrup possesses Varied Properties, which renders it the most powerful blood purifier ever discovered. It acts on the Stomach, Liver, Bowels, Kidneys, and Skin, removing all impurities from the blood, and restoring the system to a healthy condition.

Dose, one teaspoonful.

Prepared by Dr. Clark Johnson, Chemist, 1 Dispensary Place, St. Louis, Mo.

Sold by all Druggists.

RAZORS!

FOR $1,000

I WILL MAKE A BETTER RAZOR AND HONE OF THEM IN THE SAME TIME THAN ANY ONE OF THE WORLD.

My own make guaranteed ..... $ 2
My Grand Razor warranted not to cut the flesh while shaving 2 50
Good English Razors 1 00
Best English Razors 1 50

Sent C. O. D. on hand.

M. PRICE, 415 Kearny Street. Grinding and Repairing.

P. E. DOUGHERTY & CO., STEAM BOOK AND JOB PRINTERS, 412 Commerce St., and 411 Clay St. Between Sansome and Battery.

FIRE!! FIRE!!

JNO. R. SIMS & SON, Manufacturers of all kinds of Fireproof Doors and Window Blinds.

CRUTTERS, BURGLAR PROOF BANK VAULTS AND Safes, corrugated iron, planed and tongued and matched Ceilings, Balustrades, Stairs, Gratings, Tie Rods, Lintels and Bolts, Patent Metallic Door Jambs, Patent Metallic Window Blinds, Patent Metallic Door Jambs, established in 1855, by the present Proprietor. All orders from the interior of Oregon, and of Washington Territory, or any place on the Pacific coast, attended to with the same care as if present.

Orders filled promptly. We can supply the trade with their Goods, and from their very constant in stock it is the interest of the trade to patronize home manufacture. Send for our illustrated Catalogue.

Nos. 127 and 129 Bonds street.

OPIUM MORPHINE SANITY. Dr. Marcus Dye's Celebrated Opium Habit Cure. Only Sure Cure. Pamphlet, Opinions, Testimonials, Quizzes, Mailed. 1,000 Cures. Dr. Dye, Vacaville, Cal.

OWEN McGABE, Importer and Dealer in Gun Materials, Powder, Shot, Fish and Harness Leather Tackings, Gun Materials.

Feather Warerooms, 927 Market St., opp. Mason, Between Fifth and sixth, San Francisco. Feather Beds and Bedding to be sold cheap for cash. Orders promptly attended to.

EDUCATIONAL.

THE NEW NOTRE-DAME (Main Building)

The Best and Most Convenient School for Young Ladies and Misses, having the last year, accommodated nearly 300 resident students. Every facility is afforded for acquiring a thorough knowledge of Classics, Mathematics, Science, Commerce, Law and Music.

The New Notre Dame, for here under thirteen, will be opened in September. Catalogues giving full particulars will be sent free on application to Rev. P. B. Walsh, C. S. C., Presid'nt, Notre-Dame, P. O. Ind.

ST. MARY'S ACADEMY. (One mile West from Notre-Dame University.)

School of Art and Design.

Conducted by sisters of Holy Cross. The Academic Course includes the Languages, Music, Painting and Drawing. Special attention is paid to the plan of the Ladd Common School System, which gives a complete corps of teachers. It also offers a large Room modeled on the plan of the Kindergarten, and a Class modeled on the plan of the Schools of Europe. Drawing and Music are taught by the best masters. Building now in course of erection, and will be ready for the Fall term. For full particulars apply for catalogue to Mother Superior St. Mary's, Notre-Dame P. O. Ind.

BANKING HOUSES.

Jno. A. Dodge, San Francisco. Rodney Kelly, New York.

DONOHOE, KELLY & CO. SAN FRANCISCO: EUGENE, KELLY & CO, NEW YORK. BANKERS.

EXCHANGE ON NEW YORK, LONDON, AND BANK IRELAND (Dublin), Payable at all the Branches.

AND IN EVERY COUNTY TOWN IN IRELAND

MISCELLANEOUS.

A remittance has often been expressed at the low rates charged by Barry & Conway for the latest and best Sewing Machines. Their Office is now at 638 Market street, another of which we have visited the office, where the force is much less and our appliances are in excellent order. Our friends who have

MISCELLANEOUS.

ENGLAND BAKING POWDER

Ammonia Phosphates Tartaric Acid

Cream Tartar and Bi-Carb. Soda NOTHING ELSE

Newton Bros. & Co. SAN FRANCISCO

J. O'KANE, MANUFACTURER AND IMPORTER OF Harness, Saddles, Whips, Blankets, Boots, Etc. 767 MARKET STREET BAY 4th

J. COONEY, PRACTICAL Painter and Whitener. SIGNS NEATLY EXECUTED. NO. 113 FOURTH STREET, San Francisco, Cal.

H. NOOK, MANUFACTURER OF CANNED LEATHER HOSE, 405 Sansome Street, SATISFACTION GUARANTEED. The Finest Leather Cut Strings or Belting on Hand. MAIL, EXPRESS AND BULLION PAGE.

JAMES G. MAGUIRE, Attorney and Counselor at Law, 628 Montgomery st. San Francisco. Will Practice in all the Courts and Before Departments.

TO THE LADIES. For Cheap and Handsome Hats and Bonnets go to MRS. SWANTON'S, 1217 Stockton street.

NOTICE OF REMOVAL. JERRY LOWNEY & SON HAVE REMOVED THEIR CARRIAGE FACTORY from corner of Dupont and Pacific streets, to 522 Sansome street, where all kinds of carriages and wagons of superior quality are made to order, and repairing promptly attended to.

CHEAPEST PLACE To Buy New and Second Hand Machines. All kinds repaired in a superior manner, and warranted for all time. ROGERS OFFICE, 417 MARKET STREET.

EMPLOYMENT EXCHANGE. O'BRIEN & WARD'S EMPLOYMENT OFFICE, Opposite City Hall. Always on hand a large number of good Laborers, Farmers, Dairymen, Teamsters, Waiters, Boys, Ranch Men, Mechanics, Miners, Quarrymen, Masons, Plasterers, Blacksmiths, Wheelwrights, Carpenters, Machinists, Tinsmiths, Tailors, Shoemakers, Bookbinders, Printers, Cooks, Waiters, Chambermaids, Nurses, Seamstresses, Laundresses, Housekeepers, Boys, Girls, Ranch Men, Dairymen, Teamsters, Waiters, Boys, Ranch Men, Dairymen, Teamsters, Waiters, Boys, Ranch Men, Dairymen, Teamsters, Waiters, Boys then placed on high over the roof of your church, and the green flag of our country waving in honored folds beside it, that I am charmed to see this beautiful and suggestive blending of Ireland's much-loved and venerated standards—the green banner, namely, that has never yet been sullied, and the Cross, that can hardly nothing of defeat (enthusiastic cheers). To-day I desire to repeat the same sentiment, and to add then heartbreaking the cry so frequently, and I think so needlessly, raised of

ARCHBISHOP CROKE AT EMLY.

[CONCLUDED FROM FIRST PAGE.]

THE CHURCH IS DANGER.

I am, as ever, and now even more that ever, a firm and unwavering believer in the loyal fidelity of our people to the final cause of creed and country, being indeed thoroughly convinced that, should they ever express at any time from their allegiance or falter in their attachment to either or both, the end event will be caused by the weakening of that bond of love which has united, and still continues to unite, the Irish priest in his Irish flock—a bond which, thank God, is nowhere stronger, less sundered, nor more sympathetic than amongst the priests and people of the diocese of Cashel and Emly (cheers). Nothing, in the third place to you, without its own pluis, peculiar and impressive significance, is the fact that the Cross has been already conserved, to place a newly-blessed bell in the tower of your church, whose is it designed, I shall yet to pour for many a long year blessings to the memory of nuptial benedictions inaugurated and of the marriage feast; to sound the funeral knell of departed brethren whose dust souls shall have gone forward to their last account, besides awakening on this the surrounding plains the echoes of Christian progress and civilization that have step for step followed down the days of Christian Ireland the cruel and the secured (groans). And now, were I so minded, I could dwell on this more practical and to the point, I might discourse for you at considerable length, and with a great but simple display of curious knowledge, on the origin, antiquity, uses, properties, shape, and gradual development of bells, whether created to church steeple or bank, or, rather, to set up for various domestic and other purposes to which in process of time they have been applied. This would be, indeed, under certain circumstances, a most inviting theme to dwell upon; but as it is, diminished entirely from my view all such ability, or at least unprofitable speculation, I shall confine and you to consider with me for a moment our ANNUAL CONFESSION AND FUTURE PROSPECTS.

as a struggling people—that is to say, as a people who, we have made during the last three years, and have best we may secure and cherish, amidst the public cheers, in the rough is substantially what we have gained. Well, and forsooth, up to the present time we have generally believed by the great mass of our people that an Irish Parliament, with Home Rule, would be, after, and that it was his bounden duty to work constitutionally in that way, for a short time, at least, to try, if it could, without bloodshed, and without

DOING THE DEVIL'S WORK and that the industrious, the land he tills, the toil and sweat he sheds, the wealth he piles up, is the property of his landlord, or, at least, by the miserable, earth where they fall upon and despised (hear, hear) and, in the end, the good and just prevailed, as he ought to be, whilst the

THOUGH STILL DREADED,

is at the same time defied. Thirdly, up to three years ago in Ireland a farm from which a hard-working tenant had been evicted and for non-payment of excessive rent would not be touched with a hundred pounds of other fresh world he found to compete relentlessly with each other for his possession. To-day no one will touch it, knowing it (enthusiastic cheers). Fourthly, up to three years ago in Ireland few men were who took a practical interest in the condition of our unfortunate tenantry, or worked from six o'clock in the morning till six in the afternoon, and for wages made in other countries they might earn in four hours. They lived in cabins unscreened and unfit for comfort for decency and chit in rags (hear). To-day, though for the most part ill and housed, yet a great and substantial change has taken place, a good deal of attention to their just complaints, and I will the poorest farmers have property, and them elsewhere whom my words may sound strange, or even, perhaps, may not be entirely native from me, they would, from motives of policy as well as gratitude, be willing to bow to the wishes of their tenants, and strive to improve their condition, if for no it is probably for their reason to do so (cheers). Fifthly, up to three years ago in Ireland agitation was at a premium.

A SECTION PLEADED.

R. Barrett, No. 22 Montgomery street, has just received a fresh supply of the celebrated Pacific Soap, which is equal to him as well as to the Telegraphic office, to which he has supplied it for years. Gentlemen, try it. It is a good article, and a regular Monitor advertiser. Mention the Monitor when you call at the publisher's office.

Commercial Union.

An old physician, retired from practice, having had placed in his hands by an East India missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma, and all throat and lung affections, also a positive and radical cure for Nervous Debility and all Nervous Complaints, after having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, has felt it his duty to make it known to his suffering fellows. Actuated by this motive and a desire to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge to all who desire it, this recipe, in German, French, or English, with full directions for preparing and using, sent by mail, by addressing, with stamp, this paper, W. A. Noyes, 149 Power's Block, Rochester, N. Y.

Job Dixon.

Some remarkable cures have been effected by Hostetter's Stomach Bitters. Several San Francisco prominent families have been cured of Coughs and Colds by the use of it. See advertisement. Material disease and the best household remedy. 1014 Pine Street.

NERVOUS DEBILITY.

DR. JAMES' PILLS ARE THE GREAT THEATRE, a specific for Hysteria, Dizziness, Convulsions, Nervous Headache, Neuralgia, Nervous Prostration, Nervous Debility, caused by over-exertion, Mental Depression, Loss of memory, etc. Sold by all druggists. Depot, 104 Kearny street, San Francisco. Ask for Dr. James' Pills and take no other. Sent by mail on receipt of price. We guarantee all these pills contain no mercury, nor any other mineral. Wholesale agents, Redington & Co., 604 Clay street, San Francisco, Wholesale Druggists.

COMPOUND OXYGEN

NEW TREATMENT BY INHALATION. A DISCOVERY IN MEDICAL SCIENCE. Dr. Stanton Dodge's Compound Oxygen. Its Mode of Action Explained. Its Wonderful Curative Powers Shown. Its Superiority to Other Agents Demonstrated. Its Mode of Application Made Plain. Its Cures Authenticated. Its Price Placed Within the Reach of All. Its Pamphlet Circulars Containing Full Information Sent Free. Address Dr. Stanton Dodge, 1004 Arch Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Market Report.

Corrected Weekly by P. J. Daly, 604 Battery street.

MONTHLY OFFICE.
629 Clay St., Tuesday Evening, Aug. 29, 1882.

DOMESTIC PRODUCE MARKET.

Flour—
Quotations are: City Extras, $5 50@5 85; Superfine, $4 75@5 25; Bakers' Family, $6 75@7 50 for extra, and $3 50@4 00 for superfine.

Wheat—
Quotations are: Standard No. 1 Shipping, $1 [illegible]; No. 2, $1 [illegible] per ental. Extra Choice, $1 [illegible].

Barley—
Quotations are: Bearing, 1 31@1 35; Standard, [illegible]; Feed, $1 [illegible].

Potatoes—
Sales of new, 60@75c; 90c@1 00.

Onions—
Quotations are: Silver white, 75@90c per ctl.

Corrameal—
Quotable at 2½@2½c ⅌ lb.

Butter—
Quotations are: Choice fresh roll Butter, 30@37c; Fancy, 35@40c; Medium, 25@30c; Pickled, 20@25c; Salted, 20@25c; Eastern Dairy, [illegible] ⅌ lb. Butter market is firm.

Cheese—
Quotations are: California, 12@13½c; Eastern, 16@17c; Gilroy imitation Eastern, 17@20c ⅌ lb.

Poultry—
Quotations are: Live Turkeys, 16@20c; Gobblers, [illegible]; Dressed, 18@20c; Hens, $4 00@5 00; Young Roosters, $6 00@8 00; Old, $5 00@6 50 ⅌ dozen; Geese, $1 25@1 75 ⅌ pair; Pigeons, $1 00@1 25 ⅌ dozen; Young Ducks, $5 00@6 50 ⅌ doz. Good Hens $5 00@6 50.

Eggs—
Quotable at 18@20c for choice; 20@22c for Mendocino; California Ranch, 20@22c; Eastern, 24@26c; Salt Lake, —@— ⅌ dozen.

Domestic Fruit—
Quotations are: Currants, $4 50@5; Bananas $1 50@3 50 ⅌ bunch; Pine Apples, $[illegible] ⅌ dozen; Apples, 50c@$1 50 ⅌ box; Pears, $1@2 ⅌ box; Peaches, 50@75c ⅌ box; Plums, 50@75c ⅌ box; Grapes, 75c ⅌ box; Strawberries per chest, $[illegible]; Raspberries per chest, $[illegible]; Blackberries, $[illegible]; Currants ⅌ chest $3 25@3 50; Cherries ⅌ box, 50@75c; Peaches ⅌ box, 50@75c; Crab Apples, 50c ⅌ box; Cocoa Nut Pies, $1 50 ⅌ dozen; Cocoa Nut Cal. Pies, $[illegible]; Pineapple Pies, $1 50 ⅌ dozen; Mock Mince Pies, $1 50 ⅌ dozen; Watermelons, $4 50@7 50 ⅌ 100; Oregon, 75c@$1 ⅌ box.

Dried Fruit—
Quotations are: Cabbage, 60c@75c ⅌ ctl; Garlic, [illegible]; Marrowfat Squash, $15 00@[illegible]; Hubbards, $[illegible]; Dried Apples, $[illegible]; Peaches, [illegible]; Pears, [illegible]; Cherries, [illegible]; Plums, [illegible]; Figs, [illegible]; Nectarines, [illegible]; Apricots, [illegible]; Prunes, [illegible]; Raisins, [illegible].

Nuts—
Quotations are: Almonds, [illegible]; Walnuts, [illegible]; Chestnuts, [illegible]; Filberts, [illegible]; Pecans, [illegible]; Peanuts, [illegible].

Honey—
Quotations are: Wheat, old, $1 [illegible]; Wheat, old, $1 [illegible]; Volunteer and stubble, 90 [illegible]; Oats, 90 [illegible] ⅌ ctl.

Straw—
Quotable [illegible] ⅌ bale.

Provisions—
HAMS—Eastern, 16@18c; California, 13@[illegible]c.

BACON—California, 14@15c; Eastern, 16@17c; Extra Clear Sides, 14@15c; California Breakfast Bacon, [illegible] ⅌ lb.

LARD—Extra Clear, ⅌ bbl, $24 50; ⅌ half bbl, $[illegible]; ⅌ tierce, [illegible]; ⅌ half tierce, [illegible]; ⅌ 10 lb tin, 12½c; ⅌ 5 lb do, 13c; ⅌ 3 lb do, 13½c; ⅌ 1 lb do, 14c; Refined, 9½@10c; ⅌ half bbl, 10½c; ⅌ tierce, 10c; ⅌ half tierce, 10½c; ⅌ 10 lb tin, 12½c; ⅌ 5 lb do, 13c; ⅌ 3 lb do, 13½c; ⅌ 1 lb do, 14c; Kettle, 15c; ⅌ 5 lb do, 16c; ⅌ 3 lb do, 16½c; ⅌ 1 lb do, 17c.

BEEF—Mess Beef, ⅌ bbl, $14 00@15; Extra Mess, $[illegible]; Mess Beef, half bbl, $8 50; Extra Mess, $[illegible]; Family, $[illegible]; Prime, $[illegible]; Prime Mess, $[illegible]; Family, ⅌ ½ bbl, $[illegible]; Family, ⅌ half bbl, $[illegible]; Family, ⅌ half bbl, $[illegible]; Family, ⅌ half

Poetry.

(FOR THE MONITOR.)

THE SEVEN PRIEST BROTHERS.

Unto Mount Rosus there went Seven brothers, priests from Erin's isle,
On sacred pilgrimage intent,
They journeyed many a weary mile.

Arab, pilot, and road they passed upon,
The relics of a by-gone age;
The monuments of ancient genoe,
Strong characters on history's page.

But only for Roman pagan times
Their hearts in joy and yet mean years'd,
But yet not the Christian faith reliking
Their priest brothers were strangled.

Where Blessed Peter on the rock
His life resign'd for Christ his Lord,
Where Blessed Paul died joyfully
For Jesus Christ his blood outpour'd,

Pale homage paid to him who stands
In place of Christ upon the earth;
Or raging seas, through foreign lands,
They seek the island of their birth.

The lady extent who will have
The priests of God on Erin's shore!
And I'll hand the 5,000 pounds to you,
And be rid of the charge. She'll say 'you,'
Don't fear. I'll tell her that you asked you to-night, and to hurry on the wedding."

"I thought I heard the thing of a circle in the church aisle as he spoke. I thought of the graceful step of Marian Moore.
turned field and sat down to my desk; but
I not did Simon's house that night, and
The Marquis. Eha looked so fair and happy at a child. I sat down by her and took her hand.

"Marian," I said, "I'm very happy."

I said, and she had her innocent lips to mine and kissed me. "I'll be very, very good to you."

But Marian was no lover's warmth in my heart; only a kind of a gentle pity for the girl who was to bring me five thousand pounds.

We were engaged. Old Simon joked us constantly and seemed to exult over the affair.
I might even have doubted the existence of the five thousand pounds, but that Maggie told me of them herself.

"Uncle was keeping them for me to live
on when I was an old maid," she said.

"But you shall do what you choose with the money when I belong to you. We'll buy a pretty house, shan't we, dear, first of all, and live there all our lives somewhere else than on Simon's farm?"

So, after that, I never doubted, but clung to the idea as I could not if I had loved the girl.

We were married in a fortnight. Uncle
Simon and his old housekeeper alone were present. It had troubled me a good deal when Maggie said I wanted that she had rather not have a wedding party.

"Fancy the bride blushing and the aisle upon a crutch!" she said. "Let me be married with none to stare at me. You love me, so I don't care about being any more but I'd rather not be stared at."

"I'll be good to her," I said, as the clergyman uttered his prayer—"very very good;" and I was saying it again, when I and with my wife in old Simon's parlor, and he coming in in the gas, and stood twinkling
his eyes at us maliciously.

"Hilloa! over," he said, with a fiendish chuckle. "She's yours now, for her $5,000
I shall have to pay."

I blushed with shame. "Not yet," I said; "don't talk of money."

"Why, what else have I married you for?
I've got it here. And he unlocked a side board which stood in the room, and brought out a small roll done up oddly enough in brown paper. "Here it is," said he; "
"There it is! Look at it; count it. Five thousand, pounds, I tell you."

He fairly pinched as he spoke.

She smiled.

I was something in his laugh that made me shudder. Without a word more I walked to the table, opened the parcel and spread out the notes. There were £5,000 worth of them reading the value on their face; but they were the notes of the Bank
Bilston and Bilken bank, which had failed
years ago.

I had been deceived. The girl I had married was penniless!

I sat down, stunned. Old Simon answered with a roar of laughter.

"Good joke," he said. "I have done
what I promised. "You've got the £5,000.
I didn't tell you what it was in. Of course
I didn't tell you what it was in. Of course can't help that. He, he!"

"I shall go to my lodgings, if you please Simon," I said, with a quiet voice.

"Good joke," he said. "I have done
what I promised. "You've got the £5,000.
I didn't tell you what it was in. Of course
I didn't tell you what it was in. Of course can't help that. He, he!"

"Why, I should have got given him a blow,
but just then I heard Marguerite scream.
I looked at her. I saw, as I had known, in a flash, that she had stood in the deception.

"Do did mean it! He offered his mind and her five thousand pounds to me! He meant to be married herself. Oh—

"Shall I go? I ask, Marian, you may!
I might as well see the bairns. I was not to be married to-morrow, if she were a country, village curates. Like her uncle, but otherwise why not me what she was made of! At least I could see what I was into bar with old Simon Giddings.

I walked home pretty well that evening, I noticed some little changes in the parlor, so though a lady's hand had been at work in and in a manner I scarcely made out, sitting in the shadow of the curtains, a girl dressed in deep mourning.

"Marguerite, Mr. Fisher! my mean, Miss
Giddings," she said, as I came in, "I
I forgot, I saw a little velvet-headed creature leaning against the girl's chair.

She was been, Mr. Fisher, Old Giddings thought this no obstacle to her making a good match. So he offered her to Tom Fisher.

"It won't do, old man," I thought,
"shouldn't mind a pretty whole heart, but have with will never do for me."

Then aloud I said, I spoke gently in my old Five thousand pounds?"

For the rest Miss Giddings was fair and sweet looking with his head upon her
She was a lady, too, which seemed odd for old Simon's niece, for he was vulgar as he was rich; and she sang to us after tea very sweetly.

I had a girl with dark and color, but still her blue eyes and sweet smile haunted me a long time after I was married, and never quarrel with one." I thought "and a woman worth £5,000 world be a selfish prude, if she refused to be my wife, and from old Simon's house for the future."

But he would not let me stay away; he kept on urging me to go home with him.

There was Marian Moore. Perhaps she liked me a little. I admired her immensely;
but she had no money, and I should have to pay from the world I was brought up in sort of place I married her. I should find it hard work to feed and clothe her decently.

This fair, sweet Margaret was rich, and as time passed on I began to see her living for me. And I sat in the office one day, three months from the time of my marriage,
thoughtfully, when at the morning, "mamma,
Fisher boy! It is morning with him always—the morning light of hairer than Italian skies—while we yet grope among the shadows.
But by and by

We shall go home at evening
And feel it morning there.

in the moon again ah! Well, well, when a fellow is in love we must excuse laziness in him. There's my niece Margaret pouring the tea in the slop basin and stirring the milk at breakfast. 'Maggie,' says I, 'you're a thinking of some one, sin'yes?' She blushed to her ears. 'You've managed to go into good graces in that quarter Tom.'

"'Do you think so?' I said.

"'I know so,' said the old man. "'I ought not to say so, you know, but I'm frank.'

I listened to him then, two voices whispering to me:

"'You don't love her,' said one. "'You don't love her,' said the other. "'It would make a man of you. You could go into business on your own account. You ought to be a share in this dingy office.'

"'£5,000,' I said to myself. Then I started to my feet.

"'Mr. Giddings,' I said, "'would you be willing to give your niece to me as my wife?'

His answer was frank.

"'Tom Fisher, I'd prefer her to any decent young man. A girl bothers me; I'm tired of the charge. If you like her, take her,
and I'll hand the 5,000 pounds to you,
and be rid of the charge. She'll say 'you,' don't fear. I'll tell her that you asked me to-night, and to hurry on the wedding."

I thought I heard the thing of a circle
in the church aisle as he spoke. I thought of the graceful step of Marian Moore.
turned field and sat down to my desk; but
I not did Simon's house that night, and
The Marquis. Eha looked so fair and happy at a child. I sat down by her and took her hand.

"Marian," I said, "I'm very happy."

I said, and she had her innocent lips to mine and kissed me. "I'll be very, very good to you."

But Marian was no lover's warmth in my heart; only a kind of a gentle pity for the girl who was to bring me five thousand pounds.

We were engaged. Old Simon joked us constantly and seemed to exult over the affair.
I might even have doubted the existence of the five thousand pounds, but that Maggie
told me of them herself.

"Uncle was keeping them for me to live
on when I was an old maid," she said.

"But you shall do what you choose with the money when I belong to you. We'll buy a pretty house, shan't we, dear, first of all, and live there all our lives somewhere else than on Simon's farm?"

So, after that, I never doubted, but clung to the idea as I could not if I had loved
the girl.

We were married in a fortnight. Uncle
Simon and his old housekeeper alone were present. It had troubled me a good deal when Maggie said I wanted that she had rather not have a wedding party.

"Fancy the bride blushing and the aisle
upon a crutch!" she said. "Let me be married with none to stare at me. You love me, so I don't care about being any more but I'd rather not be stared at."

"I'll be good to her," I said, as the clergyman uttered his prayer—"very very good;" and I was saying it again, when I
and with my wife in old Simon's parlor, and he coming in in the gas, and stood twinkling
his eyes at us maliciously.

"Hilloa! over," he said, with a fiendish
chuckle. "She's yours now, for her $5,000
I shall have to pay."

I blushed with shame. "Not yet," I said; "don't talk of money."

"Why, what else have I married you for?
I've got it here. And he unlocked a side board which stood in the room, and brought out a small roll done up oddly enough in brown paper. "Here it is," said he; "
"There it is! Look at it; count it. Five thousand, pounds, I tell you."

He fairly pinched as he spoke.

She smiled.

I was something in his laugh that made me shudder. Without a word more I walked to the table, opened the parcel and spread out the notes. There were £5,000 worth of them reading the value on their face; but they were the notes of the Bank
Bilston and Bilken bank, which had failed
years ago.

I had been deceived. The girl I had married was penniless!

I sat down, stunned. Old Simon answered with a roar of laughter.

"Good joke," he said. "I have done
what I promised. "You've got the £5,000.
I didn't tell you what it was in. Of course
I didn't tell you what it was in. Of course can't help that. He, he!"

"Why, I should have got given him a blow,
but just then I heard Marguerite scream.
I looked at her. I saw, as I had known, in a flash, that she had stood in the deception.

"Do did mean it! He offered his mind and her five thousand pounds to me! He meant to be married herself. Oh—

"Shall I go? I ask, Marian, you may!
I might as well see the bairns. I was not to be married to-morrow, if she were a country, village curates. Like her uncle, but otherwise why not me what she was made of! At least I could see what I was into bar with old Simon Giddings.

I walked home pretty well that evening, I noticed some little changes in the parlor, so though a lady's hand had been at work in
and in a manner I scarcely made out, sitting in the shadow of the curtains, a girl dressed in deep mourning.

"Marguerite, Mr. Fisher! my mean, Miss
Giddings," she said, as I came in, "I
I forgot, I saw a little velvet-headed creature
leaning against the girl's chair.

She was been, Mr. Fisher, Old Giddings thought this no obstacle to her making a good match. So he offered her to Tom Fisher.

"It won't do, old man," I thought,
"shouldn't mind a pretty whole heart, but have with will never do for me."

Then aloud I said, I spoke gently in my old Five thousand pounds?"

For the rest Miss Giddings was fair and sweet looking with his head upon her
She was a lady, too, which seemed odd for old Simon's niece, for he was vulgar as he was rich; and she sang to us after tea very sweetly.

I had a girl with dark and color, but still her blue eyes and sweet smile haunted
me a long time after I was married, and never quarrel with one." I thought "and a woman worth £5,000 world be a selfish
prude, if she refused to be my wife, and from old Simon's house for the future."

But he would not let me stay away; he kept on urging me to go home with him.

There was Marian Moore. Perhaps she liked me a little. I admired her immensely;
but she had no money, and I should have to pay from the world I was brought up in sort of place I married her. I should find it hard work to feed and clothe her decently.

This fair, sweet Margaret was rich, and
as time passed on I began to see her living for me. And I sat in the office one day, three months from the time of my marriage,
thoughtfully when at the morning, "mamma,
Fisher boy! It is morning with him always—the morning light of hairer than Italian skies—while we yet grope among the shadows. But by and by

We shall go home at evening
And feel it morning there.

Literary Miscellany.

Margaret's Money.

"Who has five thousand pounds," said the old man, "and she's a good girl. She'll make a good wife."

Then I thought to myself it was.

"Who has five thousand pounds?" I thought.
"I'm not a husband worth angling for,
as he knows very well, this man who pays my salary and keeps me in my place.

Still he did not look at me, and I answered with a word or two; I forget what now.
"Here, Tom," he said, "I've a little job for you, looking at me evidently to see how I took the news—"yes; and what do you think he's done? He's left the whole lot to my five-year old in my five-year vault; Can's not a bad name, I don't think, and it looks it up on the down her rings and pins and tots it in never mind.

"Mr. Giddings," I said, "would you be willing to give your niece to me as my wife?"

His answer was frank.

"Tom Fisher, I'd prefer her to any decent young man. A girl bothers me; I'm tired of the charge. If you like her, take her,
and I'll hand the 5,000 pounds to you,
and be rid of the charge. She'll say 'you,'
don't fear. I'll tell her that you asked me to-night, and to hurry on the wedding."

I thought I heard the thing of a circle
in the church aisle as he spoke. I thought of the graceful step of Marian Moore.
turned field and sat down to my desk; but
I not did Simon's house that night, and
The Marquis. Eha looked so fair and happy at a child. I sat down by her and took her hand.

"Marian," I said, "I'm very happy."

I said, and she had her innocent lips to mine and kissed me. "I'll be very, very good to you."

But Marian was no lover's warmth in my heart; only a kind of a gentle pity for the girl who was to bring me five thousand pounds.

We were engaged. Old Simon joked us constantly and seemed to exult over the affair.
I might even have doubted the existence of the five thousand pounds, but that Maggie
told me of them herself.

"Uncle was keeping them for me to live
on when I was an old maid," she said.

"But you shall do what you choose with the money when I belong to you. We'll buy a pretty house, shan't we, dear, first of all, and live there all our lives somewhere else than on Simon's farm?"

So, after that, I never doubted, but clung to the idea as I could not if I had loved
the girl.

We were married in a fortnight. Uncle
Simon and his old housekeeper alone were present. It had troubled me a good deal when Maggie said I wanted that she had rather not have a wedding party.

"Fancy the bride blushing and the aisle
upon a crutch!" she said. "Let me be married with none to stare at me. You love me, so I don't care about being any more but I'd rather not be stared at."

"I'll be good to her," I said, as the clergyman uttered his prayer—"very very good;" and I was saying it again, when I
and with my wife in old Simon's parlor, and he coming in in the gas, and stood twinkling
his eyes at us maliciously.

"Hilloa! over," he said, with a fiendish
chuckle. "She's yours now, for her $5,000
I shall have to pay."

I blushed with shame. "Not yet," I said; "don't talk of money."

"Why, what else have I married you for?
I've got it here. And he unlocked a side board which stood in the room, and brought out a small roll done up oddly enough in brown paper. "Here it is," said he; "
"There it is! Look at it; count it. Five thousand, pounds, I tell you."

He fairly pinched as he spoke.

She smiled.

I was something in his laugh that made me shudder. Without a word more I walked to the table, opened the parcel and spread out the notes. There were £5,000 worth of them reading the value on their face; but they were the notes of the Bank
Bilston and Bilken bank, which had failed
years ago.

I had been deceived. The girl I had married was penniless!

I sat down, stunned. Old Simon answered with a roar of laughter.

"Good joke," he said. "I have done
what I promised. "You've got the £5,000.
I didn't tell you what it was in. Of course
I didn't tell you what it was in. Of course can't help that. He, he!"

"Why, I should have got given him a blow,
but just then I heard Marguerite scream.
I looked at her. I saw, as I had known, in a flash, that she had stood in the deception.

"Do did mean it! He offered his mind and her five thousand pounds to me! He meant to be married herself. Oh—

"Shall I go? I ask, Marian, you may!
I might as well see the bairns. I was not to be married to-morrow, if she were a country, village curates. Like her uncle, but otherwise why not me what she was made of! At least I could see what I was into bar with old Simon Giddings.

I walked home pretty well that evening, I noticed some little changes in the parlor, so though a lady's hand had been at work in
and in a manner I scarcely made out, sitting in the shadow of the curtains, a girl dressed in deep mourning.

"Marguerite, Mr. Fisher! my mean, Miss
Giddings," she said, as I came in, "I
I forgot, I saw a little velvet-headed creature
leaning against the girl's chair.

She was been, Mr. Fisher, Old Giddings thought this no obstacle to her making a good match. So he offered her to Tom Fisher.

"It won't do, old man," I thought,
"shouldn't mind a pretty whole heart, but have with will never do for me."

Then aloud I said, I spoke gently in my old Five thousand pounds?"

For the rest Miss Giddings was fair and sweet looking with his head upon her
She was a lady, too, which seemed odd for old Simon's niece, for he was vulgar as he was rich; and she sang to us after tea very sweetly.

I had a girl with dark and color, but still her blue eyes and sweet smile haunted
me a long time after I was married, and never quarrel with one." I thought "and a woman worth £5,000 world be a selfish
prude, if she refused to be my wife, and from old Simon's house for the future."

But he would not let me stay away; he kept on urging me to go home with him.

There was Marian Moore. Perhaps she liked me a little. I admired her immensely;
but she had no money, and I should have to pay from the world I was brought up in sort of place I married her. I should find it hard work to feed and clothe her decently.

This fair, sweet Margaret was rich, and
as time passed on I began to see her living for me. And I sat in the office one day, three months from the time of my marriage,
thoughtfully when at the morning, "mamma,
Fisher boy! It is morning with him always—the morning light of hairer than Italian skies—while we yet grope among the shadows. But by and by

We shall go home at evening
And feel it morning there.

Bishop Nulty in Belfast.

SPLENDID SERMON ON CHRISTIAN EDUCATION.

Secularism the Foe of Christianity.

$8,000 Collected for a College Church.

On the last Sunday in July the new chapel attached to St. Malachy's College, Belfast, was solemnly dedicated by the Most Rev. Dr. Dorrian, Bishop of Down and Connor. The new church is attached to St. Malachy's College, a religious educational establishment, deservedly esteemed by the Catholics of the North. The building cost about £4,000, and the generosity of the Catholics has yet to provide a considerable sum before the debt is cleared off.
After the first Gospel,

THE RIGHT REV. DR. NULTY,

Bishop of Meath, delivered an eloquent appeal on behalf of the church. His lordship said that they did not come to meet in the magnificent edifice, with its magnificent churches which the generosity and munificence of the Catholics of Belfast were every year after year to the glory of God and the celebration of His Divine worship.
The church at which we have never heard such a voice, such exquisite taste. I know not how I can reach her. But the immediate occasion he be poor privilege that Parti can state that Louise Gobert was once his pupil."

Louise displayed in early years a predilection for convents. She had been educated partly at Georgetown Convent, and openly among her friends declared her inclination for the life of a religious. Her parents were Protestants, and could see no other way of her gratifying her desire or being then dead, and she was even appealed to by the clergy of the Church of Rome, who spoke to her of the wonderful powers of her voice she might delight multitudes, and thus confer a benefit on humanity. But she was deaf to all entreaties. About the last time that she sang in public was at the opening of a church or cathedral in this city, having been specially invited to sing on that occasion. In Pittsburg her voice created so much of a furor among musicians as it had in Philadelphia. Louise joined the convent at Georgetown, but at a division of the sisterhood she was soon afterwards transferred to the Chanslor Seminary in Wheeling. While at this seminary she was visited by very noble vocation. Here it was the late Pierpo Ross first heard Sister Louise sing, and frankly acknowledged that her voice was the sweetest she had ever heard. Liszt, the great pianist, recorded in his journal, published since his death, that at Wheeling he had heard the greatest cantatrice known to the world. Max Strakosch heard of the sweet singer of De Chantal and visited her. Sister Louise sang for him, and so enthusiastic was the impresario that he offered her fifty thousand dollars for a season of six months in concert. Bishop Whelan declined to permit her to accept, and she remained at the school, where she continued to be the wonder of the place.
Her voice could not be described as either that of a soprano or a contralto, it ranged with ease over the compass, making both the extremities of those specialties.
Its tones were full and rich and mellow than anything else. Her voice was too rich to be trained to operatic purposes.
Such was the sweetness of the tones that the sisters of the school would be very well pleased to see her go to carry out their nefarious designs. They aimed at the destruction of the Catholic faith by poisoning the education of the country with heresy and irreligion, but by banishing religion every trace it altogether. They wished to surfeit their souls by an excess of secular education, at the end of which they would starve them in their higher and nobler faculties by refusing them any religious education at all. Such, for many years past, was the
THAT WAS NOT VIGOROUSLY CHRISTIAN and thoroughly Catholic. The Royal schools, the diocesan schools, the Erasmus schools, the Queen's College schools, the schools, and even the National Education schools at an early period of the Protestant ministry for conscience to destroy the faith of the people by subjecting the education of the country with the poison of Protestant or Presbyterian heresy, but all their efforts ended in shameful and ignominious failure. On the other hand the Queen's College of the secularists have made, and are still making, desperate efforts to effect the of the Irish
taught by the defect of their predecessors.
They were adopting a new plan to carry out their nefarious designs. They aimed at the destruction of the Catholic faith not

THE MONITOR.

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 20, 1862.

The Immaculate Conception and the Miracles of Lourdes.

SECOND ARTICLE.

We propose to answer in this article the objection raised by a writer in Scribner's Magazine who insinuated that the miracles at Lourdes were merely performed by the Catholic Church for the purpose of exciting devotion to the Blessed Virgin. There is, however, nothing new in this objection, as the devil devised a similar difficulty in every case where miracles have occurred during the past nineteen centuries. With Protestant writers it is always the easiest way to say that the Church, through her Bishops and priests, is forever practicing all kinds of chicanery and deceit in order to make the world believe she is divine. But such objections entirely lose their force when we reflect that if the Church could use human means to perform a miracle, the same means effects could be used to discover the fraud. Way, therefore, do not the Protestant preachers, writers, scientists, and the whole squad of scoffers at miracles go to work and prove their objections. [illegible] Infidelity, the Infidelity and the intelligence necessary to show up any so called "clerical fraud" discovered by mankind. Table-tipping and spirit-rapping have been exposed by non-Catholic writers; clairvoyance, mesmerism, spiritism, witchcraft, and all similar delusions have been shown up as shams. Now, if human penetration can reveal the spurious nature of such exhibitions and expose the author, why not generally the same intellectual power could be profitably used in proving that the miracles which took place at Lourdes were manufactured by the Catholic priests? Yet, notwithstanding the anxiety of the opponents of the Catholic Church to prove falsehood and fraud against her, here we find miracles vigorously vouched for, and miracles even attested to, during a period of nearly twenty-five years, without being successfully contradicted!

Does it not reasonable, reflecting non-Catholic imagine that such a triumphant vindication of the Church's divine power as the miracles at Lourdes and Lavelle attest, would be permitted to exist for a day if it were possible for Protestant scrutiny, Protestant scholarship and infidel science to successfully overthrow the miraculous evidence of faith therein attested? Europe, Asia, Africa, America and the Australian continent all contain people who have witnessed or heard of the miracles at Lourdes and Lavelle, and yet, in the history glistens with the array of glorious virgins, martyrs and confessors of the faith who have died in proof of the Real Presence of God in His Church. Miraculous manifestations, in like manner, help to make up the mass of evidence showing the supernatural character of the Catholic Church. Miracles, therefore, are possible only where God is present, and as Protestantism is based upon a denial of some of the attributes of God, it thereby denies Him ability to manifest itself by miracles. The [illegible] of truth and puts itself beyond the possibility of perceiving Almighty God's manifestations to mankind. He who breaks one commandment breaks all, says the sacred Scriptures, and, in like manner, he who doubts of the existence of miracles doubts of the omnipotence of God and denies that His power to work miracles for man's instruction is as powerful now as it was when at the request of his ever Immaculate Mother He changed water into wine for the wedding guests in Cana of Galilee.

The very fact of the existence of the Catholic Church in this nineteenth century should serve to prove to Protestants and infidels that the day of miracles has not passed. The Church, we are told by her enemies, was impure in her Pagany, immoral in her decay, inventive in her decline—and this her whole history is declared to be an epitome of spiritual and intellectual decay. Yet, after nineteen hundred years of so-called disrepute and decadence, she stands to-day as firmly upon the footstool of God as did her Divine Founder when He said the gates of Hell should not prevail against her. She is accused of fostering ignorance, yet the greatest glory of the brightest intellects of every age was to be associated her children. She is represented by her enemies as effete and impotent, yet she is powerful enough to pull down the pride of blood and iron emperors and to hold in check the passions of the people. And thus she stand in the vigor of youth—old but ever new—the ever-present imagery of the most wonderful miracle ever performed by Almighty God!

It would be a work of supererogation to lay before our readers a history of the miracles at Lourdes, because our readers are already familiar with them through books, periodicals, and our own columns. Bernadette Soubirous, the child to whom the Blessed Virgin vouchsafed to appear in the grotto, was brought before a tribunal of justice in order to shake her faith in the vision or to prove some collusion with the priests, but she passed through the ordeal unscathed, and eight years afterwards, in her twenty-second year, she became Sister Marie Bernard in the Sisters of the Convent of St. Gildard, Nevers, France, where she died the death of the just on the 16th of April, 1879. The apparitions were retained by proof of the long disease which the judge upon such mysteries, and were formally accepted and promulgated by Pius IX., after the most solemn scrutiny. A magnificent church, built entirely at the expense of the Blessed Virgin appeared, hundreds of pilgrims from every clime visit the shrine and many cures are of frequent occurrence, and, whilst all those works of God are going forward, the foolish cries of the world can only extend their fingers in mockery and mock at mysteries they are too stolid to fathom. As the Angelic Doctor says: "There have always been some persons favored with supernatural lights, not they might reveal a new doctrine of faith, but for the guidance of human conduct."

This opinion of the Angel of the school is based upon Scriptural authority, whereas God declares that He shall pour out His spirit upon all flesh, and that sons and daughters shall prophesy and see visions. And in the miraculous manifestations at Lourdes we behold a continuous series of supernatural events not confined to any year or any particular people. Infidels and Protestants have been converted, the sick have been cured, the blind saw, the lame walked, and then the glory of God revealed itself in the power and majesty of glory which has intended devotion, elevated religion, and confounded the wisdom of an unbelieving world. Neither science nor scholarship had been able to set a cloud upon the pure and unsullied grotto of Lourdes in the quarter of a century it has existed; no worldly wisdom has had sufficient power to envelope the simple story of a little girl of the Pyrenees, and thus, when wisdom, experience, talent and all the power of worldly influence have labored in vain to overturn the designs of God, the only safe conduct for Christians is to bow down and humbly acknowledge that God is always present in His works, both in the world and in the Church: "Et ecce quia in medio Ecclesiæ quo eum, ego Dominus Deus ueter."

THE CARDINALATE QUESTION.

The Philadelphia Standard says: "There is indeed in the Protestant Christian world, a great fear that will be lessened by having its Cardinal Archbishop of New York, Archbishop of Philadelphia and Boston on the Atlantic seaboard, and Cincinnati, St. Louis and New Orleans in the Mississippi Valley can claim precedence as regards seniority of creation, and some of them especially or remote Colleges, Seminaries, Institutions, etc., in the Eastern or Western cities, they are far behind Chicago."

I conclude a long article on the subject as follows: "For those reasons we cannot deplore that one long of one of the Bishops or Archbishops of the West to be Cardinals as highly preferable; and to us it seems most probable that when such action comes to be taken, the Prelate chosen will be the Most Rev. Archbishop of Chicago." We thoroughly like this idea, taken from one of the Cincinnati that they are speculating on Bishop Spalding for Cardinal. Prelates, and popular instinct is valued on the direct prayer of a multitude for the elevation of Father Walsh to the office.

—Father Fleming, the Redemptorist, who recently died in New York was a convert. He came of a Protestant family. In his early life he was the Grand Wielding Friday Vestiary of Washington—the head of the Grand Friday Wrine house of Wielding, and, as such, presiding the ring from more than eight centuries ago by Charlemagne to his renowned successor, the William, who was the last of the Saxons to accept the rule of Charlemagne, and whose migration contrarily, and subsequent and for the Catholic religion have so fully been written in Catholic history.

The Destruction of the Family through Protestantism.

The Catholic Church holds that matrimony is a Sacrament; she blesses the indissoluble union that binds the sexes for life, thus propagating the human race from whence the family springs, and in the and preserving society intact in moral influence. Protestantism has always sprawled that matrimony was anything more than a civil contract which bound two people to live together as long as they saw fit, and then to separate and undergo the mockery of marriage as often as their tastes or their necessities impelled them.

Now, what is the result of this divergence from the Catholic rule during the last three centuries? We behold society growing worse as Protestant principles prevailed, until at length we have a state of society in every so-called Protestant land which provokes scorn to ontrival Sodom and Gomorrha in the depth of its fearful iniquity. All regard for the sacred ties of the family are broken, the fearful crime of fornicate is perpetrated to an extent that cries to heaven for vengeance, and adultery has come to be accounted as one of the ordinary vices of genteel society.

These statements, Catholic reader, may appear exaggerated to you, but we mean to prove every one of them from Protestant witnesses, from whom the truth was forced through the horrible experiences they passed through in their professional avocations. A correspondent of the Freeman's Journal presents this startling aspect of the abominable crime of foticide:

"While the Protestants malignly labor and cash on opinions in heathen lands, what are Catholics in civilized countries doing to encourage, promote and conserve the interests of religion? Supposing that Father Ryan and Wagner are not in their statement of the growth of Protestant, it is not so great as to be serious enough when we consider the alarming extent to which, it is admitted, foticide is practiced among certain of the sects! One of the most eminent physicians of New Jersey—and a Protestant—lamented to me the other day that, in his opinion, no less than ten thousand such murders are committed every year in the city of Newark! He could reach no other conclusion, and he is a party to the crime. What food for thought!—what a commentary upon the moral of the community!—ten thousand murders annually in a city of 140,000 inhabitants! I ranpere! Where Were the people of Sodom and Gomorrah more wicked than the Protestant Christian inhabitants of Protestant settlers? But is Newark more criminal than other American cities where Protestantism predominates!

"Protestant divines not infrequently raise their voices against this abominable sin, which prevents Heaven for vengeance, and which "lo pitiles bell and frenzies its walls and ceilings with souls of human gore." But there seem to be no Protestant divines who appear to be not one of the natural engrafts of a great evil—which ignores the existence of God, and rejects the authority of His Church.

What a fearful indictment against Protestantism, and what a glorious tribute to the Catholic Church! This Protestant physician volunteers the statement that "he could remember no instance of a Catholic [illegible] party to the crime." Virtuous Catholic mothers! Divinely-inspired Church that presents MANY THE IMMACULATE as the model for such mothers!

This statement of the Protestant physician furnished are then [illegible] Very soon will all have passed And the judgment will be over Will he given you at last.

Good Jesus, save the Pastor
Thou take the real men told
Of the sinners and saints
And the story saved and old,
Nothing by the wayside
When Time dying of the day,
At the hour of dark fall please.

By the Cross of Monterey.

This poem is doubly attractive to Catholics because it is religious and historical, and Catholics are hungry for it. We have many poems that can be recited by their pupils, both in class and at exhibition time, with great profit, as it will give the child a conception of what is meant by the beautiful, as well as lead encouragement to genius to select Catholic themes whereon to exercise its poetic powers. "The Midnight Mass," and several other poems partake of the same Catholic spirit which pervades the poem we have selected, and even among the humorous in the Mass there is much a vein of morality which we admire. We hope, therefore, to see this pretty volume adorning the shelves of society libraries, as well as those of our schools, colleges, and individuals who love the good, the beautiful and the pure in poetry as well as prose.

Mr. White has heretofore sent poetical contributions to the Mass. Catholic, and we hope that he will live long to shed the lustre of his genius upon the literature of this land as full of subjects tending to conjure from the poetic brain thoughts that will have power to elevate the hearts of the people to the beauty into the historical love of the romantic past.

A Preacher Badly Peppered!

Over-zealous people are generally the worst enemies of the cause they advocate, and in this respect the Protestant preachers of the blood-and-thunder brigade, who see everything bad in any man who is not bound by their peculiar creeds, have done more harm to the cause of temperance than all the bottled lightning-red whisky ever distilled. Moderation may make men reform, but when they are told that hell is yawning for them if they even smell at the bung-hole of a beer keg, then the American Adam rebels and says to the impolitic preacher—"This is a free country and any man is permitted to enjoy his chosen beverage as long as he infringes not upon the divine or the natural law."

The most recent preacher who has made a mistake in this respect is a certain Rev. Dr. Taft, when the Temperance Legion should send to Stockton as soon as possible to take him on course for two reasons, because, in the first place, he must be more crazy than half the people in that asylum, and, in the next place, his friends—if he has any—should place him beyond the reach of J. F. Linthicum, who pounds him with logic and Scripture until the poor, used-up preacher is a regular mass of Jerusalem jelly! Here is Mr. Linthicum's criticism upon Dr. Taft's unfortunate declaration that any man who drank would never get his vote, and upon which comment is entirely unnecessary:

OFFICE LETTER TO REV. DR. TAFT.

REVEREND SIR: I have read your open letter in the papers, and I confess it has filled me with interest and astonish. You profess to be a Christian, and I presume you are, but, remember, your witnesses. They are not such as should be borne by a liberal-minded Democrat, and I doubt whether they comport with the Christian character you profess. Now, I would ask you: not to indulge some of the fanaticism of an effete Puritanism, but, if you will, to call your attention to a few facts. You solemnly swear that you will not vote for one who drinks, or allows others to drink at his expense; and you go further by saying that you never will knowingly vote for any man whose line of life, historical sentiments are not on the side of good morals, and who will not steer clear of all intoxicating drinks. I'm interested you—and I don't think I have to be taken—you hold that as man's "line of life, habits and sentiments" are "on the side of good morals" who indulges ever so temperately in the use of intoxicating drinks. Hence, sir, you a master in Israel and know not that every time you utter this sentiment, either in the pulpit or in an open letter to a newspaper, you crucify the Son of God afresh and put Him to an open shame! Know you not that the Son of Man came eating and drinking, and that He was called a glutton and a wine bibber? You cannot be ignorant of the fact that when He abominated evil, as the New Testament that our Saviour not only permitted wine to be used in His presence, but Himself was himself as a taverage. Now so blind is sin, did you not? Do, I beg, ye, that will not, do remember be drunk with publicans and sinners, and that he had the reputation of being a winebiber and drunk. And, besides, if he had only drank wine, it would be well for you, and for many of us. According to your ideas of morality, will take for so what he did, and yet you will not let the side of good morals, and yet you profess to be a Christian. Now, I, who am a good thing, Doctor—an excellent thing—and if for office of intemperate habits, I should have for office of intemperate habits, I should have to take the latter as being the lesser evil of the two total abstainers will do. The evils that result from intemperate habits are not confined to their use, but from their abuse. Teach sobriety and temperance, and you will do your duty. Teach sobriety if you think it necessary, but teach it in the spirit of Christ, and not in the spirit of the Pharisees. Teach it in gentle words and kindness, and, sorrow, as holy you (God, you would have nothing to do with that wine bibber. He would not have been good enough for you.

Cordestal, Aug. 2, 1862. J. F. LITHICUM.

The Church in Alexandria.

We are indebted to our Home correspondent for the following translation from one of an article which recently appeared in the Sicilia Cattolica, and which our kind friend generously translated for the benefit of the MONITOR.

The European quarter in Alexandria is entirely of modern construction. In it reside the principal Consuls of the Catholic and heretical persuasions, all of whom enjoyed a sufficient amount of real liberty under the regime of the Egyptian Government, and the Catholic Clergy presented the Catholics of this quarter with a considerable plot of ground to build on, and his successor, Said Pacha, gave the Protest. which enjoyed a sufficient amount of real liberty under the regime of the Egyptian Government, and the Catholic Clergy presented the Catholics of this quarter with a considerable plot of ground to build on, and his successor, Said Pacha, gave the Protest.

A Volume of California Verse.

THE CROSS OF MONTEREY AND OTHER POEMS. By Richard Edward White, San Francisco: The California Publishing Company, 1862.

It is a pleasing reflection to know that amidst the toil and turmoil of commerce, mechanics, agriculture and mining in which Californians are immersed, there are some souls who—possessing the genius of poetry and loving it as an art—make the money-grabbing public of this busy world contemplate loftier themes than those reflected in the ledger of the merchant or the tool-box of the mechanic. No art is lost upon those who are sublimity, in whatever sphere it may be elevated; fine paintings, fine music, fine sculpture, all contribute their share towards making the world better and happier. And, in like manner, a good book is a charging companion, made still more interesting if it speaks to you of scenes familiar or friends of the mental vision a reflex of [illegible] or story in which is photo- of [illegible] of those we love for the be- [illegible] Such book [illegible] feature in the California [illegible] Juniper Serra (God [illegible] we like Mr. White's book [illegible] ance he has chosen Father [illegible] reproduce here because it may induce some Catholics to read the rest of the volume and thereby encourage a gentleman who is gifted with the divine afflatus. The poem we select may not be the best in the book, but we think it will give our readers more pleasure than any other. It is entitled

BY THE CROSS OF MONTEREY.

Good Father the Pulpit,
Was dying of the day,
Set impish the dark tall pine-trees,
By the Cross of Monterey.

Listening as the simple red men,
Of lance jaws and corse on hold,
And their stories of the Mission,
And their hip 'tis quaint and old.

Good Father the Pulpit
Rested by the crescent bay,
Little dreaming he was passing
On the wicked for Monterey,
That the sun on shore he planted
And the ground about it blessed,
And then he said his compline
Journeyed northward on their quest.

And the Indians told the Padre
That Portola's cross at night,
Gleaming with a brilliant splendor,
Thus the noon-sun was more bright,
And in mighty arm extended
East and westward, O so far!
And in upward pointed pointed Northward on the Polar star.

And they told, when fear had vanished,
How they gathered all around,
And their spears and arrows buried
In the consecrated ground,
And they brought some fragrant blossoms,
And rare ceremonials in strings,
And they hung upon the cross-arms
All their shadowy offerings.

And the Padre told the Indians:
"Ah, if rightly understood,
What you said on the cross here
Has a meaning deep and good,
For that light is mysterious
That the time is near at hand
When the Cross of the Saviour
Will illumine all the land.

"To the Cross dying, O my children!
In the storm and in the night,
When you wander lost in sorrow,
Very soon will all have passed
And the judgment will be over
Will be given you at last.

Good Jesus, save the Pastor
Thou take the real men told
Of the sinners and saints
And the story saved and old,
Nothing by the wayside
When Time dying of the day,
At the hour of dark fall please.

By the Cross of Monterey.

This poem is doubly attractive to Catholics because it is religious and historical, and Catholics are hungry for it. We have many poems that can be recited by their pupils, both in class and at exhibition time, with great profit, as it will give the child a conception of what is meant by the beautiful, as well as lead encouragement to genius to select Catholic themes whereon to exercise its poetic powers. "The Midnight Mass," and several other poems partake of the same Catholic spirit which pervades the poem we have selected, and even among the humorous in the Mass there is much a vein of morality which we admire. We hope, therefore, to see this pretty volume adorning the shelves of society libraries, as well as those of our schools, colleges, and individuals who love the good, the beautiful and the pure in poetry as well as prose.

Mr. White has heretofore sent poetical contributions to the MASS. CATHOLIC, and we hope that he will live long to shed the lustre of his genius upon the literature of this land as full of subjects tending to conjure from the poetic brain thoughts that will have power to elevate the hearts of the people to the beauty into the historical love of the romantic past.

Are Rich People Exempt from the Criminal Law?

It used to be a standard expression in ancient days in England that the King could do no wrong, and the same inestimability was extended to his officers, and it is glorious justice to those who have dollars enough to deliver them from the clutches of the law made for the punishment of criminals. This fact was so notorious that it became a proverbial one, and the people of Ireland, Italy, Germany, and other European Powers. France is evidently preparing for some coup d'etat which will put a new phase upon the Egyptian question, and while she is getting ready she allows Egypt to go on as unfortunate as it is, and yet Egypt has not yet commenced, but that it will end in embroiling France

Farm and Home.

Would Kill Every Bug.

In the spring of last year a smooth-tongued, gift-mentioned young man, who had gone through the lightning rod course and graduated in the book-agency business, passed through Washington and the adjoining counties, introducing what he called the "bug exterminator." He was very fair and reasonable, and as he was only taking orders for his invention he merely required one-third (50c.) cash, and the rest he would collect in the fall when he passed through. In case the exterminator failed to kill every bug upon which it was used according to accompanying directions, he would refund the money. Nothing could be fairer than that, so he was well received everywhere, and went away with about $200 in his pocket, leaving his address with every purchaser in case he should neglect to send the exterminator. Well, in due course of mail, every farmer received a neat-looking little package labeled "Bug Exterminator—certain death—dies fit—none genuine without signature," etc. Upon opening it, the farmer discovered two neat, smooth little square blocks, containing the following direction on No. 1: "Place the bug on this block; and No. 2: "Strike the bug violently with this block." The farmers were ready for him when the time came for him to return, but I need not say the time came on alone.

Cheerful Women.

When men choose a wife they should select a cheerful, happy tempered woman, no matter whether she is handsome or not. They make a great mistake when they marry for beauty or style, or on account of her accomplishments, if there is not a cheerful heart to go with them, a bright, sunny face. The constant, cheerful influence of a wife often enhances the magic power of being bright and beautiful, and a morose, gloomy, discontented spirited their husbands treat them with the courtesy and kindness which is their right. Sick or poor, high or low, it makes little difference, provided the bright light, harmonious disposition brightens up like a constant spring in the desert and cheers and refreshes the weary traveler. Was ever the stream of trouble and trial so dark and deep that a smile of a cheerful wife does falling across the troubled waters would fail to awaken an answering glow? No, indeed! He cultivates a happy, cheerful happy disposition, friends, and those who love him best will gather about him and bless him in the life by his side.

No matter how gloomy and crushed you may feel, no matter if the heavens be filled with malediction upon the great affliction of life or that the clouds be overcast with pitiful and substance and tears; just let one of those sunny spirits come across you, and my word for it she will cause you from your fled the "blues." The long drawn sigh of your breath will shorten; the black gloom of your brow will disappear, and almost before you know it you will be laughing merrily at some comedy she is relating, and your troubles will be forgotten.

As what a blessing are those cheerful spirits! How they lighten the burdens and assuage the grief of the mourner; and their bright, sunny smiles bring sunlight to the gloomy home of the sick and suffering, and they do until the judgment day will be the same. Let all the young ladies cultivate and show how much we owe to those happy, helpful, happy souls.

How to Choose a Wife.

"A piece for everything, and everything in its place," and a polecat is to be choosed. "Select a wife, my son, who will never grow a beanstalk in your garden." Select a wife, my son, who will be a comfort to the house. "Now, and be phenomenally on your guard against a wife who is a perfect fright. Be careful that you not stick to choose me a wife. The young lady who will not stop even to shed have the fear of my best." They passed from the spinning-room to the grocery; some bundled over the housecloth and others jumped over it. The latter were considered the best, and got it for the prize. The prize was well fulfilled, she was the best housekeeper, a kind and affectionate wife, and be the husband of a prudent, industrious and lovely wife. He made a fortune and lived happily and died in care one. It is not easy to decide which of the two was the happier, the husband or wife, both were good and entitled the other.

Importance of the Family.

The foundation of every good government is the family. The best and most prosperous country is that which has the highest regard for the sanctities of domestic life. The highest interests center around home in marriage. It has been said that the ties of marriage are the ties of the condition of marriage. Without it there is no home, no family, no Sabbath enjoyment, no life worth living for. Life in a barbarous state is a life of misery, and the ties of home and attention of more good man, who has not and the heart of woman, who has not and the heart of woman, who has not and the heart of woman Attempted Assassination of Archbishop Gould.

[CONCLUDED FROM FIRST PAGE.]

O'FARRELL'S LAW PRACTICE

Noted him from £5,000 to £6,000 a year. He lived in good style, and the expenses of the settlement of his father's estate were so great that he dabbled largely in outside speculations. The great colonial banker, Money Miller, formed a marine insurance company, in which he lost $80,000 in a couple of years, and O'Farrell, who was largely interested, was also a heavy loser. He was always a man of a violent, and, at times, even brutal temperament, and by neglect and positive ill-treatment drove his wife, nee Miss Mair, to leave. She went to Europe, and at the end of two years returned to Melbourne with a new-born babe. This scandal caused O'Farrell to lose caste, and his business fell off considerably. To make money he engaged in one of the most reckless speculations ever heard of. He persuaded a large number of servant girls and poor people to invest their savings in his bands, for which he paid the outsiders interest of 12½ per cent. per annum, when money could be freely obtained for all legitimate purposes at 7 and 8 per cent. He explained that his plan was to loan money to farmers from said time to harvest at the rate of 1½ per cent. per month, and make an additional profit for himself by the legal business of recording the mortgages, and give certificates of deposit payable after harvest. When the time came he repaid to many persons the same the money in his hands for a honorarium. This lasted for years, when the "Forty Thieves," who had never lost sight of him, and who had secured a piece of his paper, commenced to push him to the wall. To satisfy the notes he used the money of his depositors, and they, doubtless, indignated by

THE FORTY THIEVES,

Commenced to press for the payment of their deposits. O'Farrell had not the cash on hand and became a defaulter. A Catholic priest named Chatsworth, City a most determined man, had deposited £800 in O'Farrell's hands, and knowing how matters stood, instantly sued out a warrant against O'Farrell for misappropriation of funds, which, among English law, is a felony, that would, if proven, have sent him to the convict establishment at Sandridge. Before the warrant was served the private secretary of Chatsworth, a young Irishman, who was a warm friend of Charles O'Hay, heard of the trouble, and to save a scandal to the Church, and also to help both the friends of the "Forty Thieves," hid O'Farrell away in his room. He was penniless, but a few friends came to his aid with funds enough to pay his passage thereof and stowed him away on a wood boat for Port Fairy, which he managed to escape to Calcutta on a steamer laden with horses and mules. In the latter, Mr. Allan, of Gipp's Land, took care of his two children, as he had his company property belonging to Gould, when he heard of O'Farrell's transition, made up his mind to return to the Australian left to himself and other churchmen by O'Farrell's father, which amounted to the many hundreds. He sent to Mrs. Allan, for the use of O'Farrell's children, £100, and a draft for £150, to be forwarded to O'Farrell, if he needed money, and to O'Farrell himself he sent £20 in small change.

THE CAUSE OF THE TROUBLE

Between O'Farrell and the Archbishop, as will be shortly hereafter, O'Farrell spent some time in Calcutta, but found nothing to suit his mind, but the independence of Ireland, took passage for London, where he arrived about 1869. He failed to procure employ and sailed for the port of New York, where he cited out a precarious existence by what he broke out. He was one of the foot to join the Northern army, and in the bloody engagements that followed he served under McDowell's division at the battle of Bull Run. In that department he served clerk in the office of the war, adding to his income by writing letters to English and Irish papers. Some of these letters the Rev. O'Farrell drifted into the newspaper business, and worked on Western papers from Chicago to Sacramento. His forte was editorial writing, for which his general knowledge, which he had acquired at home in early education eminently fitted him. In the year 1871 he came from San Francisco, and joined the Authors' Carnival of that year, the highest work on the San Francisco Chronicle, contributed the annual of Gaffney's Ball, and contributed to the Chronicle, and also contributed some articles to the Monitor. He also contributed to the Sacramento Bee, which he began to show his unfavorable temper. He assumed an ex-resident of Melbourne, and was a very good man, and who had commenced him before his flight, of gold. They have always sought to evade and that he was not entitled to receive, and commenced a demand for principal and compound interest of $5,000. When the demand was proved incorrect and groundless, he

THREATENED AGAINST THE GENTLEMAN'S LIFE

And backed up violently that the Chief of Police would be called to interfere, and an officer to O'Farrell to inform him that a repetition of his offence would by him upon Archbishop Gould for £5,000, compound interest for £25,000, compound interest, the bishop had in the goodness of his heart remitted, and he was good enough to take by the Archbishop, who thought it as in the opinion of the unfavorable temper and unpleasant disposition of O'Farrell, and a compliment took in O'Farrell's character, and he was in the habit of the opinion of Archbishop Gould, who was a warm friend of Charles O'Hay, heard of the trouble, and to save a scandal to the Church, and also to help both the friends of the "Forty Thieves," hid O'Farrell away in his room. He was penniless, but a few friends came to his aid with funds enough to pay his passage thereof and stowed him away on a wood boat for Port Fairy, which he managed to escape to Calcutta on a steamer laden with horses and mules. In the latter, Mr. Allan, of Gipp's Land, took care of his two children, as he had his company property belonging to Gould, when he heard of O'Farrell's transition, made up his mind to return to the Australian left to himself and other churchmen by O'Farrell's father, which amounted to the many hundreds. He sent to Mrs. Allan, for the use of O'Farrell's children, £100, and a draft for £150, to be forwarded to O'Farrell. If he needed money, and to O'Farrell himself he sent £20 in small change.

THE CAUSE OF THE TROUBLE

Between O'Farrell and the Archbishop, as will be shortly hereafter, O'Farrell spent some time in Calcutta, but found nothing to suit his mind, but the independence of Ireland, took passage for London, where he arrived about 1869. He failed to procure employ and sailed for the port of New York, where he cited out a precarious existence by what he broke out. He was one of the foot to join the Northern army, and in the bloody engagements that followed he served under McDowell's division at the battle of Bull Run. In that department he served clerk in the office of the war, adding to his income by writing letters to English and Irish papers. Some of these letters the Rev. O'Farrell drifted into the newspaper business, and worked on Western papers from Chicago to Sacramento. His forte was editorial writing, for which his general knowledge, which he had acquired at home in early education eminently fitted him. In the year 1871 he came from San Francisco, and joined the Authors' Carnival of that year, the highest work on the San Francisco Chronicle, contributed the annual of Gaffney's Ball, and contributed to the Chronicle, and also contributed some articles to the Monitor. He also contributed to the Sacramento Bee, which he began to show his unfavorable temper. He assumed an ex-resident of Melbourne, and was a very good man, who had commenced him before his flight, of gold. They have always sought to evade and that he was not entitled to receive, and commenced a demand for principal and compound interest of $5,000. When the demand was proved incorrect and groundless,

Poetry.

GIFTS THROUGH MARY.

Before her altar we kneel to pray,
In the dewy morn, at noon of day;
When the evening Angelus rings, when
Her sculptured image we kneel before,
To beg her blessing, to ask her love,
Loving and trusting as to a dove,
Pleading the merits of her most dear—
The sweet "Hail Marys" she loves to hear;
Pleading them, too, with eyes filled love,
That she gathers them into her heart above.

We wish her shrine with a new feast heart,
To the bonds of life anew we start;
The toil of the day, with its weary hours,
Begins—and a cheery path is ours
Purchased, not a ray there of sunlight too,
Yet we labor, we struggle, we bravely do;
Nothing we shrink from, nothing we fear,
For our morning's promise we oft recall,
We are all the sheltered that o'er us bend,
Tis that Mary's mantle was round us flung.

When the tempter would we from right to stray,
And removed his insidious arts each day,
With some dear thought many a corpse will,
Our wayward hearts to again begin;
Sunshine, oh! array, One glance of love,
One prayer to that Mother heart above;
And the talents we pass that were o'er us spread,
And light on our souls again is shed;
Once more do we recognize and bless
This new period of Mary's tenderness.

That brief which bashed our chaste strength,
As first which present, but we are at length,
And with heart resigned and unshrived bow
To the hand that sent the chastening blow;
As we thought of the griefs of that Virgin Heart
Which of Calvary was born on great's part,
Where chalice life was our doleful view
Of sorrows and pains of the Mother true
Whence came the grace that sustained us then
The Mary's pleadings were heard again.

When our failings sadden the Saviour's heart,
And more is to keep from His love apart;
When our own hearts feel but much the while,
And we miss our Mother's approving smile,
Grace touches—repentant we bend once more,
And her gentle pleading again inspires;
Again does her gaze of tenderness
Let us on, to strengthen, to cheer and bless.
We kneel to our God with a contrite prayer,
Each day with some good work we pledge there.
We ask but one more, one crowning grace,
Sweet Mary, made in thy fond embrace.

MONIMIA.

York Reminiscent.

Literary Miscellany.

The Son's Return.

BY GERALD GRIFFIN.

On a sudden she heard voices outside the window. Alive to the slightest circumstance that was unusual, she arose, all dark as it was, threw on her simple dress in haste, and groped her way to the front door of the dwelling. The recognition of a voice of a neighbor, and opened the door, supposing that he might have some intercourse with apartment in my house. She judged correctly.

"Good news! good news! Mrs. Reardon! I give you joy of it! Is she awake? What, you give her joy of it! Is she awake? Is she in her small head as the shoes?"

"That small head—what?—where?"

"Below, there ma'am, where I'm pointing my hand. Don't you see them moving, by the cow towards you?"

"I cannot—I cannot, it is so dark, the shadows, and the distance, and the mist upon the glass."

"Ah! I'ud and the brand can shining down upon them this fifty day! I'ud—"

"What's the matter! Don't you see them, ma'am?"

"Yes!" (the poor woman cried, clasping her hands on her eyes, and speaking aloud in her agony) "Oh! I shall never from her more, and the light heart is a joyous food on her face. She sat for an instant bewildered, and incapable of viewing any object in distinctness. The first object which her eyes opened was the figure of a young man, bareheaded, as he gazed with an intense and ecstatic fondness upon here, and with his arms extended as if to meet upon the recognition. The face, though changed and sunned since she had known it, was still familiar to her. She leaned from her seat with a wild cry of joy, and her herself into the bosom of her son.

She embraced him repeatedly, then removed him a distance that she might have the opportunity of viewing him with great or distinctness and again, with a burst of tears, flung herself upon his neck. Other voices, too, mingled with theirs. She heard her husband and these children, who, in an ecstasy of her joy, she had forgotten, eagerly for her caress. She embraced them all, returning from each to each, and exclaiming that her joy was so great that she would never drink deep enough of the cup of rapture which has been presented to her. The beauty of the young mother—the fresh and rosy color of the children—the glossy brightness of their hair—their smiles—their movements of joy—all afforded a feast of delight and satisfaction, such as she might never have experienced had she never contrasted them in the light of their opposites. The contrast upon the thought that the consciousness of a stranger's presence alone, by attempting to restrain the feelings of the patient and her friends, relieved her from the fatigue of a long and, but without tears, the sense of happiness which she had been instrumental in conferring. Well, "good" was the word for it, and "good" was the word for it, and "good" was the word for it, and

THE MONITOR.
TWENTY-THIRD YEAR OF PUBLICATION.
WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 6, 1882.

Saved by a Single "Hail Mary."

The most truthful line ever written by poets' pen was the sublime line, the most effective Schiller when he wrote these almost inspired words:

"THE EYE WE ONCE TO GOD IN PRYER LIFT."

This is a precept which should be printed and put up in every Catholic school room and home in the world; it should also be implanted in the heart of every Catholic child; it should, moreover, be the incentive to devotion in manner years, and then at the hour of death—when the world vanishes from our gaze, and we see only God in his majesty and mercy—what a sweet reflection to feel that we have returned to Him at least a portion of that time which He lent us so that we might know Him, love Him and serve Him. God, in His unlimited supervision over us, guards us in many ways, yet how many Catholics there are who begrudingly give back to Him the half-hour necessary to hear Mass on Sunday, or the few minutes required for morning or night prayers! As for "losing time" listening to a sermon on Sunday—how many, alas! count themselves upon the Satan-suggested plea that "they cannot afford the time." How the guardian angels of such careless Catholics must weep as they witness this base ingratitude to God on the part of those He loves best. If, as the Scotch bard tells us,

"Man's inhumanity to man Makes countless thousands mourn,"

Then we may well imagine how much greater the sorrow of the blessed as they witness the deep and damning ingratitude of those millions of miserably Catholics who refuse to return to God even a small atom of that time which He graciously gave them so that an eternity of bliss might be earned! Of such Catholics it may well be said:

The ingratitude of sun to God
Makes even little angels mourn.

But it is a glorious consolation to know that there are Catholics who never forget God, who glorify His name at all times and in all places, and whose prayers ascend like incense up to heaven causing an increase of joy to the angelic hosts that surround the throne of the Most High. These Catholics are not confined to any particular rank or calling in life—they are to be found in the cabin of childhood, in the world, in the sanctuary, and are numerous among the aged and infirm. Neither riches nor poverty interfere with their prayers; they are busy in this work-a-day world for food and clothing, but, nevertheless, they never forget that they have souls to feed with the Bread of Life and which must be clad in the pure garment of stainless virtue ere they can aspire to a share in the kingdom of Heaven. Yes, thanks to our Holy Mother the Catholic Church, Almighty God has many good and faithful servants in his service, and in one of such servants we desire to speak in this article so as to show Catholics how useful it is at all times to pause in their work and ask God, Jesus Christ or the Holy Ghost to assist them in piousness and say a prayer before the Blessed Sacrament, or, if not convenient, in any quiet spot surrounded by adoring angels, although apparently abandoned by mankind.

The incident is related in a recent number of the Herd Amerike, a German paper published in Philadelphia, as having happened in Berlin, and it is gratifying that we feel assured its publication will do good in many ways. The following is the incident, as related by a contemporary:

A large factory in Berlin was totally destroyed by an explosion of gas; by the disaster six persons were killed, and seventeen others were maimed and scorched seriously; the factory itself fell a prey to the devouring flames. On the evening of the day of this unfortunate occurrence, a young servant girl was observed at the Map devotions as one of the Berlin choristers. She appeared the chosen favorite of Lady Altar, keeping in her hands a beautiful wreath of flowers which she placed at the shrine of the Mother of God. Upon being asked the reason of so costly an offering, she replied in a simple, enlightened manner: "This morning I was sent by my employer to the shop factory that was destroyed to buy by an application of gas. On my way to the factory I passed a church, and the thought came into my head, 'Go and say one "Hail Mary" perhaps you won't have time to go to the May devotions to-night.' So I went in and said one single 'Hail Mary.' At that moment I felt some powerful force push me forward; I felt the concussion; I came to myself in spite of the factory; I found a fearful crushing noise, the flames burst forth, the factory was one a total wreck. Had I not said that 'Hail Mary' in the church, I must have been killed with the others, and I should never have been stretched in the morgue, a blackened corpse." The poor little child of May added, with tears in her eyes, "Ah! what would my mother have said if I had been killed."

And then it seems about that one little prayer saved the life of a child whose devotion was doubtless increased by this visible manifestation of Divine Providence; the parents of her parents, too, were spared the pangs of poignant grief, and another example is thus added to the many that have gone before, in order to impress Catholics with the sublime truth of the saying that "The Hand MY GRIEVE TROOPS IN EGYPT.

It has been estimated that the total strength of the army of Egypt, already cast and to be mustered, will be about 50,000 men, of whom 30,000 will be British, 12,000 others and men from England, and others, with arms, will be organized from abroad. To this force is to be added the Indian contingent, numbering in all about 14,000, the Egyptian Army, 18,000, the Gendarmerie, 7,000, the Navy, 7,000, the Police, 10,000, the Reserves, 10,000, the Bashi Bazouks, 10,000, the Irregulars, 10,000, the Bedouins, 10,000, the Irregulars, 10,000, the Bedouins, 10,000, the Irregulars, 10,000, the Bedouins

Farm and Home.

California the Best Country.

O. P. Hoddy, who was foreman in the Mendocino Democrat office several years ago writes to that paper from Astoria, Oregon, as follows: "At Lewiston, I. T., I met a member of ranchmen from Napa, Lake and Sonoma, and, I am sorry to say they are all homesick, and all they are trying to do is to get enough money to go back to California on. At Lewiston I crossed the Clearwater and went over to Moscow, Colfax, Sprague, Cheney, Spokane Falls, Fort Colville, Cœur d'Alene, Pend d'Oreille, and all through the Big Bend of the Columbia river. In this country I met hundreds of poor families who had left their comfortable homes in Napa, Sonoma and Mendocino counties to improve their condition but failed—and it was a pitiful sight to behold. Many of them left California with just money enough to get here, expecting to get employment on their arrival, but many of them have failed. Last Winter many of them actually suffered for want of shelter, clothing and something to eat. Many ranchmen of California who had pleasant comfortable little homes, sold out and went up to that country in order to better their condition, but almost all failed. It is a good country, and a man who has some little capital can make money and eat fish, but what he does it, get fixed' he will 'get up and git' for God's country—California. I have taken all this country in—Oregon, Vancouver Island, B. C., Washington Territory, Idaho and Montana—and my advice to the poor people of California is not to go to the Big Bend of the Columbia, unless they have money enough to take a chain and hoop themselves a year or two without a revenue coming in. Furthermore, I would advise people who have homes in California, and are making a comfortable living, to stay there."

A Good Year.

In a well-timed review of the industrial condition of affairs in this State, the San Francisco Post says:

It is evident that farmers of California will have abundance of money at their disposal during the season, and that the home trade will be better. Merchants and storekeepers should have no difficulty in meeting their engagements, as, fortunately for the State, there has been an absence of reckless speculation of any kind. Business has been transacted for the past two seasons upon a conservative basis, and the good effects of this are noticeable in the steady growth of trade and prevailing confidence. Mercantile credit never stood higher upon the coast than it does at present. It is to be hoped, therefore, that a system which has been productive of so much good will be continued. And the farmers should profit by past experience, and invest their money in permanent improvements. It will pay to plant shade trees as well as fruit trees. Homesteads should be beautified by trees, both useful and ornamental; farms should be repaired and extended; permanent pastures laid down; improved breeds of sheep, cattle and hogs secured; and an effort put forth to make the farm attractive as a residence and profitable as an investment.

Grease Your Wheels.

The season has now arrived for the almost constant use of vehicles of all kinds, from the farm wagon to the buggy, and a few words in regard to grease, will be timely to those who wish to avoid delays, expense, and oftentimes considerable danger. An ordinary farm wagon, one which may be purchased nearly every day for heavy hauling, is seldom driven faster than the walk of an ordinary horse, and therefore, provided it is properly lubricated, it will last years, and be in good condition for use at present. It is to be hoped, however, that a system which has been practiced so much good will be continued. And the farmers should profit by past experience, and invest their money in permanent improvements. It will pay to plant shade trees as well as fruit trees. Homesteads should be beautified by trees, both useful and ornamental; farms should be repaired and extended; permanent pastures laid down; improved breeds of sheep, cattle and hogs secured; and an effort put forth to make the farm attractive as a residence and profitable as an investment.

Grease Your Wheels.

The season has now arrived for the almost constant use of vehicles of all kinds, from the farm wagon to the buggy, and a few words in regard to greasing, will be timely to those who wish to avoid delays, expense, and oftentimes considerable danger. An ordinary farm wagon, one which may be purchased nearly every day for heavy hauling, is seldom driven faster than the walk of an ordinary horse, and therefore, provided it is properly lubricated, it will last years, and be in good condition for use at present. It is to be hoped, however, that a system which has been productive of so much good will be continued. And the farmers should profit by past experience, and invest their money in permanent improvements. It will pay to plant shade trees as well as fruit trees. Homesteads should be beautified by trees, both useful and ornamental; farms should be repaired and extended; permanent pastures laid down; improved breeds of sheep, cattle and hogs secured; and an effort put forth to make the farm attractive as a residence and profitable as an investment.

How the Japanese Restore Faded Flowers.

After a bouquet is drooping beyond all remedies of fresh water, the Japanese can bring it back to all its first glory by a very simple and seemingly most instructive operation. A friend of Dr. Clark's in Japan says: "I had received some days ago a delightful bundle of flowers from a Japanese acquaintance. They continued to live in all their beauty for nearly two weeks, when at last they faded. I was about to have them thrown away the same gentleman (Japanese gentleman) came to see me. I showed him the faded flowers, and told him that, though lasting a long time, they had gone because unknown to me, I had, 'only put the ends of the stems into the fire, and they will be as good as before.' I was incredulous; so he took them himself and held the stems ends in the fire until they were charred. This was in the morning; at evening they were again looking fresh and vigorous, and have continued so to another week. What may be the true reason for this reviving process, I am unable to determine fully; whether it may be the driving once more the last juices into the leaves and vein, or whether it be the last spurt of carbon furnished by the fire, I am inclined, however, to the one, as the full effect was not produced some eight hours afterwards, seems that if the heat was the cause, it must have been sooner visibly changed."

Agents now calling in Rome have to labor down from the dome of St. Peter's, which Constantine planted City, and which has been for hundred years, to replace it on hope that this symbol of not long disgrace the Holy Propriety.

Proprietor.

Some one has wisely remarked that human is proverbially selfish, and that "proprietary medicines are the most selfish of all." As we understand them, proprietary medicines are those which all the world, or a great portion of it, can use with benefit, and the latter is Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, and and sound Physicians, Clergymen of the land, it stands alone in its medicinal virtues, and by its wonderful cures it has made for itself a name and a place in the world, which the world will not let it lose. Isn't it cheap, a bottle of it yourself, and take it a dispensation, that is pay for your people, adding it at the hands of your physicians, thus cost!

MISCELLANEOUS.

ROOFS — TIN! ASPHALTUM!! Pure Rosin or Lower Rates. Old Roofs Repaired, and GUARANTEED when so entitled. 307 MARKET STREET Opp. Lloyd's Exchange. H. G. FISKE.

Yours for Health — Lydia E. Pinkham

LYDIA E. PINKHAM'S VEGETABLE COMPOUND. Its a Positive Cure. For all those Painful Complaints and Weaknesses so common to our female population. A Medicine for Women. Invented by a Woman. Prepared by a Woman. The Greatest Boiled Discovery Since the Dove of Noah's Ark. It restores the drooping spirits, invigorates and harmonizes the organic functions, gives quality and tension to the step, removes the natural hesitancy in the gait, and stamps on the pale cheek of woman the fresh roses of life's spring and early summer time. Mrs. M. WITTFIER, Wilmington, Del., says: "I have been troubled with Dyspepsia and Kidney Complaint, Sulphuric Bitters, destroyed all craving for stimulants, and relieved weakness of the stomach. Sulphuric Bitters, causing pain, weight and backache, is always permanently cured by use. For the cure of Kidney Complaints of either sex this Compound is unsurpassed. LYDIA E. PINKHAM'S BLOOD PURIFIER Will at all times and under all circumstances act in harmony with the laws of life, but it will not do any good when taken in connection with Spirituous Liquors. Sold by all Druggists.

DR. CLARK JOHNSON'S Indian Blood Syrup. CURES Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint, Fever & Ague, Rheumatism, Nervous Debility, etc. The Best REMEDY KNOWN to Man! 12,000,000 Bottles A SOLD SINCE 1870. This Syrup possesses Varied Properties. It Stimulates the Digestion in the Saliva, which acts upon the Food, Converting it into Blood, Bone and Muscle. A Laxative is Produced by the Action of the Bile upon the Bowels, which is Entirely Different from any other medicine. It Purifies the Blood and Makes Vigorous Old and Young. Sold by all Druggists.

MISCELLANEOUS. RALSTON'S PHARMACY. J. H. RALSTON — HAS JUST OPENED A — New Drug Store, N. W. cor. Post & Powell sts., — WITH A SELECT STOCK OF — Fresh Drugs, Pure Chemicals, — AND A TASTEFUL ASSORTMENT OF — TOILET ARTICLES, FINE PERFUMES, ETC. Prescriptions accurately compounded, day or night. E. BUTTERICK & CO'S — CELEBRATED — PAPER PATTERNS — FOR — Ladies', Misses, and Little Children's Garments. FALL STYLES NOW READY. Send Postage Stamp for Illustrated Catalogue. ADDRESS H. A. DEMING, 124 POST ST., San Francisco, Cal.

A nonabsorbent bandage has recently been placed on the new razors sold by Messrs. Rodgers & Co., of Sheffield. Pitting is not to be feared at their silver; but if it is an keen as razors, or razors, or pitted, or pitted, or pitted

A Reception at the Vatican.

HOW THE POPE RECEIVES HIS VISITORS.

An Audience Described by a Protestant.

Pen and Ink Sketch of Leo XIII.

A Protestant gentleman who is making the tour of Europe recently visited Rome and sends to a Protestant periodical the following interesting account of an audience he went through upon the Pope's anniversary day. Having arrived at the Vatican, the writer says:

After passing through an ante-chamber, filled with chamberlains and other dignitaries, we were shown into the Sistine Gallery, where the audience was to take place. This gallery, which is not generally shown to the public, is of very great length, being about one hundred and sixty yards. The walls are entirely covered with tapestry, painted in a realistic way, with ships sailing on the blue sea, and the mountains and forests in the distance. The effect is curious and very beautiful. The roof is also frescoed, the floor is of inlaid and highly polished marble. Rows of busts on pedestals, against the walls and seats painted to imitate marble, are its only furniture. The windows on one side look into the lovely Italian garden.

We arrived a little before half-past eleven, the time fixed for the audience; and although it soon became evident that punctuality was not intended, yet the novelty of the scene was amply sufficient to prevent any feeling of weariness. Each person on arriving was shown into a chair by his or her official. All the ladies present were in black dresses, with long black veils, worn over the head like Spanish mantillas. The gentlemen were in evening dress, and the assemblage was in every way strong.

PRIEST FROM VARIOUS LANDS;

embalmed monks of different orders, with rosary at girdle, and robes of white or brown, were scattered in their cells, waiting when to them was a great event. Next to us was a group of French priests, who were going on pilgrimage to beyond the borders of civilization in the East, who had come to receive a special benediction from the Holy Father before leaving for their dangerous work. A little farther off was a venerable monk, whose long silvery beard and hair had been moved to speak of many years ago and the usual spot near. He had come a long distance to have an interview with the Supreme Head of his Church. Nearly all the religious present had objects to be blessed by the Pope, such as crucifixes; but many had medallions and crucifixes, and not a few little medals of the bronze statue of St. Peter in the Vatican, the touch of which is so often and so reverently kissed, that it has to be renewed, and is again being bronzed. The ceremonies next to us had an immense number of rosaries to be taken out from their resting place more than two hours, the doors at the further end of the gallery were opened, and the procession of the Papal Guard came in. The discomfort was so great that we were all glad to see the Pope, who was followed by a general effect of bright colors in his gorgeous procession. He looked very well, but appeared to be stationary; then, after a time, we became conscious it was moving, but so slowly, and with such frequent pauses, as to be almost imperceptible. At length we recognized the face of the Pope, who was carried on his chair of state, and followed by a brilliant group opposed at the open end of the gallery, each member of which is a nobleman, and wears a full trimmed hermit's frock of white cloth, with a cross of orders; dignitaries in purple robes, Cardinals in red, and the Pope himself at last we caught a glimpse in the centre of

A SMALL PURPLE BUNDLE IN WHITE

Lying back in his chair, closely attended by the procession. It was impossible to see that slowly moving figure, with its imperious face, without being more powerfully impressed. He is the representative of a great idea, and that impression is all. Somebody says, "we certainly boast of a far higher ideal than any Napoleon ever had; and; looking another two great eras of human civilization. Our modern feudal system spread conquest and power, and commerce in regular order, of Peter, of Christ, and of the Cross."

A Monsigner who walked by the side of the Pope, asked the name, nationality, and rank of each person, for the information of his Holiness, who then said a few words. He spends only in Italian and French. He had a short conversation in the latter language with the priest, some of the men on whom we could distinctly hear. They spoke of their intended mission; and he replied with great earnestness, as if he had in his position less than in their successful performance.

THE POPE IS SMALL AND FRAIL IN FRONT, with the vibrant and most blanched-looking complexion it is possible to conceive. One could scarcely imagine him able to go through the prolonged fatigue entailed by his position, and yet he is stated to do it over him. His manner is most gracious and pleasing, and his expression of countenance is benevolent. He was dressed in a white cassock and white cap, white shoes and white stockings embroidered with a cross; a white silk sash, with gold-fringed ends, and a white cape. A large cross of gold and emeralds was the only spot of color in the dress. The Pontifical ring, which is the etiquette to kiss, was especially opaque. It, and opposite to have the hand of St. Peter's set upon it. A dignitary carried his scarlet cloak; and another, the large hat of the same color, lined in gold and edged with gold cord. He remained a few minutes in the centre of our group, which appeared to be the last in the assembly. Then, turning round to face the gathering, he rose the O'Connell entering, and dressed the scene in the name of the Trinity. The whole of the persons present, priests and attendants, knelt to receive the benediction. Then closed the ceremony.

Immediately thereafter, the cloak was placed upon the shoulders by the official who carried it to and then, having been covered by the hat in the manner, he disappeared through the door opposite to that which he entered, in the retinue following. The audience was at an end. We retreated by a lower part of the Cortile an chosen Maria, which we descended, much pleased and delighted with the Papal Court, as we seemed to a Reception at the Vatican.

Highly Recommend.

The youthful color and a rich lustre are restored to faded or gray hair by the use of Parker's Hair Balsam, a harmless and elegant toilet preparation for perfume and purity.

Ask Them.

Some remarkable cures have been effected by Smith's Ginger Tonic. Several of San Francisco's prominent families have been cured of Cholera Morbus, Dysentery, Diarrhoea, Nervous Debility, Malarial Disease, and the best household remedy. [ad.]

THE WEEK'S NEWS

—FROM—

IRELAND.

STRIKE OF THE DUBLIN POLICE.

Exciting Scenes in the Metropolis.

Strike of the Dublin Police.

DUBLIN, Sept. 1.—Over three hundred of the Metropolitan Police have been dismissed. It is expected that hundred will resign. There great excitement in the city. All the police stations are occupied by strong guards of military. The police who were dismissed are all those who attended the meeting of delegates held last night, which was addressed by Captain Talbot, and which, it is stated, was strongly determined. The dismissals in all numbers 364. Captain Talbot announced the dismissals, the police being paraded in the Castle yard for that purpose. It said there will be a general strike to-night. Detachments of the Sixteenth Rifles, each accompanied by a military magistrate, occupy every police station. A proclamation has been widely posted, declaring that the services of special constables are necessary, and calling on all loyal subjects to come forward and undertake that duty. The proclamation justifies the dismissals, pointing to the disobedience of the men, who were forbidden to hold a meeting. It is signed by E. G. Hamilton, and ends with the words "God save the Queen." On hearing of the dismissals, all the men left their posts, some of them not waiting even to take off their uniforms. The utmost confusion prevailed. Many of the men said they would not do duty until their colleagues were reinstated.

Soldiers and Citizens on Duty.

A large detachment of the Rifles arrived at Kingstown from Dublin, and towards evening took possession of the police barracks there. Of the police there, numbering 1,175, some 364 members have been dismissed and 650 declined further duty. Detachments of troops have taken

Poetry.

[FOR THE MONITOR.]

"THE CLADDAGH MAN'S DAUGHTER."

BY C. J. COBEN.

As the sun was setting on the Atlantic's broad bosom,
And Galway's bright bay lay beneath its wide dome,
There appeared on the scene, faintly and dim,
A noble rigged ship bound for home.

Friends were awaiting fresh news from the storm's wild shriek and the blue surging wave;
But where was the heart more warmly did burn,
Than that of the humble Claddagh man's daughter.

Soon youth's early dawn she cherished a love,
Which neither had told the matter took in that lady that's above there at the altar now,
Who she was only a poor Irish orphan
'bout no one knows who she belonged to.
an' cried the same as if she was her own born baby. An' I believe the same child was the cause of bringing great thoughts on
Mrs. Dallon and her family, but I've a very bad memory of late. Do you recollect it,
Mrs. Dillane?

"Of course I recollect it," replied Mrs. Dillane; "wasn't my mother and Dick's father the second and third cousins, God rest all the poor souls!" Here the last speaker, having taken a few preliminary pinches of snuff, considerately herself very willingly the narrator of the following facts, which I preter in my own words—as Dick's father
Dillane's powers as a story teller:

About seventeen years ago Richard Dalton was doing industriously in a little place of ground some three or four miles distant from the little church where to-day he stands a happy, wealthy bridegroom. It was early spring; and, as he labored at his potato planting, his attention was attracted to a funeral train that originated from one
Gipsy women on the p..ble road beyond.
One of the women was accompanied by a pretty flaxen-haired child of about five years. The one of the combatants, being overtaken in the fight, rushed to the cottage,
in which were carried some articles necessary for embalming, and, snipping off a pair of tongs, struck the other a blow on the head which protested her apparently lifeless.
The wounded sorceress, seeing the crime she had committed, and believing herself a murderess, fled across the fields, abandoning the child in her sagacious to secure safety
by precipitate flight.

Richard was down on the scene, and, in company with a few others, had the injured party removed to his house, where, not long after, she was transferred to the hospital of the neighboring town. She had fractures caused by the blow, and the consequent look-jaw, she never recovered.

The deceased girl had taken to shape by Richard's mother and adopted into the limited family circle, which included only one other member—namely, Katie Dalton, Richard's only sister.

They called the child Maggie, and soon came to look upon her as one of themselves, one whose presence was indispensable to the happiness of the household. If
She never claimed by the supposed Gipsy woman, she fared kindly and tenderly, and, as she grew in years, the resemblance to the mother of the child lived honest and charitable, as his father and mother before him did. An' do you know what I think!—that he's good enough for her. He's the dacent father and mother's child, that never sint away a beggar
from the door without a night's lodging, an' that ever sat down to dinner without a bite or a sup with them that wanted it.
An' I think 'tis the will o' God to reward him one for it. An the poor soul's that are gone, the heavens be their bed! (God will be good to them, too—his father and mother
I mean."

"Yes'ye right, Mrs. Dillane, 'tis we that don't grudge the poor boy his good luck;
chinee in the first speaker.

"An' he isn't so poor, nayther," continues Mrs. Dillane; "for he minded himself in America an' made lots o' money, my dear."

"Well," resumes Mrs. Moloney, "I'll never forget how his mother took in that lady that's above there at the altar now,
who she was only a poor Irish orphan
'bout no one knows who she belonged to.
an' cried the same as if she was her own born baby. An' I believe the same child was the cause of bringing great thoughts on
Mrs. Dallon and her family, but I've a very bad memory of late. Do you recollect it,
Mrs. Dillane?

"Of course I recollect it," replied Mrs.
Dillane; "wasn't my mother and Dick's father the second and third cousins, God rest all the poor souls!" Here the last speaker, having taken a few preliminary pinches of snuff, considerately herself very willingly the narrator of the following facts, which I preter in my own words—as Dick's father deference to Mrs. Dillane's powers as a story teller:

About seventeen years ago Richard Dalton was doing industriously in a little place of ground some three or four miles distant from the little church where to-day he stands a happy, wealthy bridegroom. It was early spring; and, as he labored at his potato planting, his attention was attracted to a funeral train that originated from one
Gipsy women on the p..ble road beyond.
One of the women was accompanied by a pretty flaxen-haired child of about five years. The one of the combatants, being overtaken in the fight, rushed to the cottage,
in which were carried some articles necessary
for embalming, and, snipping off a pair of tongs, struck the other a blow on the head
which protested her apparently lifeless.
The wounded sorceress, seeing the crime she had committed, and believing herself a murderess, fled across the fields, abandoning the child in her sagacious to secure safety
by precipitate flight.

Richard was down on the scene, and, in company with a few others, had the injured party removed to his house, where, not long after, she was transferred to the hospital of the neighboring town. She had fractures caused by the blow, and the consequent look-jaw, she never recovered.

The deceased girl had taken to shape by Richard's mother and adopted into the limited family circle, which included only one other member—namely, Katie Dalton, Rich-
ard's only sister.

They called the child Maggie, and soon came to look upon her as one of themselves, one whose presence was indispensable to the happiness of the household. If
She never claimed by the supposed Gipsy women, she fared kindly and tenderly, and, as she grew in years, the resemblance to the mother of the child lived honest and charitable, as his father and mother before him did. An' do you know what I think!—that he's good enough for her. He's the dacent father and mother's child, that never sint away a beggar
from the door without a night's lodging, an' that ever sat down to dinner without
a bite or a sup with them that wanted it.
An' I think 'tis the will o' God to reward him one for it. An the poor souls

THE MONITOR.
TWENTY-FIVE YEARS OF PUBLICATION.
WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 13, 1882.

Crime in Ireland and Elsewhere.

There are a great many people in this land who are very willing to "cast the first stone" at the Irish people on account of their turbulent disposition, but who seem to be utterly oblivious to the fact that there are more murders committed annually in this single State of California, with its comparatively small population, than there is in all Ireland with its six millions of people. Even in a paragraph in a journal as the New York Tribune was forced recently to admit that "the increase of crime in all parts of the country is appalling," still our public school houses are multiplying rapidly, new seats are inaugurated almost daily, revivalists and rosiers of every shade of sectarianism are pounding and praying with an amount of vim unknown to ordinary mortals. Yet, notwithstanding all these efforts of misguided zeal, it is candidly admitted by all honest people, that society is more corrupt, more infidel, more dishonest, more lawless, and of consequence more than it was five, ten, fifteen or twenty years ago. And why is this? The answer is simple. Man, in their pride of heart, have rebelled against God, have renounced His religion, and are frantically engaged in the maddening race towards hell! Listen to this revelation, made by the Tribune, and then reflect upon the position of the great mass of the people in this so-called "land of liberty and enlightenment:" "Close at home," says the Tribune, "there has been a murder in every other suburb; street cars have been invaded by bands of drunken marauders and the passengers beaten and robbed, and even in Brooklyn, City of Churches, wives have been beaten on the head with family Bibles."

These atrocities are matters of almost daily occurrence, but, as "familiarity breeds contempt," people seem not to wonder at their recital in the columns of the daily press. New York, in this respect, is neither worse nor better than any other city in the Union, and if Christ should only have a revelation of the shocking state of sin in which modern society is steeped, there would be a religious revival that would shake the nations and alarm the very fiends in hell. But it is not alone in New York that such scenes transpire or that sin is rampant, because the Lexicographer, of England, has recently made the startling admission that "there are in the city of London alone over 16,000 women who have murdered their own offspring" and, according to Dr. Attewood, the same species of murder is "common in Manchester, and Manchester is no worse in this respect than many of the other manufacturing towns of England." Yet England is what that class of people, known as Anglo-Americans, call "our mother country;" she is regarded as a "great Christian land," but the fearful amount of crime hidden beneath the above facts shows to what a fearful state of depravity society has manifested in that part of this earthly paradise.

And what of California? Are the people here any purer or more pious than the population of Boston or Philadelphia, or Cincinnati? Alas! we are compelled to admit that the same sins are shared by society here. Belasbaw's domain has no geographical limit in this! "enlightened" age. Satan is in society circles every where, as may be learned by the almost daily reports of murders, robberies, drunkenness and debauchery of the darkest hue which the press places before its readers. And wherein lies the remedy for all this? We must candidly and earnestly confess that outside the pale of the Catholic Church we see no means of burying the baldfaced career of the human towards hell. They will not hearken to the voice of God, they will not heed the exhortations of His law into a thousand fragments, and in their wrath, and pride, and lust, and love for more, they have given the worship due to God alone to the idol of their own infidel brains. Religion, honesty, morality, chastity, and all the other virtues that follow in the train of supernatural wisdom, have been exiled from the earth and the non-Catholic world has given itself, body and soul, to the service of Satan. Cannot Catholics be warned by the devil-worship they witness around them? Do they not know that if they join in this catastrophe of sin they are doubly guilty, because Almighty God has granted them the grace of the true faith which others grope in the darkness of error.

The remedy, then, for much of the corruption, misery and sin that abounds can be found for Catholics in the more fervent practice of their faith. Prayer, we are taught by our Holy Mother, is the shield which saves the soul from sin, and unless we have recourse to the Sacraments and the saving graces of our holy faith, we, too, will eventually suffer in the vengeance which Almighty God will visit upon those who wilfully and continuously violate His laws and trample the behests of His Commandments under their feet. In this respect the Catholic portion of the community have a double duty to perform. They must pray not only for themselves, but also earnestly plead for the conversion of others, and if the prayers of an humble heart move but a single soul, how sublime the reward which God will grant to the happy Catholic who thus becomes such a glorious victory over sin by the all-powerful auxiliary of the minister-praying prayer.

Twenty Between French and Italians.

TURIN, Sept. 11.—There is great excitement in the Italian colony in consequence of an Italian being wounded by the French gendarmes at Ventimiglia. The gendarmes fired on two young Italians who were crossing a French ground yesterday.

ROME, Sept. 11.—The French Ambassador has demanded the recall of the French consul at Ventimiglia, and has demanded the dismissal of the prefect of Porto Maurizio, who is responsible for the shameful relations between the two countries.

"No Irish-Americans Need Apply."

The most prominent Republican paper in this city has openly avowed its desire to drive the Irish-American element out of the Republican party, and it now boasts that "some of the Pope's Irish were in the Convention, in the lobby, or in the candidacy." This is, indeed, an event of which every Irishman in the State may will feel proud! They proved, by their absence, that they could never become the monkeys to take the chestnuts out of the fire for the Republican monopolists! They proved, by their absence, that they are not the material to be run by ringsters or to associate with those political wire-workers who are prepared to prostitute themselves for the paltry promises of perjured Philippamains. No! thank Heaven there was no Irishman who could so stultify himself as to be found among the followers squad of anti-Catholic bigots whose chief mouth-piece advocates the assassination of priests and the burning of Catholic churches!

"No Irish need apply," says the chief Republican organ, and no Irish have applied. "We want no Irish votes," shouts the organ again, and we sincerely hope the wish of the principal organ may be so fully gratified in this respect that it will have nothing to complain of! It is very poor generalship to open a political fight by telling ten thousand voters that you do not want them to vote your ticket, yet this is precisely what the Republican organ has said, and even at this early stage we are happy to be able to assure the leading Republican crowd, who got into the Convention through a country proxy, that we know of many a hundred Democrats, and the descendants of Irishmen, who have regularly voted the Republican ticket since the memorable outbreak of our Civil War, but who, this year, will show their manhood by voting solid against the party that permits its adherents to be so wantonly insulted by the Knownothing yell that "No Irish need apply." If this information can add a single symptom of pleasure to the crank that controls the chief Republican organ, he is welcome to it, but when the election returns reveal the election of every candidate on the Democratic ticket, the Republican party can console itself with the reflection that at least one of the means which led to the great Republican Waterloo defeat was the foolery of an important leader in the party whose bosom of war is: "We want no Irishman, nor the descendants of Irishmen, to vote with the Republican party of California."

England's Defeat in Egypt.

The rosetta tint with which the cablegrams from Egypt are colored would lead us to believe that the English troops were killing off Arabs by dozens at the rate of a thousand a day, and that the only cause of the Egyptians not being annihilated altogether was in consequence of the English soldiers not being fleet enough to catch them! But when we come to analyze the cablegrams the whole matter assumes an entirely different aspect, and when we subsequently peruse the letters of correspondents with the English army, we perceive at once that England, and not Egypt, has been the greatest sufferer in all the conflicts which have taken place thus far. Even the English journals are beginning to admit that the war in Egypt promises to be for more serious than the mere skirmish which General Wolseley made so light of when he left London with the promise of returning thence a victor before September 15th. On this point an English paper says:

"Even military observers find it difficult to comprehend the plans of the Commander when they are announced simultaneously as definite and decisive, and when a later dispatch informs us that the British position at Kassassin is so formidable that it is hoped Arabi may test his strength against it, the reader's mystification is complete. The reports regarding the health of the troops are equally contradictory. Wolseley says that the health of the troops at the front is good, notwithstanding the unhealthiness of the place, but over the hospitals and sending away the wounded and sick. Yet some accounts speak of the prevalence of diarrhœa, dysentery and sunstroke, while a few days ago Sir Edward, by a statement that Wolseley's forces on the Rapidi numbered about 5,000 men. One day the Highland Brigade is officially reported as moving rapidly to the front, and next an official message says it will remain about for the present to furnish working parties at Ismailia. The most pested delay is the advance, the attempts to cut and the weakening of the army by casualties and sickness, and the contradictory character of official reports, are every moment more perplexing here, and the belief is becoming general that the campaign is drifting into a position of danger the time is confidently set by Wolseley for its completion. The Egyptians have now received the guarantee of their positions from which the British had driven them."

Monday's papers contain accounts of "another great victory" for the English, in which the public is let into the important secret that "four of Arabi's officers had surrendered," but we are not told that these men are very likely spies sent to the English camp in order to learn all they can, and then return to the ranks of their own people. It is evident, also, that the British troops are suffering fearfully from the climate, as, among yesterday's dispatches we read that a Highland Brigade marched only ten miles in a day, the men dying along the way through exhaustion, no less than two hundred of them retiring from the ranks on the march.

If we are to believe the dispatches, it would appear that in Europe they are agitating the formation of an Irish contingent to help Arabi in defending his land from the Saxon invader. We scarcely credit the rumor, as we give the dispatch for what it is worth, but it cannot be denied that there are thousands of Irishmen both in Europe, America, and in every portion of the globe, who are prepared to seize on opportunity to meet England on the tented field, and who are willing to fight under any flag so long as their enemies money is in front of them. Hence the following cablegram may put a new phase on affairs in Egypt:

NEW YORK, September 10.—The Sun's Paris cablegram says the report very circulated in the street that certain leading members of the Irish National party, with a view to arranging for the enlistment of a number of Irish officers in the service of the Egyptian insurgents, seem to have some foundation in fact. Careful inquiries among the Irish Nationalists here, including several gentlemen prominent in the councils of the land League, show clearly that such a movement has at least been considered, and also that several hundred Irish soldiers of established military reputation have offered their services. It is said that the preliminaries have already been so far advanced that the officers have been selected for the organization of a brigade, and although the Irish leaders are very reticent, enough has been learned to justify the conclusion that the project is seriously entertained, upon the theory that it is desirable to strike at England wherever, whenever, and in whatever way opportunity may offer. The affair is still shrouded in secrecy, but its development is likely to be rapid, and it will cause little surprise to the initiated. Even in the absence of any direct aid and encouragement from the Land League or Nationalist organizations, it is known that many able officers of Irish birth or Irish descent, who have seen service in the armies of adventurers from other countries, have organized and manage of drawing their swords under the standard of Arabi should be caused by contains a firm front to the British forces for a few weeks longer. Parts and other equitable certain dozens of veteran Irish officers, some of them fretting and restless in the inaction of civil life, who would have gone to the front before now but that they thought Arabi a traitor instead of the man or material to make a stubborn resistance.

Shall We Depart from the Wisdom of Washington?

No purer patriot ever lived than George Washington. As a citizen, a statesman, and a soldier, he was without a peer, and if there any spell cast upon earth let in the American people they will hearken to his words of warning, as set forth in his Farewell Address, rather than listen to the syren song of modern writers, of whom it may well be, said that they only disturb old customs to destroy order and create chaos.

We were forcibly reminded of the realism spirit of the day when perusing an article in the North American Review, in which a not celebrated writer sets forth the economical idea that it would be a blessing to the ten hundred years ago to convert the world, in now reduced to a pitiable struggle for simple existence, on the ground of its former conquests." Yet, appalling as this fate may seem to a Methodist, it is, nevertheless, the inevitable fate of all erroneous systems of religion. They are ushered into the world with a great flourish of trumpets as a Protestant panacea for opening the gates of Paradise to all people, good, bad and indifferent. They grow and prosper for a period, then they begin to experience the dry rot of dissolution. Decay begins at the root of error, and thus the lamp of error becomes extinguished by the wisdom-wind of truth. Far more powerful forms of error than Methodism have gone over the cataract of Christianity in the past. What has become of Arianism that shook the very foundations of Christendom? Where are the Nestorians, the Eutychians, the Monophysites, the Pelagians, the Manichæans, and the whole swarm of howling heretics by whom the Church of God has been assailed in the past. They strutted their brief hour upon the stage of time, they scourged the spouse of Christ, they mocked her on her mission as she carried the Cross through the years of her Calvary, but when they had all but accomplished their hellish work, the Hand of God came to the rescue of his religion and hurled the heresy into the hell He has prepared for the devil and his angels. Heresy is merely the result of pride, passion and falsehood; it cannot exist, except in darkness, and when it does it is doomed to the lowest scale of intelligence. The election of General Rosecrans—and he will be elected if the votes of the people are not tampered with—will leave the question of public school education precisely where it is at present—in the hands of the School Directors, who, generally speaking, are men of sense and the financial improvement of their cousins and their uncles and their aunts." Nobody has ever been crazy enough in this country to advocate a State church or any other of the absurd ideas projected by the Post. Hence, it will be clear to the intelligent reader that the cyclone now hurled into the campaign specially for the purpose of creating a false issue, and thereby defeating a gallant soldier who has fought and bled for his country, and who only offence is that he is a convert to the Catholic faith. And this is a crime in free America! Actually a crime in a land where we boast of freedom of conscience, and prattle like parrots about the "God-given right of every man to worship God according to the dictates of his conscience." But when election time comes, and a candidate who is a Catholic is presented for the suffrage of his fellow-citizens, then, alas! the "God-given right" is made the contemptible spirit of sectarian spleen which bell-engendered hate has left ex the heritage of bigotry and political parasites. No! we do not believe that the people of this country, and, with all the other man-made creeds ever invented, will ever be so blind as never dies. His Church never decays. The waves of worldly opposition may seem to almost submerge it without, corruption and contention may seem almost to feed it asunder within, but from the midst of the storm there arises a Voice which says: "Peace, be still!" And the bark of Peter continues her voyage in his peaceful water which will sustain her until every soul who trusts in God and has the faith of His Church will arrive at the haven of happiness promised all good and faithful servants of God.

The Sunday Law Sham.

The main stockholders and officers in the Railroad corporations are Republicans whose platform professes, first last that the poor working classes might be deprived of the rest necessary for the Sabbath. Yet these same people run regular trains, excursions and pleasure trips on Sunday! Those same very strict Sabbatarians not only run their much ease and jerry boats (for which they could be done on a week day just as well. We read in Monday's Chronicle that "sixty painters were at work yesterday (Sunday) painting the interior of the palatial steamer Queen of the Pacific." No doubt the owners of this steamer think it entirely wrong that poorer people should follow the example set them by the solons of the land and not "keep the holy Sabbath Day" because those to whom they look for example of exemplary lives thus wantonly desecrate a day they pretend to reverence, at least so far as political promises can go, and these are like piecrust—made only to be broken.

Religion, Politics, and Public School Education.

It is one of the anomalies of the secular press that while those papers which wear the Republican collar think it is their duty to abuse the Catholic Church and to belie its members, these journals also cry out most lustily against any copartnership between religion and politics! An article in the issue of Thursday last, partook of this very characteristic, and it contained some the truth as to declare that if General Rosecrans was elected next November, the public school system of California "will have sustained a damaging blow."

What a rant nonsense. But then we must expect just such nonsensical remarks from partisan journals during these piping times of political warfare. Besides, Gen. Rosecrans is a hard man to beat, and Paul Neumann is a hard candidate to elect, so that they are very uneasy and dubious! reason will be resorted to in order to defeat the valorous veteran and to elect a tool of monopoly, but we sincerely hope he may never have a chance to misrepresent the people of this district in Congress.

The issue attempted to be made regarding the public schools is the most absurd proposition that ever emanated from a political crank. There is no opposition, whatever, to public education in California; on the contrary, the very schools, academies and colleges that are supported by the Catholics, the Episcopalians, the Methodists, and other religious bodies, are so much means of lessening the taxation required to keep up the fearful drafts made by the public School Directors upon the public treasury. Yet, the Republican Post works itself up to such a pitch as to ask the silly questions it propounds, the only answer it deserves is the pity of contempt for its low estimate of the intelligence of the voters of the First Congressional District. Just conceive the force of imagination which the Post required in order to evolve from the depth of its profundity those absurd questions:

"Shall our public school system be destroyed? Is California going to enter religious organizations indirectly by voting public money to back the religious tenets of the Christian churches or parochial and denominational schools? Are we to have a Church party in this State similar to that of Kearney? Is the law to be used for the purpose of paralyzing the industrial and material interests in all ages by the rivalry of competing sects? Are the Catholics going to grow at the expense of each other; and is the condition of obtaining free education for the children of the poor dispensed to be made contingent upon their parents professing adherence to one or other form of religion? These are pregnant questions, and they are directly made by the Democratic Congressional nomination made by the Democratic party, and by the Democratic candidate for Congress in his nomination. The election of Gen. Rosecrans would be a blow at our public school system, effectively. Paul Neumann's election will give a negative reply to each and all of them."

This kind of shallow subterfuge is only worthy ward politicians of the worst type, and it is to be regretted that a journal of the lowest scale of intelligence. The election of General Rosecrans—and he will be elected if the votes of the people are not tampered with—will leave the question of public school education precisely where it is at present—in the hands of the School Directors, who, generally speaking, are men of sense and the financial improvement of their cousins and their uncles and their aunts." Nobody has ever been crazy enough in this country to advocate a State church or any other of the absurd ideas projected by the Post. Hence, it will be clear to the intelligent reader that the cyclone now hurled into the campaign specially for the purpose of creating a false issue, and thereby defeating a gallant soldier who has fought and bled for his country, and who only offence is that he is a convert to the Catholic faith. And this is a crime in free America! Actually a crime in a land where we boast of freedom of conscience, and prattle like parrots about the "God-given right of every man to worship God according to the dictates of his conscience." But when election time comes, and a candidate who is a Catholic is presented for the suffrage of his fellow-citizens, then, alas! the "God-given right" is made the contemptible spirit of sectarian spleen which bell-engendered hate has left ex the heritage of bigotry and political parasites. No! we do not believe that the people of San Francisco, and, with all the other man-made creeds ever invented, will ever be so blind as never dies. His Church never decays. The waves of worldly opposition may seem to almost submerge it without, corruption and contention may seem almost to feed it asunder within, but from the midst of the storm there arises a Voice which says: "Peace, be still!" And the bark of Peter continues her voyage in his peaceful water which will sustain her until every soul who trusts in God and has the faith of His Church will arrive at the haven of happiness promised all good and faithful servants of God.

How Paul Neumann was Placed in Nomination.

The Monitor is safe in saying that no candidate was ever placed more honestly before the people than Gen. William S. Rosecrans. In his case, particularly, the office sought the man; he was absent from the State when the Convention met, the friends of other candidates worked against him—yet such was the record he had made for himself as a citizen, a soldier, and a statesman, that he was nominated by a large majority, purely because he was a representative man whom any constituency might feel proud of.

Now, let us see by what dark, devious and dirty ways we brought about the nomination of Paul Neumann, the nominee of the Republican ringsters, who is General Rosecrans' opponent in the political race for the votes of the people. The facts in this case are deserving the deep condemnation of every citizen—regardless of political bias—who desires to see politics purified of the rotten degradation with which parties are tainted. Every anti-monopolist should vote against Paul Neumann; every citizen who desires that representative shall not wear the collar of corporations, should vote against Paul Neumann; every citizen who desires to see the bargain between the capitalist and his political rapper broken in twain, should vote against Paul Neumann. In fine, any votes cast for Paul Neumann will be votes cast for the perpetuation of slavery that will drag this nation down into the last ditch of destruction. Just read the following facts, not published as campaign squibs by a Democratic organ, but published by a Republican organ, through a sense of duty. It is well known to all our readers that the Chronicle, of this city, is a Republican organ of the most ultra type, and here is the history of Paul Neumann's nomination, as given in a partisan journal of his own party; and all who read it will be convinced that it will be to the interest of the entire community that Paul Neumann should be badly beaten at the ballot-box:

"The method of the nomination of Paul Neumann and the man must be alike repugnant in every place included within the Fifth Congressional District. He has not been chosen to represent the Republican party of the district in the halls of Congress, but, if elected, will go there as the avowed advocate of an infamous conspiracy. There is no secret about this. John D. Spreckels, the sugar king, is the real and acknowledged author of the delegation in one district, and did all in a power to defeat the nomination of Gen. Rosecrans in other districts to support Neumann. In this city he is reported to have said that he had the right one to secure the nomination of Paul Neumann, and he would see that he was not disappointed, although he was indifferent to any other issue in the campaign.

"The method of the nomination of Paul Neumann and the man must be alike repugnant in every place included within the First

Farm and Home.

Hints to Parents.

In spite of the modern whims of equality, the government of a family must be absolute; mild, not tyrannical. The laws of nature and the voice of reason have declared the dependence of the child upon the parent. The weakness of youth must be repressed by the hand of experience. Parental tenderness is too apt to degenerate into parental weakness. "If you please, child," and "Will you dear?" are soon answered with "No, I won't." The reins of government should always be gently drawn; not switched, like a curb bridle at some time, and dangled loose at another. Uniformity in points produces uniformity in children. To-day is a minute, and to-morrow, or let the subject go unpraised, for the same crime, or another, cannot fail to injure the force of parental authority. Consider before you threaten; and then be so good as your word. "I will whip you, if you don't mind me," says the parent in a passion. "I am not afraid of it," says the child. The present fine toward it is a paroxysm of rage; the child prefers fight to broken bones. "You may go now, but you shall have your punishment with interest the next time you do so." "I don't believe that," thinks the child. It is experience that gives the parent the lie. "Bad," say you, "whips and rods were the scourges of the dark ages; the present age is more enlightened; in it law is reason, and authority is influence." Because of that reason which makes your child disposition, and that stiffness which makes obstinate.

There is such a thing as the rod of reproof; and it is certain that, in some heinous cases, arguments produce a better effect than corporal punishment. Let children be properly admonished, in case of disobedience; if ineffectual try the harsher method. Never begin to correct till your anger has subided; if you do, your authority over the offender is at an end. Let your commands be reasonable. Never deliver them in a passion as though you were already disobeyed; nor with a timid, distrustful tone, as if you suspected your own authority. Remember that nothing is directly to be opposed of weighty reasoning. It is the doing grounds of good government. Never let it be heard under your roof, unless you intend your house should be a nursery of faction, which may, at some future time, rise its hydra head, not only against you, but in opposition to the parents and guardians of your country. Patriotism, as well as charity, begins at home. Let the voice of concord be heard in your family; it will charm your domestics to a love of order.

To Preserve Grapes.

Pick the clusters carefully, remove those that are gnaw or blown by insects or blasted, and to them be a pale about ten feet long, and so firm as not to bend much beneath the weight. Hang the poles with the clusters suspended in a loft or chamber where there is free circulation, and there let them remain till freezing weather, looking over them occasionally and removing those that have begun to decay. Then pack in dry sawdust, in dry, shelter between, and stow in a cool, dry cellar. The French often keep them a number of months by dipping the ends in a thick whitewash, which in drying covers stem and fruit with a thin white crust and excludes the air.

Have You a Scrap Book?

Every farmer should keep a book in which to paste agricultural scraps. Every one in reading a paper will see a number of things he will wish to remember. He will perhaps see suggestions the value of which he will desire to test, or hints which he will want to be governed by on future occasions, and yet, after reading the paper he will not have time to read it over, perhaps never see it again. In such a case all the valuable extracts will be lost. To prevent such a loss, every reader should get a book for the purpose and articles as he desires to preserve and remember, and paste them in a scrap book. Such a book at the end of a year or two will be very interesting and valuable.

The Little Parlor Table.

The table for the parlor which is the fancy of the hour, and which is pretty enough to be popular for a long time and to be more than a passing fancy, is made of any kind of well-seasoned wood. It may have a square or diamond-shaped top; it has round legs, but on each corner of them are brackets, and that is joined to them one leg to the other. A beautiful covering for one is dark green velvet; this is tacked down on the under side. If economy is no object, pretty silk or satin may be put on and made quite full. The legs are wound with alternate bands of the velvet and of contrast satin ribbon; the ribbon is tied in a bow at each joint. The brackets are bound with the velvet alone. The round of which the table is made is somewhat expensive to view. This is a handsome table to stand in a bay-window and to hold a small piece of statuary.

The color of the velvet must, of course, be in accord with the general tone of the parlor, but the shades of olive or popular moss are pretty with almost any thing. There is a richness about the green of the present day which brighter colors do not possess.

A Beautiful Idea.

In the mountains of Tyrol it is the custom of the women and children to cover out when it is bleak and cold, their husbands, fathers and brothers answer them from the piles on their native hills. On the shores of the Adriatic such a custom prevails. There the wives of fishermen come when the boats return and sing a melody. After singing the first stanza they listen awhile for an answer; when no answer is heard and continue to sing and listen till the well-sing ceases, and the women go to their homes, telling that the loved one is almost home. How great is the very fisherman in the darkest gulfed around him, and hear the songs of the loved ones at home that sing to their love, and how they must strengthen and encourage the hearts that tread together their dwellings by the sea! Truly, it is among the lovely in life that we find some of the most beautiful customs yet in practice.

Medical Mentions—Scrofula, commonly supposed, Fever Sores, Scald Head and Ulcerated Sore Throat, Ulcers, Boils, Tumors, Old Sores, Piles, Fistula, Gout, Rheumatism, Salt Rheum, Blotches, Spots, Pimples, Pustules, Blains, Sores and Scurfy Eruptions of the Skin, Scarlet Fever, Erysipelas, Scald Head, Ringworm, Mercurial Disease, Diseases of the Liver, Kidneys and Bladder, are all speedily cured by the use of Dr. McLean's Celebrated Liver and Kidney Balsam.

A Gentleman's Testimony.

Dr. McLean—Dear Sir: I have been afflicted with a severe humor for nearly two years, which has resisted the action of many medicines. I have taken your Balsam but a short time, and it has proved to be the best medicine I have ever taken. Yours, etc., JOHN T. LEWIS, Cashier Bank of Commerce, St. Louis.

Dr. McLean—Dear Sir: I have been troubled with a humor for about

STRIKING CHANGES IN IRELAND.

[CONCLUDED FROM FIRST PAGE.]

about Gladstone's last promise, or Sexton's last speech, or Healy's latest joke. The fact is, the Irish people are beginning to be a reading people, and, as Mr. Medill, the editor of the Chicago Tribune, said to me once, "You can no more keep down an educated people than you can hold an electric eel in your hand." The young Irishmen of whom I met in Manchester had the sense to tell us the Bishop. The Irish in England, he said, since this agitation began have read newspapers with an eagerness they never displayed before; have thus become more intelligent and self-respecting, and dress better than they used to do.

WILLIAM O'BRIEN.

From Manchester I proceeded to Dublin last Monday, and for the next two days took my share in the procession, the dinner given by the Mayor of Cork, and the presentation of the freedom of the city to Messrs. Parnell and Dillon. I was just going into the City Hall to witness the latter ceremony when I struck against William O'Brien. As this is a gentleman who has of course played a prominent part in Irish politics and is destined in the near future to become still more prominent, I will just pause to say a word or two about him. A couple of years ago he was the chief special correspondent of the Freeman's Journal, and he wrote some graphic and sparkling articles on the famine districts, which were among the few things to awaken the public attention to the appalling prospect of wholesale starvation in 1879. Then the Land League convened in the line of starting the Land League organ, United Ireland. Mr. Parnell thought of Mr. O'Brien, and that gentleman was accordingly appointed editor. The new journal soon became a power, with the result that Mr. O'Brien though his aged mother was dying at the time—was sent by Mr. Forster to Kilmainham Prison, and there was kept for six months. He is now the candidate for Mallow, his native town, which, at the present moment is represented by a leading member of the Ministerial Administration—the Attorney-General for Ireland. O'Brien is a tall, fine, delicate-looking man, who has had the sentimentality to run abroad to milder climes from the severity of British winters; but he has a force and burning zeal within his frail frame; speaks and writes with the fluency—in the latter, at the embodiment of the literary revolution.

THE WEEK'S NEWS —FROM— IRELAND.

FRAYFUL MASSACRE FEAR CONG.

A fearful crime has been committed in Cloghera, Co. Tyrone, the night before last, by a party from the dwelling of a farmer named Quigley, and left at the door of the house, the dead bodies of two men—Joyce, the farmer, who was a Catholic, and Kelly, a Protestant. The two others, who had come to Quigley's on the same errand, escaped with the loss of their hats, which they left behind them in their hurry. All the parties concerned in the affair are said to be Protestants. Cloghera, a village in Monaghan, is a place of some importance, and is close to an estate of Lord Rossmore, which comprises a position on the right hand side of the lake. Through this glass of light there descended a shower of stars which surrounded the Virgin's head. The statue then assumed an animated appearance—the eyes rolled from side to side, the lips moved as if in the act of speaking; the arms were raised and the hands were clasped, as if in the attitude of blessing the people present. These appearances were observed by different persons at the same time, who occupied positions distant from each other in the church. A great many others who were present say that they did not observe the manifestations described; but in a brief period the rumor of the appearance spread with rapidity, and crowds of people quickly flocked to the church. About this hour a man in a station for females which had been held in St. Mary's Church had concluded, and the priests finished in the same direction. In about a quarter of an hour from the appearance the people in the church and its appendages—the Chapel yard—numbered about 1,000 persons. The statue was observed to fall backwards into the first floor of the latter but officiated in the church, however, and continued to place the host in Father Murphy, who has been transferred to Donegal, and inquired about state of the people, and the enormous crowds that were coming to the church, decided that it would be better to put a covering over the figure and advise the people to disperse. The intention was carried out, the statue was veiled, the church closed, and the people dispersed. Notwithstanding the large number of persons who visited the place up to the middle of the night, no disturbance of the ordinary kind occurred. Sunday, prayers for Hymns were offered in many Catholic churches in the counties of Limerick and Clare.

DUBLIN, Sep. 11.—In many towns in the west of Ireland business places were closed to-day on account of the seven hos of Hymn.

MORE APPARITIONS IN IRELAND.

Extraordinary Manifestation at Athlone.

ATHLONE, Monday, August 21st.

A sensation in connection with certain appearances in the Franciscan church here, has already visited that which took place some three years ago concerning same the apparitions at the Church of Knock. It appears that, between dark and night fall, on Sunday, after the religious services of the day had concluded, several persons, principally females, remained in the edifice, and while engaged at their devotions observed a strange light in the direction of the statue of the Blessed Virgin, which occupies a position on the right hand side of the altar. Through this glass of light there descended a shower of stars which surrounded the Virgin's head. The status then assumed an animated appearance—the eyes rolled from side to side, the lips moved as if in the act of speaking; the arms were raised and the hands were clasped, as if in the attitude of blessing the people present. These appearances were observed by different persons at the same time, who occupied positions distant from each other in the church. A great many others who were present say that they did not observe the manifestations described; but in a brief period the rumor of the appearance spread with rapidity, and crowds of people quickly flocked to the church. About this hour

Poetry.

(FOR THE MONITOR.)

THE ARMS.

They laid my babe upon my breast,
And pressed her cool lips upon—
And told, oh mother! like and then
This fair gift from the skies!
I built to him the purest face
And both the false claims;
And held with grateful, happy love,
My last born in my arms.

I sensed him, for the Queen of Heaven—
And said, "O Mother Mild!
I give to Thee my fairest one,
My last born in my arms.

"Richard, darlene, I'm not stay in my mind until I see the priest about this matter, so I'll go down to Patsy Healy and he'll give me a file in the car over to K——. I think it too long to wait until Sunday—today is a Wednesday."

So the good woman went and explained the trouble to the priest.

"You did very right, Mrs. Dalton, not to part with the child, and God will reward you for it. You know our Blessed Lord says, whatever you do to one of those little ones you do it to himself. And, in order that you may not be annoyed any more by Miss Foubery, I'll have the child taken care of by the Sisters, for the present. It makes your good easy, Mrs. Dalton, and my bed been from my mind."

The good mother felt considerably relieved by this interview, and was proceeding homewards, with a light heart, when she met Miss Foubery coming right against her in a phaeton. Her heart sank at the sight, and she almost told herself of a foreboding of coming trouble.

"Where have you been to, Mrs. Dalton," queried Miss Foubery, as the phaeton drove up and stopped.

"I was speakin' to Father McCarthy, Miss," was the reply.

"I know it! I knew it!" shouted the lady in the carriage excitedly. "And your Popish priest is going to take charge of Maggie!"

"Yes, Miss," was the answer of Mrs. Dalton, who never thought of telling a lie.

"That's enough! I knew it! I knew it! You'll suffer for this, Mrs. Dalton, mark my words."

At the conclusion of this threat, spoken in an excited tone, and with menacing gesture, the phaeton dashed off, leaving poor Mrs. Dalton horror-stricken on the road, standing remotely staring after the retreating vehicle. At length she turned round, and with a heavy heart and weary steps continued her homeward journey.

A few months after this, Richard barely escaped being arrested for complicity in the Fenian conspiracy. A friendly member of the constabulary warned him, and he had but just time to hid a hasty farewell to his aged mother when the warrant was made. But the Royal Irish found that the bird had flown. No one believed Richard guilty of conspiracy, but that would not save him, once the informer was brought into requisition. Richard, like many another good and true man, had to fly from the home of his heart and from Ireland. On arriving at New York he obtained employment in an undertaking establishment that was owned by a fellow-countryman. And, after ten years of sharp, energetic application to business, the expatriated Richard—destined to be a lucky one—found himself a hard-working small farmer at home—and acquired a substantial fortune, and has partner in a thriving firm.

Meanwhile, how fared it with the mother and sister at home. Richard's mother, departure was a great blow, to the mother, in particular; as she was at that time her health seemed more precarious daily, until, two years later, she was laid by the side of her sorrowful husband. Mary Dalton, the eldest, was the only one left to cheer the sorrowing mother, for, at the death of her husband, Cal. Fitzgerald, who was now confessed to Mrs. Fitzgerald, with signs of innocent penitence, that, inspired by a spirit of revenge for some wrong, real or imaginary, and also with a view to obtain the reward which would subsequently be offered for its recovery, she had stolen the infant heirlooms of the Fitzgeralds from a merciless nurse, one day that she found the latter asleep on the river bank.

The poor nurse, on waking, rushed wildly up and down, thinking the child had tumbled in and been swept away by the current of the river.

Everywhere Richard went he was warmly greeted and given a hearty mil mille faithe; and particularly at the Fitzgerald house was he most welcome. There he was a constant visitor, and, before many months, with the full approval of Mrs. Fitzgerald, Maggie and he were betrothed.

It was at about this stage that we have seen so many people crowd the streets of the little town of K——, for the tenants of Mrs. Fitzgerald were all invited, and many came on their own responsibility to see the happy couple. It was a day of great rejoicing, and Mrs. Cullane outside the chapel door, they didn't grudge the poor boy his luck"—that they were all very glad of it.

And so they stood before the altar, that sunny morning in July, Richard Fitzgerald and Mary Dalton, the last scion of the old Fitzgerald family, and the last of the Dalton family, the last of the old Fitzgerald family, and the last of the Dalton family, the last of the old Fitzgerald family, and the last of the Dalton family, the last

THE MONITOR.

TWENTY-FOURTH YEAR OF PUBLICATION.

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 20, 1882.

Ireland's Adoption of the American Flag.

If any readers of the MONITOR desire to fully realize the change which has taken place in the sentiments of the Irish people in regard to National independence, they need only peruse the article upon our first page entitled "An Englishman in Ireland." Never, in the history of nations, was a people more united, more determined, more enthusiastic in the hope of National independence, then are the Irish people at present. The sentiment of the people towards their tyrant rulers can be ascertained by the oft-repeated expression which this English writer makes use of when he gives as the cheering intelligence that, although 50,000 Irishmen marched through Dublin during the O'Connell overlaw, and 100,000 people lined the side-walk, "not an English flag was to be seen." The writer next visited the City Hall, in order to witness the ceremony of conferring the freedom of Dublin on Messrs. Parnell and Dillon, yet, even in this temple of metropolitan authority his eyes calmly sought for the blood-red flag of Britain! As he tells us himself, "the hall was gay with green flags. On either side of the statue of O'Connell floated the Stars and Stripes. No British flag was to be seen." These are bright signs preaching the dawn of freedom upon Ireland. Heretofore a portion of the Irish people in the metropolis were awed into submission by the fear of royalty, and they became mere lackeys whose only ambition seemed to be to aspire to virtually settled up the manners of Irish men. But, thank Heaven! they have been educated into the knowledge that disloyalty to England is not dishonor in Ireland, and as they contemptuously cast off Government patronage and open their National exhibition without inviting any royal personage to preside, they feel, for the first time, in Ireland, the British National anthem, "God Save the Queen," is neither welcome to have England assume the position relative to its newly-acquired Egyptian territory. "What are you going to do with it?" And upon the answer to this interrogatory depends the future state of peace or war in Europe. Gladstone's oft-repeated promises, if they are fulfilled, will not satisfy the people of England, who have no desire to be taxed to carry on a frame against a section of the Egyptian people for the mere glory of marching up the hill and down again. In the meantime, Russia is rapidly getting her mentions of war in hardly places for ready use; France and Italy are burnishing up their armor, and if the "signs of the times" point to anything, they designate a determination among the European Powers to prepare for a terrible conflict at no distant day, a war that will dwarf the boasted glory of some European countries, and make England sorry that she ever entered upon the Egyptian imbroglio.

The Mission of A. M. Sullivan.

Our Eastern exchanges predict great success for the mission of A. M. Sullivan throughout the United States. The gentleman arrived in New York last week; and although preparations were made on an extensive scale to give him a grand, public reception, the deputation contain no reference, whatever, thereto. The leaders of the Land League in New York also made arrangements for a lecture on "The Irish Question," by Mr. Sullivan, in the large hall of the Cooper Institute, on last Monday evening, the 18th inst., which was presided over by Mayor Grace, the hall being densely packed by an enthusiastic audience. In the course of his remarks Mr. Sullivan made use of one sentiment, which every groupe thinker with the cause of Ireland should bear constantly in mind, and that is, that if the Irish in this country deserted Ireland, her cause would be hopeless. Then the Irish in America are placed in the van of her army of defenders, and, as ever is the post of honor, so let us not falter in our fealty to Ireland's suffering Erin, until we can the realization of our most fervent hopes triumphantly achieved by the establishment of Ireland's political independence.

P. J. Sew works Mr. Sullivan will be in this State, and we bespeak for him a hearty reception at the hands of the lovers of Ireland, not only on account of his personal worth, but also as the representative of a cause who depend upon their friendship to help them achieve a freedom similar to that which we in this land enjoy. All the funds are being from the following paragraph in the Modoc Journal:

"It seems not that Finley held the proxy of a Mr. John Finnegan, of Boston. This Irish-American disciple of the Irish cause and the Catholic religion had to go hunting out in land from an Irishman and a Catholic for a proxy. How the tide turned! Some years ago, the Irish Catholics of the Convention representing an Irishman in more than one way, had, if they had the power, given his proxy to the worst Christian in Ireland, and, consequently, to the worst Christian in the world. Strange, very strange, indeed!"

We do not quote from the opinion of our contemporary relative to its concern of Mr. Finnegan, who now at once that his character would suffer if he went to Sacramento and became one of the bumpers who flocked around the "Robbers' Roost." Hence he contented the open-palm Finley as the most reliable stool-pigeon for such an occasion. Moreover, we admire the spirit manifested by Mr. John Finnegan, of Boston, who, in giving his seat in the Convention to Finley, carried out the Scriptural injunction, "Let not your left know what your right hand doeth."

The Pre-Historic Footprints at Carson.

The recent discovery of footprints in the sandstone adjacent to the Nevada Penitentiary, at Carson, has monopolized the attention of the scientists of this State for some time. From a very carefully prepared paper read before the Academy of Sciences recently, by Mr. Chas. Drayton Gibbs, C. E., we make the following extract:

The whole subject of the discovery of these footprints of a Pliocene age is of rare interest to science, and a strictly determined accuracy of description is a necessity to the complete understanding of the subject, and to accompany the many elaborate diagrams and drawings prepared by Mr. Gibbs on behalf of the Academy. The quarry, which has been worked for building-stone, to a depth of 12 to 20 feet, has been opened to leave a yard, with an area of about one acre. The walls are composed of alternate layers of sandstone, with seams of clay. The mammoth footprints of the elephas primigenius were seen when roughly measured 21x32 inches in diameter, with an average step of 4 feet 6 inches and a stride of 9 feet. These tracks are going southwards and we pass from eight 110 feet south of the wagon gate to the yard. On July 29th Major William Garratt ran a tunnel into the wall and uncovered two more footprints. Portions of a tusk and molars of a tooth, previously found in the sandstone, resemble those of a mammoth. Eighteen smaller tracks cross the third and fourth tracks of the mammoth. These smaller tracks are lost under the bluff. These are 4 inches long by 3½ inches, shaped like a dog's track, and may have been made by a hyena, or some large animal of that genus. These bear evidence of the animal being on the jump, for unlike the human or mammoth steps which follow in regular order, these present two steps on a side, nearer together than the opposite two, which order is reversed in the succeeding series of steps, one being between inches and the other three feet apart. The tracks are lost in the shore of an ancient lake, as indication of fifteen inches to thirty feet of deposit.

THIRTEEN GIANT FOOTPRINTS

Of a man comes from under the seat wall and uncovered thirteen 13 inches long by 6 inches wide at the ball of the foot, and 6 inches wide at the heel. Major Garratt excavated for us four more, which are as perfect footprints as any previously found. About twenty feet further south are several confused tracks of man and some large animal, and twelve feet further south are of where some large animal had laid down. There are numerous tracks of scaling birds, of which some have fragments of a tooth, previously found in the lake, and the transverse diameter of the foot's expansion, 1½ inches. Another track shows a rudimentary toe 1½ inches long, and the footprints of a one animal of the feline species proceeds southward. Also, three or four smaller tracks, made by a wolf, or some similar animal, and a few well-defined deer tracks. These tracks were impressed ages ago, in a clay deposit 3 to 5 inches thick, since hardened into sandstone, resting on a bed of sandstone. The man and the mammoth pressed into the clay, leaving a slight imprint on the sandstone. This is a common sandstone, but no remains of any impression of tone, pads or claws are to be seen in

LET TRACKS YET UNCOVERED.

Leaving the upper floor at the east wall, we proceed 100 feet westerly to a second or lower floor, which is about 12 feet in the west. Here we found an amazing number of Epicyclic human tracks, crossing and re-crossing each other, intermingled with numerous tracks of wading birds. Some have been accurately drawn on cloth, and classed in series. The man who made series No. 1 had a specially shaped foot; he toed the mark and walked as straight as a surveyor running a line. Series No. 2 represents the opposite shape, with toes turned out, possibly those of a woman barefoot, or a heavy brogan. By instructions of the Academy, photographs and accurate measurements were taken of everything necessary to show the footprints and surrounding. Two tape lines were stretched eight inches apart and the distance taken to the heel and toe of each foot. Then facsimiles of the footprints were taken on canvas, by covering each track with plumbago, and rubbing the whole cloth placed over it with the hand, then obtaining each impression in its proper position. The footprints are photographed by photographing by procuring a very thin layer of pulverized charcoal on their bottom. Mr. Gibbs then gave an engineering diagram of his survey, wherein all lines are given in rods, and degrees and minutes are given. A distance of 16 to 18 inches occurs between the elevation of the tracks stations on the upper floor or eastern area and the western or lower floor, between which exists a considerable elevation of micaceous granite, left there as detritus. In the lower stratum between the two floors are found mammoth shells, but none had been said to have been found above this, yet it is to be was there workmen engaged in blasting higher up the bluff three down not only Anachisoc, but one small fresh water shell, a species of Physa, specimens of both of which were exhibited. Do these prints in the shore of a subsequent lake higher up? Or has there been a subsequent tilting up or rising and depression? On the lower floor are two tracks resembling those of an elk, and near the centre is a large impression on the shale floor, as if a mammoth had laid down, just opposite which, in the west wall, was found

A MAMMOTH IVORY TUSK

Eight to ten feet in length, which fell to pieces on exposure. Mr. Gibbs presented facts ascertained by careful measurements and patient examination, leaving to others to deduct theories therefrom. As some who have not seen these footprints may express doubts as to their origin, sometimes there is a bear or some unknown animal, Mr. Gibbs exhibited a map as a Deputy United States Surveyor, both in Texas and California, he had trailed not only animals, but Indians or the warpath, for miles at a time. That he, in common with many frontiersmen of great experience in tracking Indians and also bears and other game, had carefully studied these footprints, and all gave their judgment, without a question, in favor of their human origin.

RELIGION IN EVERYDAY LIFE.

Curry religion into common life, and your life will become a poem, and your home a paradise, are many men who listen inscrutably to the exhortations of the pulpit; the religionists than depicted is much too simple, they think, for the ordinary business of mankind. Show them that the picture is not a fancy one. Make it a reality. Bring it down to the details. Apply it to the infallible test of experience; and by refusing your daily duties to the protection, prove that love to God, superiority to worldly pleasure, spirituality, holiness, heavenly mindedness, are something more than the stuff of dreams.

—Rt. Rev. Bishop Bonacum will administer the Sacrament of Confirmation at Eureka, Nevada, on Sunday next. On last Sunday the Bishop administered the rite at Pioche.

Political Portraits Painted by Pinley.

Readers of the MONITOR are already aware that the great political portrait painter, whose illustrious cognomen decorates the caption to this article, is one of the standard-bearers of the Republican party of California. They are also aware that he counted a proxy from a generous Irishman in Solano county, so as to get inside the railroad ring at Sacramento. Thus, "the gentleman from Solano" possesses peculiar qualifications for painting the portraits of the candidates on the Republican ticket, so we present a few of them in our political panorama this week. Here are the men whom the honest yeomen of California are expected to vote for. The candidates may well cry out, "Save me from my friend Pinley!"

Mr. Estee sent seventy-five delegates to the State Convention to do his bidding. There is no intelligent man who does not know, or is there no honest man who does not admit, that such votes are not done for party principles by politicians, except for money, or the promise of office. We do not believe of some dishonorable bargain, in such ways, with the one of the machine, but we believe, from facts, and by illegal and also dishonorable practices, he secured so early his membership in the Republican party. The candidacy was one of delegates of a mere proxy, the—one of key and false—the other of the distance of the county, he claimed, was the delegate of the county, and he claimed the votes. He was nominated by bigots and bacchanals, for false promises, and by systematic slaughter of his friends, and principal opponents by himself and his friends.

Just ahead! And right here we ask any honest man who wants to be honest, and should be not feel the dignity of voting for General Stoneman and against the machinelords Estee, under such circumstances as those revealed by one who stood by the cradle of the Republican baby at its birth, and who sang, "Oh! is no nice to be a Father," as he caressed the infant, and spoke of the Anglo-African-American agglomeration:

"Mr. Estee bolted the Gubernatorial ticket when he ran for Governor. He bolted Timothy Guy Phelps when Bidwell was again his man. He bolted Grant and voted for Greeley. Thus has he been from time immemorial. He never voted for the Republican party Republicans exercise the same privilege of voting for Estee that they do for a friendly scarecrow."

Correct! We know of hundreds who will "exercise the privilege" of letting Mr. Estee down very easy, so that he will hardly know that he was ever a candidate for Governor of California!

Here is a gleam of light upon the manner in which the Republican platform was made, which will be read with interest all over the State. It is a landscape view by the artist of the Argonaut:

"The radiant portion of the Republican party was drawn up by Judge Latimer, of San Francisco. When it was challenged by Judge Lawrence, James McM. Shafter, and others in the Convention, he, unhesitatingly filled the breach and the courage to attempt its defense. The ribbed and ribbed, and ribbed and ribbed, and ribbed, and ribbed,

Farm and Home.

The Model Farmer and his Boys.

J. M. Stahl, in the Ohio Farmer, in an article on "Model Farmers," notes one of the peculiarities of the class as follows:

"The model farmer encourages the boys. A good many people wonder why so many boys leave the farm; I wonder why so many stick to it. A farmer boy is treated in just the right way to make him dislike his occupation. He is given worn out tools and is expected to do a big day's work with them. He is supposed to run all the weeds, errands, carry away the refuse vegetables from the house, turn the grindstone, and slop the hogs while the men are resting at dinner. He is thanked in sociologs and paid in foul dealings. This picture is not overdrawn. Farmer boys have a long, hard row to hoe, and a dull, heavy, rusty hoe to do it with. The model farmer recognizes this fact and encourages his sons—and his daughters too, for that matter. His gives the boys a few hogs or calves to feed, and does not pocket the money, either, when he sells them. I have known farmers frequently to do that, and it is the meanest thing they can be guilty of—give one of their children a motherless lamb or a crusty pig, tell them it is their own, and then when they, by superior care, have made a good animal out of it, to sell it and pocket the proceeds. It is lying and cheating over boyhood, and the model farmer does not do it. On the contrary, he lets the boys purchase with their money, and then by safe bargains make a little money for themselves. And it is a fact worthy of note that his boys are good workers and till the parental acres when they become men. The model farmer is mighty good to the boys.

Value of Farm Life.

To the young men who are contemplating leaving the farm for the city, I would say stop. What are your reasons for leaving the farm? Perhaps you will say that farm life is too dull and monotonous. To such I would say that it lies in your power, to a great extent, to make farm life very pleasant. Is there a farmers' club in your vicinity? If there is, join it, by all means, and take part in its work. Study the different branches of farming, and keep yourself posted in all things pertaining to the farm. Talk with your fathers about things you don't understand, and interest yourself in your father's business, so that you can say that your father's horses, cattle, etc., are the best in the neighborhood.

Now, perhaps, some one will say that he was cut out for something else than farming. Young man, what do you want to do? Do you want to go behind the counter, and stay there 16 hours out of the 24, for six dollars per week, pay five dollars a week for board, then clothe yourself with the rest; or would you choose a profession? If you choose, you will have to bear in mind that it will take many years of hard study to accomplish anything, with a chance of ever being your health.

Now I am serious, do think there may be one who will say he has to work too hard; that he is so compelled to work all the time, with no chance for recreation or self-culture. For such I have great sympathy. But still I would not advise you to leave the farm. Are you sure that you do not have the farm, and your boy your book. If he will not, borrow them from some of your neighbors. Borrowing is a bad practice, but rather than be ignorant of the world's doings, I would every opportunity to reading, which will give you food for thought during your toilsome hours.

Let us compare the city life with the country. In the city large buildings, dirt, and confusion with sometimes always before your eyes. Is it in the country? Is it on the farm? Are all the handicapped? Certainly not on the farm. Who are the healthiest class of people in the world? Tillers of the soil.

Now, young man, I beg of you, don't leave the farm, for the farm will make you most independent of all parents, to take up with the city and all its ups and downs, and uncertainties, but stick to the farm, and when you have thinking of it in after life, you will never regret it.

Susan's Questions to a Fretful Wife.

"Hooker?" exclaimed Aunt Susan, coming her knitting and knitting and sitting upright, "do you know what your husband will do when you are dead?"

"What do you mean?" was the startled reply.

"He will marry the prettiest-tempered girl he can find."

"Oh, Aunty!" flutter began.

"Don't interrupt me until I've finished," said Aunt Susan, leaning back and folding up her knitting. "She may not be as good a housekeeper, as you are—in fact, I think you are; but she will be good tempered."

"Why; Aunty—"

"That isn't all," unmoved by continued Aunt Susan. "To-day your husband was half my nerves blue; tomorrow I shall have you blue as the peacock, and all you did was to look on and say: 'There Fred, just see your uncle's ox—my cousin Sally's—I know my floors all tracked up.' Some men would have thrown the pipe out of the window. To-day you covered up your fine velvet be blamed you, because his mouth tobacco smell, and said: 'I wonder if you to like my pipe.' When he complained you said you did not mean to spill it. Then he asked you to do something, you told him not to break it. Some morning until night, your sharp voice rang out on my ears from Fred's room, and last winter, when you were sick, you scolded Jane so that she thought the pump in dreams, and took an notice there to bed: 'I was so anxious about you that I did not think of the pump.'

"But, Aunty—"

"Let me finish. The strongest and most intelligent of men all one more for a woman's betterment than for anything else in the world, and without the wife observing and most perfect housekeeper is sure to lose her influence over her husband. There is a few more like Fred—so gentle, so loving, so obedient, so forgetful of self, and so unlikely to be lured into that alluring vice, the love of tobacco—that I shall still do a long, struggling death; but in most cases it takes but a few years of bitter tobacco and fault finding to turn a husband's love into irritated indifference."

"But, Aunty—"

"Yes, well you are not dead yet, and that moment approaches sooner than you think, as you have time to become so severe and secret that your husband can never imagine that there is a better tempered woman in existence."

A Poor Sire Lost.

Many people are willing to say, that notwithstanding the readily increasing demand for Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, it is not the best medicine. That is, indeed, joyful news for the distillers, who, in all parts of the world, have been jealous, and that vinegrum of the trade, cheap whiskey, which, in many instances, comes from these distillery organs, and may be known, of course, at certain troubles like Bright's Disease, and of death. People are also finding out that the remedy for all ailments of the liver, bowels, and kidneys is Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, and that the great and beneficial effect, and still we are able to say of the bottles of this great remedy, there are "a few more left."

MISCELLANEOUS.

TIN! ASPHALTUM!! ROOFS New Roofs at Lower Rates. Old Roofs Repaired. And GUARANTEED when so contracted for. 487 MARKET STREET Nos. 1 and 2 Merchant Place. M. G. FINKE.

WOMAN CAN'T HEALTH OF WOMAN IS THE HOPE OF THE RACE

Yours for Health Lydia E. Pinkham

LYDIA E. PINKHAM'S VEGETABLE COMPOUND.

A Sure Cure for all FEMALE WEAKNESSES, including Leucorrhœa, Irregular and Painful Menstruation, Inflammation and Ulceration of the Womb, Fibroids, PROLAPSUS UTERI, &c.

It removes the pain, dizziness and headache to the other. It is a great help in pregnancy, and relieves pain during labor and at regular periods.

It cures all Weaknesses of the generative organs of either sex, it is animal in its effects, and has been tried by the public; and for all diseases of the Kidneys it is the greatest remedy in the world.

KIDNEY COMPLAINTS of Either Sex Find Great Relief in Its Use.

LYDIA E. PINKHAM'S BLOOD PURIFIER will effectually expel every vestige of humor from the blood, at the same time will give tone and strength to the system. Sold by druggists, or sent by mail, in form of pills, or in lozenges, on receipt of price, $1 per box for either. Mrs. Pinkham freely answers all letters of inquiry. Enclose three cents. Send for pamphlet. Business and Papers ...

Mrs. Lydia E. Pinkham's Liver Pills ... Sold by all Druggists.—25 cts.

THE SKIN TIGHTENER.

WHEN THE SKIN OF THE FACE RELAXES MY book of advice, home and body positive, full sent sealed free, with Powders, for renewed youth. Lemon Skin Tightener and Tonic, renewed Complexion Preparer and sent only by MRS. SUTER, 1324 Sansom street.

PHILADELPHIA BREWERY.

JOHN WIELAND - - - PROPRIETOR

SECOND STREET, NEAR FOLSOM, SAN FRANCISCO.

Amount of Beer sold: In 1861, 20,182 barrels. In 1862, 30,182 barrels.

Pacific Coast Agency GENUINE J. H. CUTTER WHISKIES, A. P. HOTALING & CO., San Francisco, Cal.

The Golden Palace TEA STORE, 227 And 229 Second Street, San Francisco, California. Blue Dragon Brand Chinese Assortment. The Renowned Japan Assortment.

THE CHOICEST CONFECTIONERY ONLY KEPT IN STOCK. Tea and coffee at prices that only competition dares to offer. Pure ground spices, warranted to be pure. Pure ground and unadulterated Chocolate. Sweet and delicious wines and cordials. The celebrated Bodega Port and all other fine wines. Fine Cognac Brandies, old and pure, and never fails to give satisfaction. Choicest Jamaica rum. Old Tom Genevas. Old Rye Whiskies. Fine Havana Cigars. Pure Cider Vinegar. Orders from the country accurately compounded, day or night.

E. BUTTERICK & CO'S —CELEBRATED— PAPER PATTERNS —FOR— Ladies', Misses, and Little Children's Garments. FALL STYLES NOW READY. Send Postage Stamp for Illustrated Catalogue. ADDRESS H. A. DEMING, 124 POST ST., San Francisco, Cal.

Amazement has driven home amazement at the low rates charged by Bacon & Company for the beautiful Printing executed at their office; but, if any thing can increase amazement it is to see it so well executed, when the bills in town are and best. Appliances are in the hands of skilled and active workmen.

Prompt execution of delivery is a prominent characteristic in our business. Orders from the interior find no city prices. Paper Rolling Press Work. Black Book Binding in addition. Cor. Clay and Sansome Sts., San Francisco.

RAZORS! FOR $1,000 I WILL MAKE A BETTER RAZOR AND HONE OF them in the same time than any man IN THE WORLD

My own make guaranteed ... $6 5 My Guard Razor warranted not to cut the most tender face ... 4 50 Good English Razors ... 4 50 Best English Razors ... 7 50 Send A. D. S. by mail.

M. PRICE, 415 Kearny Street. Cutlery and Repairing.

An Extraordinary Razor HAS BEEN INVENTED BY THE QUEEN'S CUTLER OF Sheffield. The edge and back is as THIN and FLEXIBLE AS THE RAZOR REQUIRE GRINDING, and hardly ever setting. It gets over the face like a razor of velvet, leaving the skin smooth. It is CREATING A GREAT SENSATION in the Cutlery trade, and the Cutlers of Sheffield are in a PERFECT HUMBUG. Two dollars (Gold) bonus; pay in duty. Every razor to be perfect, must bear on the reverse side the name of JAMES GOWLAND, and, of the wrapper, the Queen's Arms. Ask for razors, and take no other. Sold by all Druggists and Cutlers. Trade supplied; sent by mail. Ills extra at C. O. D.

The Queen's Cutlery Company, having adopted Mr. Gowland's name, are now making FLEXIBLE, and HUNTING KNIVES, TABLE and POCKET KNIVES, HUNTING KNIVES and SCISSORS, of the same quality as their marvelously wonderful Razor.

FIRE!! FIRE!!

JNO. R. SIMS & SON, Manufacturers of all kinds of Fireproof Doors and Window Blinds. SHUTTERS, BURGLAR-PROOF BANK VAULTS AND SAFES, wrought iron gratings and bonnets, wrought and cast iron railings, balconies, Shade, Coatings, Tin Roofs, Spouts and Gutters, Skylights, Ventilators, Iron Doors, Shutters and Shutters, Iron Bedsteads, Iron Tables, Iron Benches, Iron Chairs, Iron Fences, Iron Gates, Iron Railings, Iron Bridges, Iron Boats, Iron Ceilings, Iron Cornices, Iron Pillars, Iron Stairs, Iron Tanks, Iron Tombs, Iron Vaults, Iron Sashes, Iron Doors, Iron Frames, Iron Blinds, Iron Mouldings, Iron Moldings, Iron Ornaments, Iron Pipes, Iron Plates, Iron Plates, Iron Plates ever and anon almost drowned the voices of the speakers within.

AN ENGLISHMAN IN IRELAND.

[DEPOPULATED FROM FIRST PAGE]

(15.) Almost at the same moment my friend the High Sheriff was carried to prison by a troop of armed soldiers, and I wondered for the moment whether I was in Dublin or Warsaw.

(16.) The City Hall in which the ceremony—I mean that of conferring the freedom of the city—took place was gay with green flags. On either side of the statue of O'Connell—not the great statue in Rockville-street, but an old one which adorns the hall—floated the Stars and Stripes.

NO BRITISH FLAG WAS TO BE SEEN.

(16.) In the evening I dined with the Lord Mayor. The noble circular hall at the Mansion House was crowded with several hundreds of people, and the banquet was most enjoyable and successful. There were rather too many toasts, a common fault on such occasions, but the speeches were all interesting, and several of them eloquent. I was sorry to have to leave them my toast came on, for I should have liked to say something, from an English democrat's standpoint, to so large and representative a gathering of Irishmen.

(18.) I left Ireland after a hasty run into Wicklow, where Mr. Parnell resides, and another into Cork, the chief city of which, he represents. Wherever I went I got some fresh evidence of the intense delight in all the "common people"—farm laborers, farmers, urban artisans, small shopkeepers—at the success men may be raised to by a legislative faction, but in heart, sympathy, and hope they are close to America, and far, very far from England.

(17.) As I passed the dock of the steamer I looked on the Wicklow mountains fading in the distance, I thought with angry shame, "What madness of compromise was in the past which has made such a change between you and England, that the system of government in the present which, assuming the evil, shrinks from applying to it what I contend remedy? Of madness of governing Ireland there are but two, madness in absolute despotism, and, and rule by martial law. Thereby you may at least make the peace which Russia made in Poland. The choice is between a return of all our franchises, and to give effect to the people's wishes, even to their prejudices, or to the ways of the Scotch. Thereby you will make the people excluded from the which the Northern States have, after sacrificing them, secured in the Southern States, and which we have spent twenty years I shall be told by many friends who read this that nothing will content the Irish but separation. It may be so, though I think not. At any rate these three propositions must be accepted by all—First, the present nominal union of the two nations is a union of hate and fear, and that it can not be and, the longer the wounds are kept open, the less likely are the parts to join; and thirdly, that the Irish people are feeling what is just and right because of the injustice done to them by many years. Tory, and an—well, an Irish nightmare.

(18.) Yesterday I have seen more than enough and abundant cause of your sympathies. When I return we will smoke the calumet together, and enlarge more upon the subject.

The Church in Australia.

ITS FLOURISHING CONDITION.

A BISHOP'S VIEWS ON "GODLESS EDUCATION."

R Bagots Infidelity, Communism, Social Vices, and Political Revolutions.

SEE VIEWS ON THE STATE OF IRELAND.

The Right Rev. M. O'Connor, Bishop of Bathurst, Victoria, arrived in New York recently on his way to Rome. He was accompanied by the Rev. Ferdinand Kittell, Vicar-General of Bathurst, the Right Rev. Dwyer, Bishop of Pittsburgh and Allegheny, and the Rev. Mr. Dwyer, who had been ordained he had spent about eighteen months. Bishop O'Connor, who is an energetic man, of the extreme type, and is the author of the ultra-Ultramontanism, which has made the Church in Victoria, Australia, and Ireland into three dioceses—namely, Melbourne, Sydney, and Bathurst, with Melbourne as the archiepiscopal see.

On the recommendation of Cardinal Cullen, the learned prelate, Dr. Bagot, Bishop of Bathurst, was selected to fill the one of Bishop of Bathurst, recently vacated by the first bishop in 1874.

SEE VIEWS ON IRISH AFFAIRS.

A Dublin reporter found his guess at the object of his visit to be wrong. He was not unusually reserved into a free conversation with him about his trade, the state of Ireland, the growth of the Church in Australia, and kindred subjects.

"I had good reasons on my return visiting old and dear friends in Ireland," replied his guest in answer to the reporter's question, "and have slowly recovered from my years of political cares. I was present at the opening of the Irish Catholic Exhibition at Sydney, the laying of the O'Connell monument on Lady Day, and I can tell you that the good behavior of the immense crowds present was only equalled by their enthusiasm. This is the whole thing we prize up by the people without aristocratic aid or patronage, and it certainly is not easy to do it.

"Times are changed in Ireland; the people are different to what they used to be; well though I have been in Australia, I am still I am inclined to think that order will have sets of chaos, and a better state of things prevail before long.

"Do not the imprisonment of Mr. Gray enlisten the people?

"Yes, the masses somewhat; but the doubting people are not, and it is not not the act of Gladstone or the Government, but simply that of Judge Lawson, who is a Protestant, and who, I might be safely termed what you would call a crank."

"What do you think of the Land Bill?"

"Though not perfect, it is a great advance in the way of justice to Ireland; it will do much good, as it will stop arbitrary evictions and give security to the tenant for the investment of his capital or labor. I am of opinion that it should be heartily accepted by the Irish leaders and people, and its amendment remedied by further legislation. The trouble with the Irish people is they are not political or persevering. They are too fond of grasping at the unattainable instead of strengthening their position by accepting all they get, which would strengthen them to look for more. Some men there will tell you that they will have nothing but independence, separation from England, and the like. This is all very fine, but while they are dreaming about such impossibilities the ground is slipping from under their feet. It is like the hungry man who will foolishly starve sooner than accept half a loaf."

"What is your opinion of Gladstone and Parnell?"

"I believe Gladstone means well to Ireland, but we must take into account his peculiar position. In aiming at landlordism in Ireland he was pulling the prop from under it in England and Scotland. He had to combat the interests of the aristocracy, feudal usage, and established rights, a thing which no statesman in England would attempt except the man who had the pluck to disestablish the Established Church. True, he has done things which may appear arbitrary and despotic, but we must recollect that circumstances had forced them on him.

"As for Mr. Parnell, I have known little of him except in a public capacity. He has for a young man shown a good deal of pluck and wisdom as a politician, but he is surrounded by a large, impulsive element, which it is hard for him to control, and it's doubtful if he can accomplish as much in the future as he has done in the past. He is certainly honest, zealous, and patriotic."

THE CHURCH IN BALLARAT.

"Coming back to Church matters, could your grace give me a fair idea of the progress of Catholicity in Australia in general and in your own diocese in particular?"

"The increase has been very great, particularly within the last decade of years. Ballarat is a fine city and flourishing, and roungs there as in the United States, and therefore it has a wide field. No favors to Catholics, but fair play and freedom to make it, therefore its growth has been something remarkable, and my property has the greatest of the Church in the United States. We have one thing to complain of, though, it is the want of Catholic schools."

AN EDUCATIONAL GRIEVANCE.

"The educational system is something on the plan of your public schools, but with us it is compulsory and ungodly. By this I mean that every child between certain ages is compelled to attend some school or another. In the state schools the Bible, religion, and God are excluded from the curriculum, and the teacher might be an infidel, atheist, or pagan, as the law makes no distinction.

"The schools are paltry establishments with well paid teachers, but they are the shrewd bones of religion, the painted scaffolds of Christianity.

"The name of God is never mentioned in them in their walls, and the sacred truths of religion are ostracized. Now, I ask you, I know, could morality and social order exist under such a system? Communism is the growth of infidelity, and the social evils increase where such prevails. I contend that feeling what is just and right because of the injustice done to them by many years. Tory, and an—well, an Irish nightmare.

"Certainly we have, we would not be doing our duty if we did not. The Holy See has repeatedly condemned all such systems of education as godless, and forbids Catholics to attend them, and tending to political agitation and revolution. Many are not political or persevering. They are too fond of grasping at the unattainable instead of strengthening their position by accepting all they get, which would strengthen them to look for more. Some men there will tell you that they will have nothing but independence, separation from England, and the like. This is all very fine, but while they are dreaming about such impossibilities the ground is slipping from under their feet. It is like the hungry man who will foolishly starve sooner than accept half a loaf."

"What is your opinion of Gladstone and Parnell?"

"I believe Gladstone means well to Ireland, but we must take into account his peculiar position. In aiming at landlordism in Ireland he was pulling the prop from under it in England and Scotland. He had to combat the interests of the aristocracy, feudal usage, and established rights, a thing which no statesman in England would attempt except the man who had the pluck to disestablish the Established Church. True, he has done things which may appear arbitrary and despotic, but we must recollect that circumstances had forced them on him.

"As for Mr. Parnell, I have known little of him except in a public capacity. He has for a young man shown a good deal of pluck and wisdom as a politician, but he is surrounded by a large, impulsive element, which it is hard for him to control, and it's doubtful if he can accomplish as much in the future as he has done in the past. He is certainly honest, zealous, and patriotic."

THE CHURCH IN BALLARAT.

"Coming back to Church matters, could your grace give me a fair idea of the progress of Catholicity in Australia in general and in your own diocese in particular?"

"The increase has been very great, particularly within the last decade of years. Ballarat is a fine city and flourishing, and roungs there as in the United States, and therefore it has a wide field. No favors to Catholics, but fair play and freedom to make it, therefore its growth has been something remarkable, and my property has the greatest of the Church in the United States. We have one thing to complain of, though, it is the want of Catholic schools."

AN EDUCATIONAL GRIEVANCE.

"The educational system is something on the plan of your public schools, but with us it is compulsory and ungodly. By this I mean that every child between certain ages is compelled to attend some school or another. In the state schools the Bible, religion, and God are excluded from the curriculum, and the teacher might be an infidel, atheist, or pagan, as the law makes no distinction.

"The schools are paltry establishments with well paid teachers, but they are the shrewd bones of religion, the painted scaffolds of Christianity.

"The name of God is never mentioned in them in their walls, and the sacred truths of religion are ostracized. Now, I ask you, I know, could morality and social order exist under such a system? Communism is the growth of infidelity, and the social evils increase where such prevails. I contend that feeling what is just and right because of the injustice done to them by many years. Tory, and an—well, an Irish nightmare.

"Certainly we have, we would not be doing our duty if we did not. The Holy See has repeatedly condemned all such systems of education as godless, and tending to political agitation and revolution. Many are not political or persevering. They are too fond of grasping at the unattainable instead of strengthening their position by accepting all they get, which would strengthen them to look for more. Some men there will tell you that they will have nothing but independence, separation from England, and the like. This is all very fine, but while they are dreaming about such impossibilities the ground is slipping from under their feet. It is like the hungry man who will foolishly starve sooner than accept half a loaf."

"What is your opinion of Gladstone and Parnell?"

"I believe Gladstone means well to Ireland, but we must take into account his peculiar position. In aiming at landlordism in Ireland he was pulling the prop from under it in England and Scotland. He had to combat the interests of the aristocracy, feudal usage, and established rights, a thing which no statesman in England would attempt except the man who had the pluck to disestablish the Established Church. True, he has done things which may appear arbitrary and despotic, but we must recollect that circumstances had forced them on him.

"As for Mr. Parnell, I have known little of him except in a public capacity. He has for a young man shown a good deal of pluck and wisdom as a politician, but he is surrounded by a large, impulsive element, which it is hard for him to control, and it's doubtful if he can accomplish as much in the future as he has done in the past. He is certainly honest, zealous, and patriotic."

THE WEEK'S NEWS —FROM— IRELAND.

Parnell's Advice to Irish Tenants.

Mr. Parnell advises Irish tenants to take advantage of the Arrears bill. Arthur O'Connor, member of Parliament for Queen's county, will assist in preparing cases for adjudication by the land commission.

Honors to Irish Patriots.

Mr. Dwyer Gray has been voted the freedom of Cork, Limerick, and Waterford. The same honor was given the same honor on Mr. Parnell and Mr. Dillon. Mr. Parnell has been voted the freedom of the City of Limerick. Those whom the English government would prosecute the Irish people delight to honor.

A Patriot Irish Priest.

Father O'Connor of Ballybunion, in a sermon preached recently in his parish church said he was one of those who felt that if the Land League had had not been disposed of otherwise would not have been so successful. He asked his people now, even though the Land League was suppressed, to adhere to its principles, to have unity with one another, and please God the day of Ireland's regeneration would not be far off.

Duty Again in the Field.

Sir Charles Duffy has been requested by an influential body of the clergy and laity of his native county Monaghan, to become a candidate for the representation in the next parliament. He will probably consent. It is reported that his address will be unopposed, as he will have the support of the extreme and moderate sections of the national party.

A Crisis Crush.

There is no doubt that the man Weight, alias O'Brien, who accused himself in Vacoosia of the murder of Carnesh and Burke, is crazy. His manner and action since he reached Jamaica left no doubts in the minds of Captain Moriarty and Lord Spencer have come to the conclusion that it is not safe to let the lady him to Ireland.

Release of Suspects.

A report from Enniskillen, says:—Thomas Gallagher, Patrick Gallagher, after fourteen months imprisonment, and twelve others were unconditionally released on Saturday morning last.

Archbishop Croke on Gray's Imprisonment.

Archbishop Croke says of Judge Lawson:—He is a Protestant Mr. Gray, Mr. Parnell, Mr. Gray, I feel well assured that, while the Irish people sincerely sympathize with him and Mr. Gray, and deeply regret his incarceration, they will not, nay, they cannot, be influenced in any way, or, even, by penitentiary penalty at least—this province to all sections in Ireland, though that broken phrase may imprison Irish patriots, they cannot imprison Irish patriots either in their reputation or position.

Very Generous to Mr. Sexton.

The popular senior member for the county Sligo was presented with a gold cup, value £50, in the Imperial Hotel, Sackville street, Dublin, with a very valuable testimonial which was privately subscribed to by a number of his personal friends. The presentation consisted of a very superior gold chronometer watch, with chain and locket attached, a very valuable diamond ring, a set of beautiful silver steels and silver forks, and a cheque for £50, all contained in a very handsome silver cup, with gold mountings. Amongst those who were present on the occasion were—Messrs. William Abbey, James Tooth, Patrick Claffey, Patrick Mahon, Jas. Mahon, J. O'Donnell and Robert Walsh, Cork; Captain E. Hall, and John Clancy, the form of the watch contained the following inscription:—Presented to Thomas Sexton, M. P., by his friends and admirers, as a slight token of their respect and esteem for his unselfish devotion to the interests of Ireland. Mr. Sexton returned the cup and testimonial, in trust for the benefit of the subscribers, and Mr. Sexton having returned thanks the proceedings terminated.

Market Report.

Corrected Weekly by P. J. Daly, 604 Battery street.

MONITOR OFFICE.
636 Clay St., Tuesday Evening, Sept 19, 1882.

DOMESTIC PRODUCE MARKET.

Flour—
Quotations are: City Extras, $5 50@$5 75; City Superfine, $4 50@$5 00; Bakers' Family, $6 75@$7 00 for extra, and $5 50@$6 00 for superfine.

Wheat—
Quotations are: Standard No. 1 Shipping, $1 77½@ ; No. 2, $1 64@ per cental; Extra Choice, $1 72½@ .

Poultry—
Quotations are: Live Turkeys, 16@20c; Dressed, 20 ; Ducks, $3 00@$4 00; Broilers, $4 00@$5 00; Hens, $5 50@$6 00; Young Roosters, $7 00@$7 50; Old, $5 50@$6 50 per dozen. Geese, $1 25@$1 75 @ pair; Pigeons, $3 00; Squabs, $2 25@$3 50 per dozen. Wood Hens $6 50@$7 50.

Eggs—
Quotable at 27@30c for choice; 24@27c for Medium California; Ioiwa, 20c; Eastern, 30@34c; Salt Lake, —@—; Oregon, 25@30c ⅌ doz.

Barley—
Quotations are: Brewing, $1 56@ . Standard Chevalier, $1 45@$1 55; Feed, $1 31.

Potatoes—
Chili Garnets, 80@$1 00; Early Rose, 75@ 80c ⅌ ctl.

Onions—
Quotable at 75@80c for silver skins, 75@80 ⅌ ctl.

Cornmeal—
Quotable at $30 00@$ ⅌ ton; table meal, $35 ⅌ ⅌

Rice—
Quotable at 7½@8½c ⅌ ⅌.

Butter—
Quotations are: Choice fresh roll Butter, 27@30c; Fancy, 24@ ; Medium do, 22@25c; Pickle, 20@22c; Pickle Roll, 20@22c; Half-Firkin Butter, 22@25c ⅌ ⅌. Butter market is firmer.

Cheese—
Quotations are: California Cheese, 14@14½c; Eastern, 16@17c; Gilroy Imitation Eastern, 17@20c ⅌ ⅌.

Provisions—
Quotations are: Green Apples, 40c@$1 ⅌ box; Strawberries $10@$12 per chest, Pears, 50c@75c ⅌ box; Bartlett, $1 25@$1 50 ⅌ box; Peaches, 50c@$1 ⅌ box; $1@$1 50 ⅌ chest; Cal. Figs, 50@75c; white, 50c@$1 ⅌box; Grapes, Tokay, 75c@$1 ⅌box; Muscatel, 50c@$1 ⅌box; Sweetwater, 75c@$1 ⅌box; Mission Grapes, 40c@50 Mexican Limes, $10@$11 ⅌ box.

Vegetables—
Quotations are: Cabbages, 60c@75c ⅌ ctl; Garlic, 1½@2c ⅌; Marrowfat Squash, $10 00@$12 00 ⅌ ton; Cauliflower, 60 ⅌ doz; Chili Peppers, dry, 18@20c ⅌ lb; Dry Okra, 20c ⅌ lb; Turnips, 50c ⅌ box; Carrots, 50c@ ⅌ box; Beets, 50@75c ⅌ box; Green Peas, 10@15c ⅌ lb; Green Corn, 6 at 15c ⅌ doz.

Eggs—
Ex Chr. $2 00@2 10; No. 1, $1 45@2 00; No. 2, $1 00@1 50.

Hay—
Quotable at $1 00@$1 70 for Yellow; White, $1 00@$1 10 ⅌ ctl.

Hay—
Quotations are: Wheat, old, $14@$15; wild oats, $12@$14; volunteer and stable, $9 50@$12; alfalfa, $9 50@$11 ⅌ ton.

Straw—
Quotable at 50@65c ⅌ bale.

Provisions—
HAMS—Eastern, 18@19c; California, 16@ 17c.

BACON—California, 16@18c; Eastern, 16@ 17c; Extra Clear Sides, 14@15c; California 15@17c.

PORK—Extra Clear ⅌ bbl, $34 50; do in half bbl, $17 50; Mess ⅌ bbl, $29 50; do in half bbl, $15 00; Mess ⅌ bbl, $22@23; do half bbl, $11 50; Prime Mess, ⅌ bbl, $20; do half bbl, $10; Extra Prime, ⅌ bbl, $19@$19 50; do half bbl, $9 50; Prime ⅌ bbl, $18; do half bbl, $9 50.

LARD—Eastern Refined, tcs 16c; do in fancy pails, 16@16½c; do in 10-lb tins, 14½c; do in 5-lb tins, 15c; do in 3-lb tins, 15½c; California, in tcs, 12@13c; half bbls, 14@14½c; in 5-lb tins, 15@16c; 3-lb do, 16@17c; Kettle Leaf, in 10-lb pails, 16c; do in 5-lb do, 15@15½c; Boyal 3-lb pails, 16c.

BEEF—Mess Beef, ⅌ bbl, $14 00@$15; Extra Mess do, $16@$16 50; Mess Beef, half bbl, $8 50; Extra Mess do, half bbl, $9 25@$9 50; Family do, ⅌ bbl, $18; half bbl, $10@$12 50; Family do, half bbl, $9@$9 25.

CATTLE MARKET.

BEEF—Fat steers, 100@1200 lbs; second do, 6@ 6½c; third do, 5@5½c ⅌ ⅌.

VEAL—Dressed, 7@8c ⅌ ⅌ for large, and 8@9c for small; 10c for choice.

MUTTON—Wethers, 7½@8c; Ewes, 7@8c ⅌ ⅌.

LAMB—6@8c.

Jew Advertisements.

SYMPTOMS OF WORMS.

The countenance is pale and leaden-colored, with occasional flushes, of a circumscribed nature, on one or both cheeks; the eyes become dull; the child complains of occasional headache, with a fixed pain in the lower eye-lid; the nose is irritated, or picks, and sometimes bleeds; there is often a fetid breath; occasional headache, with humming or throbbing of the ears; no unusual secretion from the ears; the bowels are generally found to be out, particularly in the morning; appetite variable, sometimes voracious; there is a gnawing sensation of the stomach; at others, entirely destitute of appetite; the disposition is uncertain and vacillating; violent pains throughout the abdomen; the pulse irregular, at intervals quick; stools slimy, but unfrequently tinged with blood; the urine is occasionally high colored, but especially when it is scanty, difficult and accompanied by blood; cough sometimes dry and convulsive; pains and distortion of the limbs with grinding of the teeth; temper variable, but generally irritable.

Whenever the above symptoms are found to exist, will certainly effect a cure.

DR. C. McLANE'S VERMIFUGE

In buying Vermifuge be sure you get the genuine C. McLANE'S VERMIFUGE. Each Manufacturer of Patent Medicines has a Trade Mark attached to his preparation. The mark is fac-simile of the signature of Messrs. Fleming Bros., the makers of Fleming Bros. and C. McLane.

If your druggist does not have the genuine, Fleming Bros. report he is Entitled to a postage stamp for 4 handsome advertising cards.

FLEMING BROS., Pittsburgh, Pa.

R. H. McDONALD, President. Cash. Established 1863. Cash.

PACIFIC BANK

Corner Sansome and Pine Streets, San Francisco, Cal.

CAPITAL STOCK, $1,000,000.00
Surplus 460,600.70

San Francisco, Cal., July 1, 1882.

We have pleasure in presenting the year consideration the following Thirty-sixth Semi-Annual Statement of the condition of the Bank:

RESOURCES.

Bank Premises	$150,000 00
Other Real Estate	16,002 00
Loans on Real Estate	892,567 50
Loans and Association Stock	15,161 55
Loans and Stock Collateral	1,000,000 00
Bonds and Stocks	567,375 00
Cash on hand and in Bank	1,000,000 00
	$3,726,006 05

LIABILITIES.

Capital paid up	$1,000,000 00
Surplus	460,600 70
Due Depositors	1,265,275 99
Due Banks	597,067 36
Dividends unpaid	403 00
	$3,726,006 05

This Bank has special facilities for collecting all kinds of banking business.

JAS. CARROLL. W. H. TILTON.

CARROLL & TILTON,

Respectfully announce that they have opened

THE LARGE STORE,
873 Market Street,
—WITH A LINE OF—GENT'S AND BOY'S
CLOTHING,
Furnishing Goods,
HATS, CAPS, ETC.

Having been in this business many years, we can promise that all our goods will be as represented.

We buy for Cash and sell as low as possible.

CARROLL & TILTON,
873 Market Street, Opp. Powell,
And late with JONES & CO.

ALTAR WINE.

Pure, Genuine ALTAR WINE made from the grapes of the Mission of San Jose, may be procured from the undersigned besides the value of the barrel at 6 cents per gallon for the larger barrels, and 10 cents per gallon for those of ten gallons or under. To avoid future trouble payment must accompany all orders. Reference may be made to the Most Rev. Archbishop of San Francisco.

AT 50 CENTS PER GALLON,

KASPAR APPEL,
Mission of San Jose, Alameda Co., Cal.

W. G. A. HARRINGTON. W. F. CURRIER.

CUMMINGS & HARRINGTON,
BOOK SELLERS,
BOOK BINDERS,
Blank Book Manufacturers
AND PRINTERS,
509 CLAY STREET,
Above Sansome ——— SAN FRANCISCO

MUSIC MAGAZINES, ILLUSTRATED WORKS, ETC. Subscriptions received. No extra charge. All Send for circular.

PIANOS

SOLD FOR $10 INSTALLMENTS. Kohler Chase, Post street, near Dupont.

STEINWAY & SONS,
Kranich & Bach,
HENRY GABLER

C. ROENISCH PIANOS

M. GRAY, 117 Post St., SAN FRANCISCO.

DIPHTHERIA.

REMEMBER THIS—NO CARBOLIC PROYE HERE'S what Dr. SCOLLARD'S HYPHOTIC DO AND EDY is about. It is a positive preventative and cure, and is perfectly harmless. Diphtheria, Croup, Sore Throat, Cholera Morbus, Diarrhoea, Whooping Cough! It is entirely a Throat and Lung Remedy. BOTT & CURRIE, Sole Agents, 1 Market and Front and Third, SELL, corner Market and Beach, San Francisco, and Druggists. Office and Laboratory, 702 Mission street, San Francisco.

POLITICAL CARDS.

MR. D. CURRY
An active member of the Legislature of Dolitvo.

ANNOUNCE HIMSELF AS A CANDIDATE FOR the Assembly for the Thirteenth Senatorial District in the Democratic ticket, subject to the decision of the Convention.

CHARLES GILDEA,
Democratic Candidate for
STATE BOARD OF EQUALIZATION,
FIRST DISTRICT.

Regular Republican Nominee
FOR CONGRESS,
FROM THE FIRST DISTRICT,
HON. PAUL NEUMANN.

FOR SHERIFF.

WM. McMANN,
Will be a candidate before the Democratic Municipal Convention

Regular Republican Nominee
—FOR—
RAILROAD COMMISSIONER,
SECOND DISTRICT,
CHARLES CLAYTON.

—Books sold cheap at Shea's Cathedral Book Store, 605 Market street.

GEO. H. FULLER,
MANUFACTURER OF
Settees, School and Office Furniture
CABINET WORK TO ORDER A SPECIALTY.
Salesroom, 19 New Montgomery Street, Manufactory, 124 Main St.
SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

PACIFIC STEAM
CARPET BEATING
And Renovating Works.
WHITENING
In all its Branches Thoroughly and Promptly Done.
OAKLAND BRANCH: Twenty-first street and Telegraph ave. Prompt attention will be given to orders sent by Mail, Telephone or left in our Boxes.
333 GOLDEN GATE AVE.
(TYLER STREET.)
CONKLIN BROS., PROPRIETORS.
Telephone Call 1176.

T. S. CLARK. L. C. CLARK.

TRUMAN S. CLARK & SON.,

MANUFACTURERS OF WOVEN WIRE MATTRESSES, Gas Pipe from Boilerworks, of every size and quality. Dealers in Furniture and Bedding. Office and Warerooms, 21 New Montgomery street, under Grand Central Hotel.

STEAMSHIP OFFICE,
No. 8 New Montgomery St.,
UNDER PALACE HOTEL.
Steerage Tickets for all parts of IRELAND,
ENGLAND, SCOTLAND, FRANCE, GERMANY, SWEDEN, NORWAY to SAN FRANCISCO
ONLY $34 TO $36.
H. D. SMITH, Jr., General Agent

PETER SHORT
DRAPER AND TAILOR.
No. 1 Montgomery St. Masonic Temple
All the Latest Fashions in Suitings
JUST ARRIVED.

TELEPHONE
Cab and Carriage COMPANY.
STABLES:
1432 and 1434 Market St.
PRINCIPAL STANDS: Palace Hotel and CENTRAL STAND, 5 Kearny St.

The Latest Styles of CARRIAGES, CABS & COACHES
Always in attendance at the Stables and Stands.
ALSO, A FINE ASSORTMENT OF BUGGIES
ROCKAWAYS, PHAETONS, AND TURNOUTS
OF ALL DESCRIPTIONS.
At the Most Reasonable Terms.
PARTICULAR ATTENTION TO ALL ORDERS.
ORDERS VIA—
Call Boxes, Telephone Office, or Stables.
Carriages to Funerals, Balls, Parties, Theatres, Depots, Steamers, Etc., Promptly Called for and Delivered Anywhere in the City.
Moderate Charges. Telephone Call, 1411.

BOOTS AND SHOES!
MOORE & MURPHY,
Importers, Manufacturers and Dealers in all kinds of Ladies' and Gent's
BOOTS AND SHOES.
Full Line of the Best Eastern Manufacturers and Jobbers Constantly in Stock, at Lowest Cash Prices.
Remember the Number:
138 SIXTH STREET. 138
Bet. Natoma and Howard.

HENRY F. MILLER'S CELEBRATED
PIANOS
Of Boston, and HEMME & LONG
Upright Pianos,
SAN FRANCISCO:
Groesteen & Fuller Pianos,
Taylor & Farley Organs.
WOODWORTH, SCHELL & CO.
SOLE AGENTS,
Warerooms, No. 105 Stockton St.
SAN FRANCISCO.
Pianos Rented and Sold on Instalments.

WE HAVE JUST RECEIVED
The largest stock and newest Styles of KILT SUITS for Boys, 2 to 6 years, ever seen in this city.
Also, the latest Russian styles in OVERCOATS and ULSTERETTES for boys, 3 to 10 years.
All the latest styles in Children's SUITS direct from Eastern markets, made of American and foreign materials.
We keep Suits for Boys from 2 years of age to any required size.
Our new styles in Men's Dress and Sack Suits are constantly arriving. We can fit you out from the cheapest to the most fastidious taste required, and sure you from 15 to 20 per cent.
Overcoats and Ulsters for Men, Youths and Boys. Latest designs and styles.
Extra size Clothing for stout men. In fact Hats, Caps, Shirts, Neckwear and everything appertaining to Men's and Boys' wear can be found at HEIMAN BROS.,
Popular One-Price Clothiers,
1026 to 1030 Market St.
All Goods Marked in Plain Figures. Trade Mark: a child 2 years old can buy as cheap as a man.

THE MONITOR,
A CATHOLIC FAMILY JOURNAL.
DEVOTED TO THE PROTECTION AND DEFENCE OF CATHOLIC PRINCIPLES.
Published by THE MONITOR PUBLISHING CO., Office: 636 Clay street, San Francisco, California.
TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION:
Per Year by Mail (IN PAID IN ADVANCE) $2 50
Per Year by Mail (if not paid in advance) $3 00
Six Months (if paid in advance) 1 25
Six Months (not paid in advance) 1 50
Three Months (if paid in advance) 1 00
Three Months (if not paid in advance) 1 25
To Ireland or any of the British Provinces (in advance) $1 50, (not in advance) $ 50
Address all communications, remittances, checks, and postal orders to
E. J. Kearney, Monitor Manager,
Business Office, Box 2443 P. O., San Francisco, Cal. Entered at the Post Office at San Francisco, Cal., as Second Class Matter.

The Monitor.

THE MONITOR
Is now in the twenty-fifth year of publication, and its well-established repute as an old and reliable Religious Newspaper, has placed it in a wide circulation and an influence which makes The Monitor a valuable medium for advertisers.
Advertisements inserted at reasonable rates.
TO CORRESPONDENTS.
Communications, to secure insertion, should be handed in not later than Tuesday each week.
No communications will be inserted unless accompanied by the author's name and address. This is required as a proof of good faith.
Communications will be gladly received from all interested in the same advocate in this Journal. Correspondents should be as brief as possible, and should write legibly, and on one side of the paper only. We cannot undertake to return the MSS. of unused articles.
All communications and communications, whether on business or otherwise, are to be addressed to the Manager.

For Truth Sent to be ever Free, and Error Sent to be ever Fettered, Strive for Justice for the Both, and even Wrong Death Rebt for Justice, and God will overthrow thy enemies for Thee. (Kossuth, Nr. 26)

VOL. XXV. SAN FRANCISCO, WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 27, 1882. NO. 51.

MISCELLANEOUS.

A POSITIVE CURE FOR DYSPEPSIA.
TRY IT. DRUGGISTS SELL IT.
Made by
H. B. SLAVEN,
The Baldwin Building.

PLATING.
NICKEL PLATING,
GOLD PLATING,
SILVER PLATING,
Elegant and Durable.
ALL KINDS OF WORK PLATED. WORK CALLED for and delivered free. Lowest estimates given on robes. Satisfaction guaranteed in every particular. Plating in Gold, Silver and Nickel, Gilding, Bronzing, and Japanning. Old Jewelry, Coins, Medals, Medallions, Etc., gilded and plated, rendering them good as new. Plating done on jewelry, plated and gilded goods, and on Medals, Medallions, Etc., Plating done on Medals, Medallions, Etc., Plating done on Medals, Medallions, Etc., Plating done

Poetry.

THE VOCATION.

You—the Catholic Master!
Why are you come to me?
A poor old bench of St. Francis
His cowlin on his head
Year of knowledge transcendent,
Who have St. Thomas by heart,
The wise counsel of Dante,
The writer on Christian art!

What shall an old man teach you?
What can I—you be sold,
If poor Sir, that seems so splendid
Be a difficult path to tread!

Ah! Come more unto me, John
A rich young man, and he craved
Of the great and Saviour a lesson
What should he do to be saved?

And you that have great possessions,
All that wise world to have,
Ask the same question! (when answered,
Do not be sad and go!)

In the garden that you are tending,
Bright to think of and see,
You would have Jesus with you!
You find that is enough be!

Come from your great art-fanaics!
Leave you dilettanti!
Come from the Temple, where plausible
Welcome your lofty theme!

Come! for Jesus is waiting!
Go where His large eyes shine,
His heart with angels is breaking
That He love should be all unknown.

Look on Him! He is naked!
Who what you have done?
This is the true Perfection—
Will Christ be under and die!

Put not off till to-morrow—
Put not off—time is life call—
Nothing but this can please Him,
Just now you should leave your all!

Come! you shall follow Jesus
In absolute prayer and poverty—
Labouring for the poor, and begging
For bread on the hard highways.

Come! for the Master calls you
Shall gay pour every tear,
Shall the Master call you of Heaven
You shall find through the Rigor.

M. N.

Catholic Progress.

Literary Miscellany.

The Story of a Baptism

(FROM THE CATHOLIC STANDARD.)

A number of years ago, traveling one summer amid the rich and romantic scenery of the Allegheny Mountains, it was my good fortune to make the acquaintance of one of those spiritual and delightful companions who never fail to leave an impression on the memory of their intercourse. This gentleman was a Redemptorist Father whom I will call Father B——. He was a venerable old man, full of years and honors. He possessed a long experience of missionary life, a wonderfully retentive memory, and the keenest sense of the ridiculous. Time for him seemed to be no society, and he did not feel it impossible to combine the ideas of a Redemptorist Father with a jovial humor. We spent three days together in the cars, and I enjoyed his society, and listened to his stories, and tried to be entertaining until the wagon arrived. It came, and Mr. Casey and his wife and I started off. Oh, the baby! would I ever find it! But the rain, it poured; and the day, pursuit of pleasure drove it right into our faces; the road was like a running river. We were drenched—soaked; I was shivering. Oh, then I thought of the baby! I picked its steps as he were forking a stream, and felt each one seemed continually, the devotion of the priest, the baby, the baby, the baby! Dear and sacred! I repeated I asked, I sought; the baby had gone. Suppose little, thought, without baptism! The thought of Father Rector this time is favor. Two days passed; I could stand it no longer; I told Father Rector that I must find the baby, or rest would depart forever. "Go ahead," said he, smilingly, and I went. It was a cloudy afternoon, but I took an umbrella and started. I had learned, through my inquiries, that it I found the house of a man named Marsh, no doubt I would learn something about the family where that blessed baby belonged; as Mr. Marsh was credited with knowing the whole country round. Two miles, I had been told, prior to the Reformation, had not profaned any building of this kind, and the people of my soul since the days of Bluff Harry."

These short extracts show fully how deeply the writer is impressed by the splendor of the work that is now being carried on in England for the Catholic Church.

"A Skeleton in Every Closet!"

"This expression is used to imply that no body is without trouble, though this may be concealed. The phrase originated in this way. It is related that a poor widow had an only son, who obtained an appointment in India. He wrote very frequently to his mother, who fondly accepted every commission he chose to suggest; but only wish and desire was his return to England where she might spend her latter days in his society. At length a letter came, begging his mother to find a person who was truly happy, and had no care or anxiety, to make him at his shrine. The mother sought among her relatives and friends, but all refused to perform the task, on the ground that they were not wholly happy. At length she felt certain that a lady who was slightly known to her could do it if she pleased, as there could be nothing to mar her happiness. Therefore, as a last resource, she called at the house and laid her commission before the lady, and so to remain awhile, and taking her aspirants, opened a chest and desired her to look at its contents, when she saw the object it contained she uttered a scream. "Oh, do not be frightened," said the lady; "but the poor mother shriek away in horror and was thrown into a fever, and died in a few days, and left her orphan child to my care. Now, I cannot be happy in the presence of the object; that the object was a

A North Carolina Mission.

Rev. P. Moore, of Salisbury, N. C., who is now in this city (Baltimore) soliciting subscriptions for the church in the counsel-forces, gives at the Paper, details his varied experiences in his missionary labors in his district. His circuit extends over a section of country which necessitates the travelling of his hundred miles a month, and this over rough roads, through highways and byways, and by modes which are conducive to anything but comfort. Sometimes he rides horseback, at other in a rough vehicle, and occasionally on foot.

The Catholics in North Carolina are few and far between, and the fact that exist are generally simple, good souls in this world's goods. Of the 1,500,000 population in the State, not more than 1,500 are Catholics. Many who once possessed the faith have lost it owing to the fact that there was no priest, and no place to celebrate their religion. The offspring of these grow up untaught, and their minds become swayed by a diversity of opinion, which is detrimental to their souls salvation. There are Catholics who are fortunate in have a priest to minister to them once in four or five years. Father Moore has charge of Salisbury, Hickory, Catawba county; from there he visits once a month Asheville, Greensboro and Salisbury; and once every three months Statesville, Winston, Warm Springs and elsewhere. In some parts of the State the only attempt to teach religion of any kind, is that made by illiterate itinerant colored preachers. Some time ago, two of these brethren happened to be in the same neighborhood, and they agreed to hold joint meetings. They differed essentially on doctrine, and each claimed that the Lord had taught them to preach. A Catholic gentleman asked one of them where he obtain his knowledge. Hurryup was, "Well, sah, I've never done not education, but the Lord spoke to me and I obeyed Him, sah." "But," replied the gentleman, "if the Lord taught you, why do you follow Mr. Blank (the rival preacher), and you and he preach contrary doctrine, what a queer God you serve?" Hurryup, "Well, sah, I'ds as bad, " was the only explanation vouchsafed. The scattered condition of the Catholics and their poverty render it extremely difficult for a priest to attain on the mission without receiving outside aid. The few wealthy Catholics found in the sections are often parsimonious, and like many of the Old Cent Catholics, "are willing to pay their tithe towards the support of the ideal. A case in point is that of a wealthy man who lived in one of the mission parishes, the church of which was in a very dilapidated condition. The ship was tattered and long at the motionless face. "Why," said, "I think she is my child!" and she took the infant's hand; it closed upon her with a pressure that seemed to respond to her, and held in a firm embrace the hand of her mother go. Since then, she has given distinct signs of returning life: the cold and clammy hue has been again warmed and tinted, and elasticity is skillfully applied. Marie Vivier, the discoverer, seems now certain—a mark on the arm indicated the spot where the vaccine was used to be able to set up in bed, and makes painful but steadily improving efforts to articulate. The mother's joy is unspeakable, and she

A Remarkable Case.

A most extraordinary case of catalepsy is engrossing the attention of the medical faculty in Paris. On the 12th of May a woman was found lying on a bench of the avenue leading from the Arc de Triomph, apparently armed asleep, but as it soon proved, in a dead faint. She was conveyed to the hospital, restoratives were applied, but no response was elicited before bed next morning, and it was found that she was paralyzed. Two months elapsed and still the sleep continued. The only food she took was a strong beef tea, which was forced down her throat without awakening her. The case was so unprecedented that the attention of the medical faculty was drawn to the case, and it was decided that the patient should be removed to Bicêtre, the hospital in which the celebrated Charcot is physician in ordinary

THE MONITOR.

TWENTY-FIFTH YEAR OF PUBLICATION.

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 27, 1882.

The Influence of Secret Societies in Politics.

It may not be generally known to the readers of the MONITOR that there are several secret societies in this city and throughout this State, whose members pledge themselves by oath not to vote for a Catholic for any official position, and we think a good way to get even with these proscriptive people is to scratch their names off the ticket wherever they appear. Before the polls are opened next November we expect to be able to give our readers the names of several candidates who are members of these secret political cabals, and we hope to see them ignominiously defeated. Proscription of Catholic citizens—native and naturalized—must be put down by every means left us, and the ballot, when used for this purpose, is a powerful instrument in the hands of determined men. Mafia membership in any secret proscriptive organization odious before the people, and then no one will risk popular odium by entering any organization whose hand of union is executed by hatred of Catholics. We must show these men that we know our rights and dare maintain them, and when such miscreants find their conspiracy confronted by courageous Catholics, they will slink away from the Know-nothing kennel like the cowardly curs they are.

We admire an open foe against our Church or our country, because we can meet such men on an equal footing, and, as the Catholic Church has nothing to fear from her historical record in this land, she is sure to triumph in every trial she is forced to undergo in the vindication of eternal truth. This fact is known to these false-hearted fanatics, hence they meet in secret and cower away the civil rights of Catholic citizens because they cannot defeat us in the battle of life.

Secret political organizations are most dangerous combinations against the liberties of the whole people, because the plotting, beyond the ballot box, is not confined to Catholics, may next year unite in proscribing Protestants or Israelites. They may form secret societies of their members will even not a vote for a Christian of any denomination to fill any office in the gift of the people, and in this way infidelity may achieve a triumph throughout the land.

For the sake of peace, then, let not the cause of Catholics imagine that the stratagem employed against the Church will confine itself to the proscription of Catholics. The men who compose the machinery of this proscriptive political engine are dangerous demagogues who stop at nothing in their designs. Once they unleash phrenzy the whirlpool in a deluge of bloodshed were it necessary for the success of their sworn scheming.

Proscription has no principle. Its object embodied Anarchy in Government, and as such it should be stamped out of existence by every lover of American justice. The laws of this land are supposed to control every office in the gift of power, and no proscriptive platform should be permitted to prevent any section of society. The right of the Catholic citizen in this republic stands on equal with his Protestant neighbor before the law, and he who would plot and plan to deprive us of a single iota of our lawful rights is a traitor to the community, and the party which protects him in this illegal conspiracy should be condemned by every Catholic and every citizen who desires to see the political stream purged of its proscriptive element.

If any of our readers know anything of the secret position of those scheming and brave enemies of political freedom, let them give the MONITOR the facts and do will flagellate the frauds until the political party that protects them shall be driven out of its ranks as dangerous alike to the State and to society. We do not mean to permit the evil genius of proscription to raise its hand with impunity on this coast, so long as there is hanging left us to brand it as the iniquitous conspiracy deserves.

We tell the advocates of our faith openly, not the hope that the political party which encourages these enemies of our civil and religious rights shall have neither support nor suffrage from any friend of the MONITOR. On this issue there can be no compromise, and the party that declares the votes of Catholic citizens must purge itself free from the platform of principles or suffer defeat at the polls. As Catholic citizens we ask no favors from our fellow-citizens which are not freely bestowed upon the most obscure citizen of the Republic, but neither the Republican party, nor the Democratic party, nor any other party, is entitled to the suffrage of a class of voters whom they would interdict from their Constitutional rights. Freedom of conscience is one of the inalienable rights of every citizen of this Republic, and that right we shall maintain against the assaults of any political party, no matter how plausible may be its pleadings before the people, while it secretly countenances the plotting of proscriptionists and plays to men who practice proscription upon its ticket.

If these anti-Catholic oath-bound bigots are representative members of the Republican party, then Catholics should be told that party responsible for their proscriptive policy; if they are prominent members of any other party, then let Catholics vote against the perpetuators of American treason and hurl that party into the last ditch of defeat. The MONITOR is both fearless and free in denouncing this disloyalty out-rage upon the dearest rights of Catholics, and no political bias shall stay its judgment in the condemnation of such a treasonable subject and illegal outrage.

The Feast of the Holy Rosary.

October will be ushered in on Sunday next with the joyous festival of the Holy Rosary, a fruitful devotion which was revealed to St. Dominic by the Blessed Virgin, and by means of which more than one hundred thousand heretics were converted during the life of the great saint who had the grace to be the medium of heaven in instituting this lovely chaplet of prayers among the faithful children of the Catholic Church.

The feast of the Holy Rosary was fixed for the first Sunday in October by Pope Clement XI., in perpetual commemoration of a celebrated double victory gained by the Christians at Lepanto, in 1571, under Pope St. Pius V., and at Belgrade, under Pope Clement XI., through the intercession of the Blessed Virgin, who had been invoked through reciting the Rosary, and, as the great St. Bernard truly says, "the Blessed Mother of God never refuses to hear the petitions of those who invoke her aid," so in this instance she caused victory to crown the Christian arms, and the Crescent had to go down before the Cross.

Next Sunday, therefore, will be an appropriate time for all Catholics who love to honor the Mother of God to celebrate the festivaments which cleanse the soul, and make it a sanctified shrine wherein the Blessed Virgin can see reflected the efulgence of her own sanctity and purity. All who are members of Confraternities of the Holy Rosary, all who are members of Sodalities of the Blessed Virgin, all who are clients or children of Mary in any of the various associations in her honor, can go to Communion next Sunday, with great profit to their own souls, and by their prayers to the Mother of God they can save the souls of others through the intercession of that heavenly Mother whose Sacred Heart yearns for the salvation of every soul among the whole human race.

And to this the End?

Contributions to the Land League all over the Union seem to have fallen off greatly within the last three months, branches of the Land League seem to have become dissolved, and a general apathy seems to have fallen upon the movement both in this country and Europe. It is time, therefore, to ask the people of Ireland, both at home and abroad, if they have given up the contest with England, or have they lost confidence in the course which created such enthusiasm throughout the world during the past three years? It has been often remarked that the Irish were a mercurial people—a people who will pursue one line of public policy to-day and then change to a divergent policy to-morrow. But we do not think the Irish people at home, or their descendants or kindred abroad, are responsible for the present state of apathy into which the Land League has fallen. On the contrary, we think the true cause will be found to be the false policy of propagating too many "plans" for Ireland's emancipation, and losing sight of the end in a mass of schemes by alienating only society. Since the hour that the Land League commenced its Land scheme ad nauseam do we see the leaders of public opinion at one loggerhead among the Land Leagues organization began to collapse, and although herculean efforts may be made to galvanize life into it by the proscription of the leaders among the people, we doubt if it ever again can be worked into an organization worthy the name and cause of Ireland. This is a sad reflection, because, in common with hundreds and thousands of our countrymen, we looked upon the Land League as the last organization ever instituted for the peaceable settlement of Ireland's difficulties, and we cannot but reflect that in its demise it will lose much of the glory which ought to accrue to it for the splendid victories it has achieved for the Irish people.

What shall replace it? Already the land war of Irish agitation are trying to formulate a plan of operations combining measures to benefit the tenantry, the laborers and the artisans of Ireland, and the present of members of Parliament, and other remedial projects for future development, but we can scarcely hope that such a multiplicity of political questions will absorb the attention of the sympathizers with Ireland living in other lands, as did the Land question alone. Mr. A. M. Sullivan says that without the help of the Irish in America the cause of Irish freedom is hopeless, but the leading spirits in Ireland should bear in mind that they must present the case of Ireland clearly before the world before they can hope for help or sympathy. The people have most thoroughly understood the platform of principles upon which is to propose to remedy Irish grievances, and then the leaders must persuade that policy to the utermost end of human endeavors, and not, but the political parties, neither the Republican party, nor the Democratic party, nor any other party, is entitled to the suffrage of a class of voters whom they would interdict from their Constitutional rights. Freedom of conscience is one of the inalienable rights of every citizen of this Republic, and that right we shall maintain against the assaults of any political party, no matter how plausible may be its pleadings before the people, while it secretly countenances the plotting of proscriptionists and plays to men who practice proscription upon its ticket.

A Word in Season to Democratic Delegates.

The Municipal Convention of the Democratic party will convene and nominate its candidates before another issue of the MONITOR, and while we have no desire whatever to interfere with the legitimate workings of any political organization, we desire to call the attention of the delegates of that Convention to the fact that there is already a strong feeling in the public mind against the ticket is already agreed upon by the bosses, and that all the principal paying offices in the gift of the people have been already farmed out. The rumor is that Judge Hagar will be the nominee for Mayor, and that Peter Hopkins will receive the nomination for Sheriff. Now, while we have no objection, whatever, to these gentlemen as candidates or citizens, we desire the delegates to that Convention to remember that M. F. Cummings, P. J. White, Wm. McMann, and Matt Noonan, are candidates for the same position, and, as Irish-American citizens, we demand their recognition by the Democratic Convention. The traditional history of the Democratic party is filled with innumerable instances wherein the manacles of that party ignored the Irish element when naming nominees for a campaign wherein the hopes of success for the Democratic party were reasonably secure, and the giving the office away generally in campaigns where there was scarcely any reasonable hope for success. We hope the delegates to the Democratic Convention in this city will not commit this piece of blundering bigotry in this instance, because, if they do, they will not only endanger the success of the ticket, but they will do an injustice to a Republican municipal nominee.

The candidates for the office of Sheriff which we have named, are nearly all men of experience in the duties pertaining to that position. Mr. M. F. Cummings has already served under Mr. Desmond; P. J. White has a clean record as Sheriff in former years, and as the Republican nominee for that office in the present competent and popular incumbent, Mr. John Sedgwick—the nominee of the Democracy needs to be a strong man to defeat him. Mr. Sedgwick has been in office only a short time, but he has made hosts of friends by the rapid, accurate and accommodating manner in which the business of his office is attended to. Attorneys, and others who have legal transactions with the Sheriff's office almost daily, are loud in their encomiums upon the excellent manner in which their business is transacted, and for this reason Mr. Sedgwick will receive the votes of a large number of citizens who think far more of the probity of a public officer than they do of the political complexion of the party with which he is affiliated.

If, in the face of such a state of affairs, the Democratic Convention undertakes to "throw" any candidate for this position because Irish blood flows in his veins, we can assure the delegates that disaster will follow. The public mind is opposed to "machine" rule; bosses will not be tolerated, and if the Democratic party ignores the Irish-American element among the candidates there will be a bolt at the ballot-boxes that will endanger the State ticket and leave the Democratic nominees in the lurch on election day.

We have no idea of dictating any course to a single delegate to that Convention, but, "as an Irish-American journalist, we feel it our duty to warn both friends and enemies of the danger they evoke when they attempt to ignore the claims of our fellow-citizens of the Irish-American element the empty "honor" of voting for self-nominated bosses. This programme has been tried before and failed, and it may be better to break the slate before the Convention meets than to see the State candidates slaughtered in order to satisfy the greed of city bosses and their henchmen.

Ireland the Nursery of Priests and Nuns.

Some people affect to imagine that the utmost perpetual agitation kept up in Ireland is detrimental to the religious character of the Irish people, but that such is not the case is proved by the fact that the Archbishops of Cashel alone has sent forth upon foreign missions, from her fruitful colleges and convents, no less than 165 priests, 33 monks, and 147 Sisters during the past five years. Ireland has contributed 120 priests, 11 monks and 87 Sisters for the same holy work, in the same time. Cork, and all the other Dioceses of Ireland, have contributed their quota to this great Irish missionary band who have gone forth into the remotest regions of the world, carrying the Cross of salvation to all peoples. Since 1846 the ecclesiastical seminary of All Hallows, in Dublin, has sent forth more than 900 priests to preach the Word of God in distant lands, so that—even in the midst of trials and tortures unparalleled in the history of the world—Ireland still has children to spare for the service of God, children who feel their mission to be to propagate the true faith in far-distant lands, to soothe the sorrowing, to instruct the ignorant, to care for the sick, to succor the distressed, and then to intercede in their prayers before our Blessed Lord, as well as to scatter far and wide that devotion to our Blessed Mother Mary wherein lies a wealth of heavenly blessing bestowed upon all the sons and daughters of St. Patrick who—like that glorious apostle—convert many to take up their cross and follow Christ, and descender in the precincts of the holy Catholic faith.

CHARLES SUMNER'S CANVASS.

The Lyon county, Nevada, Times, a stanch Antirent journal, says a good word for Hon. Chas. A. Sumner, as follows:

"Mr. Sumner is well known in Nevada, and a good record as legislator and statesman where the interests of the people are at stake. Although a Democrat, he has many Republican friends in this State who heartily wish him success."

Scenes in the Life of Archbishop MacHale.

One of the most interesting works issued recently from the Irish press is Canon Bourke's "Life and Times of Archbishop MacHale," from which we glean a very interesting account of the following singular custom which prevailed in Ireland a century ago in order to stamp out the Celtic tongue from the land of its nativity:

"Patrick Macdonagh, who had his son should speak English, not only at school, but at home, although he, himself, could not speak one word with him in that language. To such a length did teachers and parents carry this measure, which desire to teach children English, that they agreed to put what was called, "the Slat," that is, a common piece of plank, or a quarter of a stick around the child's neck, and even at home and in school, in order that his parents at home should have the facility of scourge or marking with notches the number of times their child spoke Irish-Gaelic, thereby giving to the teacher directions of the supposed fault, and, at the same time, power or permission to inflict punishment on the innocent lover of his mother's speech. This barbarous custom continued to be practiced in parts of Mayo up to the year 1845. The writer witnessed a case of it, twenty years ago—practiced on a young boy, a nephew of the county Chairman, John Mac Hale, who, at that time, was obliged to wear the "slat," and to suffer in the flesh from the "slat" bearer for carrying that very language in which alone he could converse, and in which he loved to address the mother, father, brothers and sisters, and aliths his playmates and schoolfellows. Many a time had he to be relieved to this Grange when in connection with a period of his early boyhood."

Another interesting historical matter is alluded to by Canon Bourke when he gives the following account of the last time he went to the foundation of Maynooth College:

"In the closing year of the eighteenth century England had good reason to dread the spread of Republican opinions in Great Britain and in the United Kingdom. Hence the Coercion legislation of Edmund Burke the Irish Parliament passed, in the year 1798, so indelible a stain upon some for Irish letters, and to permit them no longer to remain among the Protestants of France or of any European nation. Thus it was that the year 1798 was the year of Irish terror—a year that this book of National Colleges was offered up in the Cathedral of Tuam, in presence of Father Coury at Castlebar, or bribing the Clergy with Regium Donum, and the Catholics with concessions; they were powerful two modes of stamping out the spirit of nationality.

The Father Coury alluded to by the biographer of "the Lion of the Fold" was the priest who baptized Archbishop MacHale, and was the first priest who hanged in Ireland in 1798. Canon Bourke's account of this martyr to English brutality is so interesting that we transcribe it for our readers:

"The good Father was imprisoned before us. "Was accoutered to connect his people to avoid an alliance with the French, who, he said, had, as the English are, they believe in God, but the French people, they believe, have no faith (no God); they have no religion; in name they are Christians, but in fact they are Atheists, and England is the past mount persecution, penal laws, and, in fact, all the evils that connected with the French means not only loss of liberty, but liberty in Christ Jesus, and, in fact, that which alone has been our life amidst the shadow of death, our faith in Christ, our hope when despoiled of all earthly things.

"Some months later on, in 1798, when the Catholics of Ireland were in arms, Father Coury was once again in the hands of the English, another night which alienated his life in the priesthood, was seen coming down that same Castlebar road, between two of Sir Jonathan Hutchinson's yeomen, in the dead of night, in the dead of the night, leading to the capital of the County Mayo, to be executed on the morrow. What is this to see? The entire population of the native parish, young and old, men and women, in crowds, darkening the highway and the fields, to see the martyr of the Lord, as he passed! Why this mighty wail going up to heaven, and why this sight of a priest of God, and why this sight of a priest of God, and why this sight of a priest of God? The whole parish are in tears, wailing as they never wailed before! Why? Why? Why? Why? Their pastor, Father Coury, has been put to death! Why? Why? Why? Because he was their saviour, he has been hanged on a tree. He has been hanged on a tree, and he was their pastor, and they loved him, and he was their father, and they loved him, and he was their father, and they loved him, and he was their father

Farm and Home.

Female Farm Hands.

Americans visiting some parts of Europe are apt to be shocked by the labor imposed upon women who work in the fields, load dung carts, and sometimes, harnessed with a dog, help to draw their produce to market. But, very often "things are not what they seem," in this matter more than in any other. A remarkable illustration of the estimation that field labor has was afforded some years ago in England. A contractor for various kinds of agricultural work formed a gang of young women whom he took from place to place in the eastern counties to perform hedging, ditching and thinning for farmers. This went on for several years, until at length the rumors of evils from it assumed so serious a character as to result in a Parliamentary inquiry. The evidence was remarkable. It all went to show that the women positively delighted in this free, active and nomadic life, and one of its chief charms was the astonishing health and strength they attained. Their looks became muscular, they had the digestion of ostriches, and ailments and pains were unknown to them. They, in fact, enjoyed the most enviable of all human sensations—perfect health. How many American ladies enjoy that for even five years of their lives after fifteen? The obverse side to the matter was that the moral well-being of these agricultural amazons was by no means on a par with the physical. They were children when they regarded as an intolerable incumbrance, inasmuch as they kept their mothers from work, and, consequently, it was no uncommon thing for a column of evidence, put them children out to nurse. The nurse with whom most children died was the prime favorite, and a large proportion in the female children was that of druggists, was assisted to the enormous consumption in the district of those soothing syrups which so effectually succeed in doing nothing but cut of their existence. It was in view of the dreadful mortality that Parliament interfered and suppressed the gang system. But the sons of the German, Flemish or Dutch women who lady husband or father in life field is not open to this objection. If the labor be not too severe, and if it is desirable, it produces the strong, hardy women who rear robust men. Half the fine ladies who now find a few turns in a drawing room about too much for them would be all the better for a good-sized patch, made of garden work. Begining with a quarter of an hour a day, they would feel no inclination of a week's visit they could easily do their two hours, and that they could stop as they had never done before, and they would forget that such evils as blue devils and nerves had any existence.

A Word with Parents.

If you are a farmer do not overwork your children, and then by a hard and dreary life drive them to the cities. Arise at a reasonable hour in the morning, take an hour's rest after each meal, and quit at five in the afternoon. Let the young people, the young people, in season and other seasons, have more than one day in the week for pleasure. Your children desire these things which you have long ago ceased to desire, or you were young. As a reason, they should have how to enjoy life. Your children desire to be men and women. As a reason, they should know how to be men and women. Let them have their pleasures, their amusements, their companions, their sweethearts, their husbands and clothing, how to dog, how to fire a gun, how to ride, how to drive, how to do everything that a man should do, and the mother should early entrust money to the girl, with which to buy a little pin-money, household, that she may learn its value. Teach what a Cobbett man and woman, and know in order to be healthy, happy, prosperous and successful, and teach them.

A Law of the Household.

Says Our Continent: "No law in married life is of more positive application, and none has been more clearly set aside than that which makes the wife the proper agent of expenditure. The man's money, if he has it not permanent, but casual. The woman, from long experience, is in constant relation to its expenditure, and can judge the relative need and value of anything to be bought, and, if she chooses, by her experience has been allowed her, can buy with better judgment and greater knowledge. And, if still she hesitates and shrinks back, and says, as I have heard women say, 'O I am such a child still—I don't know anything about business,' Charley always attends to everything!' in Charley himself comes her to a sense of the situation and do her the work her mother would have done had she poor soul, had any experience sense or reason to use or transmit."

Licensed to Marry.

A young man entered the City Clerk's office a day or two ago and wished to be published. He was asked his name and the name of the lady. He gave the latter as Mary Ann Black. But what is her Christian name, was asked. Why, she hasn't got any, replied the young man. But she must have first name, said the genial Clerk. No she hasn't, repeated the man. Well, what do you call her when you speak to her? Oh, I call her Rebecca, said the man. He got his certificate. A lady called a short time ago and wanted a certificate, and when the Clerk asked the man's name she said she didn't know, but he was outside and she would ascertain. She went out and soon returned and told his last name. "What is his first name?" asked the clerk. "Thomas," said she, "I forget to ask him; I will go back and learn it." She did so. A month after she called again and wanted to know if she could marry any man but her husband. The Clerk asked her if she was married and she said no; the fellow had stolen the certificate and had run away with her daughter, and she wanted to know if he could get married on a certificate she had paid for.

Catholic parents should never for a moment leave themselves in the belief that they are not responsible for the moral training of their children. Many neglect this duty, but they will regret it sometime.

Economy and Insurable.

In Boehler's Hall of Fame, the crowd is represented as running around, each man with an axe and hatchet, and each man is cutting a piece of it. How many there are all around us that have the impulse and wonderous symptoms of lunacy or live disease, but are kept by a false economy from speaking of it. But the disease is concealed by so much loading of delusory but very the proper of the and patience should not be, and the patient is compelled to call in aid. How this duty of August, DAVID WILDER, Chem. Hall's Remedy, the great kidney medicine, and give the dropsy in South Africa in its way by chasing. This is the one medicine that can reach out, and root out, every bit of kidneys or liver, and that cures cases that seem incurable.

MISCELLANEOUS.

TIN! ASPHALTUM!!
Tar Roofs at Lowest Sales. Old Roofs Repaired, and GUARANTEED when so contracted for.
307 MARKET STREET
Bet. Second and Fifth.
Opposite the Mission House.
H. G. FISKE.

ROOFS

MRS. LYDIA E. PINKHAM, OF LYNN, MASS.,

Woman can Sympathize with Woman.

Health of Woman is the Hope of the Race.

LYDIA E. PINKHAM'S VEGETABLE COMPOUND.

As a Positive Cure

for all those Painful Complaints and Weaknesses so common to our female population.

It will cure entire health to the worst forms of Female Complaints, all ovarian tumors, inflammation and ulceration, Falling and Displacements, and the consequent Spinal Weakness, and is particularly adapted to the Change of Life.

It will dissolve and expel tumors from the uterus in early stage of development. The tendency to malignancy is shown by excessive bearing-down pains, and backache, for which it is especially adapted.

It removes faintness, flatulency, destroys all nervous stimulants, and relieves weakness of the stomach. It cures Bloating, Headaches, Nervous Prostration, General Debility, Sleeplessness, Depression and Indigestion.

That feeling of bearing down, causing pain, weight and backache, is always permanently cured by its use.

It will at all times and under all circumstances act in harmony with the laws that govern the female system.

For the cure of Kidney Complaints of either sex this compound is unsurpassed.

LYDIA E. PINKHAM'S VEGETABLE COMPOUND is prepared at 23 and 24 Western Avenue, Lynn, Mass. Price $1. Six bottles for $5. Sent by mail in the form of pills, also in the form of lozenges, on receipt of price, $1 per box for either. Mrs. Pinkham freely answers all letters of inquiry. Send for pamphlet. Address as above. Mention this Paper.

No family should be without LYDIA E. PINKHAM'S LIVER PILLS. They cure constipation, biliousness, and torpidity of the liver. 25 cents per box.

☞ Sold by all Druggists. ☜

THE SKIN TIGHTENER.

WHEN THE SKIN OF THE FACE BECOMES WRINKLED, the lines and hollows appear, and the face looks old. This process, we remove by using Mme. Lola Montez' Skin Tightener, or Wrinkle Remover. Perfectly harmless and only by Mme. LOLA MONTEZ, 1020 Stockton street.

PHILADELPHIA BREWERY.
JOHN WEHLEN'S ..... PROPRIETOR
SECOND STREET, NEAR FOLSOM,
SAN FRANCISCO.
Amount of Beer sold in 1861, 38,182 barrels.
1862, 38,182 barrels.

Pacific Coast Agency
For the sale of
J. H. CUTTER'S WHISKIES, Celebrated Brands.
A. P. HILL & CO.,
San Francisco, Cal.

The Golden Palace
TEA STORE,
227 And 229 Second Street,
Bet. Pendleton, Clementina Sts., San Francisco.
Has been specially fitted up to accommodate the increased Patronage received.
THE PRODUCT GROCERIES ONLY KEPT IN STOCK
Are purchased by the proprietor himself, and are positively not more than one year old, and are warranted to be of the original growth, and of the quality and flavor represented.
Teas of every variety, from the most delicate to the most powerful, Oriental and Domestic, Fresh Ground Coffees, Spices, Extracts, Preserves, Pickles, Sauces, Fruits, Nuts, Raisins, Figs, Dates, Prunes, Jellies, Jams, Cordials, Wines, Brandies, Whiskies, Hollands, Gins, Rums, Ale, Porter, Cigars, Tobacco, Snuff, Soap, Candles, Starch, Blue, Matches, Brooms, Brushes, Buckets, Tubs, Washboards, Willow Ware, Cedar Ware, Tinware, Ironware, Woodenware, Glassware, Crockery, Stoves, Tables, Chairs, Mats, Oil Cloths, Carpets, Mattrasses, Feathers, Pillows, Soap Powders, Fancy Soaps, Perfumery, Fancy Goods, Toys, Dolls, Cutlery, Pocket Knives, Fishing Tackle, Guns, Rifles, Pistols, Powder, Shot, Percussion Caps, Gunpowder, Fireworks, Cigars, Tobacco, Pipes, Snuff, Fancy Boxes, Perfumery, Hair Oil, Combs, Brushes, Toilet Soaps, Pocket Books, Wallets, Purses

OUR DUBLIN LETTER.

The National Rising—O'Connell's Spirit and Status—Rejoicings of the People and Shameful Conduct of the Government—The Police Strike—Gray's Arrest, etc., etc.

[FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.]

Dublin, Ireland, September 4, 1882.

EDITOR OF THE MONITOR,

Dear Sir:—Dublin has grown decidedly more lively during the last few weeks. As a general rule, life flows very quietly in the Irish metropolis, based as it is alike of national government and foreign interests. News of peace and war, of trade revivals, stock fluctuations, and even the debates of Parliament in which Irish questions are involved only cause an distant echoes to the shores of Ireland. Legislation bodies, public assemblies, great public works and the other features of modern life which occupy so much attention in other communities are things heard of but seldom seen in Ireland. For the last two or three weeks, however, a succession of events have been wakening up the people for good or ill with startling rapidity. The old, easy going attitude, especially that portion which styles itself the "respectable classes" but is more commonly recognized as the "Castle Sneaks," are usually bewildered and hopelessly out on another wheel track. The before, as a general thing, use in a state of agreeable horror, and in expectation of a revolution and the chaos in its wake, are firmly wild with delight at the bill of popular enfranchisement. The Land Bill, which was passed in the interest of the landlords, seems to have struck a blood of bitterness down the throats of the people which has the effect of making their betterment so much more satisfactory. As you have heard long ago the National Exhibition was opened and the O'Connell monument unveiled on the 15th of August. The whole proceedings were essentially within up by the people in spite of the opposition of the landlord and official element. He was one was beyond the best hopes of the people and unmistakably showed how potent a factor the anti-national element is throughout Ireland. For the people to say the officials full dance, and at least the higher up ones, at this fact, and they quickly picked up their hats to teach the people a lesson. They could not very well prohibit an industrial exhibition but they succeeded in the matter to the unmistakably throughout the country. Lord Spencer, the viceroy, was invited and he sent a letter to the Lord Mayor, the Marquis of Ormond, who was invited to be present, but he was not to be present. The Lord Lieutenant, who was invited to be present, was not to be present. The Lord Lieutenant, who was invited to be present, was not to be present. The Lord Lieutenant, who was invited to be present,

A NATIONAL CELEBRATION

Poetry.

[FOR THE MONITOR.]

THE TRUE REGION OF ALEXANDRIA.

The following poem was suggested by an event from the "Sunbeam of the Vatican" (Pope Pius IX.) which occurred in the "Holy Land." It was a very great and deserved tribute to the heroic virtues of the Sisters of Charity, and the Franciscan and Lazaret Fathers during the terrible outbreak in Alexandria. "The Sisters, the night, entered the sick and wounded, and carried off almost insensible, to their asylums and hospitals, the unfortunate victims of the cholera. The Fathers, despite continually hurled the most opprobrious epithets, while engaged in their pious ministrations and deeds of mercy, humbly and fearlessly succeeded in behalf of the baptism victims of "red hatred war." Since then the Pope has conferred on the Sisters of Charity the honorable title of "deserving to be venerated," and has had the ceremony of "Beatify" kept.

HARRY M. BRINSMEAD, (Marie.)
San Francisco.

[FOR THE MONITOR.]
TO THE REV. FATHER B——.

BY HEARTH'S DISCIPLE.

Bold was the Roman capitals, (where Time Lies—
Who, after many a weary month, and many glories
Was commissioned to his reversed age, with grief
To mark and chronicle the ruin of a nation
Yet, with a calm, the author for a little pause
Ere the pen, with the pathos of a life pressed on
The vocation
Of his subject death upon the land
Thus may shine Eclipse when Heaven shall send Make speed, are all be lost.
To give new new, dread riddle, and to
Her ghastly inhabitant
Begun in then, then city of despair!
Sad reader, by rule wrt!
Then, lone as royal—then the namesake fair
Of "Pulpit-written—
Was there no hand to stanch the life-stream's flow
That purpled every street—
No voice to quell the Pestilence's wailing woe
With consolation sweet?
Ah! yes! when proof-dread tumult rent the air,
Amid the ruins,
Love gave His gentle handmaids strength to
The battle's deadly wrath.
Aye, they, meek maidens, braved the unsheltering
And through the blood-stained street,
Pale, mourning victims of the war-dead here
To shelter safe and sweet.
Their administrations checked the life-blood's flow,
And soothed the fever-pulse
They voices silenced the wailing orphan's woe,
Their tender hands relieve.
And Heaven's bright bow, the sign of the olive blest
From Peter's Blessed Ark,
Thrown over Alexandria's city, as the stormy crest
Of waters wild and dark,
Upon "Lost are Beautiful" in mountain heaven
Or lovely vales amid;
Their vocation, let it be—
Sweet Charity!

The morning came. The Fathers and myself were about setting out when I noticed dearly remembered I must take the baptismal water and stole, as I directed them to go on to the station and I would follow in a few minutes. When I came out of the house of course they were about, and I made the best of my way to the station.
Just as I hurried in sight of the train I saw a big darkey sitting on a fence swinging his hat and grinning from ear to ear.

"You's too late, massa,' said he; 'de gain hab gone out dese five minutes ago. Jes' minute' fo' de train, dah's anyt'ing else.'

"I felt like returning home if he obeyed me. What was to be done?

and all the powers of evil going to the rebel camp. I determined, on account upon the spot, to return to the Convent of the Sacred Heart, and carry certain persons engaged in the enterprise of freedom they have of their rescue.

Extracts from Recollections.

The Convent returns for Rosemount show a decrease has taken place in the pupils in the Convent of the Sacred Heart, Oakland.
In 1871 the numbers stood at 160 [illegible]
[illegible] Rosemount is one of the most Catholic [illegible] of the Sacred Heart in the province of Oakland. To see that

THE MONITOR.

PUBLISHED THIS DAY OF PUBLICATION.

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 4, 1882.

The Pastoral Letter of Mgr. Fiard, Bishop of Moulins, France.

We publish, as a supplement to this week's Monitor, the important Pastoral Letter of Mgr. Adolfe Fiard, of Moulins, wherein is set forth, in clear and unmistakable terms, the duties of Catholic priests and Catholic parents regarding the vital question of Catholic education for Catholic children. This Pastoral also contains extracts from the writings of some of the leading philosophers and statesmen of Europe, who —although in some instances not favorable to the Catholic Church—bear witness to the fact so forcibly set forth in Catholic teaching, that education without religion is dangerous alike to the soul, to society, and to the State. As well might the world expect to have Christianity exist without God, as to expect a child to become familiar with the duties we owe to our Creator through a system of education wherein the name of God is seldom or never heard except in mockery or derision. As Bishop Fiard forcibly puts it:

"Ah, dearly beloved, do not deceive yourselves. There is in the mind of the child a conscious logic, and from the moment he is able to understand what is said and going on around him, and to compare and judge of it, instinctively and unconsciously he will reason with himself in this wise: "If what we are taught at church and at home is so important as they would have us believe, the teacher specially charged with instructing us would surely tell us something about it. And now," adds the youthful reasoner, "at home and at church they never stop talking to us about God; they tell us that we ought to know him, to love him, to serve Him—that all our duties are summed up in this; that we are bound to invoke Him morning and night at the beginning and at the end of all our actions; and here, in school, there is not a word about God, nor His wisdom, nor His goodness, nor His infinite perfections; they even fear to utter His name, and our masters open and close without the slightest suggestion being ever made to raise our souls to Him. Whence then, is the consistency between the word of the priest and the silence of the teacher? How are we to choose between home, where we pray to God, and school, where we do not pray at all?" . . . Doubts, and consequently religious indifference, are, then, the inevitable fruits, the natural, the inevitable fruits of this unfortunate neutrality."

Here we have clearly set forth the grave danger which lurks in the education of the rising generation under the public school system in this country, and that this eminent Pastoral commanded from an American Bishop it could not more forcibly have set forth the duties to which Catholic children are exposed, then it does in the present document. There is not a single statement presented that will not apply equally well to America as to France; there is not a single authority quoted Cui is not appropriate to this school question here, and we hope that Catholic parents and pastors who have access to the pastoral will read carefully and reflect seriously upon the words of this great Bishop, whose warnings voice tells us that "Whenever it is possible we must oppose the Christian school to the godless school, the school of corruption and vice to the school of independent morals. Of course, you must not close your eyes to the fact that the establishment of these schools will entail great sacrifices; particularly in a country somewhat mated like Germany; you will run against all manner of hidden and apparently opposed interests, yet shielded by these trials let the creed, faith and the holiness of the end you have in view sustain you with invincible courage. Appeal to the native co-operation of your parishioners; let them fully understand that the resources of their charity—which never has failed in this diocese—in the work of free schools is now the question of the day, and that giving to the Christian schools is giving Faith to the children, enabling your parents to fulfill their sacred duty, giving prosperity to the family, peace to society, faithful children to the Church, and saints to Heaven. Whatever Christian heart could remain cold and indifferent in this appeal of your soul, and refuse the obolus of a devoted and sympathetic generosity?"

These words of this French Bishop appeal to pastors and parents all the more impressively by reason of them being the resultant of the discussion given by the venerable Bishop of the Province assembled in council in May, 1874. In the Pastoral Letter based upon that session, the Bishops of this ecclesiastical Province say upon this very point:

"From the foregoing you will realize, dearly beloved, the necessity in the eyes of Christian Faith of providing for the Christian education of your children, in order that in them the germ implanted in that priceless jewel, divine faith, whereby they are united to His everlasting. And if it be a duty in conscience all, or nearly all, profess the true faith, to attend assiduously to the only means of preserving it, because dearly as we love, where, in consequence of the educational system pursued by the Government, the faith and morality of our children are constantly exposed to the greatest peril."

These are the warning words of admonition spoken eight years ago by the venerable Bishops of the Province of Cattbrada, "who was placed by the Holy Ghost Bishops to rule the Church of God, and was to be the Catholic pastor who refuses to hearken to the voice of God and the Shepherd who has appointed to watch over the flock within the fold of Christ.

But it is not alone the Bishop of Montauban and the Bishops of this Province that have raised their authoritive voices pleading for the Christian education of Catholic children. Pope Pius IX., of blessed memory, and the present Pontiff have spoken on religion—both have borne witness to the fact that education without religion root the education of Catholic parents. Nearly all the Bishops in Europe have issued Pastorals on the same subject; all the Bishops in Mexico, in Russia, and British Columbia, have called upon faithful Catholic parents to move themselves in the [illegible] the blighting curse of [illegible] and the united voice of the Catholic hierarchy throughout the whole Christ Sanctified is a unit in heralding forth its warning [illegible], and it will be well for those who hearken thereto when they appear before the judgment seat of God to give an account of the precious souls entrusted to their care either as pastors or parents.

No Sacraments for Stiff-Necked Parents.

Bishop Loughlin, of Brooklyn, has taken the same course as Bishop Borgess relative to Catholic parents who persist in sending their children to public schools when Catholic schools are provided in the parish. He has withdrawn the faculties bestowed upon confessors of absolving parents for this sin of disobedience to the mandates of the Church.

It is a sad reflection upon the false and corrupt pride of the age to notice that Catholic Bishops are thus obliged to use the severest measure of Church discipline in order to compel Catholic parents to save the souls of their children. Such stubborn self-will on the part of Catholic parents shows how deeply they are dyed with that spirit of insubordination to all authority, which is the prominent feature of modern progress. Catholic loyalty, alas! for many Catholics, has no higher range than personal motive. They have inherited that false idea of independence which Protestants hold—that they are as capable of working out their own salvation as any preacher in the world. This false idea, specially charged with instructing us would scarcely tell us something about it. And now," adds the youthful reasoner, "at home and at church they never stop talking to us about God; they tell us that we ought to know Him, to love Him, to serve Him—that all our duties are summed up in this; that we are bound to invoke Him morning and night at the beginning and at the end of all our actions; and here, in school, there is not a word about God, nor His wisdom, nor His goodness, nor His infinite perfections; they even fear to utter His name, and our masters open and close without the slightest suggestion being ever made to raise our souls to Him. Whence then, is the consistency between the word of the priest and the silence of the teacher? How are we to choose between home, where we pray to God, and school, where we do not pray at all?" . . . Doubts, and consequently religious indifference, are, then, the inevitable fruits of this unfortunate neutrality."

A Noble Example from German Catholics.

At the recent Convention of the German Roman Catholic Union, which met recently at Milwaukee, Wisconsin, the following, loving sterling resolution was adopted:

"Owing to the religious education question, we cannot open the schools of Germany without serious danger to the faith of our children. We cannot carry certain persons out of the schools, and yet we must do it, if they persist.

"Resolution from Rome.

"The Canon returns for Roman school a decree has been given to the Bishop of that country within the past ten years of 1 [illegible] 7 to the number of 1,000,000 [illegible] 1 [illegible] 1,000. The religious condition of the country is [illegible] 1,000,000 [illegible] 1,000,000 [illegible] 1,000,000

Farm and Home.

Curiousness of Lady Shoppers.

In a Dundee street dry-goods store three ladies were purchasing grosh silks by the yard. One of them hung her umbrella by the handle on the edge of the counter and went to another part of the establishment. One of those who still remained laid her purse on the counter, and while making her purchases it was accidentally shoved into the folds of the upturned umbrella. Who is the clerk here off his sheet and the lady reached for her pocket-book it was gone. She had just laid it upon the counter, and, of course, the lady who stood beside her must have taken it. Nothing could be clearer. In the excitement which followed the first-mentioned lady took possession of her umbrella and, rushed out of the store, totally ignorant of what was within it. A policeman was called, and, amid much indignation and grief on one side and blustering on the other, the innocent woman was confronted of up stairs and searched. Of course the purse was not found and she was allowed to go. Now for the sensational part of the story. The umbrella was taken over to a hotel, thrown into a buggy, taken home and laid away. A few days later the boxes was opened down, but the umbrella, among other things, was not found. A few weeks passed, and then one day it was located and out fell the missing purse. The lady remembered the incident in the store, and on her next visit to the city brought back the money and had it restored to the owner. In the period which intervened the women who had been wrongfully accused had visited the store daily for the purpose of ascertaining whether anything had turned up to prove her innocence. The story is vouched for on the best of authority, and it is literally true.

How to Rid a Place of Rats.

A writer in the Scientific American says: "We clean our premises of the detestable vermin, rats, by making whitewash yellow with copperas and covering the sides of the nature visit it. In every crevice in which the rats may go we put the crystals of the copperas, and matter in the corner of the floor. The result was a perfect massacre of rats and mice. Since that time not a footfall of other rats or mice has been heard around the premises. The cost of yellow wash is given the collar at a pardon, as a preservative, and as typhoid, dysentery or fever attacks the family. Many persons dailyannually destroy all the rats they can be lathed by leaving the fruits and vegetables unswept in the cellar, and sometimes even the soap is left on the floor unglazed. Cover up everything eatable in the cellar and pantry and you will soon starve them out. These precautions, joined to the use of a good cat will prove as good a set of preventives as any that are on records. We never allow rats to be poisoned in our dwelling. They are apt to die between the walls and produce much offensive odor."

Decision of Interest to Farmers.

In October, 1874, many farmers were cured by the tribunal of R. E. Hopper's Stomach Bitters, from the time of the Pioneers, Hop Bitters, Hop Bitters, Hop Bitters ary, but to all sects and creeds and classes of it, political as well as religious.

FATHER MATHEW.

(CONCLUDED FROM FIRST PAGE.)

Every every man who attends O'Connell's Repeal meetings was a Mathewite, and the Liberator here again illustrated the splendid help the Temperance had been to the National cause. Yet Father Mathew was nearly embarrassed when O'Connell announced his intention of marching in one of the Temperance processions, and making a joint demonstration of the followers of the Apostle and the Liberator. For Father Mathew was as welcome in the Orange North, where he was hated his religion, but were sought with his temperance spirit, as he was in rebel Cork.

HIS CARRIED HIS STANDARD

Through England and Scotland, and round him flocked as many Protestants and Presbyterians as did Catholics in Ireland. His work was acknowledged by the great ones of all parties, by the Prime Minister and the leader of the Opposition, and by all classes, from the Duke of Wellington to the dwellers of St. Giles. He went as America to the time the slavery question was in a state of fierce fermentation, and his greatest difficulty was to keep the abolitionists and slave-holders alike. We have no right to dismiss such a strength in eloquent and elastic language, to the apostolic, remarking that himself had believed in them from the dawning although he knew many was people at the time he wrote had their heads sent off pleasant. It is undoubtedly a great figure on the stage of history, a man whom his country may be proud of; but he is greater, we take it, when we see the humanitarian evangel charged with the inauguration of a crusade against what was a giant evil to all nations and many ages. This he was to Ireland, and for all his breadth of purpose, he proved simply by his heroic and sacrificing zeal to his people during the famine years. Same members of

FATHER MATHEW'S OWN FAMILY

Were extensive distillers; their business was positively ruined by the temperance movement. Father Mathew made no attempt to turn their factories into premises for Sunday-school purposes, "what could he do?" Though health and earth should come together we should do what is right." He was elected dispensator for the Diocesan of Cork in 1847, but the appointment was not to be confirmed by Rome. He died of pneumonia in 1856, in the sixty-sixth year of his age, in consequence, we hear, of his administering the temperance pledge even in the death bed. But Father Mathew's work survived him! Ireland owes him much. He has bequeathed a legacy to posterity. Angelic memory and of the temperance cause.

IN THE HIGHEST ATTENTION, and of his conduct comparable to the plans he making a very intense stirring at no distant day. The pledge will be kept by will of the times, then to remain much longer. He laid on his hands Father Cahill Master of the Island Nine Council, the Nun of Kenmare, Spread he has been greatly raised to priests and with them he had been very intimately acquainted with the name of Father Mathew, gentlemen and Father Keating accompanied the man of my sympathy that is remarkable Catherine Cavanagh, from whom he received relics of the very next, that because the Apostle appeared, with a certificate to that effect. He also had some of the water supplied by pipes from the public and read to the large hotel attached to the Temperance Hotel in the Island Council Meeting to apply the Holy Water with which he blind, and who has been the Bishop of Norfolk who is blind, and who has been the Bishop of Dublin and Dunboyne two months pilgrimage to London.

The times in Ireland interviews with which the priests Archdeacon Carnegie at his early Dublin, and the Bishop of Ossory, and the Apostolic and missionaries cross, and of the Rev. Father Mathew despite the frequent and the Rev. O'Rourke, Dublin, and the Rev. Father Mathew himself, and the Rev. Father Mathew himself, and the Rev. Father Mathew himself

Poetry.

[FOR THE MONITOR.]

PAST PARDEL.

DIED JULY 22ND, 1882.

Well may you mourn, oh Mother!
Well may your heart have fall!
For silver tongue, and the place in the choir
That round like a trumpet rolf
Way! weep for her, sorrowing Erin!
Weep for the faithful, true!
For the nat-ishlam hand that wept the tyre,
For the brave heart, dear to you!

Poets are left to you, Erin!
Heaven, whose love is strong,
But you know how to love, and to weep
Are the sons of thy proud sorrow!
Well for her! sorrowing Mother!
Well! for the pure and good
Sister, or sobbing brother,
Who lent to the vineyard tool!

Mourn for her! woe of the Land Leagues!
Mourn for her! tears of wrong!
Mourn for her! daughters of Erin!
Strike her with love and peace,
Crow with chaaaaaaa, Mother!
The dust of your dearest and best,
Oh day land! in blue, and so other,
Should the heart of a Parnell rest.

Oakland, Cal. R. QUINLAN.

[FOR THE MONITOR.]

MINE BOYS.

Oh Erin how and to think on thy fate,
For centuries bound by the oppressor's strong hand
While seeking to comfort, or cause to state,
Your sons and your daughters were chained to the land
Away with Shamlon while you struggle for right!
Let not your sons die unknown and ignoble,
Unless your day in the sun's dazzling light,
Let your sons be free, or let your daughters weep
you shall wear.

The hours of the land are no longer you will be,
The bright dawn of freedom will yet burst on your lives,
After centuries of bondage your reset to be free
And shake off the shackles which bound you now,
How I long to hail that glorious day
When I see the bold dawn of freedom will fall fanest on the towers
And the sun rise forever away,
And Erin be united to gem of the sea.

Seven hundred years have passed o'er your head
Since the brother pillaged your sacred home,
And down from the hills the Gaelic blood ran
Mingled with the blood of your sons.
Who sank to their graves crimsoned with shame.
Let victory so but remain their rest,
And shine o'er the land of their unshielding day,
As the sun in the eye each shine to the west,
Shall with delight at the close of the day.

T. J. COGAN.

San Francisco.

Literary Miscellany.

Molly's Receipt in Full.

A DOMESTIC STORY WITH A MORAL.

The time had all been scoured until she could see her face, or perhaps some one else's face, in each and every one of them; the window-panes polished until they sparkled, the floors scrubbed and scrubbed until they shone shadless; the silver burnished until it was fairly ready to cut the right shaking, the pots and pans, the tins and the kettles, the blacksmith, so strong and ruddy that it seemed impossible pain or sickness could ever come near him, fell sick, and after lingering, sorely crippled, for nearly two years, died, leaving nothing to his darling but hard work. Yes, there was one alternative; to become Mrs. Jake Willow, and mistress of the forge again; but Jake was a rough, vulgar fellow, and Molly, inheriting the delicate taste and gentle ways of her mother (who had been a shy, pretty young governess before she married the handsome blacksmith), shrank from the loud voice and rude laughter of her would-be husband. And so, in preference to accepting Jake's offer, she became—and Heaven knows this was a hard enough thing to do—maid-of-all-work in the cottage of the Misses Cameron. Poor little Molly! pretties than many a princess, with lovely, black-fringed gray eyes, and hair of the very darkest brown, hair that would curl in spite of her, to Miss Cameron's great displeasure. "If I had such unruly hair," that lady would often declare, glowering approvingly into the mirror at the flat, tight bands that made a triangle of her high narrow forehead, "I'd shave my head!" and We're certainly there our heads, would echo Miss Georgette.

The kitchen floor finished, the rugs shaken and returned to their places, the bread put away in the big stone jar in the pantry, Molly sought her own room (which, truth to tell, was no room at all, but a corner of the great rosely partitioned off, with only a small skylight to admit light and air—there was room, however, for one room, in the attic, but "they were much too good for a servant," Miss Cameron said; "very much too good for a servant, indeed, my dear"—) to make ready for her fitting. Molly had allowed it to be said that she had her over her rebellious tresses, and again the tears filled her eyes. It had not been a happy place of rest to her but it had been a place of rest, and a shelter, and she had been glad to have it leading to her, when worse luck by beyond. And she would not have been begging of freedom, if it had not been for that unfortunate mirror, and the unfortunate complaints of the old bachelor! Oh, bachelor! Why, he couldn't be so very old, after all, for he was only one-and-twenty (she was thinking of him, even when he gave her the ribbons and books and silver pieces and she gave him the kisses.

Let the sound of closing shutters broke in on her reverie, and reminded her that her mistress was waited for, and taking her bundle in her hand, she ran down-stairs, lightly down the stairs to the parlor, where the maiden ladies sat erect and stern, the bonnets already on in readiness for the lecture.

"I'm going now," said Molly, standing in the doorway, her sweet, pathetic face, with its pleadingly gray eyes and quivering lids, in no way backing what her mistresses were about to utter, "and I'm sorry I've been so much trouble to you, and I'm sorry I'm so ungrateful, and I'm sorry I'm so wicked, but I'm not sorry I'm going to be married to Jake Willow, and I'm not sorry I'm glad I'm going to be married, and I'm not sorry I'm glad I'm going to be married to Jake Willow, and I'm not sorry I'm glad I'm going to be married to Jake Willow, and I'm not sorry I'm glad I'm going to be married to Jake Willow

THE MONITOR.

TWENTY-SIXTH YEAR OF PUBLICATION.

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 11, 1882.

Our Twenty-Sixth Year.

With the present issue the MONITOR enters upon the twenty-sixth year of its existence, a fact that may well entitle it to a place in the ranks of the few journals at present remain to represent the pioneer press of the Pacific coast. During all these years the mission of the MONITOR has been plainly marked in the annals of the past. The paper has labored earnestly and constantly for the supremacy of Truth, it has ever battled for the cause of the oppressed, and, as we look upon the work accomplished by its influence, we may well lay a wreath of laurels upon the grave of the proud and gifted men whose minds were the storehouse from whence were drawn the intellectual sparks which gave light to liberty and hallowed their work with the spirit of true Christianity.

What changes have taken place in this quarter of a century! A new generation has sprung up to replace the pioneers who opened this land to the whole civilized world. New churches and institutions of mercy, charity and education have been founded; new pastors have replaced those who planted them in pointing out "the way, the truth, and the life," to the flocks of former times. Both the pastors and members of each flock now sleep the sleep of peace, leaving to others the duty of carrying on the good work they inaugurated and to keep their memories enshrined in the shrine of our prayers. Presidents and popular movements have within this time to power and sank into the oblivion of the past; civil war has passed over the land and left its trace of death in many a home; new industries have been introduced; new portions of this golden West have been developed; cities dot the map-plains of pioneer days, and the road-farms have been transformed into cities for structures unsurpassed in magnificence of proportion or elaborateness of completion. And then, as we look adown the long vista which walls the past quarter of a century on this coast, we see change on every side, and mutability marks the work of man in every revolution of this planet. But there is one object which stands out like some half-fane time itself can alter, and that is the religious doctrines and dogmas advocated and defended through these long years by the MONITOR. They have been the same by the MONITOR. They have been the point of God, and they are imperishable. Thousands may falter, dynasties may decay, and the world may change their own most cherished principles of political faith; but, amidst the chaos of conflicting ideas, the unfettered voice of God, the dark of brilliant, and the MONITOR has been the same, and, amidst the wreck of many creeds, one religion, one Christ, one Redeemer, one Gospel, one Church, one Faith, has never been overthrown, and that is the Kingdom of Christ, as represented by the Holy Catholic Church.

Her dogmas are divine. They were old when the world was young, and they will be young when the world will be heavy with age. Christ, Calvary and the Catholic Church never have changed from the heart of man so long as one heavenly spark of faith is left in the human breast. Many ever, it was in order to assist in the propagation of these dogmas, and perpetuate the principles of divine faith that the MONITOR was established; and as we look over the numbers issued during the past year we shall clearly upon the shelves in our sanctum, we can apply to our predecessors in the editorial state the expressed in text of Scripture, "Well done thou good and faithful servants," and we can only ask "Our Father who art in Heaven" for His grace necessary to carry on the labors of a better cause hold, and trust that God will bless the labors of those who, in the future, will have to bear "the hot and burden of the day" over here, and, and then follow, in their turn, to that reward which is promised to those who make good use of the talent entrusted to them by a beneficent Providence.

It is in the fullest degree work that the MONITOR will continue to be devoted, and we look to the Catholics of this coast to help us, by their prayers and their patronage, to make the work of the Faith with this contribution which proclaims victory for truth over error.

Courage! Who fights the Cross beneath
Wins fame with the very death.
Faith, Hope and Love the world shall win
From earth's vaps, from hell and sin!

British Legislation in Council.

We learn from United Ireland that the Marquis of Ely, Parnell and his party—that Messrs. Parnell, Dwyer, Dillon, and Brennan have been consulting together recently how best to combine the Irish Parliamentary party into one force for the victory, with the view of settling down in any active prosecution of reform. A committee has been formed for the purpose, and it is said that it has been in a condition. Moreover, it is a well-known fact that the most prominent men in all more anti-Irish political movements from the Native Americans Party down to the latest brood which bigotry has hatched, were mostly all British subjects! Take the Native American Party itself, a party whose cohorts were called together up, the plan that the Catholics designed to "tear the holy Bible from our public schools," and we find it gathered by an English Jew and Irish Orangeman! The cry of persecution against "Popish priests" was raised by these brazen tools of British plotting in America, and when the storm had spent itself we find the non-Catholic element of the American people quietly accomplishing the very work which they had trumped up as a false charge against the Catholics! Is the Bible in the public schools to-day? No. And who said it and how? The infidel school directors, school teachers and school masters, who employed Bill the less children knew about the Bible—the Bible they could be perverted, from "Popish errors." It is time that "the public schools" have been purged, and, in addition to the Bible, the Catechism of the Holy Catholic Church.

Her dogmas are divine. They were old when the world was young, and they will be young when the world will be heavy with age. Christ, Calvary and the Catholic Church never have changed from the heart of man so long as one heavenly spark of faith is left in the human breast. Many ever, it was in order to assist in the propagation of these dogmas, and perpetuate the principles of divine faith that the MONITOR was established; and as we look over the numbers issued during the past year, we shall clearly upon the shelves in our sanctum, we can apply to our predecessors in the editorial state the expressed in text of Scripture, "Well done thou good and faithful servants," and we can only ask "Our Father who art in Heaven" for His grace necessary to carry on the labors of a better cause hold, and trust that God will bless the labors of those who, in the future, will have to bear "the hot and burden of the day" over here, and, and then follow, in their turn, to that reward which is promised to those who make good use of the talent entrusted to them by a beneficent Providence.

It is in the fullest degree work that the MONITOR will continue to be devoted, and we look to the Catholics of this coast to help us, by their prayers and their patronage, to make the work of the Faith with this contribution which proclaims victory for truth over error.

Courage! Who fights the Cross beneath
Wins fame with the very death.
Faith, Hope and Love the world shall win
From earth's vaps, from hell and sin!

British Legislation in Council.

We learn from United Ireland that the Marquis of Ely, Parnell and his party—that Messrs. Parnell, Dwyer, Dillon, and Brennan have been consulting together recently how best to combine the Irish Parliamentary party into one force for the victory, with the view of settling down in any active prosecution of reform. A committee has been formed for the purpose, and it is said that it has been in a condition. Moreover, it is a well-known fact that the most prominent men in all more anti-Irish political movements from the Native American

ST. TERESA'S CENTENARY.

How the Catholics of Belgium, Italy, and Spain will Celebrate it.

According to trustworthy information, the Centenary of St. Teresa will be magnificently celebrated in Belgium—that country where Catholicism is yet so full of life and vigor, and which, also "Queen of the holy sun," was made by Providence the rendezvous, as it were, of several of her religious children: Her F. Grolet, Vicar Gen of Jesus, Ven. Ann of St. Bartholomew.

At Brussels a committee has been organized, which numbers among its members some of the most distinguished ladies of the Belgian aristocracy.

On the Saint's Day, Ten de Bonden de Rock will officiate, assisting at the Church of the Carmelites (Vilbroeck) at the Cathedral of the Saint will be followed by Rev. F. Jouney, S. J. Every evening during the octave, before the solemn chanting of the Salve Regina, the pulpit will be occupied by noted preachers. The surgeon of the Vilbroeck, which is to circulate the colossal, will be distributed by Rev. F. Dypgalski, Superior of the Carmelite Fathers of Tourinnes. In fine, they propose to send to the tomb of St. Teresa, at Alba de Tormes, Spain, a golden heart, whereon will be inscribed the names of all those who have contributed towards the celebration of the centenary.

IN ITALY.

Next month Catholic Italy, not withstanding the wonderful relief which has been given the Church, will present a beautiful spectacle to the world in commemoration of the five centuries, in which the Church of Jesus Christ—those great Saints who certainly are many centuries in holiness and who were thereby entirely surpassed by any other.

In honor of St. Francis, the Capuchin Friars, Louis de Gonzale will give at Naples a grand Pontifical Mass, followed on the 4th of October, a charity banquet to five thousand poor.

The Third Order of St. Francis and the Franciscan Fathers will on the 4th ensuing the splendid film of the opening and and closing ceremonies, and the Pontifical Mass celebrated in honor of the Saint. Rev. Fathers Ferrari and Lanzi will preach.

The Third Order of St. Francis and the Capuchin Friars, Louis de Gonzale will give at Naples a grand Pontifical Mass, followed on the 4th of October, a charity banquet to five thousand poor of sovereignty, Mr. Sullivan makes the remarkable statement that during the last three years not less than 200,000,000 pounds have been kept out of the pockets of Irish landlords, and used, not in the wants and comforts of our people, but, as we suppose, "to buy bonds and shares for the children of the peasantry, for clothing and to add to comforts of their little homes." In this connection he asks that "landsyndicate is practically dead. A landed estate as an European institution had ever passed, had been passed to meet the demands of the people, but it was passed too late. Ten years ago it would have satisfied the people; now it does not. They will not be satisfied with the wording and stripping landlords. They want to kill it; and they will succeed."

THE WEEK'S NEWS FROM IRELAND.

[CONCLUDED FROM FIRST PAGE.]

THE PHŒNIX PARK MURDERS.

The Dagger Discovered.

DUBLIN, Oct. 4.—The police think that the murderers of Lord Frederick Cavendish and Undersecretary Burke numbered ten and are still in Ireland, but that unless the aid of some informer can be secured the crime cannot be brought home to the guilty persons. The weapons used in the consummation of the murders were found some weeks ago.

The weapons used by the murderers were found concealed, on the refuse of stables in the rear of the house. Indeed they are so long and so uniformly sharp as to prevent suitable for intimidating Mrs. Kenny, widow of the man murdered by Myrtle plane. Mr. Burke was unprepared at leaving given information, the concealing the accoutrements. It is alleged that Kenny was the driver of the car in which the assassins escaped, and that he knew of the murder. The weapons found were four knives, also broken and bent, which were evidently used on his horse. They were quite new and very sharp, and evidently intended for the purpose of the murder. Speculation on them, which, upon chemical analysis, proved to be human blood, indicates the Land League.

Parnell's Protest Public.

Limerick, Oct. 4.—The belief is very strong that Parnell and his followers intend working out a practical protest against the coercive act of Parliament, under which is supposed to be a number of further arrests next week. The influence of Davitt and Dillon have recently had another very marked illustration in Limerick. The attendance was reduced to a few hundred, and the enthusiasm was very moderate. The probability seems to be that Davitt will be arrested on his return, and the complete enforcement of the law the Land League will be prepared for the next time he comes that it has been.

Boycotting Continues Unabated.

Milford Haven, Oct. 4.—Boycotting continues in the vicinity of Lord Vaughn, near the island of Kardsamon, and the tenants who have taken the farms of the late tenants are boycotted. Some of the men who had been injured by the Land League, which had been attended by the most great sympathy, have recently been injured, and the sympathy of the Irish in the neighborhood is alienated from the League's action.

Irrigation Process a Fraud.

EDINBURGH (Scotland), Oct. 4.—Watsonville, plaintiff in action, which contended to have stolen Lord Greenock's pot to be sent to Buenos Ayres. The commission instituted to try the case has decided against the plaintiff.

New Home Institution Building.

DUBLIN, Oct. 4.—At a meeting of the directors of the Irish Exhibition Company, the report of the building committee was presented, recommending that the present building remain another year, and that the erection of more substantial buildings similar to those held in Agricultural Hall in London, be proceeded with. The report was adopted.

Sullivan's Speech Not Approved.

DUBLIN, Oct. 4.—Sullivan's speech, in Mr. Sullivan, on member of Parliament, who is made the Lord Mayor's address, was not approved by the Irish Parliamentary party, and that the first has been offered to the Lord Lieutenant. The fight was made by the Irish Parliamentary party, and the Lord Lieutenant stated that he would not be ready to pay

Poetry.

[FOR THE MONITOR.]

TWO PICTURES.

THE PAST.

Far away in that fair country where the sons of France first labored,
Where they came, brave estate and martyrs, with a holiday glow dwell.
And the great St. Lawrence rushes down in mighty rolling triumphant
To the ocean, where its waters join the wild Atlantic's swell;
Stood a large beautiful house roofed in with the Angels Love and Friendship,
A dear home where Death had never entered with his train of woe,
But the laughing tones of children wished the silence sober and ringing
With the merriment mirth and music which from childhood's hearts overflow.
Of that home there is one fair memory lives in paint a glorious picture set
Ah, I pass with love and yearning on her ever varying face.
As I trace the fields and meadows, with the river in view beyond them,
'Neath the softly changing glory of the early spring-day skies,
And the shows the evening hours, when around the blazing hearth side
All were met in genial converse at the closing of the day;
While dear parents, proud and joyous, smile upon the group around them, Thinking, as we now home so happy, never parting earth blessed as they.
Now the great logs blazed and sparkled, leaping up in glorious radiance,
As the peaceful numbers listened to some wonderful or some funny story,
Such quaint legends as have echoed in the home and hearts of Erin,
Overcoming with a magic interest lonely cares and weary toil.
Then the evening prayers ascended, human sweet Thanks and praises joyfully blending, upward borne by joyful hearts;
Then the quiet hours, succeeding from the treasures of my Father
Seized by the spirit, spirits as they softly said, "Good night."

THE PRESENT.

Now the moment paints a picture of that home, shows the change the years, in passing, on their path have left impressed;
Still it stands, in sunshine, in sunshine, fair as when the merry children
Flowers of perfume and beauty bewitch to the well coming parlor brought.
Still it stands, and in sunshine, with the autumn's October sunlight
Flooding all the fair scene, and with the autumn's gorgeous glory;
But on down the sunset walks to the sunset's carelessness broken
For a sorrow and sickness on the elder, dwelling fire.
The dear sires and women now, no longer seem to the fireside,
Dwelling in the land for sunglared—see where Walts Walt down,
Over such Outlawed barrens and barrenness as every turn, but fail to recognize them because of what lessons gain and beauty, nobler women's and manners. We look for the glittering tinsel and external beauty and glory that we have been taught to expect; and, failing to find, or fallacious signs, we turn away forgetting that "all is not gold that glitters." Let the leaden casket may hold a precious treasure within.
Look then, dear reader, to the following instances of incidents which bear out of the above remarks; and which, if the may reply, have not been linked up from the depths of imagination, but they have their origin in connnce with the family gems from the realms of fancy, that they are verily the outdoor rule with regard to the smooth running of true love.
The town of ——, in the state of ——, is very, has had the honor of being the birthplace of the two persons who prompted the form the subject of this little memoir.
Ellen Bicknell was a very pretty, and, proportionately attractive. It is within a reasonable distance of many of the chief features of Galway scenery, so that tourists often make it a rallying point in their excursions. Ellen's father is easily boat of some very nice hotels; and of these the principal one, at the time of which I write, (some-thing more than twenty years ago) was owned by John Bicknell.
This gentleman had been a Protestant until about two years before; but ever since he joined to the Catholic faith, which was the faith of his deceased wife and his three daughters. During the lifetime of Mrs. Bicknell he paid very little attention to the matter of religion, further than taking his family to church when it was there themselves, and in general discouraging him from the adoption of the religious tenets which he considered the cause of other drawbacks in the eyes of the aforesaid lady. But there was a surprise in store for him; for when he came, somewhat in a spirit of condescension and patronage to state to the young lady his willingness to make her the honored and wealthy wife of Captain Reginald Browne, the proposal was most unexpected by "declined with thanks," as the editors say.
The disappointed suitor was so taken aback by this refusal that he knew not what to say, but he could discover that her affections belonged to another. This he never did not doubt the gallant captain; and, having found out, with jealous sharpsighted-ness, that James Fallon was the favored rival, he proceeded to instruct John Bicknell as to bringing gentle pressure to bear on the daughter's mind and shutting the hotel doors against young Fallon, or that scoundrel, as the Bicknell House should no longer be the headquarters of the Blazers' Club, and also to bribe drivers other ways from want of aristocratic patronage.
John Bicknell reverence needed no such urging from his mind and soul in favor of the captain's suit. He was weak enough to admire the family alliance with the old Browne family; and he felt very proud when the captain intimated that the brave Reginald was paying his addresses to Nellie. He could see nothing very wrong about a mixed marriage at the Catholic Church mentioned it; and then, Nellie could convert the captain, and he would be Nellie's mother had done; besides, a mixed marriage was not an uncommon as all at that time. So, when he heard that his daughter had refused the much desired matrimonial offer, he was dreadfully put out. He was angry enough with the perverse young lady herself, though he hoped finally to reason her out of her scruples; but on the head of James Fallon the weight of his wrath would fall.
On the evening of the day of the captain's proposal Nellie was amusing herself at the piano in the drawing-room. There was a deep shadow on her fair, young face. It was winter. After she had been there for a little while, her father came in and sat down at the fire. Very moodily; and she could see there was something wrong. Presently he said in a sullen way that was altogether different from his usual manner:—"Stop that, Nellie, and come here!" with a gesture of his hand to the sofa. "What is it, Papa?" coming over to the fire, hurriedly, and facing him. "Nothing, child, nothing!" "Yes, you ill pay, you have been out all day, and you look so cross."
"No, no; I am not ill." And then there was a pause.
"Nellie, my child," said he after a moment or two, "what is this I hear—but I don't believe it—about James?"
"What, Papa," queried the young girl, blushing.
"Well, I suppose you will know what I mean, when I ask you was Captain Browne here to-day?"
"Oh, yes, Papa; I was going to tell you all about that, but you were so busy, you know. Then you have met him, and know it already."
"Yes, my child, I know it; and I am sorry and surprised that you received his proposal as you did."
"But, Papa, you know he is a Protestant," interrupted Nellie, getting alarmed at her father's seriousness; "and I am so much afraid you would not like me to marry out of the Catholic Church."
"Why not, child," broke in her father rather hotly; "I know many a Catholic girl who would only be too happy to accept the hand of such a man."
"But may be so, Papa," responded Nellie; "but I have a great many girls, too, who think as I do, and would rather wait and see what will happen."
"My child," said the father, more hotly than before, "this is silly nonsense. Don't you know the Catholic Church encourages such marriages; and how many cases do we not hear of?"
"Oh, Papa," cried the young girl, burst-ing into tears, "I don't be angry, but I wouldn't do anything to displease you; and I never would marry without your consent."
John Bicknell was greatly frustrated by this turn in the conversation. He might maintain his point in argument very well; but, though he had in temper and gruff in manner, sometimes, his heart was not proof against tears, especially in the form of a child he loved so tenderly. So he dropped the subject of debate for a while, and soothed his daughter's mind and shutting the hotel doors against young Fallon, or that scoundrel, as the Bicknell House should no longer be the headquarters of the Blazers' Club, and also bribe drivers other ways from want of aristocratic patronage.
John Bicknell reverence needed no such urging from his mind and soul in favor of the captain's suit. He was weak enough to admire the family alliance with the old Browne family; and he felt very proud when the captain intimated that the brave Reginald was paying his addresses to Nellie. He could see nothing very wrong about a mixed marriage at the Catholic Church mentioned it; and then, Nellie could convert the captain, as Nellie's mother had done; besides, a mixed marriage was not an uncommon as all at that time. So, when he heard that his daughter had refused the much desired matrimonial offer, he was dreadfully put out. He was angry enough with the perverse young lady herself, though he hoped finally to reason her out of her scruples; but on the head of James Fallon the weight of his wrath would fall.
On the evening of the day of the captain's proposal Nellie was amusing herself at the piano in the drawing-room. There was a deep shadow on her fair, young face. It was winter. After she had been there for a little while, her father came in and sat down at the fire. Very moodily; and she could see there was something wrong. Presently he said in a sullen way that was altogether different from his usual manner:—"Stop that, Nellie, and come here!" with a gesture of his hand to the sofa. "What is it, Papa?" coming over to the fire, hurriedly, and facing him. "Nothing, child, nothing!" "Yes, you ill pay, you have been out all day, and you look so cross."
"No, no; I am not ill." And then there was a pause.
"Nellie, my child," said he after a moment or two, "what is this I hear—but I don't believe it—about James?"
"What, Papa," queried the young girl, blushing.
"Well, I suppose you will know what I mean, when I ask you was Captain Browne here to-day?"
"Oh, yes, Papa; I was going to tell you all about that, but you were so busy, you know. Then you have met him, and know it already."
"Yes, my child, I know it; and I am sorry and surprised that you received his proposal as you did."
"But, Papa, you know he is a Protestant," interrupted Nellie, getting alarmed at her father's seriousness; "and I am so much afraid you would not like me to marry out of the Catholic Church."
"Why not, child," broke in her father rather hotly; "I know many a Catholic girl who would only be too happy to accept the hand of such a man."
"But may be so, Papa," responded Nellie; "but I know a great many girls, too, who think as I do, and would rather wait and see what will happen."
"My child," said the father, more hotly than before; "this is silly nonsense. Don't you know the Catholic Church encourages such marriages; and how many cases do we not hear of?"
"Oh, Papa," cried the young girl, burst-ing into tears, "I don't be angry, but I wouldn't do anything to displease you; and I never would marry without your consent."
John Bicknell was greatly frustrated by this turn in the conversation. He might maintain his point in argument very well; but, though he had in temper and gruff in manner, sometimes, his heart was not proof against tears, especially in the form of a child he loved so tenderly. So he dropped the subject of debate for a while, and soothed his daughter's mind and shutting the hotel doors against young Fallon, or that scoundrel, as the Bicknell House should no longer be the headquarters of the Blazers' Club, and also bribe drivers other ways from want of aristocratic patronage.

Literary Miscellany.

Links of Love that Led to God.

An Irish Story of Love, Valor and Faith.

WRITTEN FOR THE MONITOR BY MICHAEL O'CONNOR.

CHAPTER I.

There is a good deal of force in that observation about both men and strangers of fiction. But, unfortunately, too many of us are blind to true nobility and heroism in real life, while we render homage to the slight semblances of such traits as we find in those we hastily pronounce heroes. Nearly we may always discover deeds and characters worthy to be admired and emulated if we pay sufficient heed to the great drama of life as it is enacted on the broad stage of this work-a-day world. But we are apt to imbibe false notions of work and excellence from romance, and to set up an ideal criterion of such attributes) from the perusal of modern sensational works. From his brilliant fancy, the novelist or dramatist weaves great big characters which he lights up with a false glory every moment he or her or imperfection. His paints for us a scene, picture of the first sunny days of blissful wandering in the elysian ways of "Love young dream," and we fain would shut our eyes to the background phantoms of toil and trouble and the thousand other inconveniences that flesh is heir to. He harrows up our nervous system with bloodcurdling incidents "by flood and fire," or thrilling adventures "in the imminent deadly breach," until we begin to tremble at the treasures of any Paul Pry, intending from the pleasure of our fellow spirits as they softly said, "Good night."

THE PRESENT.

Now the moment paints a picture of that home, shows the change the years, in passing, on their path have left impressed;
Still it stands, in sunshine, in sunshine, fair as when the merry children
Flowers of perfume and beauty bewitch to the well coming parlor brought.
Still it stands, and in sunshine, with the autumn's October sunlight
Flooding all the fair scene, and with the autumn's gorgeous glory;
But on down the sunset walks to the sunset's carelessness broken
For a sorrow and sickness on the elder, dwelling fire.
The dear sires and women now, no longer seem to the fireside,
Dwelling in the land for sunglared—see where Walts Walt down,
Over such Outlawed barrens and barrenness as every turn, but fail to recognize them because of what lessons gain and beauty, nobler women's and manners. We look for the glittering tinsel and external beauty and glory that we have been taught to expect; and, failing to find, or fallacious signs, we turn away forgetting that "all is not gold that glitters." Let the leaden casket may hold a precious treasure within.
Look then, dear reader, to the following instances of incidents which bear out of the above remarks; and which, if the may reply, have not been linked up from the depths of imagination, but they have their origin in connnce with the family gems from the realms of fancy, that they are verily the outdoor rule with regard to the smooth running of true love.
The town of ——, in the state of ——, is very, has had the honor of being the birthplace of the two persons who prompted the form the subject of this little memoir.
Ellen Bicknell was a very pretty, and, proportionately attractive. It is within a reasonable distance of many of the chief features of Galway scenery, so that tourists often make it a rallying point in their excursions. Ellen's father is easily boat of some very nice hotels; and of these the principal one, at the time of which I write, (something more than twenty years ago) was owned by John Bicknell.
This gentleman had been a Protestant until about two years before; but ever since he joined to the Catholic faith, which was the faith of his deceased wife and his three daughters. During the lifetime of Mrs. Bicknell he paid very little attention to the matter of religion, further than taking his family to church when it was there themselves, and in general discouraging him from the adoption of the religious tenets which he considered the cause of other drawbacks in the eyes of the aforesaid lady. But there was a surprise in store for him; for when he came, somewhat in a spirit of condescension and patronage to state to the young lady his willingness to make her the honored and wealthy wife of Captain Reginald Browne, the proposal was most unexpected "declined with thanks," as the editors say.
The disappointed suitor was so taken aback by this refusal that he knew not what to say, but he could discover that her affections belonged to another. This he never did not doubt the gallant captain; and, having found out, with jealous sharpsighted-ness, that James Fallon was the favored rival, he proceeded to instruct John Bicknell as to bringing gentle pressure to bear on the daughter's mind and shutting the hotel doors against young Fallon, or that scoundrel, as the Bicknell House should no longer be the headquarters of the Blazers' Club, and also to bribe drivers other ways from want of aristocratic patronage.
John Bicknell reverence needed no such urging from his mind and soul in favor of the captain's suit. He was weak enough to admire the family alliance with the old Browne family; and he felt very proud when the captain intimated that the brave Reginald was paying his addresses to Nellie. He could see nothing very wrong about a mixed marriage at the Catholic Church mentioned it; and then, Nellie would convert the captain, as Nellie's mother had done; besides, a mixed marriage was not an uncommon as all at that time. So, when he heard that his daughter had refused the much desired matrimonial offer, he was dreadfully put out. He was angry enough with the perverse young lady herself, though he hoped finally to reason her out of her scruples; but on the head of James Fallon the weight of his wrath would fall.
On the evening of the day of the captain's proposal Nellie was amusing herself at the piano in the drawing-room. There was a deep shadow on her fair, young face. It was winter. After she had been there for a little while, her father came in and sat down at the fire. Very moodily; and she could see there was something wrong. Presently he said in a sullen way that was altogether different from his usual manner:—"Stop that, Nellie, and come here!" with a gesture of his hand to the sofa. "What is it, Papa?" coming over to the fire, hurriedly, and facing him. "Nothing, child, nothing!" "Yes, you ill pay, you have been out all day, and you look so cross."
"No, no; I am not ill." And then there was a pause.
"Nellie, my child," said he after a moment or two, "what is this I hear—but I don't believe it—about James?"
"What, Papa," queried the young girl, blushing.
"Well, I suppose you will know what I mean, when I ask you was Captain Browne here to-day?"
"Oh, yes, Papa; I was going to tell you all about that, but you were so busy, you know. Then you have met him, and know it already."
"Yes, my child, I know it; and I am sorry and surprised that you received his proposal as you did."
"But, Papa, you know he is a Protestant," interrupted Nellie, getting alarmed at her father's seriousness; "and I am so much afraid you would not like me to marry out of the Catholic Church."
"Why not, child," broke in her father rather hotly; "I know many a Catholic girl who would only be too happy to accept the hand of such a man."
"But may be so, Papa," responded Nellie; "but I know a great many girls, too, who think as I do, and would rather wait and see what will happen."
"My child," said the father, more hotly than before; "this is silly nonsense. Don't you know the Catholic Church encourages such marriages; and how many cases do we not hear of?"
"Oh, Papa," cried the young girl, burst-ing into tears, "I don't be angry, but I wouldn't do anything to displease you; and I never would marry without your consent."
John Bicknell was greatly frustrated by this turn in the conversation. He might maintain his point in argument very well; but, though he had in temper and gruff in manner, sometimes, his heart was not proof against tears, especially in the form of a child he loved so tenderly. So he dropped the subject of debate for a while, and soothed his weeping daughter; but by and by he quietly recurred to where he had left off about the Church approving of mixed marriages, or something to that effect; to which Nellie, who was now composed, replied:—"Well, Papa, the Church has liberated them, no doubt, under certain circumstances; but I think the Church has always been more opposed than otherwise to such unhappy instances."
"And happy ones, too," interrupted the father, warming up; aside.
"Look at poor Katie Lynch," said Nellie mischievously, "I really believe she hasn't had a happy day since she married Mr. Crawford."
John Bicknell was about to make some reply when he saw signs of a returning fit of tears in Nellie's eyes, so he took up his hat and went out rather abruptly. The subject was indeed a delicate one, for it woke up memories of one that was gone—of the departed Mrs. Bicknell—and made the husband's absence to participate cases in point, undeniable. The father would have willingly died his own married life to bear out his views; and, truth to tell, he was indeed a model husband.

[CONCLUDED NEXT WHEK.]

Consumption Cured.

An old physician, retired from general practice, having had placed in his hands by an East India missionary the formula of a vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure for Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma and all throat and Lung Affections, also a positive and radical cure for Nervous Debility and Nervous Complaints, after having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, has felt it his duty to make it known to his suffering fellows. Actuated by this motive and a desire to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge to all who desire it, this recipe, in German, French and English, with full directions for preparing and using this remedy. Address, Dr. W. A. Noyes, 149 Power's Block, Rochester, N. Y.

Hewitt's Anti Phosphine is beneficial in debility and in many diseases where the nervous system is unstrung.

MIXED MARRIAGE.

A Priest's Severe Strictures on the Marriage of a Catholic and Protestant; his remarks certain Minister—St. Louis Social Circles in a Flutter Over the Matter.

The following is the form in which the matter of the mixed marriage in St. Louis, and Father Polaski's remarks on the subject, been telegraphed to the Chicago Times:—St. Louis, Sept. 26.—[on Thursday, September 14, at Jefferson barracks, Dr. Tessen, of St. Louis, was married to Miss Maggie Duncan, of Lewisburg. Dr. Tessen is a surgeon in the United States army, a member of the Catholic Church, and his family were among the original French colonists in St. Louis. There are few people in the city more widely known than he, and although his family is not wealthy it has been and is respected. The bride's family has been domiciled at Lewisburg for several generations, and she is a member of the Presbyterian church. A full account of the wedding, which was one of the society events of the season was printed in the morning papers at the time. In all marriages, between Protestants and Catholics it is customary to have two wedding ceremonies, conducted by the minister of the faith to which bride and groom respectively belong. The Tessen-Duncan nuptials were an exception to this rule. In the morning of the wedding day Father Bendy, the pastor of the Church of the Annunciation, admonished a Catholic congregation, composed of Mrs. Edward Tessen, the groom's mother, No. 1,130 South Second street. In the evening Dr. Nicodemus, of the Second Presbyterian church, gave his blessing to the happy couple. The whole occasion is a subject of much comment. The relations of both the parties were prominent in social and business circles in this city with the congratulations and good wishes of all who knew them. The Rev. Dr. D. S. Phelan, pastor of the Church of Our Lady of Mount Carmel, referring to the Tessen-Duncan ceremonies, delivered himself as follows:

"Am I strange in high life took place last week, the particulars of which, so publish-ed in the daily papers, made every Catholic in the city blush. Young Catholic, let me tell you of the proudest French Catholic family in this city, wedded a Protestant lady before a Presbyterian minister. Why did the young man commit a mortal sin on his wedding day? Why did the young man tramp on his religion, his baptismal record, and on his conscience upon his wedding day? Why did the young man spit upon the cross and trample on the blessed Virgin under his feet? Why did the young man insult the living and outrage the memory of his dead mamma on his wedding day? Why did he turn his back upon the altar and renounce his first communion on his wedding day? Why did the young man sell his soul and the soul of his unborn children to the devil on his wedding day? It was for love. The lady demanded the sacrifice, and I was not the lady's power to refuse. She made it as a condition of the bestowal of her hand that he should unmake himself, that he should be his soul, perjure himself, falsify his baptismal record, that he should be the dearest friends before she would be his bride. He loved her and he sacrificed. The devil supplied the argument in this instance of apostacy. Why said the devil he had as much right to be religious as the lady. That was not true, but even granting it, it was no good reason why he should be sacrificed by a priest while it was a violation of his religion and conscience to be married by a minister. Young Protestant lady, I am speaking to you. I defy any marriage that the state approves, any marriage that the church approves, and every state recognizes the marriage solemnized by a priest. The law said that it is consensual as well as be. Granted; but her conscience would not be wounded by being married before a priest, while it would be violated by a marriage before a minister. Were she a member of the strictest Protestant sect of Christendom, she might approach the Lord's supper in her church without remorse the day after her marriage; while the moment she did the sacrilegious deed he was debarred from the communion and excommunicated from the Church's pale. He did it for love. Contrast his lot with that of the man whom that he would sell his soul for her; deny his faith for her; sacrifice his hope of heaven for her—such a waffling, such a screwed with ball and a league with the devil.

Why so few Marry.

On every hand we read of a condition of things which complicates the problem much, viz.: That marriage is growing more difficult for women and less desirable for man.

That woman is not married is owing to a variety of reasons.

First—Her ideals are too general now in her "delicacy" that it is said she is opposed to-day that not one woman in ten can be found who is fully healthy practically, and this is true of all classes, upper and lower, working and idle. As a rule, women do not know how to keep well and handsome, and they know it, and those who do.

Second—Her mental condition. If she is body, her mind, spirits, and temper are equally disturbed. She must be sensitive, nervous, possibly fretful and unhappy. It is her duty if not to be the helper and companion of man.

Third—Impracticable theories. It is quite common for young women to fancy they are to marry a man and be "happy" and live on air and love. The story of Jacob in April 24th—the days of the Jesus Lady. Wherever the Gospel is preached, the contrition of a loved Thus Mary Magdalene known to men; and sinners will learn from Christ, though we cannot dare to presume on God's mercy, yet, at the same time, a repentant sinner should ever despair of obtaining that mercy.

Nature's Murderers.

A correspondent writes to the St James' Gazette: "In professor Newman's letter to the newspapers he says that 'if we grant the cruelty of mangling birds with the gun and leave the dolors to bear the blow of an divine dexterity, they will remain as numerous as now.' Nothing imagination is at will here most keenly. Anyone who has spent great days on the lonely moors must have seen a sparrow-hawk swooping down. It cannot tell what the lark's private opinions are to be, but at all international governments never appreciates divine dexterity. The sparrow-hawk dashes from twenty minutes half an hour. Sometimes the lark gets clean away—sometimes it takes refuge at the feet of a man or woman, sometimes (rare tage) but more often the poor creature's strength gives out, and it falls down on the stoops and brings it down. When the capture is accomplished the sparrow-hawk dexterity makes itself satisfied in a most unpleasant fashion—by tearing and rending. Partridges and grouse, which are preferred by the larger hawks, seem also to suffer terrible pangs before they are killed. I have from all observation I believe that if the public could be made to get to grips with opinion, they would declare in favor of the sparrow-hawk, and give by the gun rather than in favor of the lark. I speak from a long and wide reading of book and nature. Professor Newman is a man of great learning and ranging ornithological opinion; but we, the people, know the lark's cry, and we shrink from common observation. Those who know the habits of Nature's operations should try to spend one long day in some wild place. They would find the cruel rending of beak and talons. Professor Newman says, 'Man is not necessarily gauging ornithological opinion; but we, the people, know the lark's cry, and we shrink from common observation. Those who know the habits of Nature's operations should try to spend one long day in some wild place. They would find the

AN EXILE OF SIBERIA.

Cruel Death of a Polish Poet by Seven of a Cossack Regiment.

The following account of the dreadful fate of a celebrated Polish poet was cull from Michelet's Martyrs of Siberia.

Apropos of the condemnations of Siberia, so numerous of late years, it will interest many readers to remember that Poland published the authors of one famous conspiracy in the hideous exile. Sigismond, the illustrious Polish poet, with three comrades had formed a project to excite a vast revolt and escape—the mutineers, many of whom belonged to the army, were to fight their way to India, where they would find liberty and safety. The plot was betrayed by some informer. Fascal.

At last, in 1837, the horrible sentence was passed on St. Petersburg. Several Poles and Russians were condemned to receive 7,000 blows, without mercy, without the consent of one; the rest were to receive 3,000, which are sufficient to kill. General Gagadejef had been expressly appointed to intend the execution of the sentence. His aid-de-camp was the Russian indignant. At daybreak two full battalions, each consisting of 1,000 men—so that the blows should be more easily counted—were drawn up in line outside the city. Gatafejef was in the place in the centre, thirty were substituted for rods, and the soldiers were ordered to strike, that the blows might be better laid on.

It was very cold—March in Siberia! Mercoulaef was stripped. He was made the barrel of a rifle, with the bayonet pressing his breast, according to custom. Then two soldiers led him between them, while the soldiers at a regular pace, so that he could advance neither too quickly nor too slowly. Then the regimental physician, who had been ordered to be present, with a few drops of liquor, for his feeble constitution, and he received about three months of prison, and he seemed rather to have been a man; but he had preserved all his strength of soul and force of will. He turned away his head when the doctor approached, and, when he was finished, "Drink our blood and my own! I have no need of your wine." Then, when the signal was given, he repeated the Miserere aloud. Sentenced to receive 3,000 blows, he received thirty thousand! "Strike harder!" The blows were so furious that when he had passed once between the ranks, after having received a thousand blows, upon entering at the other end of the battalion he fell upon the snow, covered with blood, and fainted. They tried to make him stand up again, but he could not keep himself upon his feet. A little outwork was brought, tuns, a stretcher, cocktail was placed upon it on his knees, with his hands tied behind him, and his body bent forward. This all movement was impossible, so he was fastened upon the block. Then the Gatafejef ordered the three hundred Poles, and I was one of them, to remove the ranks. Gatafejef continued to shout: "Harder! harder!" But first bloodcurdling continued to utter groans and wailings, and, by agony. These between groans and exclamations, he cried, altogether, "—" having received 4,000 blows he still groaned, and, beside the remaining 3,000 blows were afterwards inflicted upon the dead body, or rather upon his skeleton. All the victims, especially he, were so worn out with blows that, instead of the ceremony of excommunication (Poles and Russians) with whom I have spoken, should be so far from restained in the air at every blow—nothing but broken bones and consciences to be carried by a minister.

The Poles were afterwards allowed to bury the remains of Mercoulaef, with any marriage ceremony, and the last cross of black wood, with the inscription, "Here lies a Polish poet." Sigismond, Prince Poniatowski, the author of the Polish Poets, and twelve other marriage ceremonies, rising above the solitude of the grave, and, in the silence of the night, crossing the graves of the victims as though implor-ing the mercy of God.

Mr. Parnell's Debut.

There was recently published in Dublin a very interesting little volume by Mr. A. M. Sullivan's celebrated work, "New Ireland," which has passed through and reprinted a remarkable success, and there has been no book published in recent days whose success has been so universally Irish literature greater satisfaction. Coalding Ireland to thirty deeply interesting years of Irish public life, the distinguished author produced a work which, by the interest its own intrinsic merit, won the highest praise from almost every reviewer in both Old and New Worlds. We feel bound to ourselves when it was first issued, as one of the most valuable and attractive books upon Ireland which had appeared for many years. There had not been, since Irish nation, any full and trustworthy record of the period which it embraced, pregnant and fraught with such interest. "New Ireland" we got not only a exhaustive history of the Irish Parliamentary party, but, as it were, an autobiography, written, as it was, chiefly like Sir Jonah Barrington's "Rise and Fall," to which it bore some resemblance, from personal observation. Since then it has gone through and has just a fifth edition, which, in America it is one of the best-read books of the day. It has reached, I verily believe, at irresistible titles in its favor. Five hundred pages have added to its record, five remarkable and memorable years in the history of Ireland. In "A Sequel in five chapters," Mr. Sullivan has written with a vigorous and graphic pen the political decline of Isaac Butt, and the rise of Mr. Parnell, the famous of '78 '79, and the foundation of the Land League, in addition to the Land League, in addition to the Land League, in addition to

THE MONITOR.

TWENTY-SEVEN YEARS OF PUBLICATION.

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 13, 1886.

An "Irish Prohibitionist" Answered

A gentleman, who is, no doubt, animated by good intentions, but who is badly informed, writes to the editor of the MONITOR as follows:

EDITOR OF THE MONITOR:—

Dear Sir: I think if you had given heed to the proceedings of the "National Catholic Temperance Convention," recently held in St. Paul, Minn., you would not have published the article which was copied in the Call of yesterday. It only may, unquestionably, to play into the hands of the whisky dealers, or the managers of the Democratic party have also undertaken to do, but, depend upon it, it will not ultimately. Prohibition is open to amount, in time, "and don't you forget it." AN IRISH PROHIBITIONIST.

SAN FRANCISCO, October 9, 1886.

Now, in order to show our captious critic how very much mistaken he is concerning the whole question of Temperance, from a Catholic standpoint, and also how little is known about the deliverance he cites, we propose to select a few extracts from the speeches, resolutions and letters therein, in order to give our critic a little knowledge wherewith to temper his zeal in the cause of Prohibition. The first extract we make is from the speech of Bishop Ireland, delivered in the Cathedral before the members of the Convention, and, as far from endorsing Prohibition, that admirable Prelate said:

"We do not say that the moderate use of intoxicating liquor is in itself wrong and evil; we are no Manichees. We do not propose to take from, stand, a large property will, that God's bound them by nature, and nature's God, to use which legitimate brands, wine, beer or whisky. But rather do we acknowledge as rating upon reverence by an oligopolists, yet could into office, we claim the God given right to abstain as our own free choice from each use."

Here we have a notable instance of direct opposition to Prohibition on the part of Bishop Ireland, the President of the very Total Abstinence Union whose proceedings our "Irish Prohibitionist" says we did not read! Now let us turn to the resolutions passed by this Catholic body, and if our Prohibition critic has any regard for consistency, he will see at once that the following resolution puts a final quietus on his Prohibition as a plank in the platform of Catholic Total Abstinence Societies:

"Resolved, That inasmuch as every a religious association, entirely Catholic, we can only speak for ourselves, and we do so, in the name of patriotism, the people and in their private capacity, and we do not, and we do not, and we do not

Farm and Home.

Thoughts about Home.

When the springtime of life is past, and you are plunged in the vortex of the world's dissipations, how sweet to look back upon the years of childhood that have passed so swiftly away. Wherever you may be whatever your occupation, there is always something sweet and refreshing in such memories. You are led into dissipation; night throws a veil of obscurity on your doings; but with the morning comes the recollection of the mother who taught your lips to form the name of Jesus, and comes, too, the harvest of the night's carouse. You have fallen into extravagant habits; creditors are pressing upon you, insensibly your thoughts revert to the father whose profession and discouragement you saw no longer counsel. You are growing old; a young family are bustling about you; there is a girl who smoothes your pillow, a boy who fills your pipe in the chimney corner and reads to you; in the one, you trace the gentle lineaments of your mother; in the other, you behold the prop of your declining years. Or, if you travel and see strange cities and peoples, you begin at once to compare them with the surroundings of your childhood's home. Home! How wide the word! Whether it be palace or cabin, mansion or humble cot, whether it be situated in the pleasant country or the noisy town, whether the living of him or the ocean's roar formed music in your ledge cradle, you will yet feel that, all the world over, "there is no place like home."

Large Wages and Easy Work.

It is a misfortune to a young person to be employed in some easy business with large wages. It brings his imagination, his ambition, money is spent without consideration, expensive habits are formed, the principles of economy are forgotten, the victim of big wages, spoiled for hard work, and impoverished entirely at last, he has a very sad prospect before him. I have met men who were in the receipt yearly of from five to twelve thousand dollars. I have known many such to unknown, and small indeed is the recognition a tribute who possessed by their talents permanently. They used to their friends and the class who possess solid or accumulated wealth, or grew industry in gathering their hands, only to see them lose, or perhaps fail to the ground beyond power of replacement. The slower, more moderate, less brilliant fellow generally fortified themselves better against fate, and made their mine from their accumulation of spheres with more fortitude and dignity. Many a girl after earning hundreds of dollars, much of which is spent for ornaments, trifles, ornaments and jewelry fancy, finds herself unemployed with broken health, and with less clothing and less money than her mother had had by while doing comfortably as fifty cents a week.

A Modoc Trout Ranch.

The Modoc Independent of last week says:

"H. Woodson, who owns a ranch at Lake Annie, near Fort Bidwell, has been engaged in the business of trout-raising there for the last three years, and has met with remarkable success. Three years ago Mr. Woodson procured a number of small trout from one of the hatching houses of the Baird Fish Commission, and although at that time there was not a fish of any kind in Lake Annie, the women of the place were soon supplying with nice trout. Mr. Woodson states that he kept had he could count upon, and that which weighed seventeen pounds—they having been in the lake in thirty-one months. A short time ago he caught twelve trout which were only one year old, and the aggregate weight of the twelve fish was twenty-two pounds. He sells fish in the San Bidwell market at twenty five cents per pound, and finds the business very remunerative. Orbent in Surprise Valley are running their chickens to Fort Bidwell, and Mr. Woodson finds no difficulty in disposing of his young fish at $20 per 1,000."

"A Generous Fellow!"

If there is anything a liquor drinker or other prides himself upon, it is that he is a "generous fellow!" A sporting fellow he pulls his fifty cent dollars in his pocket, walks up to the bar, turns around, and calls out to the newly congregated in a saloon, with the utmost freedom and unconstraint, "Fellows, I'm a generous fellow and will treat every fellow with a 10 cent cigar between his teeth." The hangers-on and all the loafers say: "He's a generous fellow!" and the tout shows in: "You bet he is! They're nobbut mean fellows in." That is the usual comfort. But that is only one side of the question. In nine cases out of 10 you follow that fellow to his home, you will find that his wife and children are the most empty creatures that wander about with the money so foolishly spent, and which has made him the mean fellow he is, and he has a very sad prospect before him. I have met men who were in the receipt yearly of from five to twelve thousand dollars. I have known many such to unknown, and small indeed is the recognition a tribute who possessed by their talents permanently. They used to their friends and the class who possess solid or accumulated wealth, or grew industry in gathering their hands, only to see them lose, or perhaps fail to the ground beyond power of replacement. The slower, more moderate, less brilliant fellow generally fortified themselves better against fate, and made their mine from their accumulation of spheres with more fortitude and dignity. Many a girl after earning hundreds of dollars, much of which is spent for ornaments, trifles, ornaments and jewelry fancy, finds herself unemployed with broken health, and with less clothing and less money than her mother had had by while doing comfortably as fifty cents a week.

A Modoc Trout Ranch.

The Modoc Independent of last week says:

"H. Woodson, who owns a ranch at Lake Annie, near Fort Bidwell, has been engaged in the business of trout-raising there for the last three years, and has met with remarkable success. Three years ago Mr. Woodson procured a number of small trout from one of the hatching houses of the Baird Fish Commission, and although at that time there was not a fish of any kind in Lake Annie, the women of the place were soon supplying with nice trout. Mr. Woodson states that he kept had he could count upon, and that which weighed seventeen pounds—they having been in the lake in thirty-one months. A short time ago he caught twelve trout which were only one year old, and the aggregate weight of the twelve fish was twenty-two pounds. He sells fish in the San Bidwell market at twenty five cents per pound, and finds the business very remunerative. Orbent in Surprise Valley are running their chickens to Fort Bidwell, and Mr. Woodson finds no difficulty in disposing of his young fish at $20 per 1,000."

"A Generous Fellow!"

If there is anything a liquor drinker or other prides himself upon, it is that he is a "generous fellow!" A sporting fellow he pulls his fifty cent dollars in his pocket, walks up to the bar, turns around, and calls out to the newly congregated in a saloon, with the utmost freedom and unconstraint, "Fellows, I'm a generous fellow and will treat every fellow with a 10 cent cigar between his teeth." The hangers-on and all the loafers say: "He's a generous fellow!" and the tout shows in: "You bet he is! They're nobbut mean fellows in." That is the usual comfort. But that is only one side of the question. In nine cases out of 10 you follow that fellow to his home, you will find that his wife and children are the most empty creatures that wander about with the money so foolishly spent, and which has made him the mean fellow he is, and he has a very sad prospect before him. I have met men who were in the receipt yearly of from five to twelve thousand dollars. I have known many such to unknown, and small indeed is the recognition a tribute who possessed by their talents permanently. They used to their friends and the class who possess solid or accumulated wealth, or grew industry in gathering their hands, only to see them lose, or perhaps fail to the ground beyond power of replacement. The slower, more moderate, less brilliant fellow generally fortified themselves better against fate, and made their mine from their accumulation of spheres with more fortitude and dignity. Many a girl after earning hundreds of dollars, much of which is spent for ornaments, trifles, ornaments and jewelry fancy, finds herself unemployed with broken health, and with less clothing and less money than her mother had had by while doing comfortably as fifty cents a week.

MISCELLANEOUS.

ROOFS

[TIRI ASPHALTUM!!]
New Roofs or Lower Rates.
Old Roofs Repaired.
And GUARANTEED when so
187 MARKET STREET
Bet. Fourteenth and Fifth.
Office 18 and 20 Marks Place.
H. G. FISKE.

LYDIA E. PINKHAM'S VEGETABLE COMPOUND.
A Sure Cure for all FEMALE WEAKNESSES, Including Leucorrhœa, Irregular and Painful Menstruation, Inflammation and Ulceration of the Womb, Floodings, PROLAPSUS OVARII, &c.
It Dissolves to the tender, affections and humiliate to its cause. It is a great help to pregnancy, and is taken with during labor and at regular periods.
Hundreds can testify to its permanent cure.
It is an Unfailing ally of the generative organs of either sex. It is second to no remedy that has ever been offered to the public, as the Record of the Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. in the Secret Archives of the Company can testify.
It Relieves COMPLAINTS of Either Sex Tired Great Relief in Its Use.
LYDIA E. PINKHAM'S BLOOD PURIFIER will make the worst scrofulous humor from the blood, at the same time will give vigor and strength to the whole system. Such is the testimony of thousands.
Any such that have used Blood and Liver Purifier are prepared at 233 and 235 Western Avenue, Lynn, Mass. Price of either, $1. Six bottles for $5. The Compound is sent by mail in the form of pills, or of lozenges, on receipt of price, $1 per box for either. Mrs. Pinkham freely answers all letters of inquiry. Inclose 3 cent stamp. Send for pamphlet. Address the above.
LYDIA E. PINKHAM'S LIVER PILLS, cure Constipation, Biliousness and Torpidity of the Liver. 25 cents.
Sold by all Druggists.

The Golden Palace
TEA STORE,
227 And 229 Second Street,
Has Been Greatly Enlarged to Accommodate the Immense Business.
THE CHEAPEST GROCERIES ONLY KEPT IN STOCK
Tea and coffee prices that defy competition. Premiums are positively save money by trading in this store. Full weight and satisfaction guaranteed. Goods sold wholesale and retail. The celebrated Rosberry Flour, warranted equal to any flour in the market. Extra family Flour, $5 per barrel. Best Ohio Potatoes, from a total; order and be convinced of the advantage to be derived from trading at the Golden Palace.
GEO. W. CHAPMAN.

MISCELLANEOUS.

RALSTON'S PHARMACY.
J. H. RALSTON
— MAS JUST OPENED A — New Drug Store,
N. W. cor. Post & Powell sts., — WITH A NEAT STOCK OF — Fresh Drugs, Pure Chemicals, — AND A VARIED ASSORTMENT OF —
TOILET ARTICLES, FINE PERFUMES, ETC.
Prescriptions accurately compounded, day or night.

RAZORS!
FOR $1,000
I WILL MAKE A BETTER RAZOR AND HONE GO them in the same time than any such IN THE WORLD
My own make warranted $2 5
My Guard Razors warranted not to cut the flesh while shaving 3 5
Good English Razors 1 00
Best English Razors 1 50
Sent C. O. D. or by mail.
M. PRICE,
415 Kearny Street.
Grinding and Repairing.
ESTABLISHED 1864.

J. COONEY,
PRACTICAL
Painter and Whitener.
SIGNS NEATLY EXECUTED.
NO. 113 FOURTH STREET,
San Francisco, Cal.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE CATHOLIC
Mutual Beneficial ASSOCIATION
Archdiocese of San Francisco.
President - - Rev. J. B. McNally.
PRESENTS A PLAN OF LIFE INSURANCE FOR Catholics that should be endorsed by all prudent people. It is the most
SAFE AND ECONOMICAL
method of life insurance extant, and is open to a Catholic from 18 to 55 years of age. Attributes Assessment Plan, with Certificates of Indemnity, recommended by most Rev. Archbishop Alemany, the Diocesan Board, and the officers of the association are administered with the most rigid economy. The rates of the association has been reduced to $10 (18 months) every month (under the Centennial Hotel Market Street) will be in session every evening except Sundays, from 7 to 9 o'clock, to receive applications for membership and to give information. Written communications should be addressed to EDWARD GILSON, Secretary,
2118 Jones Street.

FASHIONABLE DRESSMAKING.
MRS. J. MULCAHEY,
late Miss H. Rapin, formerly of New York.
MODES DE PARIS.
Cutting and Fitting a Specialty.
110 Taylor St., bet. Turk & Eddy.

Established ..... 1866.
M. VULICEVICH,
— REMOVED TO —
405 and 407 DAVIS ST.,
Two doors north of Washington
Importer and Wholesale Dealer in Foreign and Domestic Fruits.
All orders receive prompt and satisfactory attention

REMOVAL.
JAS. R. KELLY & CO
IMPORTERS AND JOBBERS OF
PAINTS, OILS and GLASS,
HAVE REMOVED TO
221 and 223 Market Street
Just Below Beale—the New Block.

IT HAS NO EQUAL.
NEWELL'S ULTIMATUM
IS UNDOUBTEDLY THE SAFEST, MOST AGREEABLE and EFFECTUAL Remedy for COUGHS AND COLDS.
It is not 4 simple Shadow, but yet a vile compound of Opium, Ipecac, Tartar Emetic, Sugar and Water, and pretty much as bad as it looks. Does its work best and cheapest by the proprietor, and he has never heard a disembody voice in reply to letter or card never expects to.
W. W. NEWELL, 816 Commercial Street

THE GREAT CONVENIENCE
of the NEW YORK CATHOLIC AGENCY is that by the writing of one letter, and the one remittance, hundred and one matters of Religious Information, which one can get only through personal visitation, and sometimes even then, at the expense of much time and trouble, it is now brought by simply any person or public institution desiring personal and prompt attention. The Advantage to office seeking to your agent are more valuable than ever. Address
THOMAS D. BOAN,
New York Catholic Agency, 38 Dorsey Street, near Mott Park Place.

S. F. STOCK BREWERY.
Ale, Porter, and Lager Beer in Bulk or Bottle, Superior to any on the Pacific Coast.

S. E. cor. Powell and Francisco streets.
Order received by Telephone No. 8011.

D. Langell's Asthma and Catarrh Remedy
Cures in 7 hours, Asthma in 5 days. Your Druggist will procure it for you. Ask for it. Address D. LANGELL, Wooster, O., Proprietor.

WOOD AND COAL.
COAL. COAL. COAL.
2,240 LBS. TO THE TON
Full Weight and Quality Guaranteed.
Coke and Kindling Wood Constantly on hand at very LOWEST Prices.
T. L. SMITH,
Cor. Eleventh and Market Sts.
Telephone Order Solicited.
DUNDEE COAL CO.,
NO COMBINATION.
GREAT REDUCTIONS
OF ALL KINDS OF
FOREIGN & DOMESTIC COAL.
Coke in Our House Boiler. Delivered Free.
J. FLYNN,
1112 and 1116 Mission Street.
J. M. JOHNSON,
— DEALER IN AND DEPOT OF —
Wood, Coal & Charcoal
YARD AT 113 GOLDEN GATE AVE
(Formerly Tyler Street.)
Office at 209 Sutter St., nr. Kearny, San Francisco.
Orders left at "Bulletin" Bulletin, No. 11 Powell street will receive prompt attention. Telephone connections.
$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $5 outfit free. Address H. Hallett & Co., Portland, Me.

TAILORS.

John Kavanagh,
MERCHANT TAILOR,
6 New Montgomery Street,
PALACE HOTEL, S. F.
The Making of Clergymens' Cassocks a Specialty

N. SWEENY,
MERCHANT TAILOR
41 Second street,
(Opposite Jones street) ..... San Francisco
Cassocks and Clerical Clothing a Specialty.

M. FITZPATRICK
— IS —
The BOSS Tailor,
Of the Pacific Coast.
36 1-2 FOURTH STREET;
Corner of Jones ..... San Francisco
Go there for your CLOTHES. You are sure to be BOSSED and don't you forget it.

THOMAS DRADY,
MERCHANT TAILOR
No. 6 Third Street,
Near Market, S. F.

E. F. WILTON,
MERCHANT
TAILOR,
12 Stockton Street.
NEAR MARKET ST., SAN FRANCISCO

JOHN HICKEY,
Merchant Tailor,
36 Fourth street,
Between Market and Mission streets ..... San Francisco.
Business Suits to order from $20
Pants " 5
Fine Dress Suits " 35
Black Doeskin Pants 7

DENIS REDMOND
MERCHANT TAILOR,
No. 508 Hayes street.
Perfect fit and good work guaranteed.

BELLS ETC.

MENEELY BELL FOUNDRY.
Favorably known to the public since 1826. Superior Church Bells, Chimes and other bells; also Chimes and Peals.
MENEELY & CO., WEST TROY, N. Y.

BUCKEYE BELL FOUNDRY.
Bells of Pure Copper and Tin for Churches, Schools, Farms, Factories, Clocks, Chimes, etc.
VANDUZEN & TIFT, Cincinnati, O.

BLYMYER MFG. CO.
Church, School, Factory, Chime and other Bells.
CINCINNATI, OHIO.

NEW FRANKLIN HOTEL,
Cor. Sansome and Pacific streets.
H. CURRAN, - - - - - - - Proprietor
THIS WELL KNOWN AND FAVORITE HOTEL IS SITUATED IN A MOST CENTRAL AND HEALTHY location and offers good accommodations to families and the traveling public, and is the nearest Hotel to all parts of the Oregon steamers.
Board and Rooms per day, $1 00. Board and Rooms per week, $5 to $6. Rooms per night, 15c.
Free Lunch for the use of Families. Prices but the most obliging White help employed.

HARVEY'S
HOT-WATER RADIATOR.

SECURES A MILD UNIFORM TEMPERATURE without the unpleasant waste of fuel or litter of the open grate; a most healthy and atmosphere without the dust, parching air or noxious gases of the hot-air furnace or stove; a noiseless diffusion of heat without the bluster or crushing of the steam system.
For Information or Descriptive Circulars send free.
NO. 213
MISSION ST.
Bet. Main and Beale.] [SAN FRANCISCO.

JOSEPH MAYER,
ORGAN BUILDER,
No. 127 Page Street, San Francisco.
MANUFACTURES AND REPAIRS OF ALL KINDS OF
CHURCH AND PARLOR ORGANS.
All Orders to the above Address will receive prompt attention.

R. HERRING,
— MANUFACTURER OF —
FINE FURNITURE
MANTELS,
House, Bank, and Office Fittings,
In Pacific Coast Woods a Specialty.
Nos. 429 and 431 FOURTH STREET, Cor. of Silver.
DESIGNS FURNISHED.

MEDICAL REMEDIES.

Ayer's
Hair Vigor,
FOR RESTORING GRAY HAIR TO ITS NATURAL VITALITY AND COLOR.
It is a most agreeable dressing, which is at once harmless and effectual, for preserving the hair. It restores, with the gloss and freshness of youth, faded or gray, light, and red hair, to a rich brown, or deep black, as may be desired. By its use thin hair is thickened, and baldness often though not always, checked. It clears the scalp of the hair immediately, and causes a new growth in all cases where the glands are not decayed; while it healthy, weak, or otherwise diseased hair, it imparts vitality and strength, and renders it pliable.
The Vigor cleanses the scalp, cures and prevents the formation of dandruff; and, by its cooling, stimulating, and soothing properties, it heals most if not all of the humors and disease peculiar to the scalp, keeping it cool, clean, and soft, under which conditions disease of the scalp and hair are impossible.
As a Dressing for Ladies' Hair The Vigor is incomparable. It is colorless, contains neither oil nor dye, and will not soil white cambric. It imparts an agreeable and lasting perfume, and as an article for the toilet it is economical and unsurpassed in its excellence.
Prepared by Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Practical and Analytical Chemists, Lowell, Mass.
SOLD BY ALL DRUGGISTS EVERYWHERE.

DR. PHELAN,
(Graduate of the University of New York.)
Formerly Physician to Sacramento and St. Mary's Hospitals.
MEMBER OF CALIFORNIA PIONEERS.
Office and Residence 806 Third Street Cor. Bryant.

PARKER'S HAIR BALSAM
A perfect dressing and unrivaled beautifier. Restores color to gray hair. Removes scurf and dandruff. Promotes a luxuriant growth. Cures scalp diseases and hair falling.
All Druggists, Perfumers and Fancy Goods Dealers.

PARKER'S GINGER TONIC
Heals all wasting every with Consumption, Age, Worry Disease or Indiscretion. It is the Great Strengthening Restorative Stimulant. Sold by all Druggists, Dealers in Medicines, Fancy Goods, Perfumery, Liquors, etc. Price $1 per bottle.

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS.

LOVERS OF MUSIC
Are Respectfully Invited to see the Wonderful Pianos
FAY PIANOS.
FLOOR TUNED AND REPAIRED.
1729 Mission, opp. Woodward's.
All Sheet Music at Half Price.

W. A. HAMMOND,
Watchmaker and Jeweler,
No. 4 Sixth Street,
(Second door from Market)
Watches Cleaned, $1. Glasses, 10c.

CLIMAX WASHING POWDER
Is Guaranteed Not to Injure Clothing.
IT SAVES LABOR, FUEL AND SOAP. HAS GIVEN entire satisfaction to all who have tried it. Ask your grocer for it. For sale at the Factory Rm 304, Howard Street

Studabecker's Tailor's Square.
A Perfect System of Dress Cutting.
Office, 604 Stockton Street, S. F. Cal.

N. Gray & Co.,
UNDERTAKERS,
641 Sacramento Street,
Cor. Sansome ..... San Francisco
EMBALMING.
Metallic Burial Cases Always on Hand.

LITHOGRAPHERS. ENGRAVERS
P. E. DOUGHERTY & CO.,
STEAM
BOOK AND JOB PRINTERS,
412 Commercial St., and 411 Clay St.
Between Sansome and Battery.

JOHN A. LENNON,
Wholesale Grocer,
AND DEALER IN
Choice Brands
Japan and English Breakfast Tea.
Chief Agent, Alex Fagu Lagasse, Artist-in-Chief Tea Taster, Pure Teas Only 50c for Superior Langue.
Nos. 813 and 817 Clay Street ..... San Francisco

THE SKIN TIGHTENER.
WHEN THE SKIN OF THE FACE RELAXES WE look old and sorry. Lines and hollows appear on each side of the mouth, with furrows, are removed by using Mme. Lozo's Skin Tightener (Tonic), and nothing else. Prepared and sold only by MME. LOZO, 1009 Stockton street.

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS.

LOVERS OF MUSIC
Are Respectfully Invited to see the Wonderful Pianos
FAY PIANOS.
FLOOR TUNED AND REPAIRED.
1729 Mission, opp. Woodward's.
All Sheet Music at Half Price.

KNABE
PIANOS
"For beauty of tone, touch and action, I have never seen their equal."
CLARA LOUISE KELLOGG.
"The Knabe" is absolutely the best Piano made."
A. L. BANCROFT & CO.
721 Market Street, S. F.
SOLE AGENTS FOR THE PACIFIC COAST.

PIANOS
OF EVERY STYLE AND WHERE and at what price, AND AT THE SAME PRICE AS THE EASTERN AGENTS.
Piano Tuning and Repairing a specialty. Last paid for second hand Pianos. WALTER D. PIERCE, 26 Sansome Street, under Palace Hotel, S. F.

CHICKERING
PIANOS.
B. CURTAZ, AGENT
No. 20 O'Farrell Street.

STATHAM
PIANOS
Received Gold Medal at late Mechanics Fair.
Are Unsurpassed in Tone, Touch and Durability.
SOLD FOR CASH OR INSTALLMENTS
At the Factory:
765 MISSION STREET, 765
Tuning and Repairing a Specialty.

EMPLOYMENT ETC.

O'BRIEN & WARD'S
EMPLOYMENT OFFICE.
816 CLAY STREET,
Opposite Clay Street Bank, and a few door above Montgomery street.
HAS ALWAYS ON HAND FIRST class Hotel Help, Farm Hands, Teamsters, Dairymen, Shepherds, Sawmill Hands, Mechanics, Gardeners, Coachmen, and married couples for private families and ranches, without any charge to employers.

MONITOR MENTION.

— Father Arnold Damen, S. J. the veteran missionary through whose zeal hundreds of converts have been received into the Church, is still raising his voice for God's holy cause. He recently gave a mission at Verdin, Illinois.

— Best Picture taken at the Imperial, 724 Market street.

— Mason, all makers, $50 to $200. Tuning, $3; repairing. Tobin, 17 Tark.

— Fans, umbrellas, parasols, stationery, and all kinds of ornaments repaired, 810 Post street.

— Mrs. Marion Todd, Alameda, Alameda County, Room 31, San Francisco.

— Rittmann's Russia Salve has proved its efficacy by a test of 75 years' constant use. Try it.

— Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound strengthens the stomach and kidneys and aids digestion.

— Carpet-beating and whitening, 253 Tyler, Oakland branch, Hot and Telegraph avenue; telephone, 2,136. Cecilia Ross.

— Oyster cocktail is admirable tonic, and the best place to get it is at M. F. Dunleavy's, 530 Market street.

— New stock, gramophones, Edison's, John F. Myers, 17 Fourth street, and Myers & Sons, 1118 Sixth st.

— 2,000 vols. old and new books, stationery, etc. Book and News Stand, R. W. cor. Sutter and Kearny. JOHN N. PHELAN.

— Mrs. J. H. Holts, Needle, Phelan Building, room 302 and 303, Jessamine, gives in all kinds of oil painting and drawing. Orders executed.

— Don't miss the sale of books and shoes at 1123 Market street. The cause of the unusual reduction is to-root. Kid boots to enter, $1. D. A. Hirsch.

— Some lady friends of ours who have purchased cloaks, suits, underwear, etc., for their wives and children at Mrs. Mainey's, 26 Sixth street, are perfectly satisfied with style, fit and price. We have also purchased for ourselves shirts, underwear, and hosiery, and find the same.

— Jungk Lithograph, for many years with A. F. Bernard, corner of Fifth and Howard streets, has not left San Francisco, but is located at 1123 Sixth street, between Howard and Folsom, with his stock of wood cuts, and his facilities are filled. Orders filled and delivered to all parts of the city free.

— Joe Alexander's Mexican Restaurant, Open day and night, 104 Kearny, below Bush, Kearny Avenue, San Francisco. Tamales, enchiladas, mole, etc., a specialty. Meals prepared at all hours. Orders for balls, banquets and parties promptly attended to. Fine wines and Liquors constantly on hand.

— Amazing sales of tweed rates gold and silver $1; working tools of every reliable manufacture; gold watches by mail and express; silver warranted, weight of solid on counters; silver warranted, weight of solid on counters; silver warranted, weight of solid on counters. H. LANE, Frank's Building, Washington and Dupont streets, 1.4.5.7.

— The Prescott House, corner of Kearny street and Montgomery avenue, under the proprietorship of Mr. Wm. Mahoney, continues to be one of the most orderly hotels in the city. The rate for board and lodging, from $1 to $1 50 a day, or less by the week. The accommodations are first-class, and country customers will find the Prescott House very well conducted.

— Those of our readers who are housekeepers and who may occasionally need upholstery work done, or who may need a mattress made or renovated, would do well to patronize Robert Bick, No. 1118 Market st. Mr. Bick, alone with being competent in his charge, guarantees all work done to be of the best, for the price. He is a thorough upholsterer, and makes a specialty of repairing and ornamenting.

— Where is now approaching and prudent people always go for their clothing and to be sure of a good article of Clothing. Our readers will find the firm of Levy, Wise & Co., 1 Kearny and 1 Dupont, and 1 Dupont, Montgomery street, Fully prepared to supply them with clothing, Gents' Furnishing Goods, Hats, Caps, Quality and Style and weight guaranteed. Prices much lower than elsewhere.

— Our country readers when visiting the city will find the Brooklyn Hotel, Bush Street, the most convenient and best place to stop at. Terms reasonable. The charges have been reduced to $1 per day. Omnibus to and from the house free. Mr. Gerhard Schmidt, proprietor, will be pleased to receive his friends and patrons, and will devote all their attention to the comfort of their guests.

— Women who people predict that the coming winter will be cold, and that the coming winter will be cold, and that therefore, for our readers to remember that the Elliott Coal is the best and most economical fuel, and that they can procure a supply of this coal as well as all the other varieties of coal from the sole agent, Thomas Morton, 420 Geary street, Orders can be left at the office, 420 Geary street, or can be sent through telephone No. 2192.

— For a good cough or cold there is no remedy equal to Ammen's Cough Syrup.

— We think it unnecessary to go to a doctor and pay him so large a consideration, when we can get a bottle of the utmost importance to pay attention to a cough or cold, or relief can still remain, when we can get a bottle of our Ammen's Cough Syrup. If we have failed yet to do all that is claimed for it, and we take pleasure in recommending it to our readers. If you have not tried it, go to your druggist and ask for one bottle and if not satisfied, take it back.

Useful to the Family.

We usually leave it to doctors to recommend medicines, but Parker's Ginger Tonic has been so useful in our family in relieving sickness and suffering that we cannot say too much in its praise.—Union Argus. See adv.

— $1,000 a year can be easily made at home selling for C. O. Bidwell & Co., 19 Market street, New York. Send for their catalogue and full particulars.

Various Causes—

Attending years, care, sickness, disappointment, and hereditary predisposition, are the causes of the hair gray, and abhor of them indicate it to premature old age. Ayer's Hair Vigor will restore faded or gray, light or red hair to a rich brown or deep black, and prevent its falling off. It adds and cleanses the scalp, giving it a healthy vigorous action. It restores and renews the dead and humous. By its use falling hair is checked, and a new growth will be produced in cases where the follicles are not destroyed or the glands decayed. Its effects are beautiful and even as healthy weak or sickly hair, on which its application will produce the glow and freshness of youth. Harmless and easy in its operation, it is incomparable as a dressing, and especially valued for the soft lustre and richness it imparts to the hair. It contains neither oil nor dye, and will not soil or color white cambric as other dressings do, and keeps it fresh and vigorous.

For Sale by all Dealers.

Burnett's Cocoaine Garden Hose

Families will find this a first-class article. It is water-proof, lasts with the best Para rubber, guaranteed to stand 500 pounds pressure to the inch, and is far better than any made from pure rubber hose. Will not break in the kinks, rot on the grass, nor injured by exposure to the sun. Warranted to last for years. For sale by W. Y. Schmeck, 30 California street, San Francisco.

NERVOUS DEBILITY.

A CURE GUARANTEED.

M. E. C. WEST'S NERVE AND BRAIN TREATMENT, a specific for Hysteria, Dizziness, Convulsions, Nervous Headache, Mental Depression, Loss of Memory, Spermatorrhœa, Impotence, Premature Old Age, caused by over-exertion, Self-abuse, or excesses of the Brain, Wakefulness, Pain in the Back, Seminal Emissions, Lassitude, Pain in the side, Dim Vision, Premature Old Age, and many other diseases that lead to Insanity or Consumption. Six boxes, $5. Sent by express, C.O.D. or by mail on receipt of price. Address M. E. C. WEST, Druggist, Sole Agent, 1 Kearny street, San Francisco.

Wholesale Agents: Redington & Co., Sherman, Davis & Co., Langley & Michels, Goldberg, Bowen & Co., Frank Brothers, Sacramento; Cunningham, Curtin & Co., Los Angeles.

Agents Wanted Everywhere in all towns and cities to sell the Celebrated Ever-Ready Shoe Lacer. Sample by mail, 25 cents. Address Ever-Ready Shoe Lacer Co., 1 Kearny street, San Francisco.

MISCELLANEOUS.

A Thing of Beauty is a Joy Forever.

DAMASCUS!
THE CREME DAMASCUS, OR LOTUS PEARL FOR the complexion, unlike most face preparations, does not give a whitewashed appearance to the skin, but it imparts to its effects, making the complexion fairer and clearer, and giving the skin, when it is a spirit, velvet and pearl like.
"THE CREME DAMASCUS" is not a paint, but it will make the complexion fair, clear, rich and transparent, pimples, eruptions, spots and sunburns, giving the skin a healthy and natural glow. It effects in a few days. Purchase one, and be convinced.
The CREME DAMASCUS is recommended into the finest product in use, and is entirely free from lead, mercury or any other injurious ingredient, and is perfectly beautiful with the CREME DAMASCUS. Ladies can obtain it of any druggist, or send 50 cents in a letter and receive a pound and a half by return mail, postage paid. Address, Dr. Ferry & Co., San Francisco.
The DAMASCUS will be promptly sent to you.

DR. WOOD'S
Liver Regulator,
— THE —
Universal Vegetable Panacea
OF CONCENTRATED EXTRACTS.
Selected and compounded from among the many Herbs and Plants of NATURE'S GREAT BOTANIC GARDEN!
For the Speedy and Permanent Relief of the Most Hopeless Cases of Dyspepsia, Jaundice, Chills and Fever, Disordered Digestion, Flatulency and Acid-ity, Sour Sulphitus of Wind and Gas from the Stomach.
Sick Headache, Constipated Bowels and General Debility.
And all other Diseases arising from a bilious state of the system or an inactive or disordered liver.
Sold by all Druggists.
REDINGTON & CO.,
Wholesale Druggists,
Agents for the Pacific Coast, San Francisco.

JOHN WIGMORE,
Hardwood Lumber,
Ship Timber,
CEDAR TREENAILS,
VENEERS & FANCY WOODS,
129 to 147 Spear St
— AND —
26 and 28 Howard Sts.,
SAN FRANCISCO.

An Elegant Corset to Order for $4.

FIRE!! FIRE!!
JNO. R. SIMS & SON,
Manufacturers of all kinds of Fireproof Doors and Window Blinds.
SHUTTERS, BURGLAR-PROOF SAFE VAULTS AND Safes, sprinkler lines (pipes and heads), fire-escapes, metallic ceilings, Balconies, Stairs, Railings, Tin Roofs, Skylights, Ventilators, Cornices, Gutters, Spouting, Tin Plate, Galvanized Iron, Sheet Iron, and every Description of Work in the Sheet Metal line. Also, Agents for Tarbert, an easy chair for invalids, and Tarbert's Patent Bedstead, Special attention paid to the above Specialties. Orders promptly attended to.
Nos. 130 and 132 Beale Street.

A. McDOWELL & ARGUELLO,
SAN FRANCISCO
CARPET BEATING MACHINES,
1361 and 1363 Market Street, S. F.
(Between Ninth and Tenth Streets.)
Re-Fitting CARPETS a Specialty.
WE EMPLOY NONE BUT EXPERIENCED MEN. We make Beaters for the recognition of orders will be found at the following places: S. N. Ney, Brown and Clough streets; S. W. cor. Fourth and Market streets; Mrs. Ward, 1 Ellis street; Mrs. Ward, 1 Ellis street; Mrs. Ward, 1 Ellis street

LETTER FROM SISTER MARY FRANCIS CLARE.

WHAT WE ARE DOING AT ENCOE.

ENCOE OF THE MONITOR:

Dear Sir:—I think your readers will like to hear something of what we are doing at Encoe. Our little community is already established here but the only place we could get for a temporary Convent is an old stable or coach house in which our accommodations are obliged to be of rather a primitive character. However we think of Bethlehem and it is only too great an honor to be any place in holy Mary's Son.

Last week we had a visit from Right Rev. Dr. Manogue, Bishop of Sacramento, Father Ouellet who accompanied him, and Father Brady, another and told the pilgrims he had come purposely to receive the vows of the Sisters. He was immediately by the sea of the month from here. Father Brady is a newly ordained priest and he just Rose here. About two years ago he became seriously ill while studying at the Irish College Paris, he was obliged to return home. The doctors pronounced his case hopeless, in fact the lungs were so seriously affected he was told to make up his mind to become his mother. He resolved to die family, how sorrowful only those who have been similarly circumstanced can understand, and those only who have longed for and realized the most glorious vocation on earth, the honor that Angels might envy, can understand the happiness, when after a visit to Knock, and a promise to say his first Mass there he was able continue his studies, and did say his first Mass last last month. It is now on the feast of the Most Holy Rosary, and as we thought of Irish priests and of Irish people, we felt that the Rosary was the most appropriate prayer for them, and we felt that the Blessed Mother of God that if our new church was built, most of the vows would Blessed every window during the month of October, and that the hymns and litanies used this people supported in groups, each still repeating a decade, and that, when it was over, Mass, at the same time, in a district of Ireland, that the day to this most powerful of powerful Ireland, for even a little central Ireland, the Rosary would also be the most appropriate. It is not sentimental. It is true there are some parts of this country which contrast very unfavorably with the Ireland we left behind us, and, of course, it is a large country, and it is a country of the whole country. Still it is sad to wise to write and speak of it as it had nothing but all bad! Surely crime is not the only thing that has driven Ireland's children who have lived and labored amongst the Saints, and who have lived in Ireland, and who are at the present moment, the weight of guilt, of which, by long gone by is borne. As Catholics we should surely beware of any accusation of Ireland, though I think it may justly those who are but Catholics, and who have not yet with certainty been against those who make it.

I am sending you this letter without expressing the grateful acknowledgment of our Institute, particularly to all who have helped us here. I know the money and it cannot tell us how much it means to us. Our Sisters from all parts of the world but every little helps and I think you may be glad to know that we will not fail to have a share in helping the poor Sisters of Mercy in Ireland.

IN THE HEART OF JESUS

Encoe, Oct. 1st, 1882.

Market Report.

Corrected Weekly by F. J. Daly, 604 Battery street.

MONTHLY CIRCUL.
604 Clay St., Tuesday Evening, Oct 17, 1882.

DOMESTIC PRODUCE MARKET.

Flour—
Quotations are: City Extras, $5 50@5 87½; City Superfine, $4 50@4 75; interior brands, $4 75@5 75; for extra, and $5 75@6 00 for superfine.

Wheat—
Quotations are: Standard No. 1 Shipping, $1 37½@1 40½; No. 3, $1 04@ per cental. Extra Choice, $1 72½@.

Poultry—
Quotations are: Live Turkeys, 16@20c; Dressed, @; Ducks, $6 00@7 00; Brollers, $4 00@5 00; Hens, $6 00@7 50; Young Roosters, $7 00@7 50; Old, $5 00@6 00 P dozen; Geese, $1 50@1 50 P pair; Pigeons, $2 00 Squabs, $3 25@3 50 P doz; Good Geese $6 00@ P lb.

Eggs—
Quotable at 42@45c for choice; 42@45c for Mottled California; Lime, 35c; Eastern, 30@35; Salt Lake, —@—; Oregon, 35@35c P doz.

Butter—
Quotations are: Roll, Extra, $1 37½@1 37½ Standard Choice, $1 25@1 30; Fair, $1 00@1 20.

Potatoes—
Quotations are: Silver skins, 65@85 P ctl.

Onions—
Quotable at $3 00@4 P ton; table meal, Sweetness—
Quotable at $1@1½c P lb.

Beans—
Quotations are: Choice fresh roll Butter, 27½@27½c; Fancy, 40c; Medium 30, 35@40c; Pickled, 30@32c; Eastern Butter, 18@22c P lb.

Cheese—
Quotations are: California Cheese, 10@11c; Eastern, 14@15c; Giley Imitation Eastern, 12@ 13c P lb.

Dried Fruit—
Quotations are: Green Apples, 20@25 P box; Strawberries $7 @$10 per chest; Peas, 80@81 P box; Berries, $1 50@2 00 P box; Peaches, $1@2 P box; 50@87 50 P chest; Cal. Figs, 2@3c; white, 3@4c; Prunes, 80@1c P box; Calmeriques, 80@1c P crate; Watermelons, 1c each; 10 P lb; White Grapes, 50@60 P box; Crab Apples, 50@75 P box; Nectarines, 1@2 P box; Mission Grapes, 50@75 P box; Sweet Lemons, $7@8 P box; Mission Grapes, 30@35 Persian Limes, 50@87 50 P box.

Vegetables—
Quotations are: Cabbage, 50@75c P ctl; Garlic, 10@15c lb Marrowfat Peas, 6@ 20c; Cauliflower, 50 P doz; Chili Peppers, dry, 15@20c P lb; Dry Okra, 20c P lb; Tomato, 75@87 P box; Carrots, 25@ P box; Cucumbers, 50@75 P box; Egg Plant, 50@75c P each; Green Peas, 5@6c P lb Green Corn, 10 at 15c P doz.

Ex Chor, $2 00@2 10; No. 1, $1 40@1 47½; No. 2, $1 10@1 15.

Quotable at $1 70@1 72½ for Yellow; White, $1 90@2 10 P ctl.

Hay—
Quotations are: Wheat, old, $15@16 00; old Barley, $13@13 00; volunteer and stable, $9 50@ $11 00; oat, $11@13 P ton.

Quotable $9@12 P bale.

HAMS—Eastern, 17@19c; California, 14@ 15c.

BACON—California, 15@17c; Eastern, 18@ Extra Clear Sides, 18c; California Shoulders 10@11 c.

PORK—Extra Clear Pork, old, $22 00; do in half bbl, $12 50; Clear, P bbl, $27 50; do half bbl, $15 50; Mess P bbl, $25 00; do half bbl, $13 50; Prime Mess, P bbl, $22 00; do half bbl, $12 00; Prime, P bbl, $19 00; do half bbl, $10 00; Mess Beef, P bbl, $17 00; do half bbl, $9 00; Prime Mess Beef, P bbl, $18@20; Extra Prime, P bbl, $16 00.

LARD—Eastern Refined, tes, 14c; do in fancy pails, 15@16c; do in 50-lb tins, 14@c; do in 10-lb tins, 15c; do in 5-lb tins, 16c; California Refined, 12½@13c; do in 50-lb tins, 13c; do in 10-lb tins, 13½c; do in 5-lb tins, 14@15c; Kettle Rendered, 15@16c; do in 10-lb tins, 16@17c; do in 5-lb tins, 18@19c; Leaf 5-lb pails, 14c P lb.

TALLOW—Mess Beef, P bbl, $18@20; Extra Prime, P bbl, $16 00; Prime, P bbl, $14 00; Extra Mess, P bbl, $16 00; Mess Beef, P bbl, $14 00; Prime Beef, P bbl, $12 00.

DEMOCRATIC STATE TICKET

FOR GOVERNOR.

For Governor.....GEORGE STONEMAN
For Lieut-Governor.....JOHN DAGGETT
For Judges of Supreme Court.....J. R. SANDERS
.....R. M. ROSS

FOR CONGRESS.

At Large.....CHARLES A. SUMNER
.....JOHN K. GLASCOCK
First District.....WM. S. ROBERTS
Second District.....JAMES H. BUDD
Third District.....BARCLAY HENLEY
Fourth District.....A. S. TULLY
For Secretary of State.....T. E. THOMPSON
For State Controller.....JOHN P. JOHNSON
For State Treasurer.....W. A. JOHNSON
Attorney-General.....E. C. MARSHALL
For Surveyor-General.....J. P. WELLER
For Supt. Public Instruction.....W. W. ANDERSON
For Clerk Sup. Court.....A. W. McCARTHY

RAILROAD COMMISSIONERS.

First District.....G. J. CARPENTER
Second District.....W. P. HUMPHREYS
Third District.....W. W. FOOTE

BOARD OF EQUALIZATION.

First District.....CHARLES GILDEA
Second District.....W. M. CRUTCHER
Third District.....C. WILMANSON
Fourth District.....JOHN MARKLEY

POLITICAL CARDS.

REGULAR DEMOCRATIC NOMINEE
For State Controller,
JOHN P. DUNN.

REGULAR DEMOCRATIC NOMINEE
For Superior Judge,
Dennis J. Toohy.

REGULAR DEMOCRATIC NOMINEE
For Superior Judge,
JAS. G. MAGUIRE.

REGULAR DEMOCRATIC NOMINEE
For Superior Judge,
James V. Coffey.

REGULAR DEMOCRATIC NOMINEE
For Superior Judge,
Frank. M. Clough.

REGULAR DEMOCRATIC NOMINEE
FOR SHERIFF,
P. CONNOLLY.

REGULAR DEMOCRATIC NOMINEE
FOR ASSESSOR,
LOUIS F. HOLTZ.

REGULAR DEMOCRATIC NOMINEE
For District Attorney,
J. D. SULLIVAN.

REGULAR DEMOCRATIC NOMINEE
For Tax Collector,
John H. Grady.

REGULAR DEMOCRATIC NOMINEE
For Superintendent of Public Streets
T. J. LOWNEY.

REGULAR DEMOCRATIC NOMINEE FOR CORONER,
Dr. M. Levingston.

FOR STATE SENATOR,
19th Senatorial District.
Frank J. Sullivan,
REGULAR DEMOCRATIC NOMINEE.

REGULAR DEMOCRATIC NOMINEE
For Supervisor First Ward.
John T. Sullivan.

REGULAR DEMOCRATIC NOMINEE
For Supervisor Second Ward.
JOHN J. REICHENBACH.
BY ACCLAMATION.

REGULAR DEMOCRATIC NOMINEE
For Supervisor Third Ward.
JOHN SHIRLEY.

REGULAR DEMOCRATIC NOMINEE
For Supervisor Ninth Ward.
JOHN B. LEWIS.

REGULAR DEMOCRATIC NOMINEE
For Supervisor Tenth Ward.
HERMAN RANKEN

REGULAR DEMOCRATIC NOMINEE
For Supervisor Twelfth Ward.
Thomas Ashworth.

Regular Republican Nominee
—FOR—
RAILROAD COMMISSIONER,
SECOND DISTRICT.
CHARLES CLAYTON.

Democratic Nominee for State Railroad Commissioner,
FOR SECOND DISTRICT,
(Comprising San Francisco, San Mateo and Marin counties.)
WILLIAM P. HUMPHRIES.

CHARLES GILDEA,
Democratic Candidate for
STATE BOARD OF EQUALIZATION,
FIRST DISTRICT.

Democratic Nominee For MAYOR,
Washington Bartlett.

REGULAR DEMOCRATIC NOMINEE
For Public Administrator,
PHILIP A. ROACH.

REGULAR DEMOCRATIC NOMINEE FOR RECORDER,
WM. J. BRYAN.

REGULAR DEMOCRATIC NOMINEE
For Superior Judge,
JAS. G. MAGUIRE.

FOR TREASURER,
J. H. WIDBER,
PRESENT INCUMBENT.

FOR SHERIFF.
JOHN SEDGWICK.
PRESENT INCUMBENT.

FOR ASSESSOR,
ALEX. BADLAM

The Peoples Choice for Coroner,
DR. G. O. O'DONNELL.

Vote for him for what he has done for the good of the people on the Chinese Question. If elected Coroner will do more than any job I man would do to purify Chinatown. In his field and now I ask to whitewash. Give him your support, and it will pay you. Is a fact that he are opposed to the Chinese evil. If elected will assist in the work of purification. Vote for a man who will do what he says he will do. Give him a chance and you will beat the Devil.

The Ladies' Favorite!

One Hundred Active and Intelligent AGENTS WANTED IMMEDIATELY.
$5 (FIVE DOLLARS) TO $10 (TEN DOLLARS) A DAY—Agents wanted everywhere in Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois are selling TWICE TO TWENTY TIMES AS FAST as any other Chromo or Engraving. We have the EXCLUSIVE CONTROL OF THE PATENT PROCESS and TERRITORY. Apply to

C. E. SMITH & CO.,
Real Estate Exchange and General Business Agency, 440 CALIFORNIA STREET,
Near corner Montgomery.

FALL OPENING.
MRS. DE FOREST
Extends an invitation to the Ladies of San Francisco and Vicinity
To call during the second week of October at the Parisian Emporium,
No. 24 Kearny Street,
And examine the fine line of Millinery Goods thoroughly purchased by her in New York City.
NO CARDS

DR. MANNING,
Office at 646 Howard Street,
HOURS from 12½ to 2 and 6½ to 10 P. M. Residence 411½ Bryant street.

KNABE PIANOFORTES.
Tone, Touch, Workmanship and Durability.
WEILAND, MAHN & CO.,
Nos. 204 and 206 West Baltimore Street, Baltimore. No. 112 Fifth Avenue, N. Y.

MUSIC---LANGUAGES.
C. J. BONNINGTON,
TEACHER VIOLIN, PIANO, ORGAN, VOCAL MUSIC, and the various modern languages in the art and science, music. Residence 1722 Howard street. Office, 609 Post street. At same address French, German and Piano taught by Miss Bonnington; terms moderate.

HUMAN HAIR PORTRAITS,
Jewelry and Every Description of Hairwork to Order.
LESSONS GIVEN.
Federmeyer, 127 Kearny St.

NEW SUBSCRIPTION EDITION.
WEBSTER'S UNABRIDGED DICTIONARY
JUST ISSUED.
Sold exclusively by subscription on installments.
PRICE - - - $15.
EDWARD E. EITEL & CO.
Office, 147 Phelan Building, San Francisco.
GENERAL AGENTS.

JAS. CARROLL. W. H. TILTON.
CARROLL & TILTON,
Respectfully announce that they have opened
THE LARGE STORE,
873 Market Street,
—WITH A LINE OF—
GENT'S AND BOY'S CLOTHING,
Furnishing Goods,
HATS, CAPS, ETC.
Having been in this business many years, we can promise that all our goods will be as represented.
We buy for Cash and sell as low as possible.
CARROLL & TILTON,
873 Market Street, Opp. Powell,
And has with JOHN J. CUMMINGS,
CUMMINGS & HARRINGTON,
BOOK SELLERS,
BOOK BINDERS,
Blank Book Manufacturers
AND PRINTERS,
509 CLAY STREET,
Above Sansome ..... SAN FRANCISCO.
MUSIC, MAGAZINES, ILLUSTRATED WORKS, ETC. Bound in finest style at lowest cash prices. Weekly or monthly periodicals received. An extra charge. Book Ruling a specialty.

PIANOS
We will save Purchasers Money by selling the BEST PIANOS only at the lowest prices for cash, and on all kinds of easy payments, less than New York Prices. Our's is the only House in the Music Trade to the Pacific Coast that Guarantees every Piano for five years.
SOLD FOR $10 INSTALLMENTS.
Kohler & Chase,
Post street, near Dupont.
STEINWAY & SONS,
Kranich & Bach,
ERNST GABLER
AND
H. C. ROENISCH
PIANOS
M. GRAY, 117 Post St., SAN FRANCISCO.

Morse
PHOTOGRAPHER,
826 Market Street,
Phelan's New Building. San Francisco.
MR. MORSE'S NEW PHOTOGRAPHIC PARLORS are the finest and most elegantly appointed Photographic Rooms in the world; are lighted and arranged in a manner unsurpassed; while the work is pronounced by all who see it to be unsurpassed; while the prices are moderate. All are cordially invited to call and inspect the Parlors. Copies of the work of this establishment will be made separately.

MASON & HAMLIN ORGANS are certainly best, having been so declared at all competitive trials for the last TEN YEARS; the highest honors possible to be conferred in competition with the best European makers, having been twice awarded to us at Paris, Vienna, Philadelphia, Boston, Chicago, and Cincinnati, and we are now the only house in the world to have received such a recommendation in addition to our own high rank, viz: that our organs are pronounced, after the most searching and elaborate tests, to be the best of all organs. Also for our popular low priced organs, the Mason & Hamlin Cabinet Organs, we claim that they are the best of their class. Illustrated Catalogues Free.
THE MASON & HAMLIN Organ and Piano Co., 154 Tremont St., Boston; 46 E. 14th St., New York; 149 Wabash Ave., Chicago.

DIPHTHERIA.
REMEMBER THIS.
No Case and Every Patient where McClintock's Diphtheria Remedy is Used.
IT IS a positive preventative and cure, and will not stop the spread of Diphtheria and scarlet fever. Sold by druggists in Cross and Quarter Bottles. Price, $1 and 50 cents. Ask for Recorder, NOT A CURE-ALL! Sold by WISNER, BOOTH & CO., Market Street, Corner Third, Opposite Fourth, San Francisco, and by all druggists. Office and Laboratory, 780 Mission street, San Francisco.

T. J. BRODERICK,
112 Third Street,
Bet. Mission and Howard. San Francisco.
A Full Line of UNITED WORKINGMEN'S CUSTOM-MADE
Boots and Shoes.
LARGE ASSORTMENT OF EASTERN AND PHILADELPHIA STOCK. Children's School Shoes a specialty. Boots and Shoes made to measure.
REPAIRING NEATLY AND PROMPTLY DONE.
AT WHITE LABOR ONLY. 82

GEO. H. FULLER,
MANUFACTURER OF
Settees, School and Office Furniture.
CABINET WORK TO ORDER A SPECIALTY.
Salesroom, 19 New Montgomery Street, Manufactory, 124 Main St.
SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

PACIFIC STEAM
CARPET BEATING
And Renovating Works.
WHITENING
In all its Branches Thoroughly and Promptly Done.
OAKLAND BRANCH—Twenty-first street and Telegraph ave. Prompt attention will be given to orders sent by Mail, Telephone or left in the Boxes.
333 GOLDEN GATE AVE.
(TYLER STREET.)
CONKLIN BROS., PROPRIETORS.
Telephone Call 2176.

F. A. CHASE. F. G. CHASE.
TRUMAN S. CLARK & SON.,
MANUFACTURERS OF WOVEN WIRE MATTRESSES, Fine Iron Bedsteads, of every style and variety. Dealers in Furniture and Bedding. Office and Salesroom, 11 New Montgomery street, under Grand Hotel, San Francisco.
☞ Call and examine our goods

BOOTS AND SHOES!
MOORE & MURPHY,
Manufacturers and Dealers in Ladies' and Gent's
BOOTS AND SHOES.
☞ Full Line of the best Eastern Manufacturers and Oregon Kip Boots and Shoes constantly on hand.
Remember the Number:
138 SIXTH STREET, 138
Bet. Folsom and Howard.

HENRY F. MILLER'S CELEBRATED
PIANOS!
Of Boston, and HEMME & LONG
Upright Pianos,
SAN FRANCISCO.
Greenleen & Fuller Pianos,
Taylor & Farley Organs.
WOODWORTH, SCHELL & CO.
SOLE AGENTS,
Warerooms, No. 105 Stockton St.
SAN FRANCISCO.
Pianos Rented and Sold on Instalments.

MRS. JEROME DEASY,
CENTRAL
Floral Depot,
726 Market St.,
Bet. Fremont ..... Cal.
Bouquets, Crosses and Cut Flowers constantly on hand.
Funeral and Wedding Decorations Made to Order.

RUPTURE!
GUARANTEED CURED in 30 to 90 days by Dr. SPINNEY'S Celebrated Method. Unexcelled for simplicity, comfort, economy. Hundreds of testimonials. Pamphlet free. Dr. SPINNEY, 1051 Market St., Cor. Mason, San Francisco. Office hours, 9 to 4. Sundays, 10 to 12.

SUMMONS.
IN THE SUPREME COURT, DEPARTMENT NO. 2, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, State of California. ANTONIO ROSSI, Plaintiff, vs. HANLEY, Defendants. Action brought in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, and the Complaint filed in said City and County of San Francisco, State of California, on the 12th day of September, 1882. The People of the State of California, and the Consolidated Slot Machine Company, a corporation, and Jas. Hanley, Jr., Jas. Hanley, Sr., and Mrs. Hanley, defendants, are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named plaintiff in the Supreme Court, Department No. 2, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, and to answer the Complaint filed therein, within thirty days from the date of service of this summons, if served within this county, or if served elsewhere, within thirty days—judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said Complaint. The said action is brought to recover the possession of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, the lands of the corporation, and the franchises, rights and privileges of the corporation, and for the appointment of a receiver, and for damages, and for a decree that the said defendants, and their servants and agents, be perpetually enjoined from exercising any of the said franchises, rights and privileges, and for costs of suit. Given under my hand and seal of the said Supreme Court, at the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, this 18th day of September, A. D. 1882, and of our Lord one thousand and eighty two.
DAVID WILDER, Clerk,
By N. F. Tucker, Deputy Clerk.
W. J. COONEY, Plaintiff's Attorney.

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free. Address STINSON & CO., Portland, Me.

THE MONITOR,
A CATHOLIC FAMILY JOURNAL.
DEVOTED TO THE PROPAGATION AND DEFENCE OF CATHOLIC PRINCIPLES.
Published by THE MONITOR PUBLISHING CO., Office: 606 Clay street, San Francisco, California.
TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION:
For Year by Mail (if paid in advance).....$6 50
For Year if Mail (if not paid in advance).....7 50
Six Months (if paid in advance).....3 50
Six Months (if not paid in advance).....4 00
Three Months (if paid in advance).....1 75
Three Months (if not paid in advance).....2 00
To Inland any of the States or Territories (in advance) $6 00; (not in advance) 7 50.
☞ Address all communications, remittances, checks, and postal orders to
S. J. McCORMICK, Editorial Manager,
Monroe Office, Box 2584 P. O., San Francisco, Cal. Entered at the San Francisco Post Office as Second Class Matter.

THE MONITOR.

THE MONITOR
IS now in the twenty-fifth year of publication, and its well-established reputation as a staunch and reliable Religious Newspaper, has gained for it a wide circulation and an influence which makes it a valuable medium for advertisements.
Advertisements inserted at reasonable rates.

TO CORRESPONDENTS
Communications, to secure insertion, should be handed in not later than Tuesday each week.
Communications will be inserted unless accompanied by the writer's full name. This is required as a private guarantee of good faith.
Communications will be gladly received but will not be inserted in the news columns by the Journal. Correspondents should be as brief as possible, and should write legibly, and on one side of the paper only. We cannot undertake to return the MSS. of unused articles.
All communications and remittances, whether on business or otherwise, are to be addressed to the Manager.

THE MONITOR
IS now in the twenty-fifth year of publication, and its well-established reputation as a staunch and reliable Religious Newspaper, has gained for it a wide circulation and an influence which makes it a valuable medium for advertisements.
Advertisements inserted at reasonable rates.
TO CORRESPONDENTS
Communications, to secure insertion, should be handed in not later than Tuesday each week.
Communications will be inserted unless accompanied by the writer's full name. This is required as a private guarantee of good faith.
Communications will be gladly received but will not be inserted in the news columns by the Journal. Correspondents should be as brief as possible, and should write legibly, and on one side of the paper only. We cannot undertake to return the MSS. of unused articles.
All communications and remittances, whether on business or otherwise, are to be addressed to the Manager.

The Monitor.

"For thy Sheep be not ashamed to say the Truth.....Strive for Justice for thy Sheep and even unto Death fight for Justice, and God will overthrow thy enemies for Thee. (Ecclus. iv. 3.)

VOL. XXVI. SAN FRANCISCO, WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 25, 1882. NO. 3.

MISCELLANEOUS.

A POSITIVE CURE FOR DYSPEPSIA.
TRY IT. DRUGGISTS SELL IT.
Made By
H. B. SLAVEN,
The Baldwin Building.
PLATING.
NICKEL PLATING,
GOLD PLATING,
SILVER PLATING,
Elegant and Durable.
ALL KINDS OF WORK PLATED. WORK CALLED for and delivered free. Lowest estimates given on request. Satisfaction guaranteed in every particular. Please call and see specimens of work. Manufacturers or any firm needing a good, reliable and cheap plating, warranted the best made, should call and examine our work and prices. The only exclusive
PLATING ESTABLISHMENT
On the Pacific Coast.
San Francisco Gold, Silver and Nickel Plating Works,
638 and 640 Mission Street, bet. New Montgomery and Third Sts., San Francisco, Cal.
H. G. HOFFMAN, Proprietor.
Ended First Premium at every fair of the Mechanics' Institute for the last twelve years.

Sole Agent for the Celebrated Lancaster Burners.
STACK & LACOMBE,
Practical Hatters,
639 MARKET STREET,
Baldwin Hotel ..... San Francisco.

W. YOUNG,
DOMESTIC
SEWING MACHINES.
Machines Exchanged, Repaired, Etc.
1026 1-2 Mission St., near 14th.
Dealer for all Machines, Oil, The Fancy Goods and Notions.

J. J. DYER,
DENTIST,
S. E. cor. Kearny & Post Sts., up stairs, Rooms 17 Post St. "23

KANE & HEANEY,
—PRIZE MEDALISTS—
Choice Butter, Cheese,
EGGS, ETC.,
11 and 40 Centre Market,
Between Sutter and Bush streets, Market street. Orders promptly solicited, and all articles promptly delivered to any part of the City free of Cartage.

W. E. CHANDLER, JR. THOS. A. ROBINSON.
PACIFIC Business College,
320 POST ST.
LIFE SCHOLARSHIPS, - $70.
SEND FOR CIRCULAR.

J. L. CAHILL,
PAINTER,
Whitener and Decorator.
Special Rates for Hotels, Lodgings-houses, etc 800 POST STREET, bet. Hyde Street and Dupont.

A CARD TO THE PUBLIC.
THIS IS TO CERTIFY THAT
Wm. C. Badger, 13 Sansome St.,
IS THE SOLE AND EXCLUSIVE AGENT FOR THE SALE OF MY Celebrated Hats, for gentlemen.
Geo. Ed. Badger, Davis & Co. (Successors, Feb'y, 1881).

GEO. G. GERE, M. D.
and Surgeon,
318 Sutter St., San Francisco.
OFFICE HOURS—11 to 1 and 3 to 7 P. M.

HALL'S SARSAPARILLA YELLOW DOCK AND IODIDE OF POTASS
The best Blood Purifier and Tonic Alterative it can. It quickly cures all Diseases originating from a disordered state of the Blood or Liver. Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Stricture, Boils, Pimples, Scrofula, Tumors, Salt Rheum and Mercurial Pains readily yield to its purifying properties. It invigorates the Blood Pure, the Liver and Kidneys healthy, the complexion bright and clear.
SOLD BY ALL DRUGGISTS.
J. B. GATES & CO., Proprietors,
417 Sansome Street, S. F.

A. M. Sullivan in St. Louis.

THE CAUSE OF IRELAND ADVOCATED BY AN ORATOR.

HOW IRELAND SORROWED AND SUFFERED FOR CENTURIES.

A Good Word for Gladstone.

Peaceable Agitation the Best Remedy for Ireland's Wrongs.

An Appeal for Sympathy to Intelligent American.

Ireland's patriotic son, A. M. Sullivan, spoke last week in St. Louis, and after thanking the Chairman for his kindly introduction, he then set forth the claims of Ireland for American sympathy:

There are two ways of looking at the Irish question. There are thousands of my countrymen here to whom those things are an old old tale, and they will pardon me for a moment while I consider the difficulties which beset the way of the people and the difficulties which he undertakes to pass judgment on the Irish question. He reads the London papers and maybe dip counts largely what they say, but he finally arrives at the conclusion that England is seeking to do all that is right, and that the Irish people who are turbulent and

AGITATORS TO CRIME AND ANARCHY,

Are frustrating the efforts which England is making to benefit them. Am I speaking too strongly when I say that this is the view held by some of the journalists of this country? "Oh, yes," they say, "we know all which you are telling us. You need not go back over it. There have certainly been grievous wrongs inflicted on Ireland, but from reading the press of England we see that she is doing all that is possible to redress the wrongs of by-gone centuries."

Now I frankly admit that it is true that some of the wrongs of Ireland have been redressed in the English Parliament. It is true—and I wish it was remembered now that I speak for myself and not for my late colleagues in Parliament—it is true that the present Prime Minister of England has made a great and noble effort to understand the Irish question, and has done as much as the customs and prejudices by which he was surrounded suffered him to do fairly. And I may, perhaps, offer the key for the better appreciation of what we have done when we say that he shall be elevated to a pitch when he will understand it and tell you that no political divisions, however strongly marked, are such a curse to a country as religious sectarian animosity (applause). And I say this

AS AN IRISH CATHOLIC,

Who would rather abandon all he has than the deep seated faith in the religion of his country and his fathers. My impeachment to-night is of a system under which the Irish Government is maintained to-day—a system which labored to keep us so long divided and which still divides them from us.

Before I even mention the other great boon—but here let me say that I have never failed to feel a sense of humiliation when I have heard of "boons" or "concessions" given to Ireland. These things are the rights of man, not boons or concessions. It will be time for Americans to talk of boons when they are shown where England has given us anything which belonged to her or that was not ours by right.

THE LAND ACT OF 1881

Is not all that is asked, nor is it all that we are determined it shall be, but still it was the greatest measure of agrarian revolution ever accomplished without shedding a drop of blood. And we owe it to Mr. Gladstone and his colleagues, that the landlords claim not only their free, but the people's twenty acres thousand as well. Yes, its worth thirty thousand, yet the landlords claim not only their free, but the people's twenty acres thousand as well. Yes, its worth thirty thousand, yet the landlords claim not only their free, but the people's twenty acres thousand as well. Yes, its worth thirty thousand, yet the landlords claim not only their free, but the people's twenty acres thousand as well. This

Poetry.

(From Punch.)

I ROAM A LAND OF GOLDEN DREAMS.

I.

I roam a land of golden dreams,
By soft, green groves, and waterfalls;
I roam through meads, by sunshine serene,
And me by of fair city walls!
Dear land of Sleep, how solid art thou,
He's deceived by thy silent dells—
But hark, what sounds are coming now?
They are, they are, the mails bells.

O, mails bells,
No sound sooth
Your music sweet in waking dells.

II.

I dwell with saints for agree dead,
The angels play for me their lyres,
In Paradise I seem to tread,
Around me stand celestial choirs;
Male lids of Hope, how solid art thou,
Your lenguell are thy voiceless dells—
But hark, what sounds are coming now?
They are, they are, the mails bells.

O, mails bells,
No sound sooth
Your music sweet in waking dells.

III.

The stars have faded from the sky;
All (with the exception of my dreams most part)
With sight my fairest visions fly,
With day will come of pain of heart.
Yet welcome to the hour of light,
With Light young Truth forever dwells;
Hail to fresh scenes, glad mails bells,
Sweet mails bells.
No sound sooth
Your music dwell in waking dells.

(From our contributor.)

A MODERN LEARNED BORROW.

(Soft fall the shadow of evening time;)
Metaphysic, amid his war decline,
I sat in an Irish inn;
Grave certain valued the windows quaint,
Thy day was waning, and I was faint,
Up from the lady moon.
As darker, darker grew the hour,
In winnow light the sun went down
Its surprise, by the following unexpected address, delivered in a loud angry tone.
"That's snooping Fallon! I want none of your friendship any more. Go your way."
"Mr. Bicknell, this is very strange, remonstrated James, mildly.
"It is very strange," retorted the other, "very strange that you should come into my family and take away the affections of my daughter without my knowledge. Never enter my house again, Fallon."
The young man was stunned by the suddenness of the charge, and the vehemence in the manner of Mr. Bicknell.
"If you forbid me enter your house," said he, "let it be so. I never went there, but on the same feeling that your family came to the house of my father. And as to taking away the affections—
"I want none of your explanations," interrupted the irate father, "Never speak to my daughter again," where upon he walked off quickly, fearfulling his walking-stick, and trying to persuade himself that he had acted wrong in what he had said. But where he cooled down he could not help feeling that he had been wrong and unreasonable.
James was dreadfully annoyed by this undeserved treatment. What should he do? How could he live in the town and be forbidden the house of Bicknell, or even to speak to Nellie. Everybody would notice it, and talk of the people would be intolerable. Well, he brooded over the matter, indoors, for two or three days, and at last a bright thought—away for the moment—of Nellie. He had never yet ventured to offer her any gooda business, but went into it, hart and soul, all the same, as a matter of duty. His vocation, it seemed to him, was to be a peacemaker, and he felt that feeling to be dishonour to yourself without. Now, however, a case had arisen in which he felt painfully, nay, laudably, bad good bye to his duty

THE MONITOR.

EVERY DAY THAT IT PUBLISHES.

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 29, 1902.

Is it a Crime to be an Irish-American Catholic?

We are led to ask this question in consequence of the appearance of one of Pixley's proscriptive essays in last week's Argonaut, wherein he arraigns the Democratic party with the awful crime of having nominated a large number of "The People's Democratic Irish" upon its State and Municipal ticket.

Fanatician and Frank Pixley are united by an unbridled cord similar to that which joined the Siamese twins, and if an Irish Catholic is nominated for any office, that moment Pixley's passion is aroused, and he bellows forth, like the big bull of Bashan, that the whole American republic is likely to tumble into ruins! Yet, notwithstanding all Pixley's puerile prejudice, the startlefact still exists that the Irish-American element in this country has just as much right to representation in the politics of the nation as the native-American, the German element, or any other class of citizens. The nobody can successfully deny. We are not in this country through the concession of any party, but we are here by virtue of the supreme law of the land, the Constitution of the United States, and our representatives will walk the free soil of America long after the dark-lantern demagogues have cowled their last hate-laden breath against "the Pope's political Irish."

Do the fatuitous fanatics who oppose the Irish-American element know anything of the history of this country and the part performed in perpetuating its principles by those same "Pope's political Irish?" Are they ready that nearly all the prominent positions in this Government, immediately after its formation, were held by Irishmen or their descendants? And long before the American flag floated over this country there were whole colonies of Irish people resident on the Atlantic slope, where they were the law makers, the law dispensers, and the propagators of republican principles. Yet these surprincipled opponents of the Irish people think that because a man has an "O" or a "Mac" prefixed to his name that he has no right to ask for the votes of his fellow-citizens. It was not so in Revolutionary days, however, as every page of the history of those "times that tried men's souls" is filled with the gallant deeds of men who bore the honored names of O'Brien, O'Donnell, O'Connor, O'Donohue, O'Flaherty, O'Higgins, O'Leary, Oliver, O'Neill, and O'Reilly, not forgetting the equally numerous Mahlon, MacGary, McDonough, McMahon, McGee, McKean, McKenzie, McDermott, McFee, McGuire, McNamara, McNeil, McNeven, McPherson, McQuade, McTague, McTwomey, McCoy, McCormick, McCormack, McCormick, McCormack, McCormick, McCormack

SUDDEN DEATHS.

The Cause and Increase of These Mysterious Visitations Ascertained Now.

Every careful reader and observer must have noticed the large number of sudden deaths which have occurred among the leading men of this country during the past year. Every few days the telegraph announces this some prominent man, whose name is a household word in the community, has been instantly called upon to die.

A short time ago, the Hon. Horace Maynard, Ex. P. M. General, and Ex Minister to Turkey, while in the full prime of manhood was stricken suddenly and died.

Henry W. Longfellow was taken suddenly ill, and in a few hours the world was in tears over the distinguished poet's grave.

On the 27th of April, Ralph Waldo Emerson exposed himself to an unusually inclement day, and in a few hours he was dead.

Rev. L. S. Wood, D. D., pastor of a prominent church in Brooklyn, failed a friend on the street during the early part of July and before he could complete the half uttered sentence dropped dead.

On Sunday, April 24, while the Rev. John P. Newman, D. D., the famous "court preacher" of Gen. Grant's terms of office, was preaching at the Madison Ave. Congregational Church, New York, he was suddenly overcome with intense pain and was carried home in an insensible condition.

A few months ago the Rev. Henry Ward Beecher, while lecturing before a large audience in Chicago, was unexpectedly attacked with a mysterious illness, and as his body quivered with passing anguish the large audience was filled with fear that the end of the great preacher had come.

The list could be continued almost indefinitely, and includes such prominent names as Hon. Clarkson N. Potter, Hon. Thomas Allen, and many other eminent Americans, to say nothing of leading Europeans, among whom is the lamented Professor Darwin, Thomas Carlyle, the renowned Russian General Skobeleff and others.

These events happening within a few weeks of each other, and occurring to persons who are conspicuous in public life, naturally arouse the attention of the public, and raise the query as to the cause of these sudden deaths.

Most certainly, every apoplexy, paralysis or similar complaints are all effects, not causes. The real cause is to be found in a weakened condition of the system brought about by the neglect of some vital organ. Professor William Roberts, of the Royal college of physicians, London, Eng., a recognized authority of the highest character, treating on the condition of the human body, treating on the condition of the human system which causes sudden deaths, and which says had evidently been reached by the persons named above, says: "This condition is not a mere local affair, but it is a part of a wide spread tissue degeneration involving the entire body." He says, further, that the diseases which culminate so suddenly and bring death instantly, are slight in their origin, slow in their development and can be traced to many causes, which, if taken in time, would wholly avoid these and consequences, and fatal sudden end.

Some of the minor symptoms which indicate the beginning of such troubles are: Dizziness and sleeplessness, with heavy, head ache, drowsiness, defects of sight and hearing, and a general feeling of lassitude and weakness, which, if taken in time, would easily avoid these and consequences, and fatal sudden end.

Some of the minor symptoms which indicate the beginning of such troubles are: Twitching and startleness of the muscles, head-ache, drowsiness, defects of sight and hearing, nausea, persistent hot and dry skin, a peculiar transient appearance of the skin, disturbance of the digestive functions and soreness of stomach, alternate hunger and depression of spirits, swelling of the ankles and legs, rheumatic pains in various parts of the body, accompanied by severe irritability, frequent attacks of pleurisy or pneumonia, congestion in the other portions of lungs, painful uneasiness in the loins, with frequent and distressing bladder, or urinary complaints of the blood, etc. etc. Any one of these symptoms, or more may be manifested, still the human system will by due degree become so prepared for any sudden attack of disease that when it comes there is a rapid, and sometimes instantaneous development of terrible malady. Then rallied in all its force, defies resistance to health responsible, and the victim succumbs to quick and dreaded death.

But the highest scientific and medical authorities who have carefully examined these symptoms, and traced them to their source, once with one accord agree that they are due in the majority of cases to a disordered condition of the kidneys, which disorder although so common are often unrecognized. The reason for this one—is readily explained. It is the office of the kidneys to remove the surplus water and other exposed matter from the blood. This waste matter is a virulent poison, and it is especially injurious to the nerves and nerve centers producing tumors of the worst kind, aneurism of the heart, and a general weakening of the nervous and muscular system. Any sudden congestion, such as arrestus the pores (caused by cold and exposure, or the other prominent causes mentioned above, is almost certain to cause sudden death, such as mentioned Hon. Henry, Newman and many other most similarly associated.

These are facts of science and every day experience, and they prove conclusively what has been so often said that the kidneys are the purifiers and preservers of the system and that there can be no freedom from sickness, nor hope of continued escape from sudden death, when these great organs are the least deranged. There is, however, no question of the body so difficult to reach, and which doctors so hesitatingly attempt to treat as the kidneys. Indeed many of the most prominent physicians in world have declared that organic disease of the kidneys cannot be cured, and many physicians still so declare, admitting that only overwhelmed very has been found which is known to completely control these great organs, or restore them when they have once become diseased. That remedy is now known to the entire world as Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, and it has won its way into public favor solely on its merits, and by the remarkable cures it has been the means of performing. Heart disease, vertigo, apoplexy, paralysis, all being effects, not causes, and the main being seated deeper in the human frame has been proven to be the kidneys. It is evident, therefore, that by controlling them and in this manner avoiding the ravages of these sudden deaths be escaped.

In view of these serious truths it is of the greatest importance that everyone should carefully observe and guard against the slightest appearance of physical trouble, hidden strains and emergencies calling for the entire of self and medicine are certain to cause some time in the history of everyone. To prepare the system for meeting these unusual ends is the part of wisdom, and only by guarding the great organ, which controls the life, can this be accomplished.

A Long Promised.

Many low fever beauty from the hair falling or fading. Parker's Hair Balsam supplies necessary nourishment prevents falling and greyness and is an elegant dressing.

— The archdiocese of Baltimore consists seven Catholic colleges within its borders.

MISCELLANEOUS.

ROOFS (TIN! ASPHALTUM!!) New Roofs & Leaks Repaired. Old Roofs Repaired. Old roofs painted and warranted for 5 years. 407 MARKET STREET Bet. Fourth and Fifth. Orders can be left at Kelsey's Drug Store, 638 Kearny st. H. G. TINKER.

MRS. LYDIA E. PINKHAM, OF LYNN, MASS.,

Woman can Sympathize with Woman. Health of Women is the Hope of the Race.

Yours for Health Lydia E. Pinkham

LYDIA E. PINKHAM'S VEGETABLE COMPOUND.

Is a Positive Cure for all those Painful Complaints and Weaknesses so common to our female population. It will cure entirely the worst form of Female Complaints, all ovarian troubles, Inflammation and Ulceration, Falling and Displacements, and the consequent Spinal Weakness, and is particularly adapted to the Change of Life.

It will dissolve and expel tumors from the uterus in an early stage of development. The tendency to cancerous humors there is checked very speedily by its use. It removes faintness, flatulency, destroys all craving for stimulants, and relives ex ensiness of the stomach. It cures Bloating, Headaches, Nervous Prostration, General Debility, Sleeplessness, Depression and Indigestion.

That feeling of bearing down, causing pain, weight and backache, is always permanently cured by the use. It will at all times and under all circumstances act in harmony with the laws that govern the female system.

For the cure of Kidney Complaints of either sex this Compound is unsurpassed.

LYDIA E. PINKHAM'S VEGETABLE COMPOUND is prepared at 23 and 25 Western Avenue, Lynn, Mass. Price $1. Six bottles for $5. Sent in the form of pills, also in the form of lozenges, on receipt of price, $1 per box for either. Mrs. Pinkham freely answers all letters of inquiry. Send for pamphlet. Address as above. Mention this Paper.

Be faithfully should be without LYDIA E. PINKHAM'S LIVER PILLS. They cure constipation, biliousness and torpidity of the liver. 25 cents per box.

Sold by all Druggists. 23

The Golden Palace TEA STORE, 227 And 229 Second Street, San Francisco, California. Has Been Specially Fitted Up to Accommodate the Patronage Entrusted to Them. THE CHOICEST GROCERIES ONLY KEPT IN STOCK. Our Teas are Unsurpassed for Quality, Aroma and Strength. Our Coffees are Delicious. Our Sugars are Sweet. Our Canned Goods are Fresh and Delicious. Our Prices are Low. Our Goods are Warranted to Give Satisfaction. Our Store is Elegantly Fitted Up and Our Clerks are Obliging and Attentive. Our Motto: Quick Sales and Small Profits. Our Goods are Delivered Free to Any Part of the City. Our Country Orders Receive Our Prompt Attention. Our Telephone Number is 1250. Our Address is Golden Palace Tea Store, 227 and 229 Second Street, San Francisco. CHARLES MONTGOMERY, Proprietor.

PROFESSIONAL CARDS

M. COONEY, Attorney and Counsellor at Law. 626 Kearny street, cor. Pine. Rooms 5 and 6. ..... San Francisco.

JOHN LUTTRELL MURPHY, (Late City and County Attorney and Counselor.) Attorney and Counsellor at Law, 420 and 424 Montgomery Street, SAN FRANCISCO.

ROBERT B. BRENHAM, Attorney-at-Law, 120 SUTTER ST., ROOM 34.

JOHN M. BURNETT, Attorney and Counsellor at Law. Rooms 1 and 2, 507 Montgomery street, cor. Sacramento San Francisco.

CLARA S. FOLTZ, Attorney-at-Law, 628 MONTGOMERY STREET, Bank Exchange Block.

MISS MARY McHENRY, Attorney at Law. Special Attention paid to Probate Business. Room 20, No. 230 Montgomery St.

J. D. SULLIVAN, ATTORNEY-AT-LAW, Rooms 4, 5, and 15. 234 MONTGOMERY ST. ..... San Francisco.

A. H. LOUGHBOROUGH, Law Office, N. W. Cor. Sacramento and Montgomery Streets.

JAMES T. NOON, Attorney & Counsellor AT LAW. No. 226 Kearny Street. ROOMS 1 AND 2. Bet. Sutter and Bush ..... San Francisco.

Will Practice in Civil and Criminal Courts.

JAMES C. MAGUIRE, Attorney and Counselor at Law, 628 Montgomery St., (ROOM 76) Over the Law Lamps. SAN FRANCISCO. Will Practice in all the State and Federal Courts.

BEATTY'S CHEAP 17 cents GOO Pieces, 897.50. Parlor organs only $45. Factory equipment Sep 9 eighth. Catalogue free. Address BEATTY, Washington, N.J.

MISCELLANEOUS.

FALL OPENING. MRS. DE FOREST Extends an Invitation to the Ladies of San Francisco and Vicinity To call during the second week of October at the Dry Goods Emporium, No. 24 Kearny Street, And examine the fine line of Millinery Goods recently purchased by her in New York City. NO CARDS.

DR. MANNING, Office at 646 Howard Street, San Francisco. HOURS from 12½ to 2 and 6½ to 8½ P. M. Residence 611 Hayes street.

A testimonial has often been expressed at the low rates charged for Razors & Cutlery. We introduce the beautiful Razor, Pocket Knife or Scissors, to the public at a price of 50 cents to $1 each, warranted to cut or no sale. Where the finest of cutlery is used, these implements are in the hands of millions and never wanted.

Prescription of delivery in a pocket case, sent free on receipt of price, from the interior filled on any phone. Paper Sizing and Pen Knives. Black Beauty manufactured to order.

Cor. Clay and Sansome Streets, San Francisco.

RAZORS! FOR $1,000

I WILL MAKE A BETTER RAZOR AND MORE OF THEM in the same time than any man IN THE WORLD

My corn salve guaranteed $25
My Guard Razors warranted not to cut the flesh while shaving 1 00
Good English Razors 1 00
Best English Razors 1 50

Sent C. O. D. or by mail.

M. PRICE, 415 Kearny Street. Grinding and Repairing. ESTABLISHED 1864.

J. COONEY, PRACTICAL Painter and Whitener. SIGNS NEATLY EXECUTED. NO. 113 FOURTH STREET, San Francisco, Cal.

NOTICE OF REMOVAL. JERRY LOWNEY & SON HAVE REMOVED THEIR CARRIAGE FACTORY from corner of Bush and Sansome streets, to 436 Pine street. All kinds of carriages and wagons of the latest mode to order, and repairing promptly done.

NEW ENGLAND BAKING POWDER

NO ALUM FLOUR STARCH AMMONIA PHOSPHATES TARTARIC ACID

CREAM TARTAR AND BICARB. SODA NOTHING ELSE.

Newton Bros. & Co.

PHILADELPHIA BREWERY. JOHN WIELAND - - - PROPRIETOR SECOND STREET, NEAR FOLSOM, SAN FRANCISCO. Amount of Beer sold in 1881, 19,182 barrels. ALSO BANKERS.

BANKING HOUSES.

Jos. A. Donohoe, San Francisco. | Hugh Kelly, New York.

DONOHOE, KELLY & CO. SAN FRANCISCO. EUGENE, KELLY & CO. NEW YORK. BANKERS. EXCHANGE ON NEW YORK, LONDON, AND BANK IRELAND (Limited). Payable at all the Branches. AND IN FORTY COUNTY TOWN IN IRELAND.

WINES, LIQUORS, ETC.

NATIVE WINES.

Per Bottle ..... from 20 to 50 cents. Per Gallon ..... 50 to 50 cents. By the Gallon ..... 50 cts. to $1.25. Native and Foreign Wines and Brandies by the pulse, field at moderate prices.

J. C. HASSELINE, 110 Dupont Street.

AGENTS WANTED (Everywhere, to sell Sewing Machines. Address Wheeler & Wilson M. Co. 828 Market St. S. F.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE CATHOLIC Mutual Beneficial ASSOCIATION OF THE Archdiocese of San Francisco. President - - Rev. J. B. McNally.

PRESENTS A PLAN OF LIFE INSURANCE FOR Catholics that should be endorsed by all prudent people. It is the most SAFE AND ECONOMICAL method of life insurance extant, and is open to a Catholic from 18 to 55 years of age. Archbishop Alemany and nearly all the priests of the archdiocese have recommended it to their flocks. The funds are kept in the Hibernia Bank, and the affairs of the society are administered with the most rigid economy. Address or call on the Secretary, Mr. Lynch, 1128 Montgomery street (under the Occidental Hotel) where the Secretary will be in attendance every evening (except Sundays), from 7½ to 8½ o'clock, and where all information relative to the Association may be obtained. Written communications should be addressed to EDWARD GILSON, Secretary, 1119 Jones Street. San Francisco.

FASHIONABLE DRESSMAKING. MRS. J. MULCAHEY, late Miss F. Supple, formerly of New York, MODES DE PARIS. Cutting and Fitting a Specialty. 110 Taylor St., bet. Turk & Eddy.

Estd. hitched ..... 1860.

M. VULIOEVICH, 405 and 407 DAVIS ST., Two doors north of Washington. Importer and Wholesale Dealer in Foreign and Domestic Fruits. All orders receive prompt and satisfactory attention.

REMOVAL. JAS. R. KELLY & CO. IMPORTERS AND JOBBERS OF PAINTS, OILS and GLASS, HAVE REMOVED TO 221 and 223 Market Street Just Below Beale—the New Block.

P. J. CASSIN & CO., —IMPORTER OF— Pure Kentucky Bourbon WHISKIES. —AGENTS FOR— O. K. Golden Pheasant Rye Whiskey, And wholesale dealers in Foreign and Domestic Wines. 422 BATTERY ST. (EST. cor. Washington Opposite Post Office, San Francisco, Cal.

IT HAS NO EQUAL. NEWELL'S ULTIMATUM. IT UNQUESTIONALLY THE SAFEST, MOST AGREEABLE and EFFICACIOUS Remedy for COUGHS AND COLDS.

It leaves a simple Cinchona, not yet a tincture, and yet is as effectual as Opium; it is not half the size of opium, and pretty more in hand and wine. Some has over 100 testimonials, and is in the hands of every druggist in the United States, and is in relation to the merits and effects of opium. W. W. NEWELL, 819 Commercial Street.

THE GREAT CONVENIENCE OF THE NEW YORK CATHOLIC AGENCY is that by its agency one can get a good place, and one can get good servants, and one can buy or sell a business, or rent a house, or get any kind of a situation, or find a good place for a good person. The advantage it offers in acting as proxy and as mutual accountant, over Address THOMAS D. EGAN, New York Catholic Agency, 37 Barclay street, and 29 Park Place.

MRS. E. N. CRANE, DRESSMAKER, Is now ready for FALL BUSINESS at her home, September 1st at 531 Post Street - - San Francisco.

WOOD AND COAL.

COAL. COAL. COAL. 2,240 LBS. TO THE TON Full Weight and Quality Guaranteed. Coke and Kindling Wood Constantly on hand at very LOWEST Prices. Cor. Howard and Market Sts. T. L. SMITH. ☞ A Trial Order Solicited.

DUNDEE COAL CO., NO COMBINATION. GREAT REDUCTIONS IN ALL KINDS OF FOREIGN & DOMESTIC COAL. Cake on Our Home Rates. Delivered Free. 1112 and 1114, Mission Street.

J. M. JOHNSON, —DEALER IN ALL KINDS OF— Wood, Coal & Charcoal. YARD AT 415 GOLDEN GATE AVE. Office at 200 Sutter St., Br. Kearny, San Francisco. Orders left at "Baldwin" Stables, No. 11 Powell street will receive prompt attention. Telephone

EMPLOYMENT ETC.

O'BRIEN & WARD'S EMPLOYMENT OFFICE 810 CLAY STREET, Opposite Clay Street Bank, and a few doors above Montgomery street. HAS ALWAYS ON HAND FIRST Class Help, Farm Hands, Teamsters, Dairymen, Gardeners, Grooms, Butlers, Waiters, Cooks, Housemaids, and nearly all other kinds of help. Also, Good Situations for private families and ranches, without any charge to employers. Call or Address as above.

$66 A week in your own town. Terms and $5 outfit free. Address H. HALLET & CO., Portland, Me.

MISCELLANEOUS.

NEW FRANKLIN HOTEL.

Cor. Sansome and Pacific streets.

H. CURRAN, - - - - - - - - - Proprietor.

THIS WELL KNOWN AND FAVORITE HOTEL IS SITUATED IN A MOST CENTRAL AND HEALTHY Location and offers good accommodations to families and the traveling public, and is the nearest Hotel to the Ferries. Rooms per day, $1 00. Board and Room per week, $6 50 00. Rooms per night, 25c. Free Omnibus to and from the Ferries. Free Coach to and from the City. Baggage Free. Free Lavatory for the use of Families. Notice that the best selling White Soap employed.

HARVEY'S HOT-WATER RADIATOR.

SECURES A MILD UNIFORM TEMPERATURE without the disturbance, waste and noise of an open stove; a most healthful atmosphere without the dry, parching air so noxious even of the best-air-furnace stove; a noiseless diffusion of heat without the hissing or cracking of the stove. ☞ Send for Intermission or Descriptive Circular free.

NO. 213 MISSION ST. (Bet. Fremont and Beale.) SAN FRANCISCO.

JOSEPH MAYER, ORGAN BUILDER, No. 127 Page Street, San Francisco. MANUFACTURER AND REPAIRER OF ALL KINDS OF CHURCH AND PARLOR ORGANS. ☞ All Orders to the above Address will receive prompt attention.

R. HERRING, —MANUFACTURER OF— FINE FURNITURE, MANTELS, House, Bank, and Office Fittings, In Pacific Coast Woods a Specialty. Nos. 429 and 431 FOURTH STREET, Cor. of Silver. DESIGNS FURNISHED.

MEDICAL REMEDIES.

Ague Cure

Is a purely vegetable bitter and powerful tonic, and is warranted a speedy and certain cure for Fevers and Ague, Chills and Fever, Intermittent or Chill Fever, Remittent Fever, Dumb Ague, Periodical or Bilious Fever, and all malarial disorders. It contains no cathartics, the rapid pulse, coated tongue, thirst, loss of appetite, pain in the back and loins, and coldness of the spine and shivering, which precede the attack, are never symptoms, which terminate in the ague paroxysm, succeeded by high fever and profuse perspiration.

It is a startling fact, that quinine, arsenic and other poisonous minerals, form the basis of most of the "Fever and Ague Specifics," "Remedies," "Cures," and "Tonics," in the market. The preparations made from these dangerous poisons, although they are palatable, and may break the chill, do not cure, but leave the material and their own drug poison in the system, producing quinism, deafness, ringing in the ears, headache, vertigo, and other disorders more formidable than the disease they were intended to cure. Dr. Ayer's Ague Cure thoroughly eradicates these malarial poisons from the system, and leaves the patient healthy. It does not contain a mineral, poisonous or any thing that could injure the most delicate patient. It is a certain, safe, and pleasant cure. Its certainty to cure, is that it leaves the system as free from disease as before the attack.

For Liver Complaints, Ayer's Ague Cure, by direct action on the liver and biliary apparatus, drives out the poisonous which produces those complaints, and eliminates the system in a vigorous, healthy condition.

We warrant it when taken according to directions.

Prepared by Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Practical and Analytical Chemists, LOWELL, MASS. SOLD BY ALL DRUGGISTS EVERYWHERE.

DR. PHELAN, (Graduate of the University of New York.) Formerly Physician to Sacramento and St. Mary's Hospitals. MEMBER OF CALIFORNIA PIONEERS. Office and Residence 806 Third Street (for Israel).

PARKER'S HAIR BALSAM. A perfect dressing combining all the elements of beauty and utility. All Farmers, Mechanics, Miners, Lumbermen, &c., who are fond of a good dressing, will find it the best article ever used. Restores Gray Hair to its youthful color. Prevents Dandruff and Hair Falling. Keeps the hair in place all day. Ladies prefer it to any other dressing. Cleanses the scalp, stimulates the growth, and makes the hair soft and glossy. Sold by druggists. Price, $1.

TAILORS.

John Kavanagh, MERCHANT TAILOR, 6 New Montgomery Street, PALACE HOTEL, S. F. The Making of Clergymens' Cassocks a Specialty.

N. SWEENY, MERCHANT TAILOR 41 Second street, Opposite Jessie street ..... San Francisco. Cassocks and Clerical Clothing a Specialty.

M. FITZPATRICK —IS— The BOSS Tailor, Of the Pacific Coast. 36 1-2 FOURTH STREET, Corner of Jessie ..... San Francisco. ☞ On Share for your CLOTHES. You are sure to be served and don't you forget it.

THOMAS DRADY, MERCHANT TAILOR No. 6 Third Street, Near Market, S. F.

E. F. WILTON, MERCHANT TAILOR, 12 Stockton Street, NEAR MARKET ST., SAN FRANCISCO.

JOHN HICKEY, Merchant Tailor, 36 Fourth street, Between Market and Mission streets. ..... San Francisco.

Business Suits to order from $20 Pants " " 5 Fine Dress Suits " " 35 Black Doeskin Pants " " 7

DENNIS REDMOND, MERCHANT TAILOR, No. 808 Hayes street. ☞ Perfect fit and price well guaranteed.

BELLS ETC.

MENEELY BELL FOUNDRY. Celebrated Bells for Churches, Academies, Factories, Farms, Tolls, Chimes, Chapels, Schools, Fire Alarms, Clocks, Chimes, Chapels, Schools, Fire Alarms, Clocks, Chimes, Chapels, Schools, Fire Alarms, Clocks

CANDIDATES THAT DESERVE ELECTION.

JOHN H. GRADY.

The Democratic nominee for Tax Collector is a young man, a native of this State, and has been an excellent record as Tax Collector during the last year. He is very popular both among Democrats and Republicans, and his popularity among the members of his party was clearly shown by his having been their unanimous choice of their Convention for Tax Collector. During his brief official career he has been always courteous and obliging, and his never-failing and uniform politeness has endeared him to thousands of tax payers with whom the business of his office has brought him in contact. He has made several valuable improvements in the school of conducting the business of the Tax Office and has more than doubled the facilities for the payment of taxes by the construction of an additional cash-cove. His course in the Election Board has been manly, consistent, and without being guilty of any effort to obstruct the business of the Commission. He has closely attended to the interests of the Democracy, and in connection with his brothers Mr. Humphreys formed the Registrar to remove the obstacles which he had placed in the way of foreign-born citizens who were desirous of registering. Affable and generously to a degree rarely met with in a public official he possesses besides, a high order of administrative ability, and bribes to the discharge of his duties everything that tends to make a faithful and efficient servant of the public. He will be found to be re-elected and we believe that he will be.

THOMAS F. BARRY.

The Democrat of the Ninth Senatorial District have not a good example in the nomination made by them of a man to Thomas F. Barry for the assembly. Mr. Barry is the right type of man for such a position. He is a native of California, having been born in the district whose representative he aspires to be, and consequently he has achieved a good standing at the Bar, and with a host of other friends, he is amongst us a "native-born" man. After obtaining his degree in the State University he entered the Law School of Columbia College, New York, and graduated with honor in that school with many special prizes. He then returned to his native home and engaged in the practical pursuit of his profession under the preceptorship of ex-Judge Cowdery, formerly a Justice of the Supreme Court of the State, and now one of the leading lawyers of the Bar in Contra Costa County. Mr. Barry is a young man of high character and good business qualifications, and he has shown by his conduct in the Democratic Party, that he is a man of high principle and a large measure of patriotism, and he will adorn the office of Assemblyman with the same high and honorable qualities which have made him so popular in his own district. We hope to see his fellow-Democrats of the Ninth District, and the whole Democratic ticket, from the President to the Assembly, elected by the largest majority ever given in any district for the Democratic ticket.

PHILIP A. ROACH.

It seems almost useless to refer to the name of Philip A. Roach in order to say anything to our Democratic readers about his fitness for the Public Administrator. We left a little over one year that he was not, nominated for Public Administrator at the last June, but the Municipal Convention of that year has rectified that mistake by nominating by placing him on the ticket unanimously elected by the largest majority given to any candidate on the Democratic ticket.

WM. T. GIBSON.

One of the very best nominations made by the Republican Convention is that of Mr. Gibson for the office of County Clerk. Mr. Gibson is a native born Californian, and has spent his whole life in this State, having been an active and valuable improvement in the school of conducting the business of the Tax Office and has more than doubled the facilities for the payment of taxes by the construction of an additional cash-cove. His course in the Election Board has been manly, consistent, and without being guilty of any effort to obstruct the business of the Commission. He has closely attended to the interests of the Democracy, and in connection with his brothers Mr. Humphreys formed the Registrar to remove the obstacles which he had placed in the way of foreign-born citizens who were desirous of registering. Affable and generously to a degree rarely met with in a public official he possesses besides, a high order of administrative ability, and bribes to the discharge of his duties everything that tends to make a faithful and efficient servant of the public. He will be found to be re-elected and we believe that he will be.

THOMAS F. BARRY.

The Democrat of the Ninth Senatorial District have not a good example in the nomination made by them of a man to Thomas F. Barry for the assembly. Mr. Barry is the right type of man for such a position. He is a native of California, having been born in the district whose representative he aspires to be, and consequently he has achieved a good standing at the Bar, and with a host of other friends, he is amongst us a "native-born" man. After obtaining his degree in the State University he entered the Law School of Columbia College, New York, and graduated with honor in that school with many special prizes. He then returned to his native home and engaged in the practical pursuit of his profession under the preceptorship of ex-Judge Cowdery, formerly a Justice of the Supreme Court of the State, and now one of the leading lawyers of the Bar in Contra Costa County. Mr. Barry is a young man of high character and good business qualifications, and he has shown by his conduct in the Democratic Party, that he is a man of high principle and a large measure of patriotism, and he will adorn the office of Assemblyman with the same high and honorable qualities which have made him so popular in his own district. We hope to see his fellow-Democrats of the Ninth District, and the whole Democratic ticket, from the President to the Assembly, elected by the largest majority ever given in any district for the Democratic ticket.

JAMES V. COFFEY.

Democratic candidate for Judge of the Superior Court, is the same gentleman who so earnestly and successfully contested the Judgeship in 1875 and 1877 and promoted over the Democratic candidate by a fraudulent decision of the Supreme Court. Mr. Coffey is a native born Californian, and has been a resident of this City for over twenty or fifteen years, and having previously for many years resided in Santa Cruz and Santa Clara, he has Santa Cruz and Santa Clara, he has generally popular among all who know him. Mr. Wilson was defeated in the last election by a majority of 1,000 in his qualifications and acquaintance, he has lost ground for the party which he argues. Mr. Wilson is a man of family and a tax payer.

WEEKLY MARKET REPORT.

In consequence of there being but very few changes in the fruit and produce market, the week's quotations are each the usual Market Report this week.

Death of a California Pioneer.

Daniel Murphy, died at Halleck Station, Nevada, aged 50 years. He was a pioneer of California, having arrived in the year 1841. He resided in Santa Clara Valley and subsequently resided on a great ranch near in Nevada. He was well and favorably known.

DURFEE PAVE.

Bonne or the Monitor:—

Sir—Inclosed Bulletin, chief engineer of division of the district of California advertised for bids for the work of repairing the city street Durfee Pave. The undersigned was the lowest and received the work at the price of 1 3-4 c. to contain of paid till 10 P. m. daily, the work to be completed in 30 days from date of order. The contract for the work was reported, however, the work was not given to me, but to another, one more day to pave, let day of adoption, and the work was given to the other party, but the law provides that we must serve with the bidder, and the contract, if not, will order my discharge of duty with honesty. I have the contract, and I am ready to pay on my part punctually, to-day, do not, save the bidder which must be done to-day, we are to not lose so much pay, for the time so expired, and I ask of the Board of this City, the judge and inspectors for the time elapsed pay for the work, day of adoption, expiration, respectively. Why should we have bad? Furthermore, the work is to be done by the day, and not let out, the Bonnet by the Bonnet; over they will pay, the work, day of adoption, expiration, respectively, that is, now but the principle of the work, day of adoption, expiration, respectively, that is, now but the principle of the work, day of adoption, expiration, respectively, that is, now but the principle of Poetry.

(FOR THE MONITOR.)

FAITH, HOPE, AND LOVE.

I.

Yes, take my harp and break its strings,
Destroy for ever its tuneful voice,
Take from me all that unhoes brings
To make my lonely heart rejoice.

II.

Hush songs of bliss, hush songs of strains!
In darkness hide each green laughed tree;
Stay, stay the summer's absorbing tones
Let all earth's beauties fly from me.

III.

But leave me Faith, and Hope, and Love—
These lamps to light my awful gloom—
Then let me offer to God above
Them welcome to the martyr's doom.

—TRACY.

MAN AND THE SEA.

MEDITATION.

[Bid to music, written and composed by John W. J. Golden.]

The Sea, the sea! Sea, deep as the Power to his plaidoyer spoke,
Sea, wide as the Power to his plaidoyer spoke,
Sea, wide as the Power to his plaidoyer spoke,
Man, poor man, creeping to a standstill
Man, poor man, creeping to a standstill.

I. "You have left your home a goodly distance behind you, and you know that I have not the time to go back with you."

"Must we say good by then, Allen?" moaned the woman.

"It must be done," was the curt reply.

"It is not for long, darling; in six months at the most."

"Oh, six months will seem an eternity," she wailed. "If I could only shake of this dread of coming evil, I could endure our parting better. Oh, I have such a fear that we shall never meet again! that something will happen to separate us! I know I shall never see you again! I know I shall never see you again! I know I shall never see you again

THE MONITOR.
TWENTY-SIXTH YEAR OF PUBLICATION.
WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 1, 1882.

Month of the Holy Souls.

The faith of Catholics is not confined by the span of human life, but it leads us beyond the grave, into the very realms of eternity itself, and that makes the love we bear to kindred in this world continue even when they have passed through the portals of death. The doctrine of Purgatory, as defined by the Church, is one of the most rational—as well as one of the most consoling—dogmas of our holy faith, and were Catholics only impressed with its beauties and its importance we would not be so indifferent as to the fate of our dead. Sad, indeed, it is to reflect that millions of Catholics lie in the graveyards of America who have left Catholic children, or Irish relatives behind them, yet whose memory is never sanctified by the Holy Sacrifice of a single Mass! Nay, more, it is an appalling fact that the Catholic dead are too often forgotten in the prayers of their Catholic friends, and our devotion, for the souls of the faithful departed is gradually waning from the light of Catholic faith. Why is this? Cannot the reason be found in the fact that the Faith of our Fathers does not burn as brightly in our breasts as it did in the hearts of those pioneerers who implanted the seed of Christianity upon our soils. Had example, it is said, ruins many souls, and we must confess that there are numerous Catholics who seem to be infected with Protestant indifference for the dead. Shame upon parents who are giving children of the Church. Shame upon the Catholic child who forgets the dead father or mother in his prayers and in the Holy Sacrifice of the Mass. Ingratitude in life is looked upon as a heinous offence, but when it comes Catholics to forget their dead it becomes akin to ingratitude to God Himself. "It is," says the inspired writer of God's Word, "a holy and a wholesome thought to pray for the dead that they may loosed from their sins," yet how few fathers and mothers are benefited by Masses asked for by their children! How many brothers and sisters are left in their graves as if they was the last of them! Ah! if one hundredth part of the money spent in erecting magnificent but useless monuments over the mortal dust of dead Catholics was applied to suffrages for their poor, forgotten souls, how much more glory would be given to God, and how many more of the faithful departed would bask in the sunshine of heaven! Prayers and pious thoughts cannot further benefit the departed who have been sunk over mortal dust, decay with the bones of those who built them. Prayers and pious offices ascending into Heaven and are acceptable to God, but the memory of the monument—as regards the dead—has been a design and adds not a single pleasure to the end of the dead. But this is the Protestant plan for propagating their veneration for the dead, and Catholics think it the proper thing to do, forgetting the fact that Protestantism is collateral in all its details; it has nothing else to offer the dead except a meaningless monument or a cypt without a cross. But we Catholics have no cause for poverty of faith. The dear father and the devoted mother whose death seemed a half century ago, and whose other sons in the land of their birth, must now be benighted, sprinkled with the month of November, when the pagans and pious sons of the Church are offered up for the souls of the faithful departed—repetitions of Pythia Delphi, John Percy.

We all must die, and, as Catholics, we should remember that we will need the prayers of those we have helped in at a time when we cannot pay for them in money. Therefore, we should obey God and His Church by "doing unto others as we would they should do unto us," and we shall be all the consolation of a Catholic soul pleading for them who suffer—that every reader of the Monitor will offer prayer and alms during this month for the souls of our dead. We know, as Catholics, that nothing defiled can enter Heaven; we know, too, that prayer and pious deeds are all powerful with God, and if we pray for the souls of our parents, relations and benefactors, we may feel assured that they will be our advocates before the Throne of Mercy, and, called before the judgment seat of God.

Every Catholic has some kindred in the other world whom either by vows is constantly pleading: "Have pity on us, at least you, my friends," and let not the prayer and mouth pass by without corresponding with our religious belief, which makes the time morning, noon, and night, and in the Holy Sacrifice of the Mass, we must remember our dead and pray fervently that God may have mercy upon all the souls of the faithful departed.

PAUL DE CASTELNAU, PRIEST BY THE DIVINE MERCY.

The faithful party in France imagined that they had found the solution for a stringent law, which, if not repealed, would place the Republic in a state of anarchy. The Senate, the Republican party, the Council of the Ministry, the President of the Republic, the Council of the Ministry, the President of the Republic, the Council of the Ministry, the President of the Republic

AN ERRONEOUS BELIEF.

How a Mistaken Theory Nearly Cost a Well-Known Minister His Life.

[Chicago Standard.]

The following remarkable statement, made by a well known Baptist clergyman, besides the unusual matter of value it contains, will be found most readable and interesting:

Messrs. Enos: I have always believed most firmly in the brotherhood of men, and that every human being is in duty bound to assist his fellow man in the fullest extent of his power. The relation, therefore, of my personal experience will, I trust prove of benefit to many thousands in this land.

My earlier years were full of health and pleasure. After the completion of my educational studies I undertook the profession of teaching, and under the severe strain to which I was subjected I gradually become reduced so that the least exposure or excitement would bring on sick headache, biliousness and general prostration. I gave up teaching and began to prepare for the ministry, and although I studied hard my health seemed to grow no worse. Finally I commenced preaching, and then my physical troubles returned. The slightest amount of certain kinds of food distressed me and brought on heavy dullness, headaches and often great depression of mind. A change of room, atmosphere or clothing was always certain to cause a cold, accompanied by most painful suffering. I attribute all this to the severe work I was obliged to do in the ministry, and so did not hesitate to remove it. I next began to grow nervous and peevish, that my best friends could, while my left side and back frequently pained me. I felt a drowsy or sleepy sensation after eating, while a little exertion would cause me to lose my breath entirely. At times my spirits would be light and I would feel as if I might live to a good old age, when I would be down in the dumps in an hour my head would rest, my body ache and I would be overcome with a fearfully sickness. Afterwards an attack a cold would invariably upon me and this would be followed by complete prostration. It would be impossible to describe the suffering I endured at times. I tried and yet I abstained it all to overwork and not to any special trouble or disease.

It was more than a year from the time the attacks first began that I consulted a physician. He examined me and declared that my lungs were affected and that I was on the road to consumption. I decided that this not so called upon another doctor. He told me the same thing, so did also the other medical men whom I consulted. Finally my old friends noticed one that unless I went to Colorado, Dakota or the sea coast there was little hope. However, I did not change immediately, but tried to continue my work as best I could. A year ago last May and in the November and December following I had three severe attacks of what the doctors said was lung fever or pneumonia. I then was more than ever fully of the same feeling, but I felt all the time as I honestly felt that my work did not exhaust the lungs, but in some other organs of the body. It is true, I felt severe pains in my lungs and I expectorated a little, but was not extremely sensitive to cold, and the most drastic or sudden changes of temperature could not cause me a cold. My breathing was often most difficult and I frequently awoke with all my exertions I could not get enough air into my lungs to satisfy them or keep my blood from turning black. As I was in the habitual use of Dr. Pierce's Pellets, and being in the employ of the Lydia E. Pinkham Co. I thought how I should from the inevitable fate which seemed to come on me in the time.

One Sunday evening last February, upon coming home from my pulpit, I found myself so exhausted that I was obliged to lie down on the sofa. I was so weak that I should ever enter it again, a condition of my stomach I felt was the cause, said: "Brother Hamilton, I know just what ailes you. Your stomach has been poisoned just as you are and I am positively well now." I thanked him for his advice and he left me. I had tried all I had but there was little hope for me. However, though I was in so low a state, I began to reflect upon the subject, and finally sent my son to procure some of the medicine which he had spoken so highly of. It taken with more or less necessary to the success of a matchless life, and the following Sunday I was able to preach with comparative ease. I continued to grow better as I continued to use the medicine, for it succeeded to reach my system. I was able to preach, attend to my work without exhaustion, and to-day I am a well man, able to work day and hourly, for no long treating, and I believe I owe my life and health wholly to Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, which I feel cannot be too much recommended to suffering humanity.

It is only a sacred duty since my recovery I should feel authoritative over the remedy which had restored me and also observe its effects upon others. As a result I am forced to the conclusion that very much dishonest medicine is sold to suffering in the large, prime wholly from disordered kidneys and liver. I believe these organs are nothing to-day and looking for work, as I say, to a commonplace cure, when Safe Cure can be wholly restored and they might be restored to perfect health by the same means that I recovered. Battery these truths and realizing their importance to the world, I come out thus openly, and say that I believe, from my own case, that it is a public benefaction, and I would most cheerfully recommend it to the sick and suffering.

(Rev.) D. F. HAMILTON,
Pastor Baptist church.

ASHOT, Ill., July 24, 1882.

Treatment of Diphtheria.

The Medical Press says that Dr. Dreher, who, during the long years of very extensive practice in the Children's Hospital, at Pesth, has had a great deal of experience of the disease, and of diphtheria, and tried all the remedies, vegetable and mineral, employed in this affection, has obtained the best results from the following method, which he has employed for the last ten years, in preference to the white spots appear on the tonsils and pharynx, a solution is composed of one part, which produces an alkaline reaction. When the purgative effect has ceased he gives one half to one teaspoonful of the chloride acid, and every two hours a gargle composed of lime water and hot milk to equal parts. Dr. Dreher affirms that when this treatment is commenced early it is scarcely possible to fail of success.

Goldwin's Vermifuge.

Children speak of "That fine dinner, when rubbing away Without the bitter, nauseous, sickening Vermifuge." Yes, Goldwin's Vermifuge, No tongue description could be given of the disease of the Worms, Tapeworm, Pinworm, Lumbricoides, and one dose was sufficient to expel them in a very short time, and if Goldwin's Vermifuge of Wright's Remedy, he would undoubtedly have continued his pains, and spoken of "Hand's Remedy, when medicine worth, Makes it a boon to all the earth."

It is merely a boon to thousands of sufferers who have been able to find relief nowhere else.

MISCELLANEOUS.

ROOFS [TIN! ASPHALTUM!!] Five Roofs at Lower Rates. 014 Roofs Repaired. And GUARANTEED when so contracted for. 207 MARKET STREET Bet. Fourth and Fifth. Orders by mail promptly attended to. H. C. FISKE.

LYDIA E. PINKHAM'S VEGETABLE COMPOUND, In a Positive Cure For all those Painful Complaints and Weaknesses so common to our best female population. A Medicine for Women. Invented by a Woman. Prepared by a Woman. I felt a divorce or Sleep sensation after eating, while a little exertion would cause me to lose my breath entirely. At times my spirits would be light and I would feel as if I might live to a good old age, when I would be down in an hour my head would rest, my body ache and I would be overcome with a fearfully sickness. Afterwards an attack a cold would invariably upon me and this would be followed by complete prostration. It would be impossible to describe the suffering I endured at times. I tried and yet I abstained it all to overwork and not to any special trouble or disease.

It was more than a year from the time the attacks first began that I consulted a physician. He examined me and declared that my lungs were affected and that I was on the road to consumption. I decided that this not so called upon another doctor. He told me the same thing, so did also the other medical men whom I consulted. Finally my old friends noticed one that unless I went to Colorado, Dakota or the sea coast there was little hope. However, I did not change immediately, but tried to continue my work as best I could. A year ago last May and in the November and December following I had three severe attacks of what the doctors said was lung fever or pneumonia. I then was more than ever fully of the same feeling, but I felt all the time as I honestly felt that my work did not exhaust the lungs, but in some other organs of the body. It is true, I felt severe pains in my lungs and I expectorated a little, but was not extremely sensitive to cold, and the most drastic or sudden changes of temperature could not cause me a cold. My breathing was often most difficult and I frequently awoke with all my exertions I could not get enough air into my lungs to satisfy them or keep my blood from turning black. As I was in the habitual use of Dr. Pierce's Pellets, and being in the employ of the Lydia E. Pinkham Co. I thought how I should from the inevitable fate which seemed to come on me in the time.

One Sunday evening last February, upon coming home from my pulpit, I found myself so exhausted that I was obliged to lie down on the sofa. I was so weak that I should ever enter it again, a condition of my stomach I felt was the cause, said: "Brother Hamilton, I know just what ailes you. Your stomach has been poisoned just as you are and I am positively well now." I thanked him for his advice and he left me. I had tried all I had but there was little hope for me. However, though I was in so low a state, I began to reflect upon the subject, and finally sent my son to procure some of the medicine which he had spoken so highly of. It taken with more or less necessary to the success of a matchless life, and the following Sunday I was able to preach with comparative ease. I continued to grow better as I continued to use the medicine, for it succeeded to reach my system. I was able to preach, attend to my work without exhaustion, and to-day I am a well man, able to work day and hourly, for no long treating, and I believe I owe my life and health wholly to Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, which I feel cannot be too much recommended to suffering humanity.

It is only a sacred duty since my recovery I should feel authoritative over the remedy which had restored me and also observe its effects upon others. As a result I am forced to the conclusion that very much dishonest medicine is sold to suffering in the large, prime wholly from disordered kidneys and liver. I believe these organs are nothing to-day and looking for work, as I say, to a commonplace cure, when Safe Cure can be wholly restored and they might be restored to perfect health by the same means that I recovered. Battery these truths and realizing their importance to the world, I come out thus openly, and say that I believe, from my own case, that it is a public benefaction, and I would most cheerfully recommend it to the sick and suffering.

(Rev.) D. F. HAMILTON,
Pastor Baptist church.

ASHOT, Ill., July 24, 1882.

MISCELLANEOUS.

FALL OPENING.

MRS. DE FOREST
Extends an Invitation to the Ladies of San Francisco and Vicinity
To call at the DE FOREST EMPORIUM, No. 24 Kearny Street,
And examine the fine line of Millinery Goods recently purchased by her in New York City.
NO CARDS.

DR. MANNING,
Office at 648 Howard Street, San Francisco.
HOURS from 10½ to 2 and 6½ to 8½ P. M. Residence 615½ Bryan street.

Proprietors of Delivery is a prominent characteristic in our business. Orders for Hack, Buggy or Carriage should be left at Hack Stands, Corner Bush and Kearny streets, or sent to order.
Cor. Clay and Kearny Streets, San Francisco.

RAZORS!
FOR $1,000
I WILL MAKE A BETTER RAZOR AND HONE OF THAN IS DONE HERE FOR ANY MAN IN THE WORLD.

My own make guaranteed	$3
My Grand Razors warranted not to cut the flesh while shaving	3 0
Good English Razors	1 00
Best English Razors	1 50

☞ Sent C. O. D. or by mail.
M. PRICE,
416 Kearny Street.
Grinding and Repairing.
ESTABLISHED 1864.

J. GOONEY,
PRACTICAL
Painter and Whitener.
SIGNS NEATLY EXECUTED.
NO. 113 FOURTH STREET,
San Francisco, Cal.
☞ Painting, in all its branches, promptly attended to.

NOTICE OF REMOVAL.
JERRY LOWHET & SON
HAVE REMOVED THEIR CHEMICAL FACTORY 11 from corner of Howard and Sixth streets, to 436 Stock street. All kinds of savings and wagon of colored made to order, and repairing promptly attended to.

NEW ENGLAND BAKING POWDER
NO ALUM FLOUR STARCH AMMONIA PHOSPHATES TARTARIC ACID CREAM TARTAR AND SODA
NOTHING ELSE.
Newton Bros. & Co.
PHILADELPHIA BREWERY.
JOHN WIRLAND - - - PROPRIETOR.
SECOND STREET, NEAR FOLSOM, SAN FRANCISCO.
Amount of Beer sold in 1881, 20,180 barrels.

BANKING HOUSES.
Jos. A. Donohoe, San Francisco. Rodney Kelly, New York.
DONOHOE, KELLY & CO. SAN FRANCISCO.
EUGENE, KELLY & CO, NEW YORK.
BANKERS.
EXCHANGE ON
NEW YORK, LONDON, AND BANK IRELAND (Dublin),
Payable at all the Branches
AND IN EVERY COUNTY TOWN IN IRELAND.

WINES, LIQUORS, ETC.
NATIVE WINES.
Quart Bottle ..... from 20 to 50 cents.
Half Bottle ..... 10 to 25 cents.
Native and Foreign Wines and Brandies by the gallon, sold at moderate prices.
J. C. MARSELLING, 114 Dupont Street.

AGENTS WANTED! Employment is all the time. Month, Week, Day, Hour. Agents make more money at work for us than at any other business. Capital not required. We can start you. Address Daniel F. Beatty, Washington, N.J.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE CATHOLIC
Mutual Beneficial Association
OF THE Archdiocese of San Francisco.
President - - Rev. J. B. McNally.
DEPENDS A PLAN OF LIFE INSURANCE FOR Catholics that should be endorsed by all prudent people. It is the most SAFE AND ECONOMICAL
method of Life Insurance extant, and is open to a large class of people who are not in good health, and cannot obtain Life Insurance in other Societies. The Archdiocese has recently secured the services of the architects who planned the Mission Rock and the Adler Buildings, and the affairs are administered with the most rigid economy. The cost of this association has been reduced to 20 per cent. The necessary blank for the Centennial Mutual Benefit Association of the Archdiocese of San Francisco (formerly Diocese), may be had of others, and where all information relative to the Association may be obtained. Written communications should be addressed to EDWARD GILSON, SECRETARY,
1112 Jones Street.

FASHIONABLE DRESSMAKING.
MRS. J. MULCAHEY,
Late Miss H. Hayes, formerly of New York.
HAS OPENED HER PARLORS
Cutting and Fitting a Specialty.
110 Taylor St., bet. Turk & Eddy.

M. VULICEVICH,
—REMOVED TO—
405 and 407 DAVIS ST.,
Importer and Wholesale Dealer in Foreign and Domestic Fruits.
All orders receive prompt and satisfactory attention.

REMOVAL.
JAS. R. KELLY & CO
IMPORTERS AND JOBBERS OF
PAINTS, OILS and GLASS,
HAVE REMOVED TO
221 and 223 Market Street
Pum Baker Beale- the New Block.

P. J. CASSIN & CO.,
Pure Kentucky Bourbon
WHISKIES.
O. K. Golden Plantation Whiskey,
And wholesale dealers in Foreign and Domestic Wines and Liquors.
423 BATTERY ST. NEAR COMM. Washington Opposite Post Office, San Francisco, Cal.

IT HAS NO EQUAL.
NEWELL'S ULTIMATUM
IS UNDISPUTED, THE SAFEST, MOST AGREEABLE and MOST EFFICACIOUS
COUGHS AND COLDS.
It is not a slightly disagreeable, but pleasant tasting preparation, and may be taken by the most delicate of ladies and children, without the slightest fear of any unpleasant consequences. Ask for any druggist. Price, 25 cents per bottle.
W. NEWELL, 216 Commercial Street.

THE GREAT CONVENIENCE
OF THE NEW YORK CATHOLIC AGENCY is that by writing at one letter, inclosing the remittance, they can obtain Masses, Books, Beads, or crucifixes, or any other Catholic goods wanted, and never pay more than the Catalogue price, and yet have the satisfaction that the money has been remitted to parties or public institutions conducting parochial or public institutions conducting parochial or public institutions. Catalogues and information furnished free of charge. Orders in other goods agent are more valuable than ever. Address
THOMAS D. EGAN,
New York Catholic Agency, 32 Barclay street, and 38 Park Place.

MRS. E. N. CRANE,
DRESSMAKER,
Is now ready for FALL BUSINESS
From this date, September 1st, at 631 Post Street - - San Francisco.

WOOD AND COAL.
COAL. COAL. COAL.
2,240 LBS. TO THE TON
Full Weight and Quality Guaranteed.
Coke and Kindling Wood Constantly on hand at very LOWEST Prices.
T. J. SMITH,
Office, 638 Market Street.
☞ A Trial Order Solicited.

DUNDEE COAL CO.,
NO COMBINATION.
GREAT REDUCTIONS
IN ALL KINDS OF
FOREIGN & DOMESTIC COAL.
Office of the Dunsmuir Estate, Dallywood Pres.
1215 and 1115 Stockton street.

J. M. JOHNSON,
—DEALER IN ALL KINDS OF—
Wood, Coal & Charcoal
YARD AT 415 GOLDEN GATE AVE
(Formerly Tyler Street.)
Office at 200 Sutter St., nr. Kearny.
San Francisco.
Orders left at "Bulletin" Bulletin, No. 11 Powell street will receive prompt attention. Telephone.

EMPLOYMENT ETC.
O'BRIEN & WARD'S
EMPLOYMENT OFFICE,
618 CLAY STREET,
Opposite Clay Street Bank, and a few door above Montgomery street.
HAS ALWAYS ON HAND FIRST class Hotel Help, Ferry Hands, Team Drivers, Dishwashers, Shipbooks, Sawmill Hands, Mechanics, Gardeners, Coachmen, and marriage couples for private families and ranches, without any charge to employers. mo14-3m $66 a week in expenses, horses. Terms free and outfit free. Address H. Hallett & Co., Portland, Me.

TAILORS.
John Kavanagh,
MERCHANT TAILOR,
6 New Montgomery Street,
PALACE HOTEL, K. F.
The Making of Clergymens' Cassocks a Specialty.

N. SWEENY,
MERCHANT TAILOR
41 Second street,
Opposite Jansen street. San Francisco
Cassocks and Clerical Clothing a Specialty.

M. FITZPATRICK
THE
The BOSS Tailor,
Of the Pacific Coast.
36 1-2 FOURTH STREET,
Corner of Jessie San Francisco
☞ Go there for your Clothes. THE BOSS IS THE BEST. He knows how and don't you forget it.

THOMAS DRADY,
MERCHANT TAILOR
No. 6 Third Street,
Near Market, S. F.

E. F. WILTON,
MERCHANT
TAILOR,
12 Stockton Street.
NEAR MARKET ST., SAN FRANCISCO

JOHN HICKEY,
Merchant Tailor,
36 Fourth street,
Between Market and Mission streets. SAN FRANCISCO.

Business Suits to order from $20
Pants " 5
Fine Dress Suits " 35
Black Beaskin Pants 7

DENNIS REDMOND.
MERCHANT TAILOR,
No. 508 Hayes street.
☞ Perfect fit and good work guaranteed.

BELLS ETC.
MENEELY BELL FOUNDRY.
Favorably known to the public since 1826, manufacture Church, Chime and School Bells, and other bells, also Chimes and Peals.
ALBANY N. Y. BRANCH OFFICE, 341 BROADWAY.

BUCKEYE BELL FOUNDRY.
Bells of Pure Copper and Tin for Churches, Schools, Farms, Factories, etc. Warranted satisfactory. Price lists free. WARE & TILTON, Cincinnati, O.

BLYMYER BELL CO
BELLS.
Church, School, Factories, Plantations, Fire Alarm, Chimes and Peals. Warranted satisfactory. Prices low. Catalogue free.
CINCINNATI, O.

LINFORTH, RICE & CO.
Sole Agents, 102 and 104 Market Street, S. F.

NEW BILL OF FARE
At Women's Christian Union Free-Cost Lunch and Coffee House.
629 Sacramento Street, 629
Bet. Montgomery and Kearny Sts. San Francisco.

NEW FRANKLIN HOTEL,

Cor. Sansome and Pacific streets.
E. CURRAN, - - - - - - - - Proprietor.
THIS WELL KNOWN AND FAVORITE HOTEL IS SITUATED IN A MOST CENTRAL AND HEALTHY part of the city, and offers accommodations to families and the traveling public, and is the nearest Hotel to a Ferry Depot.
Board and Room per day, $1 00. Board and Room per week, $6 to $8. Room per night, 50c.
Free Laundry for the use of Families. Rooms but the best adapting White help employed.
Free Coach to and from the Hotel.

R. W. THEOBALD,
IMPORTER AND DEALER

FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC COALS
35 and 37 CITY STREET, SAN FRANCISCO.
Connected with the Pacific Bell Telephone Exchange. Orders sent through this medium will receive prompt attention. P. O. Box 217.

JOSEPH MAYER,
ORGAN BUILDER,
No. 127 Page Street, San Francisco.
MANUFACTURER AND REPAIRER OF ALL KINDS OF
CHURCH AND PARLOR ORGANS.
☞ All Orders to the above Address will receive prompt attention.

R. HERRING,
—MANUFACTURER OF—
FINE FURNITURE
MANTELS,
House, Bank, and Office Fittings,
In Pacific Coast Woods a Specialty.
Nos. 429 and 431 FOURTH STREET, Cor. of Silver.
DESIGNS FURNISHED.

MEDICAL REMEDIES.

Cathartic Pills
Combine the choicest cathartic principles in medicine, in proportions accurately adapted to secure activity, certainty, and uniformity of effect. They are the result of years of careful study and practical experiment, and are the most efficient remedy yet discovered for diseases caused by derangement of the stomach, liver, and bowels. Their superior excellence has obtained for them a world-wide reputation. They are specially applicable to the class of cases which call directly on the digestive and assimilative processes, and restore regular healthy action. They are recommended by physicians in their practice, and by all civilized nations, to one of the many proofs of their value as a safe, sure, and perfectly reliable purgative medicine. Being compounded of the concentrated virtues of purely vegetable substances, they are positively free from calomel or any injurious properties, and can be administered to children with perfect safety.

AYER'S PILLS are an effectual cure for Constipation or Costiveness, Indigestion, Dyspepsia, Loss of Appetite, Foul Stomach and Breath, Dizziness, Headache, Loss of Memory, Disorders of Blood, Liver, and Digestion, Rheumatism, Eruptions and Skin Diseases, Dropsy, Tumors, Worms, Neuralgia, Colic, Gripes, Diarrhœa, Dysentery, Gout, Piles, Disorders of the Liver, and all other diseases resulting from a disordered state of the digestive apparatus.

AYER'S CATHARTIC PILLS are the most effective and agreeable of all cathartics.

AYER'S PILLS are an effectual cure for Constipation or Costiveness, Indigestion, Dyspepsia, Loss of Appetite, Foul Stomach and Breath, Dizziness, Headache, Loss of Memory, Disorders of Blood, Liver, and Digestion, Rheumatism, Eruptions and Skin Diseases, Dropsy, Tumors, Worms, Neuralgia, Colic, Gripes, Diarrhœa, Dysentery, Gout, Piles, Disorders of the Liver, and all other diseases resulting from a disordered state of the digestive apparatus.

AYER'S CATHARTIC PILLS are the most effective and agreeable of all cathartics.

Prepared by Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Practical and Analytical Chemists, LOWELL, MASS.
SOLD BY ALL DRUGGISTS EVERYWHERE.

DR. PHELAN,
Graduate of the University of New York.
Formerly Physician to Sacramento and St. Mary's Hospitals.
MEMBER OF CALIFORNIA PIONEERS.
Office and Residence 506 Third Street
Cor. Bryant.

School of the Holy Cross.
A Boarding and Day School for Young Ladies, CONDUCTED BY THE SISTERS OF CHARITY of Santa Cruz, Santa Cruz Co., Cal.
Terms per Month, $25 to $50.

W. A. HAMMOND,
Watchmaker and Jeweler,
No. 4 Sixth Street,
(Second door from Market.)
Watches Cleaned, $1. Glasses, 10c.

CLIMAX WASHING POWDER
Is Guaranteed Not to Injure Clothing.
IT SAVES LABOR, FUEL AND SOAP. HAS OVER 1000 testimonials from those who have tried it. Ask your grocer for it. For sale at the Factory, New 2nd, Howard Sts.

Studabecker's Tailor's Square.
A Perfect System of Dress Cutting.
Office, 524 Stockton Street, S. F. Cal.
SAFNATH, GRAY. C. E. WEBBY. J. A. CARPER.

N. Gray & Co.,
UNDERTAKERS,
641 Sacramento Street,
nr. Webb. SAN FRANCISCO
EMBALMING.
☞ Metallic Burial Cases and Caskets

LITHOGRAPHERS. BOOKBINDERS
P. E. DOUGHERTY & CO.,
STEAM
BOOK AND JOB PRINTRS,
412 Commercial St., and 411 Clay St.
Between Sansome and Battery.

JONH A. LENNON,
Wholesale Grocer,
AND IMPORTER OF
Choice Brands
Japan and English Breakfast Tea.
☞ Agent for Pure White Sucrene Candies. Church tea. Also Pure Spices. Artificial Cheese used for connors, and Pure Olive Oil for Sacramental use.
Nos. 215 and 217 Clay Street ..... San Francisco.

THE SKIN TIGHTENER.
WHEN THE SKIN OF THE FACE BEGINS TO look old and worn, lines and wrinkles appear, and the eyes, with furrows, are removed by using Mme. Lamb's Skin Tightener and Tonic; and marvelous results. Prepared and sold by MRS. SUTER, 136 Dupont street, room 12.

EDUCATIONAL.
Academy of Our Lady of Angels.
SANTA CLARA - - - CALIFORNIA
THIS INSTITUTION, CONDUCTED BY the Sisters of Notre Dame, affords an opportunity of pursuing for young ladies, a refining expense, a moral and intellectual education. Our feature in particular that should recommend this Academy, is the influence now used to form the pupils to habits of order, of economy and to render them useful members of society in after years.
The scholastic year, comprising 10 months, commences on the Monday of August and ends in June.
Pupils are received at any period of the year.
TERMS:
Per quarter, payable in advance.
Entrance Fee, Ten Dollars, to be paid once.
Board, Tuition, Washing and use of bedding, $100
Vocal and Instrumental Music form no extra charge.
French and Spanish lessons free. Next session begins August 7th.

Convent of Our Lady of the Sacred Heart,
OAKLAND, - - CALIFORNIA
CONDUCTED BY
The Sisters of the Holy Names of Jesus and Mary.
THIS INSTITUTION IS PLEASANTLY SITUATED between Webster street and Lake Merritt, combining an extensive frontage on the bay. Its location is supplied with all the modern improvements and conveniences for the comfort of its inmates.
The course of study embraces the various branches of a solid, useful and ornamental education.
TERMS:
(Payable half yearly in advance:)
Board and tuition (French and Spanish included) $300 per annum.
Bed and bedding, without sheets (if supplied by the Institution) $20 per annum.
Piano, Harp, Guitar, Vocal Music, Drawing and Painting, $50 per annum.
For further particulars apply to
THE MOTHER SUPERIORESS.

SANTA CLARA COLLEGE
SANTA CLARA, ... CALIFORNIA
THE THIRTY-SECOND ANNUAL SESSION will commence Tuesday, August 8th. This institution was founded in 1851, and in 1862 was incorporated with the privileges of a University. The new brick building, with extensive shady play-grounds, covered gymnasium, swimming pool, etc. It possesses a most complete Philosophical Apparatus, and valuable collections of Mineralogy and Geology. It has six, practical schools of Assaying, Surveying, Telegraphy, Photography and Commercial Business. For the latter a new building 180x40 by two, and finished, that were nothing to be the best in the State.
Diplomas are given in two departments—the Classical and Scientific—and Certificates in the Commercial course.
TERMS:
(Payable semi-annually in advance:)
Matriculation Fee, to be paid but once, $ 15 00
Board, Lodging, Tuition in all branches Washing and Mending of Linen, School, Philosophy, medical attendance and Medicine, Bath, etc., per session of ten months 200 00
For further particulars apply to the President of Santa Clara College, or to St. Ignatius Institute, 314 Hayes street, San Francisco.
REV. J. FINANCY, S. J., President.

$72 A WEEK, $12 a day at home easily made. Costly Outfit free. Address True & Co., Augusta, Me.

BOOKS BOUGHT AND SOLD AT A. SCHUBOTH'S 308 Montgomery street.

MONITOR MENTION.

— Bishop Gallagher of Galveston, has obtained the services of twenty-one nuns, to take charge of the charitable institutions in his diocese, and of the sick and poor of Galveston, in the island of Galveston.

— Best Pictures taken at the Imperial, 734 Market street.

— Pianos, all makers, $50 to $250. Tuning, $1; regulating. Tobin, 17 York.

— Remove the bile in a natural way by using vegetable cathartics. Ask your druggist for H. Moc. Carpet-beater and whitening, 333 Pine. Oakland branch, 1016 and Telegraph avenue; telephone, 2,178. Usually Boon.

— Oyster cocktail is admirable tonic, and the best place to get it is at M. F. Dunleavy's, 630 Market street.

— New silverware, granite finish. John F. Myers, Fourth street, and Alpha & Whitney, 27 Sutter st.

— 1,000 vols. cold and new books, stationery, etc. Book and News Stand, S. W. cor. Sutter and Kearny. JOHN N. PHILLAN.

— Mrs. J. H. Hoffs, Studio, Phelan Building, 319 and 321. Lessons given. Admission to this society and drawing. Orders executed.

— Don't miss the sale of boots and shoes at 1 Market street. The cause of the unheard-of reduction is no-rent. Kid boots to order, $4. D. A. Healy.

— Ladies who desire to keep up with the fashions in cloaks and suits and London accounts should patronize Mrs. Malvey 28 Sixth street. Satisfaction guaranteed in fit and style. Ladies and ladies' underwear also all kinds of sewing done.

— Many a shabby woman, whose sad appearance has been caused by the use of cheap cosmetics, pillow and poisonous drugs, has obtained a new lease of life in a few fortnights by the use of Mme. Talbot Compound and has gone on her way rejoicing. Sold by Druggists, Perfumers, Fancy Goods, Jewelers, etc.

— Joseph Galliard, for many years with A. F. Bernard, corner of Fifth and Howard street, has not left but formed a partnership with Mr. Bernard, Sixth street, between Howard and Folsom, with a fine stock of wines and liquors, cigars and tobacco. Orders filled and delivered to all parts of the city free.

— Joe Alvarge's Mexican Restaurant. Open day and night, 121 Jackson street, between Dupont Avenue, San Francisco. Tamales, enchiladas, tacos, etc., a specialty. Meals prepared in every style. Orders for balls, banquets and parties promptly attended to. Fine wines and liquors constantly on hand.

— Amazing—reduced rates; gold and silver $1; working tests of cows; reliable returns; send stamp for mail or express; mixes vinegar, weight or acid on commission; information on general mining affairs. W. M. LANE, Fresh Building, Washington and Sansome sts., room 1, S. F.

— The Prescott House, corner of Kearny street and Montgomery avenue, under the proprietorship of Mr. J. W. Becker, continues to be one of the most comfortable hotels in the city. The rate for board and room ranges from $1 to $1 50 per day, or ten by the week. The accommodations are first-class, and country readers will find the Prescott cozy, central and comfortable.

— Those of our readers who are housekeepers will be very occasionally need a stove-polisher with them, or who may require loose covers, draperies, etc., would do well to patronize Robert Dick, No. 21 Ellis street. Mr. Dick, alone with being reasonable in his charges, guarantees to work more by him to be first class. He is also a thorough upholsterer. He makes a specialty of repairing and does it promptly.

— Where is now approaching and prudent people always prepare for its coming by laying in a good supply of Coal. The undersigned will find the firm of C. Y. Wyer & Co., of the Pacific Coal and Feed Depot, 240 Minna street, City Hall avenue, when their coal, wood, coke, charcoal, at the lowest market rates, and full weight guaranteed. Postal cards promptly responded to.

— Our country readers when visiting the city will find the Brooklyn Hotel, Sansome street, the cleanest, most convenient, and most accommodating hotel in the city. The house has been renovated throughout, and the proprietors are always on the alert to make their guests feel at home. Rooms, 50 cents per night, $2 per week. Free omnibus to the steamer of their guest.

— Would-a-not people prepare against the coming Winter is going to be one of the coldest for many years. It would be well, therefore, for our readers to remember that Wellington coal is the best and most economical fuel, and that it will not cause a supply of this coal as well as all the other varieties of coal, may be had of Wellington, 630 Geary street. Persons residing at a distance can write Mr. Wellington, or telephone to 2,178.

— Tell your friends of Ammen's Cough Syrup.

— Why does not the proprietor of Ammen's Cough Syrup publish testimonials? Because they have been cured or relieved by its medicine? The reason is, the proprietor thinking the cures too remarkable they publish. Ammen's Cough Syrup for hoarseness, sore throat, and all other forms of the cure. A 25-cent sample bottle is prepared which is certainly more cure for money than a half-pound from a stranger. Large bottles $1.00. Ask your druggist for it.

Mothers Should Know.

When babies are fretful they distort, everybody and mothers; and they know by experience that Parker's Ginger Tonic is. It takes away bad air, nurses, gives a good nice nap, and is always and pleasant to use.—Home Journal.

Quinine and Arsenic.

Form the basis of many of the most popular specifics in the market, and are the last resort of Physicians and people who have tried almost every other remedy, for the distressing complaint. The effect of either of these drugs is very destructive to the system, producing headache, intestinal disorders, nervous tremor, ringing in the ears, and depression of the constitutional health. AYER'S ague CURE is a vegetable discovery, containing neither quinine, arsenic, nor any deleterious drug, and is as infallible and rapid cure for every form of Fever and Ague. Its effects are permanent and certain, and no injury can result from its use. Besides being a positive cure for Fever and Ague in all its forms, it is also a superior remedy for Liver Complaints. It is an excellent tonic and preventive, as well as cure, of all complaints peculiar to malarious, marshy and miasmatic districts. By direct action on the Liver and biliary apparatus, it stimulates the system to a vigorous, healthy condition.

FOR SALE BY ALL DEALERS.

Pianos and Accordeons.

New York Piano Co., will sell at factory prices. Call before purchasing elsewhere at 309 Market street, near Fifth, under Odeon Hall.

Eureka Cocoa Garden Hose.

Families will find this a first-class article. It is unless proof, lined with the Eureka Pure cocoa, guaranteed to stand 500 pounds pressure so equal 100 pounds by the best newly-made throw-ply rubber hose. Will not break in the kinks, split open or burst, nor injured by exposure to the sun. Warranted to last five years. For sale by W. T. V. Schmidt, 34 California street, San Francisco.

NERVOUS DEBILITY.
A CURE GUARANTEED.
DR. C. WHITE'S NERVE AND BRAIN TREATMENT, a specific for Hysteria, Dizziness, Convulsions, Nervous Headache, Mental Depression, Loss of Memory, Spermatorrhœa, Impotency, Premature Old Age, Irregularities, Diseases or Disorders of the Brain, which leads to Paralysis, Crazy and death. One box will cure recent cases. Price, $1 per box, or six boxes for $5, sent by mail prepaid. We guarantee six boxes to cure any case. We give six boxes to every $5 order. Sent by mail to free of charge, accompanied with $5, we will send the money back if the boxes do not cure. Guarantee issued only when the treatment is ordered direct from us. Address C. WHITE & CO., wholesale druggists, sole agents, 1122 Market street, San Francisco, wholesale in Pacific coast.

Sure Cure—Ammen's Cough Syrup.
Sore Throat—Ammen's Cough Syrup.
All druggists sell Ammen's Cough Syrup.
Hoarseness—Ammen's Cough Syrup.
Bronchitis—Ammen's Cough Syrup.
Twill cure your cold—Ammen's Cough Syrup.
Coughs—Ammen's Cough Syrup.
It cured my cold—Ammen's Cough Syrup.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Morse
PHOTOGRAPHER,
826 Market Street,
Phelan's New Building. San Francisco.
MR. MORSE'S NEW PHOTOGRAPHIC PARLORS have been pronounced, by travelers and all competent to judge, the finest in the world; in arrangement, furnishing and elegance they are unsurpassed; while the view galleries are the most complete, and the best the universe can produce. All are invited to call and inspect the gallery where the work of these instruments will be made apparent.

DR. WOOD'S
Liver Regulator,
—OR—
Universal Vegetable Panacea
OF CONCENTRATED EXTRACTS.
Selected and compounded from among the many Herbs and Plants of NATURE'S GREAT BOTANIC GARDEN!
For the Speedy and Permanent Relief of the Most Hopeless Cases of Dyspepsia, Jaundice, Chronic Diarrhœa, Sick Headache, Constipated Bowels and General Debility,
And all other Diseases arising from a Bilious state of the stomach or an inactive or disordered liver.
☞ FOR SALE EVERYWHERE. ☜
REDINGTON & CO.,
Wholesale Druggists,
Agents for the Pacific Coast. San Francisco.

JOHN WICMORE,
Hardwood Lumber,
Ship Timber,
LOCUST TREENAILS,
VENEERS & FANCY WOODS.
129 to 147 Spear St
—AND—
26 and 28 Howard Sts.,
SAN FRANCISCO.

THE DRESS REFORM CORSET.
Specially for Stout Ladies, Prevents Stout Ladies from Stooping, Gives Easy Position, Supports the Abdomen, Gives Perfect Ease to the Wearer.
An Elegant Corset to Order for $4.

MT. ST. MARY'S COLLEGE,
EMMITTSBURG, MD.
Conducted by an Association of Catholic Clergymen under the Auspices of his Eminence Cardinal McCloskey and his Grace the Archbishop of Baltimore.
THIS WELL-KNOWN INSTITUTION, COMBINING under one government a Junior Department, Preparatory and Commercial, a College incorporated to confer degrees, and a Theological Seminary, is about to open the twenty-third Anniversary of its foundation.
In admission no high ground at the front of the Mary, Mount and Emmitsburg Railroad, the healthfulness and the distinctness of either, is conserved by the Rules, Regulations and Discipline of the College. The College buildings, substantially constructed, have been recently improved and enlarged, and are now furnished with the best appliances of the age.
The several departments will be open for the reception of students, September 8th this year, and former students are subject to return before the 15th. Catalogues, with the formalities of classes may be completed without delay.
TERMS:
Board, Tuition and Washing, per session $150
Bed, Bedding and Medical attendance, per session, to be paid in advance 10
In the Preparatory and Commercial Departments $150
In the Junior Department 150
In the College 150
Music and

Market Report.

Corrected Weekly by P. J. Healy, on Saturday evening.

MONITOR OFFICE,
638 Clay St., Tuesday Evening, Oct 31, 1882.

DOMESTIC PRODUCE MARKET.

Flour—
Quotations are: City Extras, $5 50@5 75; City Superfine, $4 50@4 75; Interior brands, $4 75@5 75 for extra, and $3 75@4 00 for superfine.

Wheat—
Quotations are: Standard No. 1 Shipping, $1 37½@1 40; No. 2, $1 34@5; per cental. Stock Quotations, $1 37½@1.

Feed Barley—
Quotations are: Live Turkeys, 10@12c; Gobblers, 9c; Dressed, 10 @12c; Geese, $1 50@1 75; Goslings, $2 50@3; Ducks, $2 50@3; Teal Ducks, $1 50@2; Mallard Ducks, $3 50@4; Canvas Backs, $4 50@5; Plover, $1 50@2; Snipe, $2 50@3; Quail, $1 50@2 per dozen. Eggs, 25@30c per dozen.

Potatoes—
Quotable at 45@65c for choice; 45@65c for Mission; California Limes, 35c; Lemons, 75@$1; Mexican Limes, $—; Oranges, 50@75c $ box.

Onions—
Quotations are: Bermudas, $1 25@1 37½ Stand. and Chevalier, $1 12@1 50; Red, $1 25.

Provisions—
Cliff Cut Hams, 15@17½c; Sugar cured, 16@18c.

Hides—
Quotations are: Silver Stiles, 45@55 $ dd.

Cheese—
Quotable at 12@13c $ lb.

Butter—
Quotations are: Choice fresh roll Butter, 30@35 $ Pound; Medium do, 20@25c; Pickled, mostly Pickled, 20@25c; Firkins, 20@25 $ lb.

Honey—
Quotable at 24@25c $ lb.

Wool—
Quotations are: Clothing Cheviots, 19@21c; Tolmans, 18@19c; Silver Tasmanian Fleeces, 19@20c.

Hops—
Quotable at 12@15c $ lb.

Tallow—
Quotations are: Grease, 3@3½c $ lb; Tallow, 5@6 $ lb.

Beans—
Quotations are: Bayos, 3½@3½c $ lb; Carmen, 3½ $ lb; Butterbeans, 6c $ lb; Pinks, 3½@4c $ lb; Lady Washington, 4c $ lb; Dry Limas, 5c $ lb; Small White, 3½@4c $ lb; Large Limas, 5@6c $ lb; Red Kidneys, 3½@4c $ lb; Pea, 3½@4c $ lb.

Seeds—
Quotations are: Canary, 3½@4c $ lb; Canary, 4@5c $ lb; Rape, 3½@4c $ lb; Hemp, 3½@4c $ lb; Buckwheat, 2c $ lb; Flax, 3½@4c $ lb; Alfalfa, 8@9c $ lb; Alfalfa, 8@9c $ lb; Dry Chilies, 10@12c $ lb; Green Chilies, 10@12c $ lb; Pepper, 12@15c $ lb; Garlic, 3@4c $ lb; Onion Seed, 10 @12c $ lb.

Dried Fruit—
In Coarse Fruit we quote: Apples, 3@4c $ lb; Apricots, 6@8c $ lb; Nectarines, 6@8c $ lb; Peaches, 3@4c $ lb; Pears, 3@4c $ lb; Plums, 3@4c $ lb; Figs, 2@3c $ lb; Prunes, 3@4c $ lb; Raisins, $1 25@1 50 $ box.

Green Fruit—
Quotations are: Green Apples, 50@75c $ box; Pears, 50@75c $ box; Peaches, 50@75c $ box; Plums, 50@75c $ box; Grapes, 50@75c $ box; Figs, 50@75c $ box; Quinces, 50@75c $ box; Pomegranates, 50@75c $ box; Cocoanuts, $5 00 $ box; Pineapples, $5 00 $ box; Bananas, $5 00 $ box; Lemons, $1 50@2 $ box; Oranges, $1 50@2 $ box; Limes, 50@75c $ box; Figs, 50@75c $ box; Dates, 50@75c $ box; Persimmons, 50@75c $ box; Pineapples, $5 00 $ box; Cocoanuts

Poetry.

[FOR THE MONITOR.]

HOPE.

Soliloquy of an experienced Cleft after beholding "the first glimpses of Zion."

Then art gone from my sight like the light-giving star,
Which I saw the golden sun-rise to hide yet—
And the glorious sounds so my ravished heart
And far, far from thy mother, darling little, lonely babe!

In the land of the stranger my footsteps will stray
Through a long night of absence, unchanged by no
Then from my tender bosom, O fond memory's
Not, unchanged o'er my darkling existence will
But I'll gaze yonder vision that time cannot
Of the home where my first early longings was Where my heart-strings
And in thoughts I'll visit each oft-trodden scene,
As in times blissful days that forever have
At the anything of Israel, by Babel's proud stream,
Were dangling of dear Canaan's sweet valleys
Of the Jordan's
Then, sweet hope, away from his rude nest—not,
In an idiot's bright plume adorned for home, crown
And revelation.
He I'll wander, heart-chained, over Satan rich
And proud,
Leading by hope back to my own native island;
To the land where the smile of Divinity dwells,
On the valleys and the streams, and the vale, and the highland
Other others may hailed to the spot and the hand,
May be rich with the vine and the earth-cool
Other homes may be lacing, and brilliant, and
With the splendor of wealth and the phantoms
Yet
I may pass through Fortune's wide-famed Quaker pass, and Through the temples, and gold fields, and for the glorious
Home, with Christ Jesus Great I may while the
Or
Gazing on the scenes of beauty and wonder,
Not as free as the mole by magnet-love led,
Shall my heart-strings
Thus, O Lord, as then lead back the long
Of
Where my thoughts
Yet
Hope thy Hope thy Hope thy

THE MONITOR.

TWENTY-SIXTH YEAR OF PUBLICATION.

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 5, 1902.

Our Duty to the Dead in the Lord.

"Have pity on me, have pity on me, at least you, my friends; because the hand of the Lord hath touched me."—Job, 19, 21.

The Church of God represents the poor souls in Purgatory as addressing us, their brethren, these pitiful words, to the end that we may be moved to do all in our power to liberate them from their dark and frightful prisons. It is an article of our faith that there is a Purgatory, a place where the souls of the just, who are indebted to God by reason of venial transgressions, or because they have not fully satisfied His justice for mortal sins, from which guilt they have been freed by the Sacrament of Penance, must remain until the last farthing is paid. This article of faith, that there is a Purgatory, is founded on another dogma of our holy religion, viz., that nothing defiled can enter the Kingdom of God. (Apocalypse 21, 27.) We are taught by another article of faith that no matter how holy, how pure, how religious or exact a man may be, he cannot, without a special privilege from on high, avoid all venial sins, taken collectively, during his whole life. A true Christian can avoid, by ordinary grace, any one of them taken by itself; but not all of them together, without a special grace (Council. Trident. Sess. 6. Can. 23). The Apostles themselves, who, by the institution of theologians, cannot be believed to have been so far confirmed in grace that they could not, after the descent of the Holy Ghost, sin mortally (Bilhuart Tom. 4. Dissert. 2. art. iii. in Probationib. and 3 dun diss. ad in Tom. 2. tract. de gratia, dissert. iii. art. vi. Pesan 4 in p. 363), declare to us through St. John (epistle 1. 8) that—"If we say that we have no sin, we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us." "As there is only one Mother of God," says Father Le Poire (7 e scolie, chap. 6 e), "so there is only one pure creature then has been privileged to be exempt from every imperfection." For I know well that the Catholic Church holds that even the greatest saints are not free from faults, which are temporarily attached to the fruity of our nature, and that there is a necessity, even on their part, to continually have recourse to the mercy of God in order that they obtain a pardon for their ordinary failings." The General Counsils of the Church have made all these matters most clear (Council. Milevitan. c. 6. T. 8) Council. Trident. Sess. 6. c. 23).

From what has just been said we can easily infer how few, even of those who have had much exact and regular lives in the Catholic Church, will be able to enter into heaven. Now, when on the one hand we consider the pains of Purgatory, by reason of which Paul the Apostle, Rule Gods, or the Church Fathers, Doctors, Bishops, Martyrs, and the Saints, have trembled, and, on the other hand, the little number of souls, we can, by the help of God, through the mercy of that same just God, liberate these poor souls; we are forced to conclude that there is a great duty devolving in the equity, justice, and charity of Christians in the world, even calling themselves Catholics, to the relief of these poor souls, who have suffered so much in paid by Christ, and in the end, to the alleviation of the horrible pains of these Purgatorial souls, and, let the same, the Church, the holy and Almighty of Pascals (we are not finding fault with decency, but we are, and we declare it most emphatically, with the corrupt principles which have made of this world one of the corrupt, and which makes then almost, or entirely, forget the immortal soul that, in all probability, is lost forever, or, at least, very, very, (unless) argue a fearful lack of faith and a frightful amount of the meanest kind of cruelty.

But, in God's name, and for the sake of charity, let us all be aroused to a sense of our duty, let us consider the excessive rigors endured by our afflicted brethren, who are suffering for us, who are crying out to us for help, to us for help, to us for help, to be dead to their earnest and piteous entreaties. We can easily relieve them in their dismal dungeons, and even liberate them from their fearful torments of Purgatory are frightful, for the faults which are there being expiated, and which we, in our blindness, look upon as being so trivial, kindle up the wrath of a justly offended God, who must ever hate sin. But who can comprehend the extent of his wrath! "Who knoweth the power of thy anger, and for thy fear can number thy wrath!" (Psalm 89. 11. 12.) Look, that, Christians, into those dark prisons, see those poor souls enveloped with flames, behold them writhing in agony, and perfectly unable to help themselves! Who can tell the pains that their souls endure? Who, then, do we not hear, and feel the pressure whose souls are in Purgatory that in the state of grace, and are united to God by charity! Unanimously they are thinking of the attentions of God; they sigh for the opportunity to run, to fly to their Redeemer; they long to see Him who saved them by His most precious blood. But, alas! that good God is, in justice, obliged to detain them in their prisons, and to say to each of them: "Amen I say to thee, thou shalt not go out thence, until thou pay the last farthing" (Matt. chap 5, v. 26). They know well that they are of the number of the saints, that they deserve through the mercy of God, certainly that they are predestined to glory, and they burn with the desire of seeing God and His Tenderness Mother (their greatest torture they are in their not being able to see Jesus and Mary), and yet, they are chained by the justice of God in their horrible dungeons. What a comparison must they not suffer! St. Thomas teaches that the fire of Purgatory and hell is the same. St. Gregory declares that the flames of Purgatory are kindled up by divine vengeance, and that those who are sent there shall be baptized with fire. This is the last baptism. The baptism of water washed us from our first stains, that of fire shall purify us from our last frailties, and as the first was necessary to incorporate us in the Church of Christ on earth, so the second is necessary, if we owe anything to the justice of God, by reason of venial sins, or from the fact that we did not fully satisfy Him for mortal sins remitted by the Sacrament of Penance, before absolution will be given to us in Heaven. Shall we say to you, Christians, that all the afflictions have below are as nothing in comparison with the tortures endured by the inhabitants of the middle state? It is St. Augustine who says so. Yet, what have not our martyrs suffered for religion and God? To be plunged into boiling oil, to feel one's limbs torn one by one from the body, to be seated on red-hot iron chairs, to be rolled over sharp-pointed rocks, to be thrown in among scorpions, to be devoured by wild beasts—how terrible the very thought, how appalling the very idea! Our martyrs have gone through all this, and more! Heavens, what an ordeal! And yet, what is all this compared to what the poor souls in the expiatory flames suffer! How inexpressible we must be if such afflictions do not move us! But who are those unfortunate souls that suffer thus, and that in their agony such cry out continually to us, "Have pity on me, have pity on me, at least you, my friends; because the hand of the Lord hath touched me." They are, perhaps, loving parents, relations the most dear, friends the most true! Great God hath torn them from us, and God's justice has consigned them to the purgatorial flames. Rivers of fire inundate, invest and devour them. Abyssus on, they exclaim, from those dark prisons (dark, because they cannot behold God), from those penetrating flames; break our chains and liberate our souls. Are these voices unknown to you? Are they the cries of utter strangers! Husband, it is the voice of that faithful wife whom you loved with so much devotion. Do you remember her last farewell, her parting words while fondly clasping you in her arms, and testifying, in the best, her affection for you! Do you remember how she conjured you not to forget her in your prayers, and to preserve for her, after death, at least a part of that sincere attachment which you had for her in life. Ungrateful man, how can you so readily and so soon forget that amiable Rachel, notwithstanding your solemn protestations of eternal affection at the sacred moment of her death! Child, that tender mother, who took so much care of your youth, who experienced so many fears at the least peril that threatened you, who had no eyes but for you, who was never content but with you, who loved you as no one else ever can—has been calling on you for years, from the depths of her prison, and you have been deaf to her solicitations! Is it possible that you have forgotten—that you cannot hear your loved, loving mother be so deeper from your affections, as well as from your sight? All wretched relations, we are you the true trust the dearest of all mortals! Friend, it is that constant companion, that affectionate Jonathan who has confided his secrets to you with as much ardor, who has wiped away your tears, who has consoled you in your troubles with the most delicate, who has assisted you in your wants with so much generosity, that you now forget and permit to pine neglected in his frightful embarrassment! Brother, you forget those alternating relations you had with him, or those peaceful, happy days you passed together! Not why do they suffer? Alas! for having had too much friendship for you, for having been too much attached to you, for having indulged you too much, for having been too condescending to your desires and wishes. We are, then, the occasions of the suffering, imprisonment, etc., of our relations and friends, and yet, how little we think of endeavoring to extricate them from their dungeons! How long will they have to remain in those angry flames! Until the last farthing is paid. God alone knows the period of delay of each suffering soul in Purgatory. But if they had to remain there but one moment, they would be objects of our pity, for one day there is as a thousand years in pain here.

The Church of early authorities, tyrbor foundations for the dead, and by her Pontifical Canons, the belief that souls may be detained there for entire ages. What, then, ought we to do in order to relieve those who should be so dear to us, not only our own relations and friends, but also all God's children, our brethren, in the purgatorial torments! We ought to employ the means that the Church of God urges on us to use. It is an article of faith that the souls in Purgatory are particularly assisted, comforted and relieved by the holy mention of the Most Holy Mass, by prayers, by almsgiving, by the prayers of those souls are in Purgatory that in the state of grace, and are united to God by charity! Unanimously they are thinking of the attentions of God; they sigh for the opportunity to run, to fly to their Redeemer; they long to see Him who saved them by His most precious blood. But, alas! that good God is, in justice, obliged to detain them in their prisons, and to say to each of them: "Amen I say to thee, thou shalt not go out thence, until thou pay the last farthing" (Matt. chap 5, v. 26). They know well that they are of the number of the saints, that they deserve through the mercy of God, certainly that they are predestined to glory, and they burn with the desire of seeing God and His Tenderness Mother (their greatest torture they are in their not being able to see Jesus and Mary), and yet, they are chained by the justice of God in their horrible dungeons. What a comparison must they not suffer! St. Thomas teaches that the fire of Purgatory and hell is the same. St. Gregory declares that the flames of Purgatory are kindled up by divine vengeance, and that those who are sent there shall be baptized with fire. This is the last baptism. The baptism of water washed us from our first stains, that of fire shall purify us from our last frailties, and as the first was necessary to incorporate us in the Church of Christ on earth, so the second is necessary, if we owe anything to the justice of God, by reason of venial sins, or from the fact that we did not fully satisfy Him for mortal sins remitted by the Sacrament of Penance, before absolution will be given to us in Heaven. Shall we say to you, Christians, that all the afflictions have below are as nothing in comparison with the tortures endured by the inhabitants of the middle state! It is St. Augustine who says so. Yet, what have not our martyrs suffered for religion and God? To be plunged into boiling oil, to feel one's limbs torn one by one from the body, to be seated on red-hot iron chairs, to be rolled over sharp-pointed rocks, to be thrown in among scorpions, to be devoured by wild beasts—how terrible the very thought, how appalling the very idea! Our martyrs have gone through all this, and more! Heavens, what an ordeal! And yet, what is all this compared to what the poor souls in the expiatory flames suffer! How inexpressible we must be if such afflictions do not move us! But who are those unfortunate souls that suffer thus, and that in their agony such cry out continually to us, "Have pity on me, have pity on me, at least you, my friends; because the hand of the Lord hath touched me." They are, perhaps, loving parents, relations the most dear, friends the most true! Great God hath torn them from us, and God's justice has consigned them to the purgatorial flames. Rivers of fire inundate, invest and devour them. Abyssus on, they exclaim, from those dark prisons (dark, because they cannot behold God), from those penetrating flames; break our chains and liberate our souls. Are these voices unknown to you? Are they the cries of utter strangers! Husband, it is the voice of that faithful wife whom you loved with so much devotion. Do you remember her last farewell, her parting words while fondly clasping you in her arms, and testifying, in the best, her affection for you! Do you remember how she conjured you not to forget her in your prayers, and to preserve for her, after death, at least a part of that sincere attachment which you had for her in life. Ungrateful man, how can you so readily and so soon forget that amiable Rachel, notwithstanding your solemn protestations of eternal affection at the sacred moment of her death! Child, that tender mother, who took so much care of your youth, who experienced so many fears at the least peril that threatened you, who had no eyes but for you, who was never content but with you, who loved you as no one else ever can—has been calling on you for years, from the depths of her prison, and you have been deaf to her solicitations! Is it possible that you have forgotten—that you cannot hear your loved, loving mother be so deeper from your affections, as well as from your sight? All wretched relations, we are you the true trust the dearest of all mortals! Friend, it is that constant companion, that affectionate Jonathan who has confided his secrets to you with as much ardor, who has wiped away your tears, who has consoled you in your troubles with the most delicate, who has assisted you in your wants with so much generosity, that you now forget and permit to pine neglected in his frightful embarrassment! Brother, you forget those alternating relations you had with him, or those peaceful, happy days you passed together! But

A PROFESSIONAL CONFESSION.

The Usual Experience of a Prominent Man Made Public.

The following article from the Democrat and Chronicle, of Rochester, N. Y., is of so startling a nature, and emanates from so reliable a source, that it is herewith re-published entire. If addition to the valuable matter it contains, it will be found exceedingly interesting.

To the Editors of the Democrat and Chronicle:

SIRS:—My motives for the publication of the most unusual statements which follow are, First, gratitude for the fact that I have been saved from a most horrible death, and, secondly, a desire to warn all who read this statement against some of the most deceptive diseases by which they have ever been surprised. It is a fact that today thousands of people are within a foot of the grave and they do not know it. To tell how I was caught away from just this position and to warn others against nearing it, are my objects in this communication.

On the first day of June 1887, I lay at my residence in the city surrounded by my friends and awaiting death. Heaven only knows the agony I have endured, for words can never describe it. And yet, if a few years previous, anyone had told me that I was to be brought so low, and by so terrible a disease, I should have scoffed at the idea. I had always been uncommonly strong and healthy, had weighed over 200 pounds and hardly knew, in my 40 years experience, what pain or sickness was. Yet, many people who will read this statement will realize at times that they are unusually tired and can not account for it. They feel dull and indefinite pains in various parts of the body and do not understand it. Or they are excoiling binge one day and entirely sick, sort appetite the next. This was just the way which I felt when the relentless malady had fastened itself upon me but hope. Still I thought it was nothing; that perhaps I had taken a cold which would soon pass away. Shortly after this I noticed a dull, and at times quite acute, pain in my head, but as it would come one day and be gone the next, I paid little attention to it. However, my appetite began to fail me and my food often failed to digest, causing at times great inconvenience. Yet I had no idea, even as a physician, that these things meant anything serious or that a momentous change was approaching. Soon, however, I noticed a peculiar color and odor about the fluids I was passing, also that there were large quantities of them, and very little the next, and that a persistent fever had seen appeared on the scene, and a sediment settled at the bottom. And yet I did not realize my danger, for, indeed, some these symptoms continually, I found by consulting a physician, and by my conversation with other sufferers, that the fact that I had no pain in the affected organs or in their vicinity. Why I should have been so blind I cannot understand.

There is a terrible power for all physical neglect, and impending deep grave is brings a penalty to the sinner, even though it may be then too late to avert it. Soon my entire condition and my ability to attend to myself to every extent in the world, and I was forced to surrender the best medical skill in the land. I visited all the famous springs and resorts in America and travelled from Maine to California and back in search of health. But I never was. No two physicians agreed in my case, and I was troubled with spinal irritation; neuralgia, sciatica, kidney complaint, inflammation of the bladder, rheumatism, and finally a lung complaint, which, I was told, would soon carry me off. I was brought to my bed of chronic disease, the doctors pronouncing it incurable, and I was given up to die by my physicians, friends, and myself. Then, as a last resort, I was induced to try Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, the success of which I need not detail.

Since my recovery I have thoroughly investigated the subject of kidney diseases and Bright's disease, and the truths developed are astounding. I therefore state, deliberately and as a physician, that I believe that more than one-half the deaths which occur in this country are caused by Bright's disease of the kidneys. This fact seems like a rash statement, but I am prepared to fully prove it. Bright's disease has no distinctive symptoms of its own (indeed it closely imitates almost every other disease in the kidneys or their vicinity), but has the symptoms of ninety every other known complaint. If medical people, as daily, whose burdens are enhanced by a physician's certificate of "Heart Disease," "Apoplexy," "Paralysis," "Spinal Complaint," "Rheumatism," "Pneumonia," and other common complaints, when in reality it was Bright's Disease of the Kidneys. Few physicians, and fewer people, realize the extent of this disease or its dangerous and insidious nature. It attacks the system like a thief, manifests it presence by the common symptoms, and fastens itself upon the constitution before the victim is aware. It is nearly as hereditary as consumption, quite as common and fully as fatal. Entire families, inheriting it from their ancestors, have died, yet none of the number knew or realized the mysterious power which was removing them. Instead of common symptoms it often shows none whatever, but brings death suddenly, and as such is usually supposed to be heart disease. As one who has suffered, and knows by bitter experience what he says, I implore everyone who reads this not to neglect the slightest symptoms of Kidney difficulty. Certain agony and possible death will be the sure result of such neglect, and no one can afford to hazard such chances.

I am aware that such an unqualified statement as this, coming from me, known to be throughout the entire land as a practitioner and lecturer, will arouse the surprise and possible animosity of the medical profession and astonish all with whom I am acquainted, but I make the foregoing statements based upon facts which I am prepared to produce and truths which I am can substantiate to the letter. The welfare of those who may be sufferers such as I was, is an ample inducement for me to take the step I have, and if I can successfully warn others from the dangerous paths in which I once walked, I am willing to endure all the professional and personal consequences.

J. B. HENION, M. D.

MISCELLANEOUS.

TIN! ASPHALTUM!!

ROOFS Put Roofs at Lowest Rates. Old Roofs Repaired. Asphaltum Roofs warranted by MALBORNE BISSETT 508 Fourth and Fifth. Orders can be left at Grocery Store, R. G. FISKE.

MUSIC—LANGUAGES.

C. J. BONNINGTON, TEACHER VIOLIN, PIANO, ORGAN, VOCAL MUSIC, and all the various branches in the art and science of music. Residence 2128 Howard street. Office, 630 Montgomery street. I cause Indelible French, German, Italian, Spanish, or Hindoo Languages; terms moderate.

KNABE PIANOFORTES. ESTABLISHED 1837. Tone, Touch, Workmanship and Durability. WILLIAM KNABE & CO., Nos. 204 and 206 West Baltimore Street, Baltimore. No. 112 Fifth Avenue, N. Y.

MASON & HAMLIN ORGANS are certainly best, having been so declared at Universal Competitive Exhibitions for Medals, Diplomas, etc., for 12 years, and not any other instrument has. Illustrated Catalogue free. Sohmer & Co., 149 Fifth Ave., N. Y. Pianos, $150 to $1,000; uprights, $150 to $1,000; organs, $55 to $600. Sohmer & Co., 149 Fifth Ave., N. Y.

PIANOS The Company has received the highest awards at World's Exhibitions for the superiority of their pianos, which are warranted for five years. Illustrated catalogues free. HALLET, DAVIS & CO., 115 Fifth Ave., New York. WILLIAM A. POND & CO., 25 E. 14th St., New York. 148 Wabash Ave., Chicago.

PROFESSIONAL CARDS

M. COONEY, Attorney and Counselor at Law. Office, Montgomery street, cor. Pine. Rooms 3 and 4.....San Francisco.

JOHN LUTTRELL MURPHY, (Late City and County Attorney and Counselor.) Attorney and Counselor at Law, 420 and 424 Montgomery Street, SAN FRANCISCO.

ROBERT B. BRENHAM, Attorney-at-Law, 120 SUTTER ST., ROOM 54.

JOHN M. BURNETT, Attorney and Counselor at Law. Rooms 1 and 2, 207 Montgomery street, cor. Sacramento San Francisco.

CLARA S. FOLTZ, Attorney-at-Law, 628 MONTGOMERY STREET, Montgomery Block.

J. D. SULLIVAN, ATTORNEY-AT-LAW, Rooms 5, 6, and 15, 204 MONTGOMERY ST.....San Francisco.

A. H. LOUGHBOROUGH, Law Office, N. W. Cor. Sacramento and Montgomery Streets.

JAMES T. NOON, Attorney & Counsellor AT LAW. No. 230 Kearny Street. Room 1 and 2. Int. Setter and Dog.....SAN FRANCISCO. WILL Practice in Civil and Criminal Courts.

JAMES G. MAGUIRE, Attorney and Counselor at Law, 628 Montgomery st. (ROOM 78) OVER THE LAW LIBRARY, SAN FRANCISCO. WILL Practice in all the State and Federal Courts.

BEATTY Business, 17 days $20. Phrase, $20 in 30 days. Shorthand, Typewriting, Penmanship, Eng. & Math. Cal. Coll. Cor. Advrs. Bartlett, 7, Beatty, Wasserman, 2, J.

MISCELLANEOUS.

FRANK G. EDWARDS, HAS REMOVED HIS FINE STOCK OF Carpets, Wall Papers, Etc. —TO— FRELAN'S BLOCK, 820 Market Street.

Assemblained in the low rates charged by Dr. Dye for his celebrated Electro-Medical Belts, as contrasted to their cousins' low prices. I am sick with the chaff, where the genuine articles are best appliances are in the hands of skilled and mere women.

Promptness of delivery is a prominent characteristic in my business. Orders by mail or express filled on city prices. Paper Belts, Black Belts, Belt Buckles, Suspenders, etc., to order. Cor. Clay and Sansome Streets, San Francisco.

RAZORS! FOR $1,000 I WILL MAKE A BETTER RAZOR AND HONE OF them in the same time for any man IN THE WORLD

My razor made guaranteed.....$2 5
My Grand Razor warranted not to cut the flesh while shaving.....2 5
Good Razors.....1 00
Best English Razors.....1 50
Sent C. O. D. or by mail.

M. PRICE, 418 Sansome St. Grinding and Repairing.

An Extraordinary Razor HARBERY INVENTED BY THE QUEEN'S CUTLER TO HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN, AND HELD IN THE FLEXIBLE AS NEVER TO REQUIRE GRINDING, WARRANTED TO SHAVE THE HARDEST BEARD WITHOUT WINCE, WITHOUT WRINCE, WITHOUT A WRINCE, IS CREATING A GREAT EXCITEMENT. A PERFECTION TO shallow in bodkin handle: Bible type. Every razor, Sent to any address on the receipt of the money. MAYHAN POMEROY, 36 Clay street, San Francisco, the only place in the City where they can be Made complete, sent by mail like units or C. O. D.

The Queen's Cutler Cutlery, Razors, Scissors, CARVING KNIVES, TABLE KNIVES, PEARL AND IVORY HUNTING KNIVES and SCISSORS, Sent free on receipt of the same value. Sent free on receipt of the same value.

ESTABLISHED 1864.

J. COONEY, PRACTICAL Painter and Whitener. SIGNS NEATLY EXECUTED. NO. 113 FOURTH STREET.

NOTICE OF REMOVAL. JERRY LOWNEY & SON HAVE REMOVED THEIR CARRIAGE FACTORY to 1108 Market, opp. Stockton street. All kinds of carriage and wagon work made and made to order, and repairing promptly attended to.

NEW ENGLAND BAKING POWDER NO ALUM FLOUR STARCH AMMONIA PHOSPHATES TARTARIC ACID CREAM TARTAR AND BI-CARB. SODA NOTHING ELSE. Newton Bros. & Co.

PHILADELPHIA BREWERY. JOHN WIELAND - - - PROPRIETOR SECOND STREET, NEAR FOLSOM, SAN FRANCISCO. Amount of Beer sold in 1881, 22,182 barrels. ocl8

BANKING HOUSES.

Jos. A. Donohoe, | Eugene Kelly. San Francisco. | New York.

DONOHOE, KELLY & CO. SAN FRANCISCO. EUGENE, KELLY & CO, NEW YORK. BANKERS. EXCHANGE ON NEW YORK, LONDON, AND BANK IRELAND (Dublin). Payable at all the Branches AND IN EUROPE COUNTY TOWN IN IRELAND.

WINES, LIQUORS, ETC.

NATIVE WINES. Cost Bottle.....from 20 to 50 cents. Cost Bottle.....$2 50 to $5 cents. Cost Bottle.....$4 cents to $1. Cost Bottle.....$4 cents to $1. Cocktails. Brandies and Fortigo Wines and Brandies by the gallon, Sent to any Express office. Address Dutton J. Beatty, Wasserman, 2 J.

MISCELLANEOUS.

H. N. COOK, MANUFACTURER OF OAK-TANNED LEATHER BELTING & HOSE, S. W. cor. Market and Fremont Sts., SAN FRANCISCO. SATISFACTION GUARANTEED. The Finest Lacing in Cut Strings or Sides always on Hand. MAIL, EXPRESS AND BULLION BAGS.

THE CATHOLIC Mutual Beneficial ASSOCIATION OF THE Archdiocese of San Francisco. President - - Rev. J. B. McNally. PRESENTS A PLAN OF LIFE INSURANCE FOR Catholics that should be embraced by all prudent people. It is the most SAFE AND ECONOMICAL method of Life Insurance extant, and is open to Catholics from 18 to 50 years of age. Archbishop Alemany and nearly all the priests of the archdiocese have recommended it to their flocks. The Bishops are kept in the Diocesan Council of the affairs of the association. The office of the association has been opened at 1118 Montgomery street (under the Occidental Hotel where the beneficiary will be admission every evening (except Sundays) from 7 to 10 by attend, and where all Catholics desiring to join the association will be welcomed. Written communications may be addressed to EDWARD GILLIN, Secretary, 1118 Jones Street.

HEAR DEAF Garmore's Ear Drum. Artificial Ear Drum. Restores the hearing. Invisible. Comfortable. Cannot be seen in the ear. Sent on trial. Cost moderate. Cures Deafness and Noises in the Head. Sent free with testimonials. Address, GARMORE MFG. CO. 1120 G Street, Sacramento, Cal.

INFORMATION WANTED. Any person knowing the whereabouts of Mr. F. J. Kelly, of Irving, or can give any information regarding the same, will be rewarded by the undersigned. Mr. F. J. Kelly, when last heard from, was in Virginia City, Nev., two years ago. He was last in Washington Territory, Dayton, and his sister Margaret Boyle is very anxious to hear from him.

SAN FRANCISCO NORTH PACIFIC RAILROAD. On and after Sunday, October 22, 1882, Boats and Trains will leave San Francisco as follows: 10 A. M. Daily (Sundays excepted), via San Rafael, from Market street (foot of Market). 2.30 P. M. Daily, from Tiburon. 4.45 Daily, for Petaluma, Cloverdale, and way stations. 6.30 P. M. Saturdays only, for San Rafael. Stages connect at Cloverdale for Highland Springs, Kelseyville, Soda Springs, Bartlett Springs, Lakeport, Bucknell's, Sanhedrin Heights, Ukiah and the Geysers. PETER J. MCGLYNN, Gen. Manager. TIBURON FERRY. Commencing Monday, October 23, 1882, Trains will leave Tiburon Ferry (foot of Tiburon street) for San Francisco as follows: 7.00 A. M. Daily (Sundays excepted). 8.00 A. M. Sundays only. 3.30 P. M. Daily. 6.00 P. M. Saturdays only. ARTHUR HUGHES, Gen. Manager. PETER J. MCGLYNN, Gen. Pass. & Ticket Agent.

SONOMA VALLEY RAILROAD. On and after Monday, April 3, 1882, Boats and Trains will leave San Francisco as follows: 2.30 P. M. Daily (Sundays excepted) from Washington street. Return from Sonoma, 8.20 A. M. Daily. SUNDAY EXCURSIONS. Round Trip Tickets to Sonoma, Glen Ellen and way points, $1.00; Children, 50 cts. ARTHUR HUGHES, General Manager. PETER J. MCGLYNN, Gen. Pass. & Tkt. Agt.

AS GOOD AS NEW. STRAW AND FELT HATS Cleaned and Pressed to look like New. Latest Style Hat and Bonnet Frames for sale. 10 FOURTH STREET.....Near Market.

SIGNOR LUIGI DAMA HAS RETURNED FROM HIS VACATION IN THE East and has Resumed Singing Lessons at 201 POWELL ST., San Francisco

DAVID DRADY, 230 Fourth Street. Importer and Dealer in Fine Mouldings, Mirrors and Pictures. Picture Framing and Regilding done at Reasonable Prices.

A. F. KNORP, Mechanics' Mill, 411 MISSION STREET (Near Fremont) SECOND FLOOR. MANUFACTURER TO ORDER DESKS, BEDS, CHAIRS, Tables, Bureaus, Bedsteads, and every kind of Furniture. Turning, Carving, Scroll Sawing, Moulding, Shaving, Sawing, Boxes, Sash, Doors, Sashes and Blinds Wanted. Orders promptly attended to. Any style desired and at reasonable rate. Residence 27 Sixth street. Orders left at Bush and Sansome sts., Bush and Market sts., Bush and Mason sts., Bush and Powell sts., Bush and Stockton sts., Bush and Sutter sts., Bush and Polk sts., Bush and Fillmore sts., Bush and Webster sts., Bush and Steiner

Will Ireland be Great, Glorious, and Free?

A LONDON PAPER ON ANCIENT IRELAND.

THE LOST TRIBES OF ISRAEL AT LAST DISCOVERED.

The Hill of Tara and its Historic Stone

An Interesting Chapter in Irish History

A curious newspaper, published weekly in London, and entitled British Israel and Judah's Prophetic Message, supposes a burning desire to explore the Hill of Tara. It says "that is the only way to give peace to Ireland. This will settle all disputes." Among other marvelous results of the exploration of Tara are the following: It will—"Prove the truth of the mission of Jeremiah to Ireland, and his planting and building.

"That the British nation is identical with the lost tribe of Ephraim-Israel.

"That Jeremiah the Prophet brought the stone which is called Jacob's Stone; the Coronation Stone now in Westminster Abbey.

"Open out a divine way of deliverance to the Jews in all parts of the world.

"Unite America with the British nation in Business and Marriage.

"Open the way by which all our foreign enemies will be overcome.

"Bring forth our evidence that we are Israel, and have the right to possess Palestine and Jerusalem—the Great Gate, the Gate of the Lord.

"Open very the blindness and ignorance from the minds of the people.

"God's people called out of Babylon, that is Protestantism.

"The extraordinary proposition, says the Boston Pilot, may revive some interesting Irish traditions. According to the early Irish annals of Ireland, including the history of the Tuatha De Danans, the Lia Fail, which this kings of Ireland were formerly inaugurated, and which now forms the seat of the coronation chair of England in Westminster Abbey, was the island of Tory, off the coast of Innis Fail, or the island of Destiny, from this mysterious stone, the history of which in the ancient annals of Ireland is interesting. When the Tuatha-de-Danans came to Ireland they brought with them the Lia Fail, which was regarded as a sacred object. It is called also in an ancient tradition "Jacob's Pillow," and was a build that is part of the stone called "Jacob's Pillow" at Jerusalem, and in the Book of Genesis; hence, some have conjectured that it was brought to Ireland by remote times from the land of Canaan. It is certain that for many centuries the Lia Fail was held in the Market Report.

Corrected Weekly by F. J. Daly, 605 Battery street.

Morning Office,
606 Clay St., Tuesday Evening, Nov 7, 1882.

DOMESTIC PRODUCE MARKET.

Flour—
Quotations are: City Extras, $5 50@$5 75; City Superfine, $4 50@$4 75; Interior brands, $3 75@$4 25 for extra, and $3 75@$4 00 for superfine.

Wheat—
Quotations are: Standard No. 1 Shipping, $1 04@$1 10; No. 2, $1 00@$1 02½ per cental.

Feathers—
Quotations are: Live Turkeys, 18@17c; Dressed, @ ; Ducks, $2 00@$2 50; Broilers, $4 00@$5 00; Hens, $3 00@$3 50; Young Roosters, $7 00@$7 50; Old, $5 00@$6 00 per dozen; Geese, $1 25@$1 50 ⅌ pair; Pigeons, $1 00 @$1 25; $3 25@$3 50 ⅌ doz. Good Hens $4 50@$7 50.

Eggs—
Quotable at 45@46c for choice; 43@45c for Western California; Lime, 35c; Eastern, 22@30c; Salt Lake, —@—c; Oregon, 26@30c ⅌ doz.

Barley—
Quotations are: Brewing, $1@1 37½; Standard Chevalier, $1 45@$1 55; Feed, $1 37½.

Potatoes—
Chili Garnets, 85c@$1 10; Early Rose, c@$.

Onions—
Quotations are: Silver skins, 75@80 ⅌ ctl.

Garbanzos—
Quotable at $3 00@$ ⅌ ton; table meal, 5c@5½ ⅌ lb.

Beans—
Quotable at 2½@2½c ⅌ lb.

Butter—
Quotations are: Choice fresh roll Butter, 37@40c; Fancy, 35@c; Medium, 30@35c; Pickle, 25@27c; Pickled, 20@25c; Eastern Butter, 30@35c ⅌ lb.

Cheese—
Quotations are: California Cheese, 10@11c; Eastern, 15@16c; Gilroy Imitation Eastern, 12@13c ⅌ lb.

Domestic Fruit—
Quotations are: Green Apples, 50c@$1 ⅌ box; Quotation of $2 00@$2 50 ⅌ box; Pears, $1 00@$1 50 ⅌ box; Wine Grapes, 30@50 ⅌ ctl; Crab Apples, $1 00@$1 50 ⅌ box; Sweet Potatoes, 1½@2c ⅌ lb; Yams, $1@1 25 ⅌ box; Nutmeg Melons, $1@1 50 ⅌ box; Muscat Grapes, 30@50 ⅌ box; Mission Grapes, 30@50 ⅌ box; Quinces, 50@75c ⅌ box.

Vegetables—
Quotations are: Cabbage, 30@37½c ⅌ ctl; Garlic, 1@1½c ⅌ lb; Marrowfat Squash, $1@1 25 ⅌ ctl ⅌ ton; Cauliflower, 40@75c; Dry Peppers, 4@6c; Green Peppers, 4@6c; Tomatoes, $1@1 25 ⅌ box; Dry Onions, 1½@2c ⅌ lb; Green Onions, 30@35c ⅌ doz; Carrots, 30@35c ⅌ sack; Turnips, 30@35c ⅌ sack; Green Peas, 2@3c ⅌ lb; Green Corn, 10 at 15c ⅌ doz.

Hay—
Is Clover, $9@$12 ⅌ ton; No. 1 $11@$12; No. 2, $9@$10; Oat, $9@$12 ⅌ ton.

Vegetable at $1 00@$1 50 ⅌ Yellow; White, $1 25 ⅌ ctl.

Hops—
Quotations are: Wheat, old, $1 55@$1 60; wild, $1 45@$1 50; volunteer and stubble, $1 30@ $1 40; Eastern, $1 60@$1 70 ⅌ box.

Wool—
Quotable 30@35c ⅌ lb.

Tallow—
RAMS—Eastern, 12@60c; California, 16@ 17c.

BACON—California, 14@16½c; Eastern, 16@ Extra Clear Pickle, 14@ California Shoulders, 10@ .

PORK—Extra Clear, ⅌ bbl, $22 00; do in half bbl, $12 00; Clear, ⅌ bbl, $21 00; do in half bbl, $11 50; Mess ⅌ bbl, $20 00; do half bbl, $11 00; Prime Mess, ⅌ bbl, $18 00; do half bbl, $9 00; Prime, ⅌ bbl, $17 00; do half bbl, $8 50; Extra Prime, ⅌ bbl, $16 00; do half bbl, $8 00; Clear Pig, ⅌ bbl, $23 00; do half bbl, $12 50; Clear, ⅌ bbl, $22 00; do half bbl, $12 00.

HAMS—Eastern, 18@19c; Eastern Sugar Cured, 14@15c; Eastern Smoked, 14@15c; Eastern Boiled, 24@25c; Boiled, 2 5 cents, Pike Pt.

BEEF—Extra, ⅌ bbl, $12@13; Extra Mess, $12 50; Mess Beef, half bbl, $6 50; Prime, ⅌ bbl, $10 50; half bbl, $5 50; Prime Mess, ⅌ bbl, $12 50; half bbl, $6 50; Family, ⅌ bbl, $14 50; half bbl, $7 50.

LARD—Eastern, 12@60c; California, 14@ 15

Poetry.

POEM

Written for the 31st Anniversary of the Germania Society of St. Louis, Mo., November 6th, 1866.

BY HARRIET E. SKINNOER.

I.

Lo! the warlike host advances, with its trophies of the foe,
With its shining, serried banner, flashing back the noon-day light;
With its banners gaily streaming on the soft breeze,
With its warlike shields gleaming, and its helmets' lofty plumes;
And the sturdy tread, heavy, thus these do speak of victory,
Where their forms pulsed proudly in the well-fought battle there;
Then they grant the glad rejoicing of the sons, who, from year to year,
They were left, with order marching, to the cheering hosts of the.

II.

Thus, too, each association formed for worldly gain or love,
Church, with its ceremonies, and with jubilant emotion,
Aye, with pomp of joy recounting, and with memory's tone,
Anniversary of its founding, blithely hailed anniversaries.

III.

Brother! to each year there wave given shining sword and sacred shield,
We have boldly, gladly strives, on the well-contested field,
Where, amid, on with cooler warding, as at Sedan, Metz,
On a blank, confusion marching—one and twenty years ago—
Yet we blood-stain were the standing of our fathers, and
Our honest, blithely streaming, only sacred emblem, lost.

IV.

Brother! to each year there wave given shining sword and sacred shield,
Strong with colored rays are standing through the sunlight, and Over all by rain, victorious, and to wash the hosts of the.

V.

Thus, our sword, great and glorious, this day
Lo! our shield of strength supreme, that shall
Shield, unless it shall be blunt, our
Lo! our shield of strength supreme, that shall
Shield, unless it shall be blunt, our
Lo! our shield of strength supreme, that shall Shield, unless it shall be blunt, our

VI.

Lo! our shield of strength supreme, that shall
Shield, unless it shall be blunt, our
Lo! our shield of strength supreme, that shall Shield, unless it shall be blunt, our

VII.

Lo! our shield of strength supreme, that shall
Shield, unless it shall be blunt, our
Lo! our shield of strength supreme, that shall Shield, unless it shall be blunt, our

VIII.

Lo! our shield of strength supreme, that shall
Shield, unless it shall be blunt, our
Lo! our shield of strength supreme, that shall Shield, unless it shall be blunt, our

IX.

Lo! our shield of strength supreme, that shall
Shield, unless it shall be blunt, our
Lo! our shield of strength supreme, that shall Shield, unless it shall be blunt, our

X.

Lo! our shield of strength supreme, that shall
Shield, unless it shall be blunt, our
Lo! our shield of strength supreme, that shall Shield, unless it shall be blunt, our

XI.

Lo! our shield of strength supreme, that shall
Shield, unless it shall be blunt, our
Lo! our shield of strength supreme, that shall Shield, unless it shall be blunt, our

XII.

Lo! our shield of strength supreme, that shall
Shield, unless it shall be blunt, our
Lo! our shield of strength supreme, that shall
Shield, unless it shall be blunt, our

Literary Miscellany.

Company Faces.

Men and women have a company face. They put them on with their best clothes, as a part of their being, wearing them so long at times is anybody to judge, decorin or dope, and then put them off as readily. Some persons, even in have no individuality—one for home and one for public. Yet they are not hypocrites, but have a degree of operation so widely different, that they will not recognize each other. The world is apt to judge by the exterior; therefore, as they are most blind the world. It forms its opinion from tangible evidence; there fore let us appear to the best advantage. Their world is governed by the whipper of policy, which cells that much may be gained but nothing lost by the course. And so truth is pushed aside to make way for inferior or more showy stars who shine in borrowed firmness.

The well effects of this beautiful practice cannot be calculated. Gender looks with approbation on deceit, good old honesty blushy tenities its disapprobation, and sincerely needs in an adequate expression of the dissimulation. Those who counsellors are unbeguiled, or unadulterously assured that there is really nothing to fear; that a tell-tale occasion is not a precursion; that it is false colouring is far from being a false hood; that an innocent while in should not wand with a blush; that a blush means a fault; that what so many people do so many times cannot be naturally wrong. Let us accept, let look at results, then, and we will judge of the cause.

Ella Hall, an unmarried sister and a young daughter sat in a pleasant parlor, the first two working and the latter alternately reading and looking out of the window.

"I should like to know whether our new neighbors are coming to church or not," the majority of his parishioners" said the latter.

"I can't tell, I'm sure; but one thing he said, I can't forget," replied Mrs. Vail, pushing her needle in and out of the work in a sort of jerky laughing that her mind was in a state of perplexity.

Miss Dunford looked up inquiringly.

"He has been here!" she said.

"Yes! but from what I have seen of him I know that I cannot like him. His manners are not pleasant, and I do not like his cut of jaw."

"He has some reputation I have heard."

"Yes, for oddity and peculiarity; nothing that is agreeable. I should pity people call him original; I do not. A man who wants to be original, out-of-the-way man; they sound so sweet and sociable. Then he's civilized going in and out of the pulpit, handling the book, etc.; I think he is a man of good gracious as much as his amount of grace. He is a hard and very, and he reads as if he never heard hard labor, or sickness—

"Mother, Miss Jane is coming up the walk," said Ella, interrupting her.

"True me! that women are everywhere; she's been here three times within a month! A deep old sinner, Emma, I tell you! Mrs. Vail to her sister, by way of explanation.

"Well, I don't like the lady of the house quietly to the door and opened it herself.

"Ah, good morning, my dear Miss Ella! What a message you are! Is your mother at home?"

"Yes, ma'am, I'm sure," replied the girl, with a curtsey, and the visitor, as she entered the parlor, finished her salutation to the mother and daughter with the usual inquiries of health, etc.

"Well, I've come to see you, Mrs. Vail, and I hope you will be pleased to see me, I'm sure," said the visitor, as she seated herself and commenced a very deliberate unbuttoning of her gloves.

"Thank you, Mrs. Vail, but I merely called to return this book you were so kind as to lend me. I am going further, and I thought I would stop.

"Not that you's prevent you from coming to see us, I'm sure," said her friend.

"Well, the fact is, I promised to call on Mrs. Mortimer, and I thought I would call on you first, as I hadn't heard, Lord's sake! what a character she is!

"Mrs. Mortimer?"

"Yes, the celebrity and peculiarity; nothing that is agreeable. I should pity people call him original; I do not. A man who wants to be original, out-of-the-way man; they sound so sweet and sociable. Then he's civilized going in and out of the pulpit, handling the book, etc.; I think he is a man of good gracious as much as his amount of grace. He is a hard and very, and he reads as if he never heard hard labor, or sickness—

"Mother, Miss Jane is coming up the walk," said Ella, interrupting her.

"True me! that women are everywhere; she's been here three times within a month! A deep old sinner, Emma, I tell you! Mrs. Vail to her sister, by way of explanation.

"Well, I don't like the lady of the house quietly to the door and opened it herself.

"Ah, good morning, my dear Miss Ella! What a message you are!" said the visitor, with animation, leaving the visitor on both sides, "Mrs. Vail, I'm sure, I'm sure!"

THE MONITOR.

TWENTY-SIXTH YEAR OF PUBLICATION.

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 13, 1872.

Do Not Forget the Dead.

Once more, in this month of the holy souls, we ask our Catholic readers, who have any regard for their relatives, to remember the poor, suffering souls in the Holy Sacrifice of the Mass, in their prayers, and in their alms-giving. The debt we owe to the dead is one that, when once paid, will gain deliverance for the soul of our deceased relative or friend, and gain for them securing that release from Purgatory the inestimable blessing of having another happy soul to plead for them before the throne of God. It is in this spirit that the voice of God speaks to us when the inspired writer tells us to "Restrain not from grace the dead," and it is in the same spirit that the Church established by Almighty God teaches us in our infant years, in our maturity, and even in old age, that it is every, there and always "a holy and a wholesome thought to pray for the dead that they may be loosed from their sins."

What would be thought of the unnatural and inhuman ingratitude of the Christian child on whom a Catholic parent had lavished all his riches, even lingering himself to enrich his child, if in after life that parent became impoverished and was cast into a debtor's prison, from whence he could not gain his liberty until the last farthing was paid? What, we ask, would the world say if that unnatural child persisted in permit to suffer imprisonment for years upon years, without making any effort to release his parent from the prison of his debts? Yet this is precisely what Catholics do when they forget father, mother, children, friends, relatives, and benefactors, when poor souls are suffering in Purgatory because there are certain debts they must pay ere they can behold God face to face. Our God, and they must linger there until large almost insane to despair, because we are so un-Christian, so un-Catholic, so ungrateful as to leave them without the Holy Sacrifice of the Mass, to leave them without a prayer, to leave them without a single alms given to obtain God's mercy upon their souls, suffering souls! Oh! this is indeed ingratitude of the deepest dye. It is a sad return for the riches of faith which our parents have left us; it is a sad return for the saving light of the cross which they bequeathed upon our brow! But is spiritual, as in temporal things, it is "better late than never;" and if what we have written will cause only one "Hail Mary" to be offered up for some suffering soul, some good, at least, will be accomplished for those who cannot plead for themselves in this, the month of their tribulation.

It has been beautifully said that prayer is the key to Heaven, but we should remember that prayer is the key to Purgatory, and that in unlocking the gates that bar the souls of the faithful departed from beholding the beatific vision of God, we also unlock the gates of Heaven for the admission of our own souls when there shall be no more future for us in this world, but an eternity in the next.

HOLY JUBILEE OF LEO XIII.

The new jubilee, Encyclical letter of Leo XIII. to the Bishops of the Papal States, dated from the Vatican, the 1st of October, commences with the usual exhortations to be assured by his Holiness of the Divine Protection of the Papacy, and bitter invectives against the Piedmontese administration. The Encyclical then proceeds to say:

"Most important in the painful and distressed condition of the Church, and of Christ on Earth, we more than ever feel the necessity of our duty, as the Vicar of Jesus Christ, of confirming our brethren in the faith, and of exhorting them to be ever ready to give an account of the hope that is in them. Wherefore, we have thought it necessary to proclaim a Jubilee, that, by the mercy of God, and the intercession of the Blessed Virgin, we may obtain the assistance of the Holy Ghost, and we are sure that the Divine Goodness will not deny us the necessary means to fulfil our duty, and to overcome the difficulties and dangers which surround us on every side. Accordingly, we have to-day, in the Consistory, published the Jubilee, which we have ordained to be celebrated throughout the whole Catholic world, and we have written to our venerable brethren, the Bishops, to inform them of our intention, and to invite them to join with us in the exercise of Christian charity, and in the practice of those pious works which are the most efficacious means of appeasing the Divine Wrath, and of obtaining the Divine Mercy. We have also written to our dearest children in Jesus Christ, the Catholic laity, to inform them of our intention, and to invite them to join with us in the exercise

THE FLOWER CITY FURORE.

The Commotion Caused by the Statement of a Physician.

An unusual article from the Rochester, N. Y., Democrat and Chronicle, was published in this paper recently and has been the subject of much conversation both in professional circles and on the street. Apparently it is meant to be a warning in the shape of a lecture, as the following from the same paper shows:

Dr. J. S. Hunter, who is well known not only in Rochester, but in nearly every part of America, and who is a Rochester citizen himself, has done that which our daily publication, in the interest of the public and their health, has been unable to do, namely, to bring home to the people of this city and vicinity the fact that there is a physician among us who is thoroughly versed in the study of the disease, Bright's disease of the kidneys, and that he has devoted a great deal of time to the study of the disease, and has made it a specialty for years. He has made a study of this subject and can give you more information than any other man in the country.

With this end in view a representative of this paper called on Dr. Hunter, at his residence on St. Paul street, when the following interview took place:

"The papers talk of cures, Doctor, has anyone been cured?"

"I have I can. I know it from the experiences of hundreds of prominent persons who were given up to die by both their physicians and friends."

"You speak of your own experience, what was it?"

"A fearful one. I had felt languid and subject to attacks of pain for years. But I did not know what ailed me. When, however, I was taken with my present disease, I thought there was little hope and so did the doctors. I have since learned that one of the physicians of the city pronounced me out to a gentleman on the street one day, saying: 'there goes a man who will be dead within a year.' I believe his words would have proven true if I had not learned of my disease and taken the remedy now known as Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure. I am getting my own from my employ, quoted in this notice and think I am helping others to use the same and which has profited them also. Why, there are a lot of people talking about the subject. If you want to know more about it go and see Mr. Warner himself. He was sick the same as I, and is the finest specimen in Rochester to-day. He has made a study of this subject and can give you more than I can. Go, too, and see Dr. Lattimore, the chemist, of the University. If you want them there are plenty of people who will say the charming increase of Bright's disease, its danger and dangers, and the fact that there is but one way by which it can be prevented."

Fully satisfied of the truth and force of the Doctor's words, the reporter hails him good day and calls on Mr. Warner at his establishment on Buffalo street. At first Mr. Warner seemed to be reluctant, fearing that the information desired was about the disease which he had suffered, and, the common tongue humanly and he again was sensitive.

"It is true that Bright's disease has increased wonderfully, and no find, by the tables statistics, that the deaths from this growth has been 200 per cent. Look at the prominent men who have died of Bright's disease, Prime, Wilkinson, Tilden, Bishop Simpson, and others. This is terrible, and shows its power. Why, there is hardly a city without some victim. It should be plain to every one that the time is ripe for people to stand the consequences or there is no knowing where it will end."

"Do you think many people are afflicted with it today the 20 per cent. it, Mr. Warner?"

"Yes I do, and I believe it is a thousand times more than the doctors think. I know a little bit myself. A prominent publisher in New Orleans sent a package to me from the hollow of his cane, and I was not long before he was on the subject of Bright's disease. He had spasms fresh under my eyes, and I saw them and was showing the publisher what the symptoms of the disease were, when he, too, was taken to show the same. Symptoms, inability and unknowledge of Bright's had provided a cure for someone of which I can speak from experience. 'And the, gentlemen,' he said, 'as we have seen the symptoms of Bright's, I will show you how it appears in a state of partial health,' and he took a sample of his own and in trembling color he said: 'Gentlemen, I have made a partial discovery. I have Bright's disease of the kidneys,' and in less than a year he was dead."

"You believe then that it has no symptoms of its own and is frequently subjected even by the doctor who is affected with it?"

"It has no symptoms of its own and very often none at all. Usually the people have the usual symptoms, and frequently death is the first symptom. The slightest indication of any kidney difficulty should be enough to strike terror to any one. I have what I am talking about, for I have been through all the stages of kidney disease."

"You have of Dr. Hunter's case?"

"Yes, I have both read and heard of it."

"Is it very prevalent, is it so?"

"A very prominent one but no more so than a great many others that have come to my notice as having been cured by the same means."

"You believe then that Bright's disease can be cured?"

"I know it can. I know it from the experiences of hundreds of prominent persons who were given up to die by both their physicians and friends."

"You speak of your own experience, what was it."

"A fearful one. I had felt languid and subject to attacks of pain for years. But I did not know what ailed me. When, however, I was taken with my present disease, I thought there was little hope and so did the doctors. I have since learned that one of the physicians of the city pronounced me out to a gentleman on the street one day, saying: 'there goes a man who will be dead within a year.' I believe his words would have proven true if I had not learned of my disease and taken the remedy now known as Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure."

"And this you claim you to manufacture it?"

"No it cannot one to be compounded. I want to tell you, Mr. Editor, my friends generally and today and I therefore that, and in a day I cured immediately of my suffering, to bring it within their reach and now it is known in every part of America, it and in spite of the dangers and has become a household specialty."

The reporter left Mr. Warner, much impressed with the earnestness and sincerity of his statements and had paid a visit to Dr. S. J. Lattimore at his residence on Prince street. Dr. Lattimore, although not a specialist in the medical profession, is with the State Board of Health, of which he is one of the analysts, and had not heard of the questions that were propounded him: "Did you make a chemical analysis of the urine of Mr. H. H. Warner some three years ago, Doctor?"

"Yes, sir."

"What did this analysis show you?"

"The presence of albumen and tube casts in great abundance."

"And what did the symptom indicate?"

"A serious disease of the kidneys."

"Did you think Mr. Warner could recover?"

"No, sir. I did not think it possible. It was a case, indeed, that so pronounced a man had, so to that time, ever been cured."

"Have you heard anything about the remedy that cured him?"

"Yes, I have chemically analyzed it and upon critical examination, find it entirely free from any poisonous or deleterious substance."

"Do you think the foregoing statements in regard to the remedy, Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, and of its high class is correct. We gathered have been sleeping of the people. The standing of Dr. Hunter, Mr. Warner and Dr. Lattimore in the community is a guarantee of truthfulness of the statements they make, cannot for a moment, be questioned. They conclusively show that Bright's disease of the kidneys is one of the most destructive and dangerous of all diseases, that it is comparatively unknown, that it is alarmingly increasing, and that it can be cured.

All druggists sell Ammen's Cough Syrup.

Consumption—Ammen's Cough Syrup.

Croup—Ammen's Cough Syrup.

MISCELLANEOUS.

TIN! ASPHALTUM!!

ROOFS

New Roofs or Lower Rates.
214 Kearny Repaired.
ALL ORDERS PROMPTLY ATTENDED TO.
JAS. KENNEDY PERRY
Cor. Kearny and Pacific Sts.
P. O. Box 1,957.

WANTED

BY A LADY OF EXPERIENCE, A POSITION AS Housekeeper in a Catholic Family; is conversant with all the duties of the office, and can give the best of references. Address "Housekeeper," Box 1,957 P. O. Or Call at Office of this paper.

PROFESSIONAL CARDS

M. COONEY,
Attorney and Counsellor at Law.
637 Kearny street, cor. Pine.
Rooms 9 and 4.....San Francisco.

JOHN LUTTRELL MURPHY,
(Late City and County Attorney and Counsellor.)
Attorney and Counsellor at Law,
420 and 424 Montgomery Street,
SAN FRANCISCO.

ROBERT B. BRENHAM,
Attorney-at-Law,
120 SUTTER ST.,
ROOM 54.

JOHN M. BURNETT,
Attorney and Counsellor at Law.
Room 1 and 2,
Montgomery Street, cor. Sacramento
San Francisco.

CLARA S. FOLTZ,
Attorney-at-Law,
628 MONTGOMERY STREET,
Montgomery Block.

J. D. SULLIVAN,
ATTORNEY-AT-LAW,
Rooms 4, 5 and 16,
204 MONTGOMERY ST.....San Francisco.

A. H. LOUGHBOROUGH,
Law Office,
N. W. Cor. Sacramento and Montgomery Streets.

JAMES T. MOON,
Attorney & Counsellor
AT LAW.
No. 220 Kearny Street,
ROOMS 1 AND 2,
Bet. Sutter and Bush.....SAN FRANCISCO.
Will Practice in Civil and Criminal Courts.

JAMES G. MAGUIRE,
Attorney and Counsellor at Law,
632 Montgomery st.
(ROOM 10)
Over the Law Library, SAN FRANCISCO.
Will Practice in all the State and Federal Courts.

MISCELLANEOUS.

FRANK G. EDWARDS,

HAS REMOVED HIS FINE STOCK OF Carpets, Wall Papers, Etc.

— TO —

PERLMAN BLOCK,

820 Market Street.

RAZORS!

FOR $1,000

I WILL MAKE A BETTER RAZOR AND SHOW OF them to the same time than any man IN THE WORLD.

My own make guaranteed	$ 1
My Chief Honor warranted not to cut the flesh while shaving	1 50
Good English Razors	1 00
Best English Razors	1 50

Sent C. O. D. to any mail.

M. PRICE,
415 Kearny Street.
Grinding and Repairing.

MASON & HAMLIN ORGANS are certainly best, having been so declared at Universal Competitive Trials for the last Twelve Years, during which time they have received no other American organs having been found equal to them in any instance. Their superiority is claimed by them, and conceded by the best judges, to consist in their greater power, quality, and variety of tone, more perfect mechanism, and more durable construction, which they attribute to their system of one continuous piece of solid wood from the bottom to the top of the case, and their patent Tone-Producers, which are not to be found in any other organs. Also for easy payments. For illustrated catalogues, address

PIANOS Unsurpassed for quality of tone, elasticity of touch, and adaptedness to the wants of music, combining the highest degree of power and beauty of tone and durability. This very important department of our business, we have made a specialty for the last twelve years. Warerooms, 596 Broadway, New York.

MASON & HAMLIN Organs and Pianos, 250 Tremont St., Boston; 46 E. 14th St., New York; 116 Wabash Ave., Chicago.

ESTABLISHED 1854.

J. COONEY,
PRACTICAL
Painter and Whitener.
SIGNS NEATLY EXECUTED.
NO. 113 FOURTH STREET,
San Francisco, Cal.

☞ Jobbing, in all its branches, promptly attended to

P. GALLAGHER & SON, — DEALERS IN —
POULTRY AND GAME.
STALLS 1 and 2,
QUEEN CITY MARKET,
1156 Market Street,
Opposite Sixth.

NEW ENGLAND BAKING POWDER
NO ALUM FLOUR STARCH AMMONIA PHOSPHATES
CREAM TARTAR AND IS CHEAP, SAFE
NOTHING ELSE.
Newton Bros. & Co.

PHILADELPHIA BREWERY,
COOK WILKINSON - - - PROPRIETOR
SECOND STREET, NEAR FOLSOM,
San Francisco.
Amount of Beer sold in 1882, 25,132 barrels.

BANKING HOUSES.

Jos. A. Donohoe, San Francisco. | Rodney Knox, New York.

DONOHOE, KELLY & CO.
SAN FRANCISCO.
EUGENE, KELLY & CO,
NEW YORK.
BANKERS.
EXCHANGE ON
NEW YORK, LONDON, AND BANK IRELAND (Dublin).
Payable at all the Branches
ALSO IN SEVERAL COUNTRY TOWNS IN IRELAND.

WINES, LIQUORS, ETC.

NATIVE WINES.

MISCELLANEOUS.

H. N. COOK,
MANUFACTURER OF OAK-TANNED
LEATHER BELTING & HOSE,
S. W. cor. Market and Fremont Sts.,
SAN FRANCISCO.
SATISFACTION GUARANTEED.
The Finest Lacing in Cut Strings or Sides always on Hand.
MAIL, EXPRESS AND BULLION BAGS.

THE CATHOLIC
Mutual Beneficial ASSOCIATION
— OF THE —
Archdiocese of San Francisco.
President - - Rev. J. B. McNally.
PRESENTS A PLAN OF LIFE INSURANCE FOR Catholics that cannot be embraced by all prudent people. It is the most method of Life Insurance. Adapted and founded on a Catholic Plan it is so in reality and in fact, and nearly all the priests of the archdiocese are members and have their policies. The funds are kept in Savings Bank, and the affairs of the society are managed by a Board of Directors, who meet at the office of the Society, Room 15, Flood Building, 112 Montgomery street (under the Lincoln House), where the business of the society is transacted every day (except Sundays), from 12 to 24 o'clock, and where all information concerning the society may be obtained or written communications should be addressed to

SAFE AND ECONOMICAL

EDWARD GLEASON, Secretary,
6110 Jones Street.

INFORMATION WANTED.

Any person knowing the whereabouts of Mr. P. J. KELLY, of Troy, or any one who knows he is living or is dead, will confer a great favor by communicating with Mr. Kelly, Cor. Market and Fremont Sts., S. F. Kelly, who had located from eighteen years ago, was at Lake Shore, Ind., recently. He was born in West street, Troy, N. Y., and the sister Margaret Boyle is very anxious to hear from him.

On and after Sunday, October 22, 1882, Boats and Trains will leave San Francisco as follows:

10 A. M. Daily (Sundays excepted), via San Rafael, from Market-street wharf for Petaluma, Santa Rosa and Healdsburg.
2.30 P. M. Daily, from Washington-street wharf, for Petaluma.
4.45 P. M. Daily, from Sansome-street wharf, for Petaluma, Cloverdale and way stations.
8.00 P. M. Saturday, from Sansome-street wharf, for Cloverdale and way stations, Round trip tickets on Saturday to Petaluma, Santa Rosa, Healdsburg, Cloverdale, Ukiah, $2; Guerneville, $2; Duncans's, $2; Cloverdale, $3; Ukiah, $4. Returning, will arrive in San Francisco as follows:
ARRIVE BRANCH WHARF.
Gen. Manager. Gen. Pass. & Tkt. Agent.

SONOMA VALLEY RAILROAD.

Stages connect at Schellville with trains leaving San Francisco as follows:
Leave San Francisco, April 3, 1882, at 7 A. M. Trains will leave Sta. Rosa at 7 A. M.
2.30 P. M. Daily (Sundays excepted), from Washington-street wharf, for the town of Sonoma. Fare, $1.00. Round Trip Tickets, time Saturday till Monday, $1.50.

SUNDAY EXCURSIONS.

8.20 A. M. Sundays only, from Washington street wharf for Sonoma. Fare for the round trip, $1.00. Round Trip Tickets to Sonoma, $1.50. Stages will meet the 8.20 A. M. Train at Sonoma.
ARTHUR BUGBEE. ESTES J. McLYTER,
General Manager. Gen. Pass. & Tkt. Agt.

AS GOOD AS NEW.
STRAW AND FELT HATS
Cleaned and Pressed to look like New.
Latest Style Hat and Bonnet Frames for sale.
10 FOURTH STREET.....Near Market.

SIGNOR LUIGI DAMA
WAS RETURNED FROM HIS VACATION IN THE EAST
And has Resumed Singing Lessons at 201 POWELL ST., San Francisco

DAVID DRADY,
230 Fourth Street.
Importer and Dealer in Fine Mouldings, Mirror and Pictures.
☞ Framing and Regilding one of Roosmaki Prizes.

A. F. KNARP,
Mechanics' Mill,
411 MISSION STREET
(Near Fremont)
SECOND FLOOR, SAN FRANCISCO.
MANUFACTURER OF SASH, DOORS, BOX GRADE, of Interior Finish Lumber, Mouldings, Brackets, Balusters and Hardwood Mantels, Fine Cabinet Work, Turning, Scroll Sawing, Etc., Etc. Also, Agent for the New York Steam Sash, Door and Blind Machine, Tenon, Mortise, Tenon, Sash, Sash Moulding, Sash Sticker, Sash Cutter, Sash Tenoner and Sash Planer. Self adjusting patent in the public for sale at manufactory.

MURPHY, GRANT & CO.,
IMPORTERS OF DRY GOODS,
And Sole Agents for the Pacific Coast
FOR THE .....
Veuve Xavier Gouvin Kid Gloves
Bush and Sansome Sts., San Francisco.
6412

NEW DUG STORE!
VAL SCHMIDT & CO.,
(Lately Webster & Co.)
—HAVE OPED A FIRST CLASS—
DRUG STORE
On the celine and Polk Sts.

TAILORS.

John Kavanagh,
MERCHANT TAILOR,
6 New Montgomery Street,
PALACE HOTEL, S. F.
The Making of Clergymen's Cassocks a Specialty.

N. SWEENY,
MERCHANT TAILOR
41 Second street,
Opposite Jewish synagogue.....SAN FRANCISCO
Cassocks and Clerical Clothing a Specialty.

M. FITZPATRICK
— IS —
The BOSS Tailor,
Of the Pacific Coast,
36 1-2 FOURTH STREET,
Corner of Jessie.....San Francisco

☞ Go there for your CLAY-SIZE. You are sure to be suited and don't you forget it.

THOMAS DRADY,
MERCHANT TAILOR
No. 6 Third Street,
Near Market, S. F.

E. F. WILTON,
MERCHANT TAILOR,
12 Stockton Street.
NEAR MARKET ST., SAN FRANCISCO

JOHN HICKEY,
Merchant Tailor,
36 Fourth street,
Between Market and Mission streets.....San Francisco.

Business Suits to order from $60
Pants " 5
Fine Dress Suits " 35
Black Beaskin Pants " 7

DENIS RESMOND,
MERCHANT TAILOR,
No. 508 Hayes street.
☞ Perfect fit and good work guaranteed.

BELLS ETC.

MENEELY BELL FOUNDRY.
Favorably known to the public since 1826. Bells for Churches, Academies, Factories, Fire Alarms and other bells; also Chimes and Peals.
MENEELY & CO., WEST TROY, N. Y.

ESCHETTE BELL FOUNDRY.
Established in 1837. Manufacture Superior Bells for Churches, Schools, Factories, etc., etc. Illustrated Catalogue free. Address
VANDUZEN & TIFT, Cincinnati, O.

BUTTERMILK SOAP
Cleansing, Healing, Refreshing. For sale everywhere. Wholesale Agents, Cummings, Hoffman & Co., San Francisco.

LINFORTH, RICE & CO.,
Sole Agents, 202 and 204 Market Street, S. F.

NEW HILL OF FARE
At Women's Christian Union, Five-Cent Lunch and Coffee House,
620 Sacramento Street, 620
Bet. Montgomery and Kearny sts.....San Francisco.
☞ Many observers of Lent will be pleased to learn that we have a fish meal, meals from 11 to 2:30 P. M., all of the best, prices the lowest possible; prompt attention to all.

W. A. HAMMOND,
Watchmaker and Jeweler,
No. 4 Sixth Street,
(Second door from Market.)
Watches Cleaned, $1. Glasses, 10c.

WANTED—Watchmakers, Jewelers and Engravers to know that I am prepared to furnish them with the best tools at the lowest prices. Catalogues free. Address Manufacturer, 176 Broadway, New York.

Studabecker's Tailor's Square.
A Perfect System of Cross Cutting.
Office, 206 Stockton Street, S. F., Cal.
NATHANIEL GRAY. C. S. WENDT. J. A. CRETON.

N. Gray & Co.,
UNDERTAKERS,
641 Sacramento Street,
Nr. Webb.....San Francisco
EMBALMING.
☞ Metallic Burial Cases and Caskets
LITHOGRAPHERS. BOOKBINDERS
P. E. DOUGHERTY & CO.,
STEAM
BOOK AND JOB PRINTERS,
412 Commercial St., and 411 Clay St.
Between Sansome and Battery.

JONH A. LENNON,
Wholesale Grocer,
AND IMPORTER OF
Choice Brands
Japan and English Breakfast Tea.
☞ Agent for Pure White Beaver Cordial Whisky. Also Pure Rosemary, Artificial Clear Yeast for consumers, and Pure Olive Oil for Sacramental Purposes.
Nos. 252 and 317 Clay Street.....San Francisco

THE SKIN TIGHTENER.

WHEN THE SKIN OF THE FACE RELAXES WE look old and worn. Lines and hairy nostrils, fallen cheeks and sunken eyes, which are preserved by using Mme. Lewis's Skin Tightener and Tonic; Lotion and Powder. Prepared and sold only by MRS. SUTER, 136 Dupont street, room 12.

MISCELLANEOUS.

FOREIGN AND DOM
35 and 37 CLAY STREET,
Connected with the Pacific Bell Telephone Exchange will receive prompt attention.

JOSEPH R ORGAN BU
No. 127 Page Street,
MANUFACTURER AND REPAIRER
CHURCH AND PARL
☞ All Orders to the above Address will

R. HER MANUFACTURER FINE FUR
MANTE
House, Bank, an
In Pacific Coast Wood
Nos. 429 and 431 FOURTH S
DESIGNS FU

PARKER'S
THE BEST AND CHEAPEST
HAIR RENEWER
PARKER'S

HARV
HOT-WATER

EDUCATIONAL.

Academy of Our Lady of Angels.
SANTA CLARA . . . . CALIFORNIA.
THIS INSTITUTION, CONDUCTED BY the Sisters of Notre Dame, affords an opportunity of procuring for young ladies a thorough education, at moderate rates and in a delightful locality. Its facilities for particular attention to the health of young ladies have been tested and proved to be of the highest value. Its extensive grounds afford ample opportunity for the enjoyment of pure air and healthful exercise. The Academy is in the immediate vicinity of the Mission Church, and the advantages of a Catholic education are thus secured to its pupils.
The scholastic year, comprising 10 months, commences at the beginning of August and ends in June.
Pupils are received at any period of the year.
TERMS:
For quarter, payable in advance.
Entrance Fee, Ten Dollars, to be paid once.
Board, Tuition, Washing and use of bedding, $60
Vocal and Instrumental Music form extra charges.
French and Spanish lessons free. Next session begins August 7th.

SANTA CLARA COLLEGE
SANTA CLARA.....CALIFORNIA
THE THIRTY-SECOND ANNUAL RESTORATION will commence on Monday, August 7th. This institution was founded in 1851, and in 1855 was incorporated with the Legislature of California. It occupies one of the finest buildings, with extensive shady play-grounds, covered promenades, enclosed pond, etc. It possesses a more complete Philosophical Apparatus than any other educational institution in the State. It has also, practical schools of Assaying, Chemistry, Telegraphy, Photography and Commercial Business. For the latter a new building 100x40 feet has been added, that leaves nothing to be desired.
Diplomas are given in two departments, viz: Classical and Scientific—and Certificates in the Commercial course.
TERMS:
(Payable semi-annually in advance)
Matriculation Fee, to be paid but once...$ 15 00
Board, Lodging, Tuition in all branches, Washing and Mending of Linen, School Stationery and Medicine, Bed and Medicine, Beds, etc., per session of ten months.....$ 200 00
For further particulars apply to the President of Santa Clara College, or to St. Ignatius College, 214 Hayes street, San Francisco.
REV. J. FIDANCIA, S. J.
President.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE CATHOLIC TEMPERANCE SOCIETIES AT THE PENN FESTIVAL.

During the recent celebration of the settlement of Pennsylvania, held in Philadelphia, one of the principal attractions was a monster 12th Jubilee. The Catholic Total Abstinence societies formed a separate division, and their splendid appearance and marching drew forth the following praise from a local paper:

"The Catholic Total Abstinence members of the Catholic societies formed the eighth division of the procession. The excellent order with which they marched, and the contrasting beauties of their uniforms combined to make their division one of the most conspicuous of the cavalcade. Nearly all their number were clad in the broadest of white sashes, which, with the brilliant white uniforms and white helmets, made a very pretty and striking effect. Of all the societies represented in the procession, the Catholic Total Abstinence societies were the most numerous, and went through a series of brilliant evolutions with the precision of a well-drilled regiment. The boots were worn not on the backs of their sides, where shoes are, but on their feet, and they marched with the tread of a well-drilled regiment. The Catholic Total Abstinence societies may rightly be proud of their showing, and they may be sure that it will not know it in practice. Officers are above responsibility for the behavior of their inferiors, and so their secretaries can be trusted to safety. In fact the only way to get at them is through the Chief Secretary who can't be reached without a special order. With such an availability, it is not to visit the penalty of our complaint to may receive from the members on its own subs in the Castle.

THE CHURCH ACT

This little floor at present. Every new and ... Catholic Church is completely equipped with the petty cases, but on the whole accepts Preaching like they were last year. There is Prayer of the Act which has not been in force ... Church. Nor is it known that anyone ... the Blood Tax or levy of any amount the Government may think fit on a district for a person claiming to have been injured. It is the compensation for malicious damage done by but for other injuries and the amount ... cases in which it has not yet with their ... Lord Lieutenant. One man in Galway ... up him long in effect to block his favorite ... It is really that the next week or ... see the sub-commissioner adopting a ... line of conduct again, and in fact were it ... the notation that it constantly brought on them the whole Land Act would vary ... words dead in their hands of the Castle. ... the constantly aggravating features ... here in Ireland is the way in which ... verment keeps up the notion that it ... constantly concessing it. The fact ... which by investigation, the Parliamentary ... or the Land Act is constantly ... by proves the country unless when ... by public statement. It is one thing ... now passed and another to have it carried ... If the officials dont like it they ... only to so administer it that the ... of not know it in practice. Officials are above responsibility for the inferior ... and so their accentuation can be ... safely. In fact the only way to get at them ... through the Chief Secretary who can't ... Parliamentary responsibility, and who ... availability, is apt to visit the penalty of ... complaint he may receive from the members on its own subs in the Castle.

EDUCATIONAL.

Academy of Our Lady of Angels.
SANTA CLARA . . . . CALIFORNIA.
THIS INSTITUTION, CONDUCTED BY the Sisters of Notre Dame, affords an opportunity of procuring for young ladies a thorough education, at moderate rates and in a delightful locality. Its facilities for particular attention to the health of young ladies have been tested and proved to be of the highest value. Its extensive grounds afford ample opportunity for the enjoyment of pure air and healthful exercise. The Academy is in the immediate vicinity of the Mission Church, and the advantages of a Catholic education are thus secured to its pupils.
The scholastic year, comprising 10 months, commences at the beginning of August and ends in June.
Pupils are received at any period of the year.
TERMS:
For quarter, payable in advance.
Entrance Fee, Ten Dollars, to be paid once.
Board, Tuition, Washing and use of bedding, $60
Vocal and Instrumental Music form extra charges.
French and Spanish lessons free. Next session begins August 7th.

SANTA CLARA COLLEGE
SANTA CLARA.....CALIFORNIA
THE THIRTY-SECOND ANNUAL RESTORATION will commence on Monday, August 7th. This institution was founded in 1851, and in 1855 was incorporated with the Legislature of California. It occupies one of the finest buildings, with extensive shady play-grounds, covered promenades, enclosed pond, etc. It possesses a more complete Philosophical Apparatus than any other educational institution in the State. It has also, practical schools of Assaying, Chemistry, Telegraphy, Photography and Commercial Business. For the latter a new building 100x40 feet has been added, that leaves nothing to be desired.
Diplomas are given in two departments, viz: Classical and Scientific—and Certificates in the Commercial course.
TERMS:
(Payable semi-annually in advance)
Matriculation Fee, to be paid but once...$ 15 00
Board, Lodging, Tuition in all branches, Washing and Mending of Linen, School Stationery and Medicine, Bed and Medicine, Beds, etc., per session of ten months.....$ 200 00
For further particulars apply to the President of Santa Clara College, or to St. Ignatius College, 214 Hayes street, San Francisco.
REV. J. FIDANCIA, S. J.
President.

Sch
A Ch
Ob
Th
Th
Ma
Ma
Ma

THE WEEK'S NEWS FROM IRELAND.

(EXECUTED FROM FIRST PAGE.)

on a declaration for a non-rate, the Irish papers following suit. His detractors on all sides are denouncing the speech as a bid for that job. The truth is that Gladstone said only what he has repeatedly said before, namely, by land and government, not the connection of Ireland, is the remedy for her ills. The only other important feature of the debate was Adam's speech. It was an hour of eloquent bitter sarcasm, and the Attorney-General, in a rambling apology, created Crown that the Irish Land Court, when, if he had such charges to make against Irish Party and its leaders he should speak from them to the hon. gentleman, and, if he spoke, when he noted, for whom he spoke and with whom he invariably voted. The, I suppose, argument the whole of the meanings quotation, Crown's main capacity for mischief lying not in his ability to convince the party he attacks, but in the fact that he is a Protestant and a Tory, and, therefore, in the eyes of Irish Catholics, the Tories deserving unanimously, while four of the most ardent Tories in the House were counting the floor in visible touch with their leader; and, last, I, not exclusively speaks was Gladstone's declaration in behalf of the Irish party and against the charge that they had a right to the Union by unbounding the liberties of Parliament.

THE SATISFACTION OF THE COUNTRY

Over the passage of the rate is predicted without bitter denunciation, and even the Tories claim that it would be impossible to appeal to the constituents. Lord Redesdale's cry for Secretary of Ireland, and Lord Lansdowne's cry for Home Rule are now, not as it often occurred, to the Irish people, and, in complete harmony with the Irish, to Wales's protest against the rule of a Tory Ministry, and, in fact

Poetry.

THE SOULS IN PURGATORY.

Oh! pray for those whom Jesus loved
With all His Heart on earth;
But whom still from His yearning arms
His justice keeps apart.

Your fervent prayers can do so much
For those poor souls in pain,
Since God has ruled that they shall through us
Their rest in Heaven should gain.

Think of the kindred and the dead,
Of friends and loved ones,
Who, in some one dying, as he laid his head on my bosom's bosom, said:

"Take care
Of my poor children!" Take care of them
Through all the wailing years.

The face of Jesus pure and sweet
Will be your reward
Thus to have helped upon their sight
Not longer now they see.

Thus you, thus with us day by day,
Your children, Lord, Thy children pray
Thy pardon and Thy peace.

Yes, Lord, we pray for souls in pain,
Souls Thou hast bought with Your Blood,
Souls that in Heaven should gain.

Think of the kindred and the dead,
Of friends and loved ones,
Who, in some one dying, as he laid his head on my bosom's bosom, said:

"Take care
Of my poor children!" Take care of them
Through all the wailing years.

The face of Jesus pure and sweet
Will be your reward
Thus to have helped upon their sight
Not longer now they see.

Thus you, thus with us day by day,
Your children, Lord, Thy children pray
Thy pardon and Thy peace.

Yes, Lord, we pray for souls in pain,
Souls Thou hast bought with Your Blood,
Souls that in Heaven should gain.

Oh! pray that through the years have watched and Cried
Lord, in Your good time, His gifts will send;
Souls that have made in the purifying fire
Lost all the wishful, all but the will.

YALAMA, CAL. E. M.

Literary Miscellany.

The Shadowy Hand.

[illegible]

I am a musician and composer by profession, and I think I could not turn my eyes; but a sound that I heard behind me made me quickly turn my head. There I saw a gaunt, ugly, old woman, with a long, sharp nose, and a contemptuous sneer of scornful laughter on her face. She was muttering to herself, and I thought I heard the word "fool" muttered loudly on the door. There was a sound of shuffling feet without, the door was thrown open, and a man holding a candle in his hand appeared on the threshold, and demanded what I wanted, and the light flashed upon his face I had the impression that I had seen it before; but it was gone in a moment.—In answer to the demand, I told him I wanted a shelter for myself and my poor shivering horse, and that if in the morning he would guide me to Silby, he would be entirely recreated.

He made some reply, the burden of which I could not catch owing to the driving rain; and then, setting the candle down on the floor, he became my guide, as he laid his hand on my horse's bridle. "Take care, my good fellow; that there is a trench and four, the sides of a square. We cannot my whether you will be comfortable, but I will do the best I can for you." "Any shelter is better than none—such a night as this," I answered, as I dismounted. And I followed him round to a side hovel, where he did the best he could for my horse's comfort.

Then we went into the cabin, he pulled up the middle he had placed upon the floor, observing, as he did so, "I keep bachelor's hall here, so you are welcome to what you find."

I replied in the affirmative, as I drew up to the fire that shone upon the hearth, the heat of which was very grateful after my exposure to the storm. I watched my host as he placed some bread and meat upon the table, and his very look and motion went to confirm the impression that I had seen him before; and then it flashed upon my mind when and where. It was among the Alps, and in the house of peasants, where I rested the night.

The food being not yet, he placed a rush seat by the table, and told me my supper was ready, making some excuse because it was not better. I answered him that it was as good as I desired; and as hunger is the best appetizer, I ate as much as have, I did the course provender ample fashion.

When I had finished, I turned my seat once more to the fire, and tried to open my conversation with my host, but I made poor head, for he was evidently not inclined to talk, and after a while I gave it up, and we sat there in silence, I from time to time eyeing the gaunt, ugly, old woman, who, I fancied, was muttering to herself, and who, at least, he gave no evidence of his and's entertaining a high opinion of her.

Suddenly, upon the wall, where the light from the fire shone the brightest, there appeared the shadowy hand of a man clasping a knife. I saw it then, but I could not turn my eyes; but I felt, and my blood froze at the thought, that it would not turn my eyes; but I felt, and my blood froze at the thought, that it would turn upon me, and I should be stabbed in my sleep. Bearing heavily upon my chest, I felt it through the night that this spectre of my hand, the hand of a man, was ever ready to strike me down, and I felt that I should be the most miserable of beings, if I had dreamt of it, I should have been so very sleepy, but so sleep then that of which I was the result pale into one of those pants that had I been not, whether.

Power and terror had the mastery over me, and I was unable to move the spell, however, until the morning was such that it could almost be felt. Then I was enabled to rise, and, with the light, which, I thought, was the result of the spell, I was enabled to rise, and, with the light, which, I thought, was the result of the spell, I was enabled to rise, and, with the light, which, I thought, was the result of the spell,

THE MONITOR.

TWENTY-SIXTH YEAR OF PUBLICATION.

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 23, 1892.

OFFICIAL.

To the Clergy and Laity of the Diocese of San Francisco.

Dearly Beloved: Various causes have intervened to delay the annual collection for Holy Father, and the wise approach of the new year admonishes us that it ought not to be longer delayed.

The children of the church never needed to be urged when it was a question of contributing to the wants of their common Father, still less do they need it now. Though his personal needs are never great, practically, as he does, an exemplary economy in his own domestic concerns, still the demands upon his charity from nearly all parts of the Church are beyond measure.

Missionary works have to be inaugurated and established in pagan countries, and even in Christian and civilized lands enterprises of serviceably less magnitude call upon him for encouragement and assistance.

Besides these constant appeals to his charity, there are other and considerable expenses necessarily incurred in the maintenance of the several departments and congregations with which the Holy Father must dispose, between the days when with him and help him to bear up under the weighty burden of his exalted and laborious office. These many necessities must be supplied by his faithful children throughout the world, by whom behalf alone and for the glory of God he rules the Universal Church.

Let us, then, remember these who, at all times, have contributed to this noble work of love and who are similar in giving to our aged, illustrious and beloved Sovereign Pontiff a testimony of our filial affection.

This will be especially gratifying to his fatherly heart at the present time, when he more around him the children of the Church, as the Shepherd of the Church entrusted or abdicated in the names of Pontiffs; a paternal body of persons, who are related things to those who ought to be dutiful subjects of God's law; persons that are and are Catholics, guided by a knowledge of God's law, and a generous propagation of unbelief, are called on having to exist away from the children of the Church who profess to be Christians, but who have shaken off the yoke of his Pontiffs ordained by a Christian God, and, and, and Forty Years Experience of an Old Nurse.

Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup is the prescription of one of the best female physicians and nurses in the United States and has been used for forty years with unfailing success by mothers for their children. It relieves the child from pain, cures dysentery and diarrhœa, relieves griping, and wind colic, by giving relief to the child it rests the mother. Price twenty-fiv cents a bottle.

Sun Shade Dresses for Groomies!

Cotton Blue, cent, 10c.; tan duck, 10c.; Coloring Book, 10c.; Jumpers, 50c.; crackers, 5c.; Lemonade, 10c.; 3 wheels, 5c.; cow

A. M. SULLIVAN'S FAREWELL SPEECH.

[CONCLUDED FROM FIRST PAGE.]

tenant of which had been evicted. Months passed, and to-day you may journey through the country and see these farms remaining on the landlords' hands, growing a most magnificent crop of weeds and thistles (cheers.) And now the landlord, discovering that he had not been the wisest of men, assemblages adjourned with three cheers for A. M. Sullivan and the Irish cause.

BEST BAKING POWDER.

Interesting Tests Made by the Government Chemist.

Dr. Edward G. Love, the present Analytical Chemist for the Government, has recently made some interesting experiments as to the comparative value of baking powders. Dr. Love's tests were made to determine what brands are the most economical to use, and as their capacity lies in their leavening power, tests were directed solely to ascertain the available gas of each powder. Dr. Love's report gives the following:

Name of the Baking Powders.	Strength per each ounce of Powder.	Cents Under Use
"Royal" (cream tartar powder)	137.8	8
"Patapsco" (alum powder)	125.7	9
"Cleveland's" (phosphate) fresh	125.3	9
"Bonsford's" (phosphate) old	122.1	9
"Hanford's Home Rock" fresh	121.6	9
"Hanford's Home Rock" old	115.3	10
"Dr. Price's"	117.9	9
"Chase" (alum powder)	116.7	10
"Amazon" (alum powder)	111.9	10
"Cleveland's (short weight) fail	110.1	10
"Sea Foam	107.9	10
"Cook"	106.4	10
"Dr. Price's"	102.6	10
"Some Fake" (Grief's, St. Paul)	101.8	10
"Lewis' Condensed	98.2	10
"Congress" yeast	97.1	10
"C. K. Andrew's & Co's (contains alum)	73.7	12
"Hooker's"	58.7	12
"Gillet's"	54.2	12
"Bell's"	50.9	12

"In his report, the Government Chemist says: "I regard all alum powders as very unwholesome. Phosphate and Tartaric Acid powders therefore are too freely in process of baking, or under varying climatic changes suffer deterioration."

Dr. H. A. Mott, the former Government Chemist, after a long series of valuable examinations of the various Baking Powders of commerce, reported to the Government in favor of the Royal brand.

THE MARKET REPORT.

—In consequence of there being no material change in the prices of produce from last week's quotations, we omit the usual market report from this issue.

Weddings, Frames, Pictures, Etc.

Percy, Cohen & Co., 824 Market street, opposite the Palace Hotel, make a specialty of the elegant and attractive store of fan frames and of bridal and artistic mounts. Their handsome picture-frames and mouldings are from their own extensive manufactory. They make a specialty of regilding. They have a varied and beautiful stock of photo. and other picture-mouldings. In the city, they have the special and familiarity known to the art purchasing public, who have patronized them for many years to find here an excellent stock of fine steel engravings and other works of art.

—Every body should go to the Argonaut book store, it is unquestionably the cheapest and best place in the city to buy books in the standard and Christmas goods received daily. Foreign stamps, coins, and curios, at the Argonaut store, Chronicle building, next door to the museum and concerts. Address MRS. M. J. C., P. O. Box 888. Returns Office.

FOR THE HOLIDAYS!

—WE OFFER THE LARGEST AND BEST SELECTIONS, IN—

WATCHES, DIAMONDS, JEWELRY, SILVERWARE, CLOCKS,

An such articles as pertain to the Watch and Jewelry business to be found in the State.

AND ARE SELLING AT CLOSE PRICES.

All Goods marked in plain figures from which no deviation is made.

GEO. C. SHREVE & CO., 110 Montgomery Street, San Francisco.

GEO. H. FULLER, —MANUFACTURER OF— Settees, School and Office Furniture, CABINET WORK TO ORDER A SPECIALTY. Salesroom, 19 New Montgomery Street, Manufactory, 124 Main, SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

AT G. BAUM'S 871 MARKET STREET, CORNER FIFTH. You will find the Largest and Best Assorted Stock of FURNITURE AND CARPETS —ON THE COAST.— Come and examine before purchasing elsewhere, or you will find it the Cheapest Place in the City, G. BAUM, 871 MARKET ST., CORNER FIFTH.

BOOTS AND SHOES! MOORE & MURPHY, Importers, Manufacturers and Dealers in all kinds of Ladies' and Gent's BOOTS AND SHOES. Remember the Number: 138 SIXTH STREET, 138 Bet. Folsom and Howard. CHISHOLM & STUTTMEISTER, DENTISTS, 7 Dupont street, San Francisco. OFFICE HOURS: A. M. 8 to 12; P. M. 1 to 5. Sundays 9 and 3. Piano, Singing, Guitar, Violin, Accordeon and Banjo TAUGHT AT MODERATE PRICES BY MRS. H. BENNETT, 145 Fourth St., near Howard. HALL'S SAFE AND LOCK COMPANY. Hall's Patent Fire & Burglar Proof Safes, 521 and 523 California Street. Safes made for church and other bars. Second hand safes always on hand for sale cheap. PIANOS! Wareroom, 105 Post street. We will sell for CASH, or on easy terms, the BEST PIANOS, with the latest improvements, at the lowest prices. Pianos to let, tuned and warranted, $2 per month. Pianos tuned, repaired and polished. Best of references. Pianos of all other makes, at wholesale prices. Send for Circular. SOLD FOR $10 INSTALMENTS. Post street, near Dupont. Chase.

UNDERTAKERS. ATKINS MASSEY, UNDERTAKER. PRACTICAL FURNISHING UNDERTAKER, Steiner's Burial Casket always on hand, and Agents for Fish's Metallic Burial Cases. Everything necessary for funerals kept constantly on hand. Orders from the country will receive prompt attention, at moderate charges. Office—632 Sacramento street, between Kearny and Webb. A. S. ATKINS. F. W. MASSEY. O'CONNOR & SHEEHY, UNDERTAKERS, 767 Mission Street, Bet. Third and Fourth. See Funeral Notices. TRIM, FLANAGAN. E. J. GALLAGHER. FLANAGAN & GALLAGHER, UNDERTAKERS, No. 20 FIFTH STREET, Opposite the Lincoln School. EVERYTHING NECESSARY FOR FUNERALS kept constantly on hand. Orders from the country will receive prompt attention, at moderate charges. KNABE PIANOFORTES. UNSURPASSED IN Tone, Touch, Workmanship and Durability. WILLIAMS BRADS & CO. Nos. 204 and 206 West Baltimore Street, Baltimore. No. 116 Fifth Avenue, N. Y. PENSIONS Soldiers, Widows, Parents and Children. All Pensioners Discharged in Higher grades will apply at once. Widows, Children, Parents, Brothers and Sisters, Pensioned. Arrears of Pay and Bounty collected. Soldiers who have lost one hand or one foot, or who are totally disabled, or who have lost both eyes, or who are totally blind, are entitled to $25 per month. Soldiers who have lost both hands or both feet, or who are totally blind, are entitled to $50 per month. Soldiers who have lost both legs, or both hands and one foot, or both legs and one hand, are entitled to $100 per month. We prosecute claims before the Supreme Court of the United States. Address, with stamp, W. W. FITZGERALD, D. C., Pension Agent, Washington, D. C.

SIGNOR LUIGI DAMA HAS RETURNED FROM HIS VACATION IN THE EAST And has Resumed Singing Lessons at 207 POWELL ST., San Francisco.

New Advertisements.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER. Absolutely Pure. This powder never varies. A marvel of purity, strength and wholesomeness. More economical than the ordinary kinds, and cannot be sold in competition with the multitude of low test, short weight, alum, or phosphate powders. Sold only in cans. ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., 106 Wall St., New York.

EMIL FRESE'S HAMBURG TEA. That safe, good old German Family Medicine for all complaints of the Stomach, Liver, Kidneys and Bowels; Carminative, Alterative and gently Cathartic. REDINGTON & CO., San Francisco, U. S. A.

"RIVAL" Marine, Mining, Land, Agricultural PATENT LIFT and FORCE PUMP. California Patent and Industry. SILVER MEDAL awarded by the Mechanics' Institute, San Francisco, for the best Force Pump, for the year 1882. The most simple, durable and easy working pump in use. Can be attached to any pump. Suitable for Mining, Farm and Dairy purposes. Address, "ROYAL AND WET," 202 N. 3d St., St. Louis, Mo.

RUPTURE! Radical Cure! Dr. J. A. SHERMAN, Inventor and Patentee, Office, 691 Broadway, New York. Only Office in the United States. Beware of Imitations. Pamphlet of 100 pages, with Photographs of Patients before and after treatment, sent free on application. Beware of Quacks and Impostors. Dr. Sherman's Genuine Truss is the only one that can be relied on. Dr. Sherman's Patent Spring Truss, Shoulder Brace and Supporter, Elastic Stockings, Shoulder Brace, Suspensory Bandages, Abdominal Supporters, Crutches, Shampoo Bags, Pessaries, Injecting Tubes, Urinals, Bed Pans, Nursing Bottles, Nipples, Shoulder Pillows, Ice Caps, Rubber Goods of every description. Dr. Sherman's Medicated Elastic Stockings, Silk Elastic Stockings, Lisle Elastic Stockings, Lady Agents Wanted. Ladies can be fitted by Lady Agents. Dr. Sherman's Cabinet Shoulder Brace, Patent Lock Button Hole, Self Adjusting, Self Measurement, Self Adjusting Pad, Elastic Trusses

Poetry.

FOR THE MONITOR.

"REMEMBER IN PRAYER."

Lines written in memory of Mrs. Catherine S. Tobin.

Dear Church of God! then dost not bill
Cold mourners gathered round thy hearth
Yet there whom Death has wrought
Sad sorrow, when sweetest words are said
Yet sorrow by the graveyard bed,
Thy duty done.

Ah! no! Ah! no! thy deathless love
Lives with the spirit's pure abode
Heaven's shadow side of gloom;
Thy spirit's immortal region,
Thy sweet memory follows them
Thy

The footprints pass with their beloved,
Thy spirit's immortal angels
Twelve the Jasper Gates;
Twelve the Jasper Gates;
Twelve the Jasper Gates;

THE MONITOR.

PUBLISHED EVERY TUESDAY, THURSDAY AND SATURDAY.

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 19, 1862.

Rumored Appointment of a Coadjutor to Archbishop Alemany.

At intervals during the past year, more or less frequent, there has been a rumored direct Papal nomination to the appointment of some certain priest or bishop as Coadjutor to Archbishop Alemany, O. P., Bishop Gallego is again spoken of in this connection, as has been mentioned through the Catholic Pastor of Richmond, Virginia, whereon it is stated that it is "universally accepted" there that Rt. Rev. John Joseph Keane, Bishop of Wheeling, Va., had been selected by the Holy See to fill that responsible position. Bishop Keane was consecrated as second Bishop of Wheeling, May 25, 1853. We use in a positive form the phrase "universally accepted" in relation to Bishop Keane's appointment, because, we are informed, it is a matter of such universal rumor, that we feel that we are interested and most likely to have the most reliable information regarding a matter of such grave importance.

Bancroft's History of the Pacific States.

Mr. Hubert Howe Bancroft, who has gained considerable reputation as a historian, is thoroughly in sympathy with our "Pacific States." In the Preface of the Pacific States, he tells us that "the Colonies of Spain and Portugal, in the New World, have been a source of great pride to the people of every nation of Christendom." We Catholics, of every nation of the Pacific States, will thank him for such a sentiment. We only wish that this had been a fact in our land. Certainly, we Catholics, should be contented, and to true loyal citizens, we do not, and we trust we never will be, intended and "accustomed" to take from us the "contented and peaceable" and Catholic view. History, to be valuable, should possess the virtue of truth, and this, Mr. Bancroft himself admits in his prefatory remarks, but in the very first pages of the introduction to the work he proceeds to give us a chapter of misrepresentations, which have been refuted a hundred times, and which, if he had read the Papal Encyclicals, he would not have penned. He says:

"Of Pius the Ninth, I need not speak.

"But on one thing we can be sure, and that is, that the Pope, with his entire power, will use his influence to keep the Church, as far as possible, in the path of peace, and to prevent the outbreaking of the tempest which has been gathering so long and so fearfully in the political world around us."

We, Catholics, know the information of Mr. Bancroft, before the Information of the Italian Government has violated its own law by means of a decision rendered in its courts that civil processes would be served upon the Pope and the members of his household within the Vatican. When we reflect upon the fact that upon the sacred books of Italy there is a clause—placed there voluntarily by the Italian Parliament itself—which expressly declares that no legal of the Government can even enter the precincts of the Vatican to the official couriers, the majority of Italian jurisprudence will appear off the cross Atlantic.

When, in 1870, Victor Emanuel, by the aid of a Protestant army, "liberated" Italy, and the Pope was deprived of his liberty and his temporal possessions, and the Sacred Constitution of the Papal Government, by which the Pope was made independent and most honorable to the most reliable information, this regarding a matter of such grave importance.

Bancroft's History of the Pacific States.

Mr. Hubert Howe Bancroft, who has gained considerable reputation as a historian, is thoroughly in sympathy with our "Pacific States." In the Preface of the Pacific States, he tells us that "the Colonies of Spain and Portugal, in the New World, have been a source of great pride to the people of every nation of Christendom." We Catholics, of every nation of the Pacific States, will thank him for such a sentiment. We only wish that this had been a fact in our land. Certainly, we Catholics, should be contented, and to true loyal citizens, we do not, and we trust we never will be, intended and "accustomed" to take from us the "contented and peaceable" and Catholic view. History, to be valuable, should possess the virtue of truth, and this, Mr. Bancroft himself admits in his prefatory remarks, but in the very first pages of the introduction to the work he proceeds to give us a chapter of misrepresentations, which have been refuted a hundred times, and which, if he had read the Papal Encyclicals, he would not have penned. He says:

"Of Pius the Ninth, I need not speak.

"But on one thing we can be sure, and that is, that the Pope, with his entire power, will use his influence to keep the Church, as far as possible, in the path of peace, and to prevent the outbreaking of the tempest which has been gathering so long and so fearfully in the political world around us."

We, Catholics, know the information of Mr. Bancroft, before the Information of the Italian Government has violated its own law by means of a decision rendered in its courts that civil processes would be served upon the Pope and the members of his household within the Vatican. When we reflect upon the fact that upon the sacred books of Italy there is a clause—placed there voluntarily by the Italian Parliament itself—which expressly declares that no legal of the Government can even enter the precincts of the Vatican to the official couriers, the majority of Italian jurisprudence will appear off the cross Atlantic.

When, in 1870, Victor Emanuel, by the aid of a Protestant army, "liberated" Italy, and the Pope was deprived of his liberty and his temporal possessions, and the Sacred Constitution of the Papal Government, by which the Pope was made independent and most honorable to the most reliable information, this regarding a matter of such grave importance.

Secret Societies Antagonistic to Catholic Citizens.

We are in receipt of the following letter from a gentleman who sends his name for publication, but which we withhold, because it is not necessary to the pertinence of the question he asks:

WASHINGTON, Cal., November 24, 1862.

EDITOR OF THE MONITOR:

Dear Sir—There exists a secret society in this county called the Knights of the Order Sons of America," in the same implies, exclusively of native American born members. Now, knowing you to be well informed, and versed in the ones of the age, I would be obliged if you would inform me through your paper, or by mail, as they like about "Americans" rights," in theory, but the very essence of such a society is based upon a section of theirs, which is a living witness of the wickedness of its members, and gives the lie to all their prattle about "liberty." For such a band of political hacks the Church of God has only pity and contempt; pity, because their vicious principles spring from ignorance; and contempt, because they are a disgrace to the nationality of which they pretend to be the representatives.

We are, therefore, far from feeling any danger to the Church, either near or remote, from the P. O. S. A., but there is a danger threatened to the country at large, the State, and society in general, from just such secret combinations of conspirators. Men whose principles are of such a dangerous character as to require oath-bound covering in order to conceal them, are always dangerous to the community, and the people at large should see that not one of them receives a nomination for any political position. Such men are always ripe for rebellion against any law or any section of the community against whom they may have a personal or a political grudge, and during some addition for the latest enigma in Italian political morality.

It never has been a principle of the civil law of any Christian country, that a government could infringe upon the rights of even its humblest subject without arousing public execration at the violation of its sacred trust. Governments are supposed to be solid and in order to protect the weak rather than to oppress them, but when the present king of Italy undertakes to override the law of his own legislature, he may be sowing the wind which will grow into a whirlwind that will overturn his throne and precipitate another revolution in Italy. If the king can break his own laws, assuredly the populace will not be long in finding out that they should have this same privilege, and it is only a step from the idea to the realization thereof, as all will admit who have read the history of Europe and noted from what trivial events Europe has been thrown into the throes of revolution. This last indignity, therefore, may yet lead to the downfall of Italian power, and put an extinguisher upon monarchy in the city of the Popes.

Secret Societies Antagonistic to Catholic Citizens.

We are in receipt of the following letter from a gentleman who sends his name for publication, but which we withhold, because it is not necessary to the pertinence of the question he asks:

WASHINGTON, Cal., November 24, 1862.

EDITOR OF THE MONITOR:

Dear Sir—There exists a secret society in this county called the Knights of the Order Sons of America," in the same implies, exclusively of native American born members. Now, knowing you to be well informed, and versed in the ones of the age, I would be obliged if you would inform me through your paper, or by mail, as they like about "Americans" rights," in theory, but the very essence of such a society is based upon a section of theirs, which is a living witness of the wickedness of its members, and gives the lie to all their prattle about "liberty." For such a band of political hacks the Church of God has only pity and contempt; pity, because their vicious principles spring from ignorance; and contempt, because they are a disgrace to the nationality of which they pretend to be the representatives.

We are, therefore, far from feeling any danger to the Church, either near or remote, from the P. O. S. A., but there is a danger threatened to the country at large, the State, and society in general, from just such secret combinations of conspirators. Men whose principles are of such a dangerous character as to require oath-bound covering in order to conceal them, are always dangerous to the community, and the people at large should see that not one of them receives a nomination for any political position. Such men are always ripe for rebellion against any law or any section of the community against whom they may have a personal or a political grudge, and

Church of its personal property and its consecrated churches, when we think that these same people made entrants and beggars of female Religious, when we consider the insults they offered to the Holy Father in Rome, and saintly Pius IX., when, we say, we take a retrospective glance at the Italian injustice of the past, we need not wonder at the Italian indulge of the present.

This latest outrage against all law and justice is relished as a fresh insult by the anti Catholic press, who "think" they see therein the ultimate flight of the Pope from Rome, and the subsequent downfall of the Papacy. The Chronicle, of Monday last—after doing the same taks of the Pope's protest against the proceedings of the Italian courts—(the main property published in these columns two weeks ago) says:

"Pius IX. is doubtless the decision violating the Act of 1871 and that we known to "the Pope's Guarantee." And it is equally certain that it "is limit to the Pope." If the Italian Government or its Courts can violate Italian decree over anybody within the Vatican it can violate the Pope or any other person within those bounds. This is where the shoe pinches, and there is no apparent help for it. The subjects of King Humbert are Catholics, but they are also Italian citizens and amenable to religion as well as to politics; and the Pope is Italian subject, and has been by his own consenting more and more reduced to the condition of a mere Italian citizen, and subject of all the Papal temporal power."

And this is the moral lesson which a portion of the American press teaches in this nineteenth century! A Government violates its own laws—yet there is no help for it! Thank heaven! this journalistic decision is not in accord with the law of God or the theory of justice in any Christian country! It is not in accord with the law of God, or against the Catholic Church—the civil law is complained, that it is right to rob the Church, for the benefit of the Government, and that it is right to violate any decree in force of the rights of Catholic representatives, and that it is right to violate any decree in force of the rights of the Pope, and that it is right to violate any decree in force of the rights of the Pope, and that it is right to violate any decree in force of the rights of the Pope

THE DEAD MINING ENGINEER.

T. V. Molloy, son of Thomas Molloy, the well known mining engineer, died in this city August 15, 1882. Deceased was intimately all of the Mr. Molloy in the different mining districts of the State, including those for which he was employed by the mining companies of Mariposa, performed by the Mariposa Gold and Silver Mining Company, and he was one of geologists for the Geological Survey of the State, including those for which he was employed by the Mariposa Gold and Silver Mining Company, and he was one of the most competent mining engineers in the State. He was a native of Ireland, and was 40 years of age. He leaves a wife and two children to mourn his loss.

Thomas Vincent Molloy, died in this city, August 16, 1882, aged 10 years.

Blessed are I know baby's mother, for God has taken her home to be with her baby. Blessed are the pure in heart and blessed are the dead who die in the Lord.

Blessed are I know baby's father, for God has taken his wife home to be with her baby. Blessed are the pure in heart and blessed are the dead who die in the Lord

DID THE IRISH DISCOVER AMERICA.

[CONCLUDED FROM FIRST PAGE.]

the opinion of Professor Rafn that there were most of people in this country besides the Indians; who were neither known in language, dress and manners. Wider says that there was a wonderful affinity between the Mexican and some of the people of Japan and Lia at the primitive Irish. And it might be probably of much good to the cause of the subject of the ancient Mexicans with that of the Irish Druids.

A question that here presents itself is: "Were the Irish fond of travel in the early ages, and do they evidence knowledge of navigation?" The answer will be found in the fact for in advance of that of the rest of Europe, and Professor Rumbold's book gives ample proof that Ireland was forward, and at a very early period, in colonizing distant countries, and had sufficient means of showing her intellectual superiority of every people in the world except the Saxons that for burning in them early times forbidden a storehouse from which the people of Europe drew their supply. These things, then, go to show that the conquerors of Ireland, and their adoptive sons not unknown to the early Irish, indeed, apart from and independent of it, the conquerors of Ireland, Britons, Danes and the north of Europe, were upon their arrival, which had its origin in the Phoenicians? The Phoenicians from that source the continents and afterwards, conquered and colonized Ireland, and the knowledge and advancement of later times, will tend to prove that the Irish were a civilized people before Saxon and wanting in Ireland.

THAT IRISH CIVILIZATION DAWNED

Only two of the five additional persons arrested to-day in connection with the murder of Dodge, with the object, it is believed, of securing him. The men shouted and yelled and tried to escape from the police, which had to clubs to force them to the station-house. The police were transported in a wagon, and were arrived on the station-house in the assembled crowd, which, however, in the meantime, had been increased to the number of 1,000 persons. The police were hard pushed to keep the crowd back while removing the prisoners, and were compelled to use their clubs freely. The crowd, however, was not dispersed for many years to find here an excellent stock of fine steel engravings and other works of art.

Cut this out.

Dodge's Dandy Pills are the best pill for all kinds of bilious and nervous disorders. Sold by all druggists.

The "Dandy Cologne" manufactured at Worcester, Mass., is the most delicate and lasting perfume ever made. It is the most popular and extensively used perfumery in the world. Price, only 25 cents.

The modern elevation is called to the unrivalled Remedial Institution of California, the Oakland Water Cure, which is located in this city. Address only a year in advance it will be found a most valuable institution. Its medical advisers of members who have tried it, and the results of its treatment are all that could be desired. Send for the latest edition of the Phrenological Journal, containing a sketch of the Institution.

"Tell Sweetness" 1239 Market street, S. F. Thomas Hunter, Boston, Hot Air Furnaces, Ranges, Stoves, Tinware, Kitchen Furnishing Goods, Health Gas Stoves, etc. Oceanic Steamship Company, Pacific Mail Steamship Company, Stevens Submarine, and Ocean Steamship Company, Stevens Submarine, and Ocean Steamship Company, Stevens Submarine, and Ocean

Poetry.

THE BRAVEST VIRGIN'S WARD.

My boy has enrolled for his love last sleep,
For the white pillow of his cabin bed,
With symbols in hand I stand to keep Above the curious glory of his head.
And, "Oh! I cannot be a soldier!" I cried,
"Come back to me from the war, or my life, my child!"
No answer such as when the whole world wide
Has ever seen I was my passionate mind.

Above me, there I wept my prudent child.
"The dear Mother Mary (for behalf me!)
And Mary, mother of our Blessed Child!
Oh Mother, loved I not this little one?
To protect, bless, and guide, and love him well?
Tell me, Mary, if ever I did not?
Sit still and think! Is this my young heart's vow,
Like my poor mother's, to be true, pure, and true?
Such prayer prayed I and then to prayer.
Then I sat down, and the Blessed Mother
My mother, passed as full of tender love
Upon the dear head that I was pleased by sorrow!

I said: "O Mary! as then lovest thine,
Bless and protect my child! (I cannot do them!)
Fall by your side, as I have kissed thine,
Guard my boy, and keep him safe for me!"

And so I plighted him to her embrace.
Thence the hours blew through the long years gone!
I always then, Mary, when I see thy face,
Will look to see in Heaven thy vast, lay son!

Literary Miscellany.

"BOYCOTTED."

A Tale of the Irish Land League War.

WRITTEN FOR THE MONITOR BY MICHAEL [illegible]

[illegible] Neil did not feel disposed to find that money of his underpaid, for he knew it was not, but he contented himself over and over again with the reflection that he was clear upon him, when next Sunday he went to mass he would have a good thing to tell his friends. He was not long in doubt; but he had a long time to wait, for it was not until the last day of the week that he was able to get his money.

"Well, Pat Flynn," said he, "I'm afraid I'm late with your money, Mam." he he said when Pat came for it.

"The divil a bit, sir, you are not," was the reply, "for I'm not ready for it yet, sir."

"Not ready for it!" said Neil, "why, what's the matter? I thought you said you would be ready on Saturday."

"I did, sir, but I didn't mean to do any such thing."

"Why, Pat, I'm in a fix about the money, you know, I promised it to the man for Monday, and I'm sure you promised me a few days when I spoke to you about it."

"Well, sir, I'm very sorry for it, but I can't help it, I'm not ready for it yet."

"Can't you get it, Pat?"

"Why, sir, I'm afraid I can't, for I promised my wife I would not give him a new bonnet until I got the money for the pig, and I don't like to go back on my word to her."

"Why, Pat, I'm in a fix, I tell you, I promised the money

THE MONITOR.

TWENTY-EIGHTH YEAR OF PUBLICATION.

WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 6, 1882.

PASTORAL LETTER

—OR—

MIXED MARRIAGES.

To the Catholics of the Province of San Francisco:

Dearly Beloved—Appointed by the Vicar of Christ, as we are, to preach over your spiritual welfare—yea, placed by the Holy Ghost, though most unworthily as one part, to govern you in the Episcopal mission, having, moreover, to give an account of your souls to the Divine Judge—we are constrained by a sense of duty and conscientiously to address you some words of admonition. For, although we are persuaded that nearly all amongst you are dutiful children of the Church, and the light is revealing and shaping its holy laws, there are others (but we trust they are few) who hoping that the Church is too child, and that they are at liberty to dispense themselves from the laws—be they or be Christ, under the guilt of Christ, it the more patiently, to day, and tomorrow; it is the same here as in the outer parts of the world: its sacred laws, unwelcomed under the guidance of the Divine Spirit, are as binding here as in any other place.

Therefore, we deprecate the taste of those who, when about to marry, will not give timely notice to the Pastors of the place the due publication of the banns; we heartily deplore the bad disposition of those who, under the guilt of mortal sin, receive the holy Sacrament of Matrimony without being religious preparation; and we deplore the sad state of those of them who fall to obtain the dispensation from the bonds of the sacred matrimonial contract, and live in a state of adultery. Yet, we hope, that in the mere fact of the publication of the banns, by Pastor, that he can otherwise see a Catholic be married by any other person than a priest, without publicity himself to communion; yet, still, that when the parties are entitled to the spiritual dispensation, the Pastors of the place are the special Man for that benediction shall accompany so Holy Sacrament of the marriage; lastly, That, in the Holy Sacrament of Matrimony, we pray some for a dispensation for a mixed marriage, and the usual precautions be made—otherwise it would be a grievous sin to consent.

Finally, we dread that this abuse be made from the Altar or high or low Mass and Vespers on the first Sunday of Advent every year, in all the Churches of this Diocese.

Your sincerely in Christ,

✠ JOSEPH SADOC, Archbishop of San Francisco.

✠ THADDEUS, Bishop of Monterey and Los Angeles.

✠ EUGENE, Bishop of Grass Valley, Nevada.

ANNUNCEMENT OF DIVINE OFFICE.

LEADING PARTICULARS.

In our issue of Feb. 22, 1882, we gave a summary of Divine Office, the Pastoral Letter, in which Leader the Catholic Bishops of Ireland, and the Cardinal Archbishop of Westminster, and Bishop of Salford, in Pastoral Letter, on the Holy Ghost, on the Sacrament of Matrimony, and the Pastoral Letter of the Catholic Bishops of Ireland

Forty Years Experience of an Old Nurse.

Mrs. Wyeneton's Soothing Syrup is the prescription of one of the best Female nurses in the United States, and has been used for forty years with never failing success by millions of mothers for their children. It relieves the child from pain, cures diarrhœa, and dysentery, relieves the bowels, corrects acidity, by dried bowels in fact it work like mother. Price twenty-five cents a bottle.

Best Tobacco Polishes for Gentlemen!

Ladies' Fine Shoes, Dress Boots, Gaiters, Slippers, Ties, Oxfords, Balmorals, Rubbers, Gentlemen's Fine Calf Boots, Kip Boots, Brogans, Ties, Oxfords, Balmorals, Rubbers, Children's Shoes, Boots, Ties, Oxfords, Balmorals, Rubbers,

THE CHURCH IN THE SOUTH SEA ISLANDS.

[CONCLUDED FROM FIRST PAGE.]

sented to the Profession of the two novices. All answered with one voice "We consent." The Litany of the Saints was then sung, the two novices remaining prostrate during that time, while the two acolytes held over them a pall. The veils, crosses, and rings were then blessed, the choir singing in the meantime some verses from Holy Scripture. This being concluded, the novices again approached the Communion rails, and each pronounced the three vows of religion. They then received the veil, cross and ring, a short prayer being pronounced by the officiating Bishop; to be handled each of these relics, which were to be future causes of pain, by no person but themselves without justice. Finally, the Bishop placed a crown of plaited thorns on the heads of the newly professed, which was to remind them that they were crucified to the world, and that they should be ready to suffer with their Divine Master. This brought to a conclusion a ceremony which has not happened for years, a ceremony that was witnessed all the more impressive and interesting by the fact of its taking place in a country of Heathen Islands, and in the presence of an assembly composed entirely of native.

THE WEEK'S NEWS

—FROM—

IRELAND.

No Rents for Irish Land.

Good Friday was a day of peace. Made mayhem. At the corner stone in the Land Reform Court, the Bishop of Ossory said that the Land Question was now as at any other Bishopric, and that the Church was not in politics, and that the Church was not in politics, and that the Church was not in politics

Poetry.

[FOR THE MONITOR.]

MERRY CHRISTMAS.

WRITTEN FOR THE MONITOR BY D. W. S'BISHOP.

With joyful hearts we sound hail
The dawn of merry Christmas morn!
We also the praise in song raise
Of Him who on that day was born.
In Judah's land, long ago,
Three kings with hearts to God low bended,
Saw a star that shone in the east,
Upon the dark blue sky ascending;
When fled their way our Kit radiant light,
At early morn on sun and day,
They knelt for joy and blessed the sight
That was to guide them on the way.
Over hills and fertile vales,
Over many a palace lightly traversing,
Over many a cottage and many dales,
Our lonely castles darkly lowering
Right along the Judean way,
Which could pass their covered ground,
Well lighted and lighted by Gabriel's way
Which could pass the ground to lead
Bethlehem's land, and lowly
Laid by people, old and young,
The star stood over the place
For three days a lonely beacon
The star stood over the place
Guiding, protecting from all danger
Those who had come from afar
Three kingly kings now lowly bowing
Before the Christ child
All come from near and far
Bearing gifts of gold and myrrh
Bearing gifts of gold and myrrh
Bearing gifts of gold and myrrh

THE MONITOR.
PERIODICAL PUBLISHED EVERY TUESDAY.
WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 26, 1883.

A Merry Christmas to all Monitor Readers!

Hail! Holy Christmas! Greatest of earth's days.
When man and angels sing God's holy praise!

The joy which wells up in each Catholic heart at the arrival of this holy season, pay taken more of heavenly happiness than of earthly delight. Poor and rich, happy and miserable, the hood-man and the free—all are alike infused with celestial joy; because, as Catholics, they are able to join in the celestial choirs of the angels in singing the sublime anthem heard nineteen hundred years ago as it reverberated throughout the hills and valleys of Judea:

"Glory to God in the highest; and on earth peace to men of good will."

The same God who sent his angelic messengers to convey the glad tidings to man that

"This day is born to you a Saviour who is Christ the Lord."

Sends his angels now to open every Catholic heart so that the Son of God may be born again therein through the beneficent and spotless virtue of the Blessed Sacrament. But, in order to realize the beatific vision of the Infant Saviour, we must say, with the Shepherds of Judea:

"Let us go even to Bethlehem, and let us see this word that is come to pass, which the Lord has showed us."

We must, like those obedient Shepherds, go "with haste" to the crib wherein repose the Infant Redeemer, and there behold, as they did, "Mary and Joseph, and the Infant lying in a manger."

Then, when we have fasted our eyes upon the representation of our Blessed Saviour, and humbled our souls upon the Bread of Life, like the Shepherds we will return with great joy, glorifying and praising God for all the things we have heard and seen.

This is the month by which the Christian Christmas should be observed. We should follow also in the footsteps of the Wise Men, who, although at a great distance from the scene of the Nativity, thought nothing of the fatigue or the difficulties they had to encounter on the way, so long as they accomplished the holiday upon which Herod sent them. Their faith in the existence of the promised Messiah should revive in our hearts new faith in God's promises upon our alters, and their conduct, so they should be with wherein the Infant Saviour reposed, should be an example for us to we enter the sanctuary of our all all occasions. Entering into the stable, the Scripture tells us that they found the Child with Mary, His Mother, and, falling down, they adored Him; and, opening their treasures, they offered Him gifts: gold, frankincense, and myrrh. We, also, can visit the temple of God, whenever we should offer to Him the pure gold of an unfaltering faith in His mercy, the sweet incense of our devotion to Him, and the myrrh of our resolution to reform our lives so they may therefore become more acceptable to God and more edifying to our neighbor.

If, on Christmas, we could only bring our entire to celebrate Christmas in this way, what joy indeed would be it! Heaven over the conversion of sinners would seem to be almost realized! The heavenly joy of the angelic host would be increased to an infinite degree, and the vault of Heaven would re-echo again with the volume of the choirs of angels who would repeat the cry of every Catholic with the sweet words of consolation: "This day is born to you a Saviour, who is Christ the Lord."

In vain was the Son of God born, in vain and He suffer and die for us if we, as Catholics, fail to correspond with the soul-saving graces which He has left us in the Sacraments of our holy faith. Also, if we turn to Him at this holy season, as our most loyal and loving friend, we will find that we have gifts of the greatest gifts in the treasury of Heaven, which is the queen of fair joys, virtue, a holy life, a happy death, and a glorious eternity! This is the Christmas gift of God! We hope every reader of the Monitor may receive!

Another Gosson at the Coadjutorship.

Father Phelan, of the Western Watchman, St. Louis, says, regarding the oft-renewed appointment of a coadjutor Bishop for Baltimore:

"The Baltimore Catholic Visitor says that it is scarcely reported in that city that Bishop Kenrick of Baltimore has been appointed coadjutor and successor to the archbishopric of Baltimore. We think that a mistake. Even if we can have the Right Rev. J. R. Bayley, Bishop of Newark, will remove from Baltimore, the Archbishop of Baltimore is the Primate of the Baltimore Ecclesiastical Province."

"Bishop Kenrick of Baltimore, Archbishop of Baltimore, Bishop Bayley, Bishop of Newark, Bishop Gilmore, Bishop of Wheeling, Bishop Corrigan, Bishop of Trenton, Bishop Wigger, Bishop of Pittsburgh, Bishop Shanahan, Bishop of Harrisburg, Bishop Ryan, Bishop of Buffalo

Forty Years Superiorness of an Old Nurse.

Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup is the prescription of one of the best female nurses in the United States, and has been used for forty years with never-failing success by millions of mothers for their children. It relieves the child from pain, cures diarrhœa and dysentery, griping and bowels, and wind-colic. By giving health to the child it rests the mother. Price twenty-five cents a bottle.

See Those Prices for Groceries!

Comet Tea, 50c; Diamond "L" Tea, 50c; Sun Tea Dust, 10c; Old Government Java roast, 35c; best Costa Rica roast, 30c; blended Costa Rica roast, 25; and 10c green Coffees, 3 to 10 lbs. $1; Cube and Crushed Sugars, 7 lbs $1; 9 lbs. crush. Sugar, $1; Paragon Mackerel, 50c; 3 kegs, Gilpin, 50c; 17 lbs. of Carolina Rice, $1; Extra Family Flour, $1.25; 8 bars Bruce Soap, 25c; Brown Sugar, by Eastern Purchaser, 20c; Salmon, 10c; 7 lb. Oysters, 15c; best 30c Oysters in the city; Home Corn, 15c; German Prunes, 10c; Carpet Sweeper, $2; the choicest Washing in the city; 50 best Clothes Lines, 15c; Washboards, 15c; Dustpans, 15c; Wire Brooms, Blacking and Insecticide Powder, 10c; Best Matches, 5 gross, $1; Scrubbing Brushes, 10c; Mazon & Dressen's, 1124 Market street. Country orders promptly attended to.

Maldoon, Prunes, Pimento, Etc.

Tony Cuber & Co., 604 Market street, opposite the Palace Hotel, make a specialty in their elegant and attractive store of the finest and of all kinds of articles' materials. Their lun-boxes pickers-lemon and mulkiness are from their own extensive manufactory. They make a specialty of ruffling. They have a varied and beautiful line of twice-hour holiday goods unexpressed in the city. They invite the attention of strangers, and know to the art purchasing public, who have been accustomed for many years to find here an excellent stock of fine steel engravings and other works of art.

Cut Glass.

Special cut glass, watches and jewelry at Davis & Co., Sign of the Golden Mortar, 1 Kearny street, 2d floor, near Post, opp. Post Office from 9 to 5. Must be closed 7 p.m.

Money Remembered.

Who Pays Cash Buys Their Dry Goods at Wolfson's Bazar and Their Universal Credit Clothing House, 1 Stockton street, and 1 Ellis st. The big dollar stores, 25c, 50c, and $1 to the only wholesale and retail dry goods house. This here, now but is high, make a complete of mens and boys' clothing, gents' furnishing goods and general dry goods, which prices that defiance competition. Wolfson's Bazar, 1 Stockton st. Wolfson's Bazar is at No. 37 Geary street, in this city.

Ask for Ammen's Cough Syrup.

Large bottle, $1.00—Ammen's Cough Syrup.

It cured my child—Ammen's Cough Syrup.

—To all who suffer with Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Gout, Sciatica, Lumbago, Sore Throat, Swellings, Sprains, Bruises, Burns and Scalds, Backache, Headache, Toothache, Earache, Frost Bites, Chilblains, and all other bodily pains, we recommend and warrant the old reliable Perry Davis' Pain Killer. For sale by all druggists.

—Pain! Pain! Pain!—Years of patient research and experiment have perfected Dr. Graefenberg's Celebrated Vital Blending, Tonic and Invigorating Pills, a remedy for pain, guaranteed by a single box. Price, 25 cents. A. Schyvie & Co. Druggists, 104 Washington St.

—Six Hundred Active, Intelligent agents wanted, before the publication of Miss Leslie's "Behind the Veil," a volume of 1000 pages, which is the world's 20 to 1 for the price of 1 book. Address Miss Leslie, Publisher, 737 Sansome st., San Francisco.

—Ladies Who Desire a Fair Complexion should use Dr. Lyon's Celebrated Powder. Ask druggists for it. Lyon's Kathairon for the hair.

—Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, for Coughs, Colds, Hoarseness, Croup, Bronchitis, Asthma, Consumption, and all diseases of the throat and lungs, is the best remedy for children. Prepared by Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass. Sold by all druggists.

—Ammen's Cough Syrup.

Cough—Ammen's Cough Syrup.

MISCELLANEOUS.

ROOFS

Tin Asphaltum Roofs Repaired Cheap. Old Roofs Repaired. Asphaltum Roofs Guaranteed when contracted for. 607 MARKET STREET Bet. 2d and 3d.

FIRE!! FIRE!!

JNO. R. SIMS & SON, Manufacturers of all kinds of Fireproof Doors and Window Blinds.

SHUTTERS, BURGLAR-PROOF BANK VAULTS AND SAFES, wrought iron glazed door frames, wrought and cast iron fastings, Balconies, Stairs, Gratings, The Iron Building, Jail work, Architectural work, work in the Old Style, manufactured in 1863, by the present Proprietor, Thos. Cole & Co., 404 Market street, San Francisco. Northern, or any other Iron Work made from their own patterns, and designs furnished upon application. Sawyer Edwards' patent Iron Shutters, which are so well known in the city, which this office, where the best of their patterns, and that they may continue to merit it in the city. They invite the attention of strangers, and know to the art purchasing public, who have been accustomed for many years to find here an excellent stock of fine steel engravings and other works of art.

Old Jim Crow.

Special cut glass, watches and jewelry at Davis & Co., Sign of the Golden Mortar, 1 Kearny street, 2d floor, near Post, opp. Post Office from 9 to 5. Must be closed 7 p.m.

Money Remembered.

Who Pays Cash Buys Their Dry Goods at Wolfson's Bazar and Their Universal Credit Clothing House, 1 Stockton street, and 1 Ellis st. The big dollar stores, 25c, 50c, and $1 to the only wholesale and retail dry goods house. This here, now but is high, make a complete of mens and boys' clothing, gents' furnishing goods and general dry goods, which prices that defiance competition. Wolfson's Bazar, 1 Stockton st. Wolfson's Bazar is at No. 37 Geary street, in this city.

Ask for Ammen's Cough Syrup.

Large bottle, $1.00—Ammen's Cough Syrup.

It cured my child—Ammen's Cough Syrup.

—To all who suffer with Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Gout, Sciatica, Lumbago, Sore Throat, Swellings, Sprains, Bruises, Burns and Scalds, Backache, Headache, Toothache, Earache, Frost Bites, Chilblains, and all other bodily pains, we recommend and warrant the old reliable Perry Davis' Pain Killer. For sale by all druggists.

—Pain! Pain! Pain!—Years of patient research and experiment have perfected Dr. Graefenberg's Celebrated Vital Blending, Tonic and Invigorating Pills, a remedy for pain, guaranteed by a single box. Price, 25 cents. A. Schyvie & Co. Druggists, 104 Washington St.

—Six Hundred Active, Intelligent agents wanted, before the publication of Miss Leslie's "Behind the Veil," a volume of 1000 pages, which is the world's 20 to 1 for the price of 1 book. Address Miss Leslie, Publisher, 737 Sansome st., San Francisco.

—Ladies Who Desire a Fair Complexion should use Dr. Lyon's Celebrated Powder. Ask druggists for it. Lyon's Kathairon for the hair.

—Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, for Coughs, Colds, Hoarseness, Croup, Bronchitis, Asthma, Consumption, and all diseases of the throat and lungs, is the best remedy for children. Prepared by Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass. Sold by all druggists.

—Ammen's Cough Syrup.

Cough—Ammen's Cough Syrup.

MISCELLANEOUS.

MUSIC---LANGUAGES.

C. J. BONNINGTON, TEACHER VIOLIN, PIANO, ORGAN, VOCAL MUSIC and the various Modern Languages. Professor of music, Residence, 222 Ellis st. Lessons given in French, German and Piano taught by Miss Bonning at home residence.

Headquarters for the Manufactory of all kinds of

Silk and Bunting Flags

Rosettes, Regalias, Banners, Gold and Silver Trimmings, Wholesale and Retail.

B. PASQUALE, 630 Washington and 507 Howard Street.

Attention!

Has after been appointed to the best seats charged by Prof. Jerome Deasy, Central Depot, 736 Market st., Sign of the Black Bonnet, Prompt attention to orders. Ladies' Bonnets to order.

Cor. City and Sansome Streets, San Francisco.

RAZORS!

FOR $1,000

I WILL MAKE A BETTER RAZOR AND SOAR OF MORE TIME THAN ANY MAN IN THE WORLD

My razors make guaranteed..... $2 5
My Grand Razor warranted not to cut the fresh while shaving..... 3 5
Good English Razors..... 1 00
Best English Razors..... 1 50

Sent C. O. D. or by mail.

M. PRICE, 418 Kearny Street. Grinding and Repairing.

MASON & HAMLIN ORGANS received at every Great World's Industrial Competition for Sixteen Years and other Societies equal to has been found equal to any other organs. Also, the Celebrated Mason and Hamlin Pianos, which for purity of tone and elegance of finish, are unsurpassed by any other Pianos. Warerooms, 1 Montgomery st., Palace Hotel. Pianos for Rent, $3 per month. Pianos Tuned and Repaired. Organs Rented.

J. COONEY, PRACTICAL Painter and Whitener. SIGNS NEATLY EXECUTED. NO. 113 FOURTH STREET, San Francisco, Cal.

NEW ENGLAND BAKING POWDER

NO ALUM FLOUR STARCH AMMONIA PHOSPHATES TARTARIC ACID CREAM TARTAR AND BI-CARB. SODA NOTHING ELSE. Newton Bros. & Co.

PHILADELPHIA BREWERY. JOHN WIEDLAND - - PROPRIETOR SECOND STREET, NEAR FOLSOM, San Francisco. Amount of Beer sold in 1882, 30,132 barrels.

BANKING HOUSES.

Jos. A. Donovan, San Francisco. | Stevens Kane, New York.

DONOHUE, KELLY & CO. SAN FRANCISCO. EUGENE, KELLY & CO. NEW YORK. BANKERS. EXCHANGE ON NEW YORK, LONDON, AND BANK IRELAND (Dublin). Payable at all the Branches. Agt. to Export Coupon Tax in Ireland.

WINES, LIQUORS, ETC.

NATIVE WINES.

Port, Bottle..... from $1 to $3 each. Sherry, Bottle..... from $1 to $3 each. By the Gallon..... $1 00 to $1.50.

Bulk and Foreign Wines and Brandies by the gallon, and at moderate prices.

J. C. HARRELING, 119 Dupont Street.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Morse

PHOTOGRAPHER, 826 Market Street, Phelan's New Building, San Francisco.

MR. MORSE'S NEW PHOTOGRAPHIC PARLORS have been pronounced by the press and all competent judges, the finest in the world. Having secured the services, and adopted the ideas and improvements which the work is universally pronounced as second to none, and superior to most. All are cordially invited to call and inspect the gallery where the truth of these statements will be made apparent.

W. D. S. HARRINGTON, BOOK SELLER, BOOK BINDER, Blank Book Manufacturer AND PRINTER. 509 CLAY STREET, Above Sansome..... SAN FRANCISCO.

MUSIC, MAGAZINES, ILLUSTRATED WORKS, ETC. Bound in the cheapest and most durable manner. Work promptly returned. Reviews charge.

THE BEST PLACE IN THE CITY - TO BUY - GROCERIES, TEA & COFFEE - AT THE - LOWEST MARKET PRICES FOR CASH.

Extra Family Mixed Tea, per lb..... 50c
Colored Japan Tea, per lb..... 50c
Extra Fine B. B. Tea, per lb..... 50c
Best G. G. Java Coffee roasted, per lb..... 30c
Best Rio Coffee, roasted, per lb..... 25c
Best Oolong Tea, roasted, per lb..... 50c
Choice Oolong Tea, ground, roasted, p. lb. 50c
Best Sacramento Flour, per bbl..... $6 50
Oat Meal, per sack 10 lbs..... 50c
50 lb. sack Salt, extra fine..... 50c
Eagle Chocolate, per lb..... 35c

SUGARS AT REFINERY RATES.

Rice, Sago and Tapioca, 17 lbs for $1 - AT - 824 Third Street, near Folsom. O. M. NICHUALS & CO.

SIBERIAN BALSAM CURES Catarrh, Asthma, Croup, Coughs, Colds, Affections of the Bronchial Tubes and Pulmonary Organs, Diseases of the Kidneys and Urinary Organs. It reaches the diseases through the blood and removes the cause. Depot, 415 Montgomery Street. FOR SALE BY ALL DRUGGISTS.

THE CATHOLIC Mutual Beneficial ASSOCIATION - OF THE - Archdiocese of San Francisco. President - - Rev. J. S. McNally.

PRESENTS A PLAN OF LIFE INSURANCE FOR the benefit of those who could be endowed by all prudent people. It is the only SAFE AND ECONOMICAL method of life insurance, and is open to a Catholic of the age of 18 years, of good moral and may nearly all the Catholic clergymen, all Catholic laymen, and all Catholic families. The funds are legally in the Sixteenth Ward, and the officers of the society are Catholic gentlemen of the City of San Francisco. The sum of the assessments has been reduced to $2 for the entire year, and the Society is now in a position where the benefit of life is to be subscribed every month (except Sundays), from 12 to 2 o'clock, and where a benevolent Catholic who desires to join the Society. Written communications must be addressed to EDWARD GILMOR, Secretary, 1119 Jones Street.

INFORMATION WANTED.

Any person knowing the whereabouts of Mr. P. J. KELLY, Brong, whose give and home of Mr. Kelly, Wassenville, California. Address P. J. Kelly, Wassenville, California. Address P. J. Kelly, San Francisco, Cal. Address P. J. Kelly, Lake Port, Napa county. He was born in Wexford, Drogheda, and his mother Margaret Boyle is very anxious to hear from him.

Marble Works. — Monuments & Headstones — Marble and Scotch Granite. MANTLES & GRATES. Marble and Encaustic Tiles. 37 Dodge st. opposite Bee Hive. W. H. McCORMICK, 37 MARKET ST., - bet. Fourth and Fifth.

TAILORS.

John Kavanagh, MERCHANT TAILOR, 6 New Montgomery Street, PALACE HOTEL, S. F. The Making of Gentlemen's Clothing a Specialty.

N. SWEENY, MERCHANT TAILOR 41 Second street, (Opposite Jesse street) ..... SAN FRANCISCO. Cassocks and Clerical Clothing a Specialty.

M. FITZPATRICK - IS - The BOSS Tailor, Of the Pacific Coast. 36 1-2 FOURTH STREET, Corner of Jessie..... San Francisco. Go there for your CLOTHES. You are SURE TO be SUITED and don't you forget it.

THOMAS DRADY, MERCHANT TAILOR No. 6 Third Street, Near Market, S. F.

E. F. WILTON, MERCHANT TAILOR, 12 Stockton Street, NEAR MARKET ST., SAN FRANCISCO

JOHN HICKEY, Merchant Tailor, 36 Fourth street, Between Market and Mission streets ..... SAN FRANCISCO.

Business Suits to order from $20 Pants " " 8 Fine Dress Suits " " 35 Black Doeskin Pants " " 7

DENIS REDMOND, MERCHANT TAILOR, No. 508 Mission street. Perfect fit and good work guaranteed.

BELLS ETC.

MENEELY BELL FOUNDRY. Furnishes towns in the public some of the finest bells, chimes and other bells, also Chimes and Peals. ESTABLISHED 1826. MENEELY & CO., WEST TROY, N. Y.

BUCKEYE BELL FOUNDRY. Bells of Pure Copper and Tin for Churches, Schools, Farms, Factories, Etc. VANDUZEN & TIFT, Cincinnati, O.

BLYMYER MF'G CO. BELLS. Church, School, Fire alarm, Factory and other bells. Chimes and Peals. Warranted. Catalogue sent free. CINCINNATI, O.

LINFORTH, RICE & CO. Sole Agents, 102 and 104 Market Street, S. F.

E. SOULE, — MANUFACTURER OF — WAGONS, TRUCKS — AND — Agricultural Implements, BLACKSMITHING REPAIRING, ETC., Done to order at Short Notice. Cor. 4th and Bryant Sts., SAN FRANCISCO.

W. A. HAMMOND, Watchmaker and Jeweler, No. 4 Sixth Street, (Second door from Market.) Watches Cleaned, $1. Glasses, 10c.

AGENTS WANTED EVERYWHERE to sell Wm. Hackling's Family Sewing Machine, price $10. Warranted for five years. Agents make from $100 to $200 a month. Address Wm. Hackling, Sole Manufacturer, 1 Montgomery st., Palace Hotel, San Francisco.

NATHAN GRAY. C. B. WRIGHT. J. A. CAMPBELL. N. Gray & Co., UNDERTAKERS, 641 Sacramento Street, cor. Webb..... SAN FRANCISCO. EMBALMING. Metallic Burial Cases and Casketts.

LITHOGRAPHERS. BOOKBINDERS. P. E. DOUGHERTY & CO., STEAM BOOK AND JOB PRINTERS, 412 Commercial St., and 411 Clay St. Between Sansome and Battery.

JOHN A. LENNON, Wholesale Grocer, AND IMPORTER OF Choice Brands Japan and English Breakfast Tea. Agent for Pure White Beehive Candies. Cheapest and Pure Olive Oil (not to Retailers). Nos. 813 and 817 Clay Street..... San Francisco.

EDWARD E. OSBORN, (Successor to Bolton and Osborn,) Solicitor of Patents, (AMERICAN AND FOREIGN.) 340 California St., Rooms 12 & 14. BOOKS BOUGHT AND SOLD, ST. A. BOCHOUN 2000 Montgomery street.

NEW FRANKLIN HOTEL

Cor. Sansome and Pacific streets.

H. CURRAN, ... Proprietor. THIS WELL KNOWN AND FAVORITE HOTEL IS SITUATED IN A MOST CENTRAL AND HEALTHY part of the City, and is recommended to families and the traveling public, and is the nearest Hotel to wharf of the Oregon steamers. Board and Room per day, $1 00. Board and Room per week, $5 to $6. Room per night, 50c. Free Lavatory for the use of Families. Rooms for the hotel lodging. Willie baby employed. Free Coach to and from the Hotel.

R. W. THEOBALD, IMPORTER AND DEALER IN ALL KINDS OF

FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC COALS 33 and 37 CLAY STREET, SAN FRANCISCO. Connected with the Pacific Bell Telephone Exchange. Orders sent through this means will receive prompt attention. P. O. Box 1187.

JOSEPH MAYER, ORGAN BUILDER, No. 127 Page Street, San Francisco. MANUFACTURES AND REPAIRES OF ALL STYLE OF CHURCH AND PARLOR ORGANS. All Orders to the above Address will receive prompt attention.

R. HERRING, — MANUFACTURER OF — FINE FURNITURE MANTELS, House, Bank, and Office Fittings, In Pacific Coast Woods a Specialty. Nos. 429 and 431 FOURTH STREET, Cor. of Silver. DESIGNS FURNISHED.

HARVEY'S HOT-WATER RADIATOR

SECURES A MILD UNIFORM TEMPERATURE without the extravagant waste of fuel or loss of the proper grade; a more healthful atmosphere without the dry, parched air or noxious vapors of the hot-air furnace; a delicious diffusion of heat without the blowing or crackling of the steam apparatus. Information or Descriptive Circulars sent free. NO. 213 MISSION ST. Bet. Main and Beale. SAN FRANCISCO.

WHAT WILL THE WEATHER BE TO-MORROW? Pool's Signal Service Barometer OR STORM GLASS AND THERMOMETER COMBINED. WILL TELL YOU!

It will foretell and indicate correctly all changes in the weather 12 to 24 hours in advance, and is the only reliable barometer in the world. Its indications are to be depended on by everybody. Farmers can plan their work, sailors can know when to expect a change of weather, invalids can avoid exposure, and everybody can be benefited by its indications. This great WEATHER INDICATOR has been in use for 20 years, and has proved to be the BEST IN THE WORLD! Added value has been given to it by the Proprietor, who is the Author of the Celebrated Pool's Signal Service Almanac. The Thermometer and Barometer are put in a neat Rosewood Frame, 12 inches long, and 3 inches in diameter, and sent to any address on receipt of $1; or, if sent by express, to be paid on delivery, or receipt of $1 on the 24 Sts. Address, POOL'S SIGNAL SERVICE BAROMETER, 1 Montgomery Street, Palace Hotel, San Francisco. Agents wanted everywhere. Liberal discount to the trade. Address as above. Agents wanted everywhere. Liberal discount to the trade. Address as above. Agents wanted everywhere. Liberal discount to the trade. Address as above and pasture grounds prevail, in the mountains small plots held forever on payment of a quit-rent. The insignificant portion of the Agro Romano under cultivation is attended to by Neapolitan laborers, who, with their wives and children, immigrate thither in autumn to gather in the crops and prepare the ground for the coming year's produce. In the villages the colliers generally rent some small, cultivated plots, but after the payment of taxes the little produce that is left is generally seized by the landlords' bailiffs on the ground, or on the way to the market. The people of Guadagnolo, a large village situated not far from Tivoli, live altogether on Indian corn bread, have to draw water a distance of about two miles, from the foot of the great height on which the hamlet stands, and to carry on communication with the plains by means of rude and almost impracticable mountain-paths. These are general misery and destitution among the hereditary and bailiwick of the Roman province, where, up to 1870, under the kindly and paternal rule of the Papal Government they lived in comparative comfort and contentment.

ITALY UNDER ROBBER RULE.

[CONCLUDED FROM FIRST PAGE.]

In the kingdom of Naples, the land, though very fertile, is of comparatively small or no investment. Important reforms and improvements were commenced and introduced by King Ferdinand and his son Francesco previous to 1860, but were rendered nugatory on the accession of the latter prince to the new kingdom of Italy. A great portion of the best of land belonged to Francesco in Calabria the prevailing system is that of a quit-rent, or a certain fixed yearly payment of a quit rent. The so-called Fermage system is also much in vogue, the farmer retaining one-third of the produce, and the only one-fourth of the vintage. The Neapolitan peasants' cottages are swept, or, say, thank one year, Indian corn the next, and so on; the former hitting entirely upon Indian corn bread and water from hunger are by no means rare occurrences among the peasantry of northern Italy. The small farms of Sicily are gradually melting away to swell the ever domain of greedy speculators, and the special privileges claimed forged by the Government for their hardy descendants, the Bersaglieri, have, within a few years, done incalculable damage to its agriculture and commerce. Upon visits to the condition of the agricultural classes of northern Italy, their brethren in the south, though living in the midst of more abundant natural wealth, are steeped in far greater depth of hard ship and misery.

THE NATURE OF LAND-TENURE

In every part of Italy, the rude and primitive system of farming, the exorbitant rents for harvests, and the low aids at which agricultural interest stands, very frequently force the hapless tenant, the money of usurers, from whom he has to borrow at ruinous rates of interest. Professional money-lenders charge less than sixty per cent per annum, but the victim must, at such cost, either accept the terms or others. The rapacity of these men is frequently a more insuperable enemy. The middle class of Italy, from its, in a comparatively large extent, so much so that the vast majority of the people, which the tenants, their wives, and dependents, are completely at the mercy of the landlord as regards, and the law

Poetry.

OUR CHRISTMAS CRIB.

Come to the Christmas Crib, and bow
Pale Bethlehem's star-paved floor,
To Christine hearts forever dear,
The "Angels are near you" of yore,
The Saviour Child, the mother sweet,
The Christine lovers are here,
Have Jesus, Mary, Joseph meet,
And with them gentle man.

Come to the Christmas Crib, bright things
Of the year life's freshest bloom;
Fair, pure, and sweet, the Christmas songs,
And gifts of sweet perfume;
Bring hearts where the Holy Child
Can rest, pillow his head,
"Oh, the little one sweet, the babbles mild,
May we your hearth thy one!"

Come to the Christmas Crib, O girl,
The sinless Mother see,
Say how to be who has the pearl
Of purity for thee.
Virgin, with the blushing pink and white,
Dear lov and humble joy
Pay Him in gold thy dear spot
From all that lack safety.

Come to the Christmas Crib, ye who Stand drear in mortal pains;
Bring sorrow to the Child, who is ready
Even on temporal gains;
Bring your sorrows, your heavy cross,
Unused by heavenly eyes,
And with the angel choir again
The Glorias of praise.

Come to the Christmas Crib, old hearts,
Ye who have loved long and well,
Bring your gifts and offer incense
Of your long years of toil;
Bring your gifts and offer incense
Of your long years of toil;
Bring your gifts and offer incense
Of your long years of toil;
Bring your gifts and offer incense
Of your long years of toil.

Come to the Christmas Crib, all come
Who love the Infant Child,
And, like the Christ-child's mother, come
Bring your best offerings
Bring your best offerings
Bring your best offerings

Poetry.

"ANOTHER STOCKING TO FILL."

WHAT MAMMA THINKS.

Santa Claus! Santa Claus! hand a-for our treasures;
Write down his name in that long line of names!
Open your knapsack of toys without measure,
Bring out the wealth of your great Christmas collect.

He is your gift from the good God above us;
Only "Jesus" is greater, and holier than he.
You are the saint that make children to love us;
Leave him a gift for the bright Christmas morn.

Now he's too young to know you are near him;
Soon will old Santa Claus grow like to make.
Yet, Jesus Christmas will further our aim;
Whatever from you will be delighted baptize.

Think of the wish the boy has before him,
Think, with the long-grain, brown around;
Soft, if he says to wish a lump, yet remember him,
Then he's satisfied our baby will found.

While in childhood in your spiritual glory,
Give him the wonder of the sweet Christmas joy;
Show him the brightest of childhood's sweet
Santa Claus, Santa Claus, smile on my boy.

SANTA CLAUS'S VIEW OF IT.

Hi! another one! What's the world about?
Don't these people know that I'm worn out?
Year after year, the same old story
Every younger wonderful if I don't appear.

Children I like, and I don't care to be Thus a bit of money, then a day to be
Thus a bit of money, then a day to be
Thus a bit of money, then a day

Poetry.

[FOR THE MONITOR.]

THE CROPPEIN' GRAVE.

BY REV. O. A. PRATT.

"Are for life the pale dastard its liberty barters
Let him pause, for death lurks in a palace as well as in cottage
And if peace are our ends, 'twas the blood of our sires
Who shed it, let us, with them, be ready to die."—A. D. WILSON.

I stood beside the Croppein' grave, and knelt
To breathe a fervent prayer for those lower men
Whom rebellion seems to the historic pen
Remain unknown, yet for their fate I felt
As bitterness, sorrow and deep, Mr. PRYOR
Pour'd out his soul in eloquent tones of woe
Upon the occasion, I noticed with surprise
That many tiny plants which thousands thus Were cut in blood, these then I've heard of Who
The cold clay twenty the premature many think
That of their blood the earth refused to drink
That in the day of Gen Ben Croppein's defeat,
Jeff Davis hoped to see of grass two more
Spring up in the blood thus wrongly Heaven spoke.

Oxford, New Jersey.

TWO OF THEM.

In the farm house porch the farmer sat
With his daughter, laying a cosy chat;
Sweet was the evening, and the air
Fragrant by a distant flower grove;
Not a cloud was in the sky, not a tree
Stirred, and the sweet birds sang merrily.

"There should be two of you, child," said he—
"Two, I mean, to share the fate of night;
Twin souls, whose thoughts, with the children from Should be blended, and whose hopes, too, even Spread and flower yet be, my dear,
Twin souls, whose thoughts, with the children from Spring up in the night, beneath the old elm tree,
Sweet, whisper alone; yet not Lonely, but twin souls, and yet

THE MONITOR.
TWENTY-SIXTH YEAR OF PUBLICATION.
WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 27, 1882.

A New Year's Greeting to Our Readers.

In wishing every reader of the MONITOR a "Happy New Year!" we wish to remind them that they can very easily make the incoming year, 1883, additionally happy to their relatives and friends in the East by sending them, as a New Year's gift, a copy of the MONITOR for the coming year. It will cost only $3, and its arrival every week will remind old friends and dear relatives of the loved ones on the Pacific slope. Catholic relatives will appreciate a Catholic paper from California; it will give them an Ideal M the religious institutions in the State, and may eventually lead some of them into emigrating to California.

Aside from this, the presence of the MONITOR in the homes of distant friends will serve as a reminder of the distant father or mother, son or daughter, and many a blessing will be given to the kind heart that thus remembered itself to such an act of filial or friendly love. As an evidence of how the MONITOR does sent abroad is appreciated, we may mention the fact that Dr. William Dudley White, physician to Our Lady's Hospital for the Dying, at Harold's Cross, Dublin, Ireland, has written to a friend in San Francisco: "Many thanks for the MONITOR, which is a very interesting paper; after reading it I bring it to the patients at the Hospice who are delighted with it."

Here is probably the effect the MONITOR will have in every family in the East to whom it is sent, and we hope that many of our relatives will make their friends a New Year's present which will last the whole year and cost only $3.

Death of a Celebrated Irish Theologian.

Recent papers from Ireland bring the pathetic news of the death of one of the best known ecclesiastical writers in that land so prolific of talented priests. Many readers of the MONITOR will pursue with deep regret the obituary notice of Dr. Murray, of Maynooth College, whose death occurred about 18th ult., after a life spent in "instructing many in the ways of perfection," and we pray that his pure soul may shine as a star for all eternity.

"The Very Rev. deceased was born at Clonroche, County Wexford, on the 19th of November, 1811, and from the day of his burial he would have just completed the seventy-second year of his age. His received his early Sacred and classical education in the neighborhood of Clonee, and during his long life retained that deep and abiding affection, characteristic of the Celtic nature, for his family and for his native place. On the 20th of August, 1839, he was ordained a priest, and, after a life spent in "instructing many in the ways of perfection," and we pray that his pure soul may shine as a star for all eternity.

"The Very Rev. deceased was born at Clonroche, County Wexford, on the 19th of November, 1811, and from the day of his burial he would have just completed the seventy-second year of his age. His received his early Sacred and classical education in the neighborhood of Clonee, and during his long life retained that deep and abiding affection, characteristic of the Celtic nature, for his family and for his native place. On the 20th of August, 1839, he was ordained a priest, and, after a life spent in "instructing — A Boiled lawyer has been a bill, and a member of the Parliament of Ontario has introduced a bill providing for the punishment of the guilty parties, upon the presumption of the contract hatched, upon the promoter of this measure, the author thereof, if it shall be found to have been, and we fear it may be, tainted by unwholesome influence, and to be, forthwith, and unremittingly, hung, for an one or more, a prominent Republican feed would crop up again a dispatch.

The House King Harry Built.

If we had the misfortune—which the Lord forbid!—to belong to the broken ranks of those go-as you-please Christians who are outside the Catholic Church, we think that Episcopalianism would never catch us, for the reason that it was an immoral King who founded that sect, in the first place, and such latitude of belief or non-belief is allowed to its members that it is, beyond comparison, the greatest Jumble in the geological garden of gospelized Protestantism! In saying this we are not giving expression to our own views as one who loves the real Christian faith and hates error in all its shams, but we are only voicing the sentiment of Episcopalian writers themselves, who see in their sect an incongruity between declared doctrine and its administration which appalls them.

The test is frankly set forth by Rev. William Kirkus, in a recent number of the American Literary Churchman, wherein that writer thus depicts the difference between the principle laid down as Episcopalian doctrine and their practical operation, as designated in the examples which he adduces in the following extract:

"The (Protestant Episcopal) Church is identity and potentiality, what she is in her corporate capacity, and what she is in her power to be. Absolutely, we mean it is the ideal church. Absolutely, we say of the sects, and rightly claims our reverence and sympathies. But as a matter of fact she by no means covers the ideal, and we have to make the side of doctrine; that Episcopal ordination is absolutely necessary, that it imparts supernatural grace; that the Sacraments are the means ex opere operato; that every baptized person is regenerate; that the Body and Blood of Christ are really present by consecration; that the Holy Eucharist is a sacrifice; that priests have power to absolve sins; that the Canon of Scripture is to be determined by tradition and not the authority of the Church; that our doctrine are affirmed by all our clergy, and denied (probably) by a yet greater number. Take the side of Lutheran principle; and we shall find our own Church, in practice, rather resembling the nominal predecessor of a Bishop in such doctrine, departing in every direction by course, and, if we, and other investigators, make our Church policy of the first four centuries.

"There are in our Church a certain number of dioceses; but where is the Church because? What is the relation of the dioceses to one another? They are always absolutely independent, they are often actually antagonistic. At the present moment Albany and New York have to unite, and are perfectly able to unite, and are actually unite, the work of Maryland. The dioceses of Virginia and Illinois are much less alike than the dioceses of Virginia and the Methodists, or the Methodists and Presbyterians.

A little reflection upon the comparison made by this writer will confirm any reflecting Christian that the Protestant Episcopal sect has never been—is not now—nor never can be—the Church of Christ. Almighty God never left to mankind a man of contradictory creeds, as the light of faith, nor did He leave us a set of disjointed doctrines, a disunited hierarchy, and disorganized system in the component parts of a Church which was to be like unto Himself—one and indivisible.

If, therefore, we look around at all the dissenting Christian churches, we find the same distinctive characteristics, the same contradictory creeds, and people contradicting themselves, and people contradicting themselves, which holding no one opinion for more than the right of private judgment, and such infallible in the expression of any error their minds may conjure up.

Now, let us look upon the Catholic Church, and what do we find? We see in her unity as the distinguishing mark of her heavenly origin. The humblest Catholic peasant in the poor house believes precisely the same Christian doctrines as the Pontiff in Rome. Both have the same faith, the same Sacraments, the same deities to God and the Church, and neither has any idea that to heaven not possessed in common by all Catholics—whether Castilians or Chinese, Irishmen or Indians. In the Catholic Church there is no royal road to heaven. Every sinner and saint must "take up his cross" and follow in the footsteps of our Blessed Redeemer, who "became obedient to blood-dyed Calvary! Neither prince, pope, nor potentate, is exempt from a single iota of obedience to the laws of God, which the Church does by the silent exercise of its authority, enforcing. Why but their church property? The devout people who worship in it have given it over generously, that every baptized person in the Church of Christ, and Blood of Christ are really present by consecration; that the Holy Eucharist is a sacrifice; that priests have power to absolve sins; that the Canon of Scripture is to be determined by tradition and not the authority of the Church; that our doctrine are affirmed by all our clergy, and denied (probably) by a yet greater number. Take the side of Lutheran principle; and we shall find our own Church, in practice, rather resembling the nominal predecessor of a Bishop in such doctrine, departing in every direction by course, and, if we, and other investigators, make our Church policy of the first four centuries.

"There are in our Church a certain number of dioceses; but where is the Church because? What is the relation of the dioceses to one another? They are always absolutely independent, they are often actually antagonistic. At the present moment Albany and New York have to unite, and are perfectly able to unite, and are actually unite, the work of Maryland. The dioceses of Virginia and Illinois are much less alike than the dioceses of Virginia and the Methodists, or the Methodists and Presbyterians.

A little reflection upon the comparison made by this writer will confirm any reflecting Christian that the Protestant Episcopal sect has never been—is not now—nor never can be—the Church of Christ. Almighty God never left to mankind a man of contradictory creeds, as the light of faith, nor did He leave us a set of disjointed doctrines, a disunited hierarchy, and disorganized system in the component parts of a Church which was to be like unto Himself—one and indivisible.

— Rev. Dr. J. P. Newman, a Protestant minister of New York, recently said: "There are three things you, in honor of the Roman Catholic Church, it has been a wall of brass against infidelity, holding it in check. It has been a wall of force of resistance and consolation, and it has not been constantly against frequency of divorce, which has especially disgraced Protestantism in Massachusetts, Connecticut, Indiana and Illinois."

Strength of the Religious Orders.

The Catholic Examiner says justly that it would be interesting as well as instructive to study the figures in the statistics of the religious orders that have flourished for the past 1500 years. The vast number of men and women who voluntarily shut themselves up from the world to practice the evangelical counsels of perpetual chastity, entire obedience, and voluntary poverty, would open the eyes of the unbelievers and even many Catholics to greatly God. It has been computed that since the foundation of the Franciscan Order, 700 years ago, the followers of the great saint in the practice of virtue would number at least 6,000,000, or equal the Catholic population of the United States. Now, if the Dominicans, Carmelites, Benedictines, Augustinians, Jesuits, and hundreds of other religious communities and societies were summoned from the dead to their institution, the total would be wonderful. In it not because of this vast army of soldiers, men and women, that the spirits of darkness have been baffled and God has so often blessed the earth, rather than cursed it!

The Immensity of London.

The following few statistics, which we cull from the Catholic Standard, will give some of our readers an idea of the immensity of the great English metropolis as compared even with San Francisco. The Standard says "it is impossible for an American who has never visited London, even though familiar with Philadelphia or New York, to form an adequate conception of that huge metropolis of the world. Its statistics are bewildering. Its prisons contain 15,000 centuns; and of these, in London, as here, the greater number, 11,000, are young men and women who have not yet reached the age of thirty, and very many of them are mere boys and girls in years though matured in depravity.

"During the year 1881, the police records report 19,000 various felonies, 18,771 arrests for disorderly conduct, 15,271 cases of persons missing, 252 instances of persons killed, and 3,460 seriously wounded by having been run over by vehicles on the streets.

"Yet when we compare these large figures with the enormous numbers of houses and people—700,000 of the former and 5,000,000 of the latter—they form a smaller proportion than the statistics of any of our own large cities present.

Davitt's Eloquence.

The following is an extract from Michael Davitt's speech recently delivered at Navan and other places in Ireland: "From the homes of two hundred thousand starving people; from the graves of millions of our race; from the depths of the wide Atlantic; from the abodes of murdered landlords, as well as from those of their famished victims in our courage the wisdom of our religious convictions, and, if we add practice to our belief, we may rest assured that we are about to be the means of saving many souls out of the darkness of doubt into the clear light of Christian certainty, as it illumines the Catholic Church alone.

The New Papal Nuncio in Paris.

On Saturday, the 2d inst., the new Papal Nuncio, Monsignor de Rende, had his first official reception of the Diplomatic corps. There was an immense throng, and the Nuncio made a most favorable impression by the courage he displayed in the sentiments he gave expression to regarding the rights of the Holy See, even when standing almost within sanshot of Garibotta and his cohorts. Monsignor de Rende also displayed the false impressions of those who supposed he would depart from the wise, firm, conciliatory, and enlightened policy pursued by Monsignor Cecchi, his predecessor. During his reception he gave expression to the following sentiments, which foreshadow his future line of policy. "There is, said he, "a certain hell here. The nation will no longer follow those who would lead it on to fresh aggressions. Still, we must possess vigorous and passion from whatever side they come. We must remain above party struggles. Our mission is higher. We cannot identify ourselves with any form of government. The Church has suffered under all governments. It has held a course on the same. There were Bishops who were seized by force and imprisoned under Louis XIV. This was no cause for quarrelling with the monarchy but neither is it one for proclaiming that the Church had never more freedom than under the monarchy. The Church can live under any form of government, notwithstanding the hostility of the Church and all the doctrines are affirmed by all our clergy, and denied (probably) by a yet greater number. Take the side of Lutheran principle; and we shall find our own Church, in practice, rather resembling the nominal predecessor of a Bishop in such doctrine, departing in every direction by course, and, if we, and other investigators, make our Church policy of the first four centuries.

"There are in our Church a certain number of dioceses; but where is the Church because? What is the relation of the dioceses to one another? They are always absolutely independent, they are often actually antagonistic. At the present moment Albany and New York have to unite, and are perfectly able to unite, and are actually unite, the work of Maryland. The dioceses of Virginia and Illinois are much less alike than the dioceses of Virginia and the Methodists, or the Methodists and Presbyterians.

A little reflection upon the comparison made by this writer will confirm any reflecting Christian that the Protestant Episcopal sect has never been—is not now—nor never can be—the Church of Christ. Almighty God never left to mankind a man of contradictory creeds, as the light of faith, nor did He leave us a set of disjointed doctrines, a disunited hierarchy, and disorganized system in the component parts of a Church which was to be like unto Himself—one and indivisible.

If, therefore, we look around at all the dissenting Christian churches, we find the same distinctive characteristics, the same contradictory creeds, and people contradicting themselves, and people contradicting themselves, which holding no one opinion for more than the right of private judgment, and such infallible in the expression of any error their minds may conjure up.

Now, let us look upon the Catholic Church, and what do we find? We see in her unity as the distinguishing mark of her heavenly origin. The humblest Catholic peasant in the poor house believes precisely the same Christian doctrines as the Pontiff in Rome. Both have the same faith, the same Sacraments, the same deities to God and the Church, and neither has any idea that to heaven not possessed in common by all Catholics—whether Castilians or Chinese, Irishmen or Indians. In the Catholic Church there is no royal road to heaven. Every sinner and saint must "take up his cross" and follow in the footsteps of our Blessed Redeemer, who "became obedient to blood-dyed Calvary! Neither prince, pope, nor potentate, is exempt from a single iota of obedience to the laws of God, which the Church does by the silent exercise of its authority, enforcing. Why but their church property? The devout people who worship in it have given it over generously, that every baptized person in the Church of Christ, and Blood of Christ are really present by consecration; that the Holy Eucharist is a sacrifice; that priests have power to absolve sins; that the Canon of Scripture is to be determined by tradition and not the authority of the Church; that our doctrine

Forty Years Experience of an Old Nurse.

MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP is the prescription of one of the best Female nurses in the United States, and has been used for forty years with never-failing success by millions of mothers for their children. It relieves the little child from pain, cures dysentery and diarrhœa, relieves to the child, soften the gums, reduces inflammation, allays all pain; cures wind colic, and is the best remedy for diarrhœa, whether arising from teething or other causes. Twenty-five cents a bottle.

See "Home Friends for Grandmothers!

Cured Pim, Sing Dysentery, Diarrhœa, Cholera Morbus, Colic, Cholera Infantum, Sick Headache, Cramps, Spasms, Nausea, Vomiting, Sour Stomach, Heartburn, Jaundice, Loss of Appetite, Costiveness, Piles, Dropsy, Gravel, Flatulency, Dizziness, Nervous Headache, Neuralgia, Rheumatism, Fever and Ague, Fever, Chills, Female Weakness, Irregularities, Leucorrhœa, Nervous Prostration, Sleeplessness, Nervous Irritation, Nervous Debility, Nervous Decay, Wakefulness, Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Liver Complaint, Dropsy, Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Kidney Complaint, Dysentery, Diarrhœa

IRELAND REVISITED.

[CONCLUDED FROM FIRST PAGE.]

His attitude is one of reflection, but a reflectiveness under which energy, resolution and resolutions of attack are visible. The face is bold, square, strongly-marked, and framed by a copious growth of brushed-back early hair. There is statue of Henry Grattan in the act of declamation in College Green, directly opposite the Senate House, which was the scene of many of his orator- and victories. The figure is striking, and catches the eye and fancy of the masses; but the pose is too theatrical, that of a debating Irish favorite, not of the great rhetorician, orator of the minds of men. And King Billy equestrian crowned with Orange lilies and decorations crowned with obloquy, on the impossible charger Lowther Arcade, modestly, with his lessened individuality and his shared Roman garb, half of Conte half of circus rider, bad to him! It is a pleasure to recognize the bastioned old mediæval whose mind has been all-British of so many street fights and whose nerves has borne the brunt of so much calumny in war and government, good and ill, and who still contains for high-minded Irish mind with unsoured and unmerritable calumny. Positively, I am informed by the still extant opposition of the original Parliament, and not to be, entire an impossibility to Sidney I was informed for some hours of evening fun in Dublin "by every opera." Here he should be entirely free, and can show to Charles Lever is of Charcoal Burners! I search for Lever's ghost when I meet a Dublin man, and I wonder that the memory of his humor, and of the Irish character he pictures Charles, had to leave Ireland to Dempsey and Dash to carry to points of Jerry humanity, and to carry to point of Irish humanity, and to carry to point of Irish humanity the points of the world, at the point to be had among publishing houses of Dublin.

THE NEW VOYAGE OF LIFE.

[illegible] Rev. T. P. Childs is the teacher of [illegible] Dublin. Dublin is the place [illegible] Dublin. Dublin is the place [illegible] Dublin. Dublin is the place

THE MONITOR,
A CATHOLIC FAMILY JOURNAL.
DEVOTED TO THE PROPAGATION AND DEFENSE OF CATHOLIC PRINCIPLES.
Published by THE MONITOR PUBLISHING CO. Office: 606 Clay street, San Francisco, California.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION:

One Year by Mail (if not paid in advance)	$2 00
One Year by Mail (if not paid in advance)	2 50
Six Months (if paid in advance)	1 75
Six Months (not paid in advance)	2 00
Three Months (if paid in advance)	1 00
Three Months (if not paid in advance)	1 50

Ireland or any of the British Provinces (if paid in advance) $4 00; (not in advance) $5 00

Address all communications, remittances, checks, and postal orders to
E. J. McCOARTY, Editorial Manager.
MONITOR Office, Box 2123 P. O., San Francisco, Cal. Entered at the San Francisco Post Office as Second-Class Matter.

The Monitor.

THE MONITOR

is now in the twenty-fifth year of publication, and its well-established character as a constant and reliable Religious Newspaper, has gained for it a wide circulation and an influence which makes THE MONITOR a valuable medium for advertisers.

Advertisements inserted at reasonable rates.

TO CORRESPONDENTS

Communications, to secure insertion, should be handed in not later than Tuesday each week.

No communications will be inserted unless accompanied by the author's name. This is required as a private guarantee of good faith.

Communications will be gladly received from all interested in the cause advocated by this Journal. Correspondents should be as brief as possible, and should write legibly, and on one side of the paper only. We cannot undertake to return MSS. of unused articles.

All contributions and communications, whether on business or otherwise, or be addressed to the Manager.

For thy Sovereign not ashamed to say the Truth..... Strive for Justice for thy Sovereign and even unto Death fight for Justice, and God will overthrow thy enemies for Thee. (Ecclus. iv. 28)

VOL. XXVI. SAN FRANCISCO, WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 3, 1883. NO. 13.

MISCELLANEOUS.

A POSITIVE CURE FOR DYSPEPSIA.
TRY IT. DRUGGISTS SELL IT.
Made by
H. B. SLAVEN,
The Baldwin Building.

PLATING.
NICKEL PLATING,
GOLD PLATING,
SILVER PLATING,
Elegant and Durable.
ALL KINDS OF WORK PLATED. WORK CALLED for and delivered. Lowest estimates given for work in our line. Silver Plated Lamptumers, Knives, Forks, Spoons, Silver Plated Jewelry, Jewelry for sacred gold, used in quartz, gravel and placer mining, excepted the most made. Orders by mail promptly attended to. The most extensive
PLATING ESTABLISHMENT
On the Pacific Coast.
San Francisco Gold, Silver and Nickel Plating Works,
539 and 541 Mission Street, bet. New Montgomery and Third Sts., San Francisco, Cal.
E. G. DENNISTON, Proprietor.
Awarded First Premium at every fair of the Mechanics' Institute for the last 10 years.

NEW YORK. GEO. LACOMBE.
STACK & LACOMBE,
Practical Hatters,
639 MARKET STREET,
Under Palace Hotel..... San Francisco.

W. YOUNG,
DOMESTIC
SEWING MACHINES.
Exclusive Warehouse and Manufactory, No. 1036 1-2 Mission St., near 16th.
Needle to all Machines, Oil, Etc. Fancy Goods and Notions.

J. J. DYER,
DENTIST,
S. E. cor. Kearny & Post Sts.,
Entrance, 27 Post St. "23

KANE & HEANEY,
DEALERS IN
Choice Butter, Cheese,
EGGS, ETC.,
1 and 40 Centre Market,
Private Butter St., near Depot. San Francisco.
Patronage solicited, and all orders promptly filled. Marketing Delivered to all parts of the city.

S. S. CHAMBERLAIN, JR. THOS. A. ROBINSON.
PACIFIC Business College, 320 POST ST.
LIFE SCHOLARSHIPS, $70.
SEND FOR CIRCULAR.

J. L. CAHILL,
PAINTER,
Whitener and Decorator.
Graded Rates for Private Lodgings, Houses, etc.
20 POST STREET, bet. Stockton and Dupont.

A CARD TO THE PUBLIC.
THIS is TO CERTIFY THAT
Wm. G. Hodger, 13 Sansome St.,
IS THE SOLE AND EXCLUSIVE AGENT FOR THE SALE OF HALL'S VEGETABLE SICILIAN HAIR RENEWER in this City. HALL, DAVIS & CO. Boston, Jan. 1, 1877.

GEO. G. GERE, M. D.
and Surgeon,
318 Sutter St., San Francisco.
OFFICE HOURS—11 to 1 and 6 to 7 P. M.

HALL'S PULMONARY BALSAM
PRICE 50 CTS
AN IMMEDIATE AND PERMANENT CURE for COUGHS, COLDS, ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS, CROUP, INFLUENZA, CATARRH, LOSS OF VOICE, Incipient Consumption, and all Diseases of the Throat and Lungs. Ask for the California Pulmonary Balsam, and take no other.
SOLD BY ALL DRUGGISTS.
J. R. GATES & CO., Proprietors,
417 Sansome Street, S. F.

The Church and Social Progress.

BISHOP MORAN'S BEAUTIFUL LECTURE.

THE POWER OF THE POPE IN PAST AGES.

The Church the Patron of Art.

Catholic Composers Who Have Achieved Immortality.

(Continued from our last.)

THE CIVILIZING INFLUENCE OF THE RELIGIOUS ORDERS.

It was not only however in a material way that the monks thus became the restorers of civilization and the benefactors of society. They were the teachers of the ignorant, the friends, the guides, the fathers of the people. They were, as Kemble writes "perpetual mediators between the rich and the poor, between the strong and the weak; and it must be said to their eternal honor that they understood and fulfilled in a marvellous way the duties of this noble mission. They alone had the right and the means of arresting the rough hand of power; of mitigating the just severity of the law, of showing a gleam of hope to the eye of the slave, and of finding, even in this world, a place and means of existence for all those forsaken ones to whom existence was ignored by the State." (Kemble 'Saxons in England, vol. 2, pag. 370.) Throughout all France those great centres of civilization rapidly multiplied. They sprung up along the banks of the Rhine and of the Rhone; they spread out to the shores of the Adriatic. The monks climbed the rugged hills of Switzerland, they penetrated far into the Saxon territory, they were to be found in the depths of the German forests, and wherever those devoted sons of the Church were to be met, they were the pioneers of a new social order, the heralds of virtue and religion.

It offened happened as was to be expected in those times of turbulence, that men armed with sovereign and irresponsible power would attempt to violate justice, to substitute their own passions for law, and to trample on the rights of their subjects. The Church and the Church alone could interpose her authority to check the hand of tyranny, to protect the weak, and to shelter the oppressed. This was her heavenly mission and fearlessly and faithfully did she correspond to it. Towards the close of the sixth century the Lombards spread havoc and ruin throughout the fairest regions of Italy and gathered like a tempest around Rome. The Pope, Saint Gregory the Great, appealed to the Emperor to protect his subjects; but the court at Constantinople was too much engaged in the pursuits of pleasure to heed the Pontiff's appeal. Disappointed in his hopes, writes Gibbon, "he resumed to save his country without the consent of the emperor or the exarch. The sword of the enemy was suspended over Rome; it was averted by the mind eloquence, and seasonable gifts of the Pontiff, who commanded the respect of heretics and barbarians. The merits of Gregory were treated by the Byzantine court with reproach and insult, but in the attachment of a grateful people, he found the purest reward of a citizen and the best right of a sovereign."

THE POWER OF THE POPE IN PAST AGES.

There was scarcely a century in which the Pontiffs were not compelled to use their spiritual sword to correct the vices of princes and to recall them to the paths of justice and morality. Lothaire attests that the exercise of this authority was fruitful of blessings to society. "It is beyond question (he writes) that the Popes checked many disorders by their efforts in season and out of season, remonstrating with princes, as their authority enabled them to do, and threatening them with ecclesiastical censures." Philip I., of France, to the scandal of his subjects, dismissed his lawful wife and lived in a state of open adultery. The Pope published his censure with excommunication. The Prince acknowledged his fault and presented himself in bare feet before an assembly of Bishops asking to be reconciled to the Church and promising on the gospels to give scandal no more. Hallam remarks that "the submission of such a prince, not feebly superstitious, nor cased with solidium, but brave, firm, and victorious, is, perhaps, the proudest trophy in the scutcheon of Rome." (Middle Ages, chap. 7.) Another French sovereign, Philip Augustus, separated from his queen, Ingelburga, and took to himself another wife in her place. Ingelburga was a Danish princess and had no one to befriend her in France, but, though she was thus friendless in a foreign land, her voice could reach her spiritual father. Pierce, indeed, was the struggle made by the passions of the Prince, but at length the authority of the Pontiff triumphed, and after sixteen years she was recalled from banishment and restored to her rights. In Germany Henry IV., sought to enslave religion by intruding unworthy men into the sanctuary whilst he wantonly shed the blood of his subjects and laid an intolerable burden on the necks of a free people. He, too, felt the spiritual sword, and, acknowledging his fault, came as an humble suppliant to seek forgiveness at the throne. What did not Henry VIII., of England, promise if only it were permitted him to violate the rights of his Queen and be married to Anne Bolyn! Terrible was the ruin which his uncontrollable passion brought upon his kingdom; but, thanks to the Sovereign Pontiff, the cause of the weak and oppressed, the moral law, the rights of man and justice was avenged. In latter times Pius VII. hurled the thunders of the Church against another despot. The haughty conqueror asked, in derision, had the monarchs fallen from the hands of his soldiers; but, not long afterwards, in the Russian campaign, his frozen troops let fall their arms, and he who had so long been the terror of Europe was cast down from his pride of place and was led away to prison and to exile.

THE CHURCH THE PATRON OF ART.

The sublime perfection attained by the science and arts, is another trophy of religion. Under the patronage of the Church the noblest works of Grecian architecture, were rivaled and surpassed. So also the Gothic style was gradually arrayed in all its comeliness, and with those mediæval towers the emblem of enduring strength, the arches that lift up our thoughts to heaven, the pillars that appear to be the work not of Man, but of angels, attained its full development. What shall I say of the mosaics and the stained glass windows, and the illuminated MSS., all of which we owe to the patronage and protection of religion in those times, and which for richness of coloring, and delicacy of tracery, and accuracy of outline, and an incomparable minuteness and perfection of detail are the admiration and the wonder of those best skilled in art at the present day.

It was also religion that gave inspiration to the illustrious men who revived the art of painting in the Middle Ages, and it is to the munificence of the Sovereign Pontiffs we owe the noble progress which was made in that art before the close of the 16th century. It is in the churches of Italy and in the monasteries of the Franciscans and Dominicans, that we must seek for the masterpieces of Cimabue and Giotto, and Beato Angelico de Fiesole. The last named, the greatest painter of his age, would never engage at any work of art, till first he had knelt in prayer. So full of angelic sweetness were the countenances which he depicted that some one complained they were not like to the countenances which we see around us every day. He replied: I endeavor to paint nature not as it is, but as it should have been, were it not for our fallen state. John Forbes Robertson, the great of our English writers on the great painters of Christendom, thus pronounces on the merits of this illustrious disciple of Angelico, so tender in modeling and in line, so dignified and noble in the fall of every fold of their robes, and so divinely gentle in expression—in spite of all that art has since achieved, and the Raffaels were yet to come, she has wandered, still possess for us a wonderful charm; and when the modern artist would make palpable on the canvas the beauty of holiness, he but reproduces the religious type first created for him by Angelico, whose art remains for all time something ultimate and apart." (P. 36.)

Raphael, whom the world, by common consent, has declared to be the prince of painters, found in Julius II. and Leo X. generous patrons who knew how to appreciate his genius and to remunerate his labor. One of the noblest series of his works adorns the apartments now known as the Stanze of Raphael at the Vatican. Robertson thus describes them: "He filled the appointed spaces with representations of subjects secular and sacred, pagan and Christian, of an excellence which has never been equaled. These compositions form a magnificent epic, in which are strikingly interwoven the embodiments of human intellect, the doctrines of Catholic faith, and the incidents of ecclesiastical history, all as conducing to the triumph of the Christian Church." (P. 68.) The same writer adds that Raphael, during the last twelve years of his life spent in Rome, "revealed the grandeur of all the Italian schools of painting, and gave concrete reality to the aspirations and longings of his predecessors by carrying art to a height all but ultimate; and he made his own work not less the expression and measure of all the knowledge, philosophy, and poetry of the time, that remained to his genius, and vouchers for what we call the immortality of his fame. During these years he lived like a prince, and achieved the labors of a designed." (Ib.)

In our own days the German, Overbeck, the great reviver of Christian art, chose Rome for his residence. He was as yet a Protestant, when a prized order was given him to paint a Madonna. Again and again he applied himself to the task, but each attempt was made in vain. There was nothing in his Lutheran teaching that could inspire his genius for such a subject, and he turned earnestly to seek that inspiration in Catholic truth. This led him to the Church, and during the half century that he toiled with such success in the eternal city, he gathered around him a school of religious art whose works rival those of the early masters and have spread his name throughout the civilized world.

ALL EMINENT ARTISTS WERE CATHOLICS.

In sculpture, Canova, at the beginning of the present century, resored in Rome the great century of Phidias and Praxiteles. Byron used to say: "Italy has great names still; Europe, the world, has but one Canova." The Emperor Napoleon I. wished to detain this great sculptor in Paris. "I could not purchase my art except in Rome," was the reply. "But I will transfer to Paris," said the Emperor, "all the great models of antiquity that are in Rome." "Sire," replied Canova, "for my purpose you should transfer Rome itself."

The name of Michael Angelo Buonarotti also leads our thoughts to Rome. Though he lived in a time when Christian art had reached its zenith, it has been justly said of him that he stood almost unrivaled as a painter, sculptor, and architect. Of him Robertson writes: "He was the intensest and greatest artist Christendom has produced. In presence of his achievements the boldest genius of our day must stand humbled and abashed, and acknowledge that Michael Angelo is one of the few creative geniuses belonging to all time." (P. 66.) The fresco of the Last Judgment is his master-piece in painting. A Prelate of the Vatican household who whilst the work was in progress had given some annoyance to the painter, found himself unmistakably depicted in the lowest region of the lost spirits, and complained to his Holiness, asking to have this part, at least, of the painting altered or removed. The Pope replied: "If you had been put in Purgatory there would be some grounds for your asking me to help you, but as you have been put elsewhere I cannot interfere. Michael Angelo's gigantic work in sculpture representing Moses holding the Tables of the Law, is so perfect in every detail that it seems to live. It is said that the artist himself, when the work was complete, was so struck by its living attitude that he flung the chisel at it and cried out: "Speak, Moses, speak." St. Peter's church owes its present noble architecture to Michael Angelo. When his friends spoke to him of the beauty of the Pantheon, the most perfect architectural monument of Imperial Rome, he promised that he would place it as a trophy to crown the shrine of the Prince of the Apostles, and his prediction was verified in St. Peter's wondrous dome, of which Byron has so justly sung:

"Majesty,
Power, Glory, Strength, and Beauty, all are aisled
In this eternal ark of worship undefiled."

Even Voltaire could not restrain his meed of admiration for this noblest work of human genius and for the munificent patronage that enabled the artist to achieve it: "All nations (he says) acknowledge that nothing was ever comparable to the chief temple of modern Rome, the most beautiful, vast, and bold that ever existed in its universe. Ten Popes successively contributed, almost without any interruption, to the completion of the Basilica of St. Peter, and encouraged the arts generally. Nothing of the kind was seen throughout the rest of Europe at that period. The glory of genius belonged at that time to Italy alone, as it had been formerly distinctive of Greece." It is characteristic of Michael Angelo that he refused all remuneration for his labor at St. Peter's, regarding it as a service to the glory of God. This great monument that enshrines the relics of the Prince of the Apostles is as old as Protestantism. It has seen the thousand varying sports of that heresy arise, have their continuance for a day, and then die away; but itself remains unchanged. Ever firm as the rock, ever fresh in unchanging beauty, like the Catholic Church, of which it is the fit emblem, it will be as it was three hundred years ago, the admiration of Christendom.

HOW THE CHURCH FOSTERED LITERATURE.

As the fine arts grew to perfection under the fostering care of religion, so, too, was it with literature and every branch of human knowledge. It was during those ages of Faith that the languages of Europe were formed and attained full growth, the Italian with all its sweetness, the French with its elegance, the Spanish with its stern gravity, the German with its strength, the English with its force and richness. Universities were more numerous in those days than they are in the present age of enlightenment. Nor were they empty names. Ten thousand students flocked to the halls of Bologna, and eighteen thousand were enrolled on the register of Padua. As early as the beginning of the fourteenth century Pope Clement V. ordained that Greek, Hebrew, Arabic, and Chaldaic should be taught at Rome, at Paris, Oxford, Bologna, and Salamanca. The name of St. Thomas Aquinas suffices to recall to mind all the triumphs that were achieved in the paths of science in those days. The one great doctor has done more to illustrate the truths of religion, and to develop the study of philosophy, and to harmonize the services of human science with the teaching of divine faith, than all the united sciptures to literary fame, who have sprung up in the ranks of heresy during the past three centuries.

It is now universally admitted that Italy took the lead in the revival of learning. It guarded the lamp of knowledge from perishing even, and the other nations of Europe hast thither their steps to kindle their torch of science. In the words of an American Protestant writer, "Italy, in the Middle Ages, was like Mount Ararat in the deluge—the last reached by the flood and the first left. The remains of the Roman social world were either never directly disturbed in that country, or far later than anywhere else. . . . The great ascendency of the Papal power, and the influence of Italian genius on the literature and the fine arts of all countries, made Italy essentially the centre of light, the sovereign of thought, the Capital of Civilization." Macaulay's testimony is not less explicit: "During the gloomy and disastrous centuries which followed the downfall of the Roman Empire, Italy had preserved in a far greater degree than any other part of Western Europe, the traces of ancient civilization. The light which descended upon her was the night of an Arctic summer—the dawn began to reappear before the last reflection of the preceding sunset had faded from the horizon. Rome, protected by the sacred character of its Pontiffs, enjoyed, at least, comparative security and repose. Even in those regions where the sanguinary Lombards had fixed their monarchy, there was incomparably more of wealth, of information, of physical comfort, and of social order, than could be found in Gaul, Britain, or Germany. . . . Dante and Petrarch were the morning stars of modern literature. Throughout the brilliant era which ensued in Italy, the laurel crown from the hands of the Sovereign Pontiff was the highest reward and the most ambitious prize which men of genius sought, whose opinions was on the lips of Europe; and so many were the poets invited or appointed to the high post of Pontifical Secretary that for a time that office was regarded as a sort of appanage of the laurel wreath.

CATHOLIC COMPOSERS WHO HAVE ACHIEVED IMMORTALITY.

Nor were the claims of music forgotten. The Irish monk, Marcellus, kept alive the traditions in the monastery of St. Gall. His disciple, Totilo, a name which appears to me to faintly connote the Celtic Tadhal, was worthy of his master's fame. His character is sketched for us by the ancient chronicler of St. Gall's monastery, and you will probably say that it is worthy of the Irish monks at home in those days of old: "Totilo," he says, "was a good and useful man; as to his arms and all his limbs, such as Fabius teaches us to choose for a wrestler. He was eloquent, with a fine voice; he was skilful in carving and a painter. He was a musician, like his companions; but in all kinds of stringed and wind instruments he surpassed everybody, and in a place appointed by the abbot he taught the children of the nobility to play on stringed instruments. In building and other arts he was eminent. He was by nature, powerful, and ready at singing in either language; cheerful, whether in jest or in earnest. But with all this, what was of more consequence, he was most useful in the choir, and in secret given to tears, and very skilful in making verses and melodies." When Guido of Arezzo invented the gamut in the 11th century, the Pope summoned him to Rome that he might teach the clergy, and became himself his disciple. Thus in every branch of literature and the arts, Italy, under the patronage of the Pontiffs, took the lead.

"Italia! too, Italia! looking on thee, Full fraught on the soul the light of song!"

The front at which the poetic mind assembles the river of knowledge, quaffing there her fill. Flows from the eternal source of Rome's imperial hill."

THE CHURCH THE FRIEND OF PATRIOTISM.

Was the Church the enemy of patriotism? Let us ask Spain, so proud of her national traditions. She replies that it was the voice of the Church that kept alive the national spirit of her people throughout the six hundred years of Moslem oppression, and at length rallied together all her sons to cast off the hated yoke. France attests that it was at the altar the heroic Maid of Orleans plighted her vow to hurl back the invaders of her country, a vow which, with the blessing of the Church, she faithfully fulfilled. Switzerland will point to the little chapel of William Tell, on the banks of Lake Lucerne, as the cherished sanctuary whither pilgrims from her hills and valleys hastened year after year to renew in their hearts the holy fire of love of country. In Italy, the free action whose Pope thunder for their leader, and they decreed that the memorial of their triumph should bear his name. In England we see a stately Bishop leading on the barons of the kingdom to extort from the monarch the Magna Charta of the nation's freedom. And in this city of the Confederation, may I not add that when ruin seemed impending on the Confederate cause, the Bishops of Ireland assembled in this city, only a few paces from the spot where we are assembled, and there organized the form of government which gave consistency to the efforts of our people, and so long as union lasted assured victory to their arms and won the esteem of Christendom. Throughout the long period of unparalleled misery and persecution which fell upon our country under the penal laws, patriotism and religion were at home inseparably allied, while the Sovereign Pontiff, and he alone of the sovereigns of Europe, proved himself the faithful, disinterested, generous, and constant friend of Ireland.

[CONCLUDED NEXT WEEK.]

Irishmen Ashamed of their Race.

Hugh Hastings, the able editor of the N. Y. Commercial Advertiser, thus wrote last week:

"A correspondent of the Tribune, who signs himself 'A Scotch Irishman,' writes to correct a blunder made by the Tribune's London correspondence. 'A Scotch Irishman' is what might be called a half-breed, and a half-breed is generally looked upon as a inferior to a full thoroughbred. Why people whose fathers, grandfathers and great-grandfathers lie mouldering in the soil of Ireland should claim to be 'Scotch Irishmen' can only be accounted for by a ridiculous vanity or a weak head. Whoever heard of the Stuarts being designated as Scotch English?' or the George and Williams as 'Dutch English?' Why with as much propriety call Queen Victoria 'Dutch English' as to apply the same epithet to Chester A. Arthur, President of the Tribune. Has any one ever heard Lord Dufferin or Cornwallis Wallace, when speaking of their ancestors, have been in any country and ashamed to acknowledge he is of that country? Is not worthy of being a citizen of any country. The man who seeks to borrow a reputation from his ancestors, it is safe to say, has not much capital to trade on. Who is responsible for himself. George Washington 'an English America,' Benjamin Franklin 'an English American,' Commodore Barry, the first American Commodore, 'an Irish American?' Bah!"

Robert White, in his Sunday Democrat, has continued the topic:

That queer class called blockheads by some people, but dunces by the majority, indulge in the twaddle so sharply and justly criticised.

If any of the thick-pated creatures would read any history of Ireland they would find out the humbug called Scotch-Irish.

As Scotland was an Irish colony and intended to be for many favors, we do not understand why so much stress has been laid upon the word Scotch. Because a few thousand Scotch landlords were transplanted to Ulster in the early part of the Seventeenth Century, every fellow with an empty head and a Northern accent, calls himself a Scotch-Irishman. Why, ten times as many "emigrants" as "Scots" from the Plains planted in the north of Ireland, would not, could not, change the Hibernian character of the people of Ulster. The statistics corroborate our assertion.

We might call the Palatines of Tipperary the German-Irish, the descendants of Dublin and Cork the French-Irish, the residents of southeast Wexford the English-Irish, and the others the Saxon-Irish. Where would the Celtic Irish come in? Connaught, perhaps. The secret of all this nonsense is because Scotland is not Catholic; Ireland is. The struggles for freedom of the former are pure romance; they partook more of the character of jealous broils. It had a mountainous country; as Robertson well observes in his history of Scotland, which is always easy to defend. His words are, "the natures of their country was one cause of the power and independence of the Scottish nobility. Level and open countries are forward for servitude. The authority of the supreme magistrate reaches with ease to the most distant corners; and when nature has created no barrier, and affords no retreat the guilty and obnoxious are soon detected and punished. Mountains and fens and rivers set bounds to despotic power, and until these is the natural seat of freedom and independence. In such places did the Scottish nobility usually fix their residence." When calico writers attempt to depreciate the Irish and lend the Scotch, they are doing the work of prejudice, not that of truth or history. Both peoples have suffered from the iron hand of England, but Scotland gave England a king, and got unexampled rewards and position prosperity for the same, and her union with England taught both, secularly and religiously, and got for her pains hard blows from England, and neglect and deep, dirty prejudice from Scotland. It will be remembered that when liberal Englishmen became convinced that Catholic Emancipation was a necessity, in 1829, the most bitter enemies of the Emancipation of the Catholic Irish people were the Scotch. Conspicuous among others was the famous Sir Walter Scott, whom Daniel O'Connell snubbed in Kerry, when he sought to have a stag-hunt over her fertile fields.

Ireland stood by Edward Bruce when he invaded Kildare, in 1316; he was opposed to the English. When his brother, Robert, King of Scotland, came to his assistance, in September of that year, he was besieging the English in the citadel of Carrickfergus. How faithfully Ireland, Catholic Ireland, stood by all the Stuarts, need not be repeated. They were a mean, greedy, cowardly set, and were banished from both countries, as they deserved to be.

Affairs in Ireland.

MRS. TILLEY'S EXPERIENCE.

HER OBSERVATIONS OF MR. PARNELL AND HIS WORK.

"When He Returns from the Leadership the Present Movement Ceases to be a Great Reform, Collapses."

IRISH ORGANIZATIONS TO UNITE.

Mrs. M. L. Tilley, who has been so active in connection with the Land League work in Ireland, has just returned to New York, and is the guest of Mr. Myles O'Reilly, No. 5 Fifty-third Street, where she has been visited by Mrs. Parnell and other prominent persons.

Mrs. Tilley is a Washington lady, and was a warm, personal friend of the late lamented Miss Fanny Parnell, at whose request she visited Ireland for the purpose of assisting her American mind as to the truth of the statements made relative to the condition of Ireland and the National movement there.

Like Redpath, Healy, and others who want ever prejudiced against the people with their sympathies with the landless class, no sooner did she venture into the arbitrary and tyrannical manner in which the people were treated and their imputed position than her American heart revolted at the indignity, and she threw herself heart and soul into the movement. Her experiences also an Irishman, in the Admiral Graves, who received the thanks of Parliament as Nelson's second in command at Copenhagen, and his nephew, Sir George Mansfield, who shared with Clive, and Hastings, and Cooke, and so not unequal among the glory of founding the Indian Empire, and refused the Government knowledge in Ireland, was born in the county Antrim. The soldier and the statesman, who, after Pitt's death and the memorable treaty by which the Irish people rejected the Peninsular campaigns, brought over Napoleon, and who, in conjunction with Castlereagh, brought over Ireland the wonderful prestige with which she enjoyed for a generation, was an Irishman. Wellington and Cornbrough, were both Irishmen. Wellington's ancestors on both sides were Irish, and he himself had been settled in Ireland for over three hundred years. Cornbrough's ancestors, and he himself, were Irish. Wellington's ancestors on his mother's side, and his brother, Marquis Wellesley—both of whom rendered their way up from poverty and obscurity to the position of Governor-Generals India has ever had, and Governor-General of Ireland, and who, in regard to her, was, on an illustrious part in English politics, Prime Minister, Pitt, who did not need to speak, nor of Shandon; but it is enough to say that Shandon, the Irish Parliament, was the son and grandson of an Irish gentleman, his father having settled in Longford, where, in the county Longford, he was a family quarrel. General Rowlan Chesney, the engineer of the Euphrates Valley, was an Irishman of the county Down, where his barefly lies and his monument is. The late Col. Chesney, the well-known writer on military subjects, was also born. Sir Henry Lawrence, who defended Lucknow during the Sepoy war, was an Irishman, and the son of an Irish Colonel; and Sydney Cotton Hutchins, who fell at Delhi, who first stemmed the tide of insurrection pending the arrival of reinforcements from England, and whose death was pronounced at that time "a national misfortune," was the son of a Dublin doctor.

Gen. Pakenham, who commanded at New Orleans and fell there, was an Irishman; Gen. De Lacy Evans, who was from a leg had to bear the brunt of the attack at Inkerman, after having been wounded at New Orleans, and serving on Wellington's staff at Waterloo, and who sat thirty years in the House of Commons, was a Limerick man also. Sir Garnet Wolsley, the rising General of the British service, who has just been appointed Governor of Cyprus, is also an Irishman, belonging to a family long settled in Wexford. Of no more, Irishmen, Indian officers adorned by Mr. Kaye for one of his volumes of biography, there—Polehinger, Lawrence, and Nicholson—were Irishmen, one from Sligo, and only three Irish. Captain Crozier, the engineer of Sir John Franklin's expedition, was an Irishman also; and so was the other distinguished explorer, Sir Robert McClure. Lord Mayo, who was Governor-General of India for two years prior to his assassination in 1872, and filled the place in a way which excited expectations such as we think none of his predecessors called out, was an Irishman of the old Anglo-Irish family of Burke. Lord Dufferin, who has just left the Government of Canada, and has given proof from both there and as British Commissioner in the reorganization of Syria in 1860, of high administrative ability, is an Irishman and Sheridan's great grandson.

It is not many years since Irs of the twelve English Judges were men of Irish birth, and the present Lord Chancellor, Lord Cairns, is a native of Belfast, and universally acknowledged to be one of the two or three ablest men who have filled this position, and who, under a order of rare power, though of the severer sort.

The organizer of the Irish constabulary, the best body of gendarmerie in existence and the first really efficient police force which has been seen in Great Britain—"just the kind of man," Sir Charles Napier said, "needed to govern Ireland"—Sir Richard Mayne, was an Irishman; so, let us add, was Sir Richard Mayne, who organized the London Metropolitan Police, which has since furnished the model of city police all over the Anglo-Saxon (English-speaking) world. Captain Crofton is still living, the author of the Irish system of prison discipline, which has been so successful and so celebrated.—Dublin Nation.

—The news from Ireland this week is of a most gloomy character. Eviction and famine are both engaged in another campaign of extermination in that unhappy isle.

Famous Irishmen in the British Service.

Sir Eyre Coote, whom Macaulay justly styles "one of the most distinguished officers of his time," conquered Pondicherry, the foundation of the British Empire in India, who with the assistance of Clive to fight in the famous council of war which decided that battle of Plassey, who had the French at Wandiwash, and gave the Carnatic to England, was the son of a Limerick gentleman. Sir Philip Francis, who is certainly the author of "Junius' Letters," written in the Junius style, who was member of the council, of whom Warren Hastings was Governor-General, and who fought a duel with minister. Sir Wm. Pasmer, who was Sir George Rooke's best officer in the capture of Gibraltar, was a Cork man. Mahoney, who made the splendid but unsuccessful defense of Montevideo against Rhadelan, and whom Admiral Byng was spite of all his rectitude, nearly also a martyr of Limerick. Byron Mooney, one of Wolfe's ablest lieutenants, was also an Irishman. So was Admiral Graves, who received the thanks of Parliament as Nelson's second in command at Copenhagen, and his nephew, Sir George Mansfield, who shared with Clive, and Hastings, and Cooke, and so not unequal among the glory of founding the Indian Empire, and refused the Government knowledge in Ireland, was born in the county Antrim. The soldier and the statesman, who, after Pitt's death and the memorable treaty by which the Irish people rejected the Peninsular campaigns, brought over Napoleon, and who, in conjunction with Castlereagh, brought over Ireland the wonderful prestige with which she enjoyed for a generation, was an Irishman. Wellington and Cornbrough, were both Irishmen. Wellington's ancestors on both sides were Irish, and he himself had been settled in Ireland for over three hundred years. Cornbrough's ancestors, and he himself, were Irish. Wellington's ancestors on his mother's side, and his brother, Marquis Wellesley—both of whom rendered their way up from poverty and obscurity to the position of Governor-Generals India has ever had, and Governor-General of Ireland, and who, in regard to her, was, on an illustrious part in English politics, Prime Minister, Pitt, who did not need to speak, nor of Shandon; but it is enough to say that Shandon, the Irish Parliament, was the son and grandson of an Irish gentleman, his father having settled in Longford, where, in the county Longford, he was a family quarrel. General Rowlan Chesney, the engineer of the Euphrates Valley, was an Irishman of the county Down, where his barefly lies and his monument is. The late Col. Chesney, the well-known writer on military subjects, was also born. Sir Henry Lawrence, who defended Lucknow during the Sepoy war, was an Irishman, and the son of an Irish Colonel; and Sydney Cotton Hutchins, who fell at Delhi, who first stemmed the tide of insurrection pending the arrival of reinforcements from England, and whose death was pronounced at that time "a national misfortune," was the son of a Dublin doctor.

Gen. Pakenham, who commanded at New Orleans and fell there, was an Irishman; Gen. De Lacy Evans, who was from a leg had to bear the brunt of the attack at Inkerman, after having been wounded at New Orleans, and serving on Wellington's staff at Waterloo, and who sat thirty years in the House of Commons, was a Limerick man also. Sir Garnet Wolsley, the rising General of the British service, who has just been appointed Governor of Cyprus, is also an Irishman, belonging to a family long settled in Wexford. Of no more, Irishmen, Indian officers adorned by Mr. Kaye for one of his volumes of biography, there—Polehinger, Lawrence, and Nicholson—were Irishmen, one from Sligo, and only three Irish. Captain Crozier, the engineer of Sir John Franklin's expedition, was an Irishman also; and so was the other distinguished explorer, Sir Robert McClure. Lord Mayo, who was Governor-General of India for two years prior to his assassination in 1872, and filled the place in a way which excited expectations such as we think none of his predecessors called out, was an Irishman of the old Anglo-Irish family of Burke. Lord Dufferin, who has just left the Government of Canada, and has given proof from both there and as British Commissioner in the reorganization of Syria in 1860, of high administrative ability, is an Irishman and Sheridan's great grandson.

It is not many years since Irs of the twelve English Judges were men of Irish birth, and the present Lord Chancellor, Lord Cairns, is a native of Belfast, and universally acknowledged to be one of the two or three ablest men who have filled this position, and who, under a order of rare power, though of the severer sort.

The organizer of the Irish constabulary, the best body of gendarmerie in existence and the first really efficient police force which has been seen in Great Britain—"just the kind of man," Sir Charles Napier said, "needed to govern Ireland"—Sir Richard Mayne, was an Irishman; so, let us add, was Sir Richard Mayne, who organized the London Metropolitan Police, which has since furnished the model of city police all over the Anglo-Saxon (English-speaking) world. Captain Crofton is still living, the author of the Irish system of prison discipline, which has been so successful and so celebrated.—Dublin Nation.

—The news from Ireland this week is of a most gloomy character. Eviction and famine are both engaged in another campaign of extermination in that unhappy isle.

Poetry.

FOR "THE LAST TIME."

It is all over, and the lights are out,
The Minstrel has ceased his mournful song,
And the dear Muse, like shadows, one by one,
Have left the church, and we are alone,
My God and I: my God, whose will is done.

Whose will is done. So be it everyone,
But we are sorry, and hate to say good bye
Upon this corpse, that was so dear to you and me,
This last poor "human counsel-giver" that doth die
So.
With white death lips sealed for eternity!

Fill in the grave, and heap the mound up high,
It must not "the spirit" be said, "I am dead"
We have done with it, my soul and I, to-day!
We have sinned, we have wrested it forth and slay,
And it has failed us. Let us kneel and pray.

Pray in the silence, by this new made grave,
Pray that God only from benedicts may be
Our refuge in the storm, that none but His May ever comfort us. And O, my soul, that we May like the Blest that wounds on us remember kindly.

Yet we may weep, and mourn—that is no sin,
We cannot help it—God will not deny
To this, our last poor tribute. Like a Library
Each side tear plants, "So beautiful to me."
It is the last. "Dust thou!" "Dust unto dust!"

It is all over, and the lights are out,
The Minstrel closed—the Muse is mute,
And we go out into the empty world to trend
New paths, and leave here behind, one to lie
Another day! "Peace, peace, be with thee!"

—J. E. U. HEALE.

—Pilot.

THE FACE IN THE MIRROR.

(The incident embodied in the following lines is said to have led to the religious conversion of one of the best known and most popular actors of the theatre of the Heart of Jesus in France.)

The brilliant hall is crowd,
The guests and mistresses gossiping
While, hot and tired, I take my place
The maddest attack about.

But a sudden pause of mirth
Recognition of the lightly
Disembodied in the light,
Of the face of a Prince
The lovely face from child

She stands fresh come falling
From good convent-school
With downcast eyes resulting
The dance and bashful gaze.

She drives the sight-lamp nearer,
Little blushes her proud forehead,
And in the silent pause,
Begins to view her chance.

O mirror, mirror, hast thou
Who not, under one as thou?
Her eyes crying, mirror, thou
Bright eyes, and many lake!

Ah, no! the glass before her
Gives back, of with tears,
And from its depths (O horror!)
A blackened face appears

A Face divinely lovely,
Where sorrow's power adorns
Not rich with gilded splendor,
But crowning with its crown

The temples brushed and bleeding,
The cold and hollow eyes,
The white lips, and the cheeks
Before her, shuddering sighs!

"Oh! pardon, Jesu, pardon!"
Her soul cries out in pain
"I had sought to glorious
Thy sacred face in vain!

"O bleeding Face! did thou
Shall with of with be shown
Henceforth my heart, cruel Saviour,
Thy Face! I pledge Thee now!"

R. C. D., in the Messenger of the Sacred Heart.

MARRIAGES AMONG THE BIRDS.

A New London justice of the peace is reported to have said to the parties to a marriage performed by him: "Be happy while you may, for you will be married a long time."

Birds are generally considered the unmated most reliable but entirely without ceremonies. Birds, it is true, do not marry for life, but for a period of advent period, 10 years. E. R. Brown who has made a study of the subject, says: "The male bird sings merrily while courting, and keeps up his cheerful strain for a time after the nest is built and the eggs are laid, but the mother bird, with the whole burden of the family on her shoulders, is left to do the work alone. The male bird does not even feed the mother bird while she is sitting, but he does do something else, he sings. Mr. Brown says that the mother bird, when the young are hatched, sometimes leaves the nest for a few minutes to stretch and take a little food, and the male bird, when he sees his opportunity, flies to the nest and sings, and continues to sing until the mother bird returns, when he quietly disappears. The young birds are hatched, and the male bird sings and sings, and when the young birds are able to fly, the male bird sings and sings, and when the young birds are able to sing, the male bird sings and sings, and when the young birds are able to marry, the male bird sings and sings, and when the young birds are able to die

THE MONITOR.

TWENTY-SIXTH YEAR OF PUBLICATION.

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 3, 1883.

to the New Year's Greeting of St. Francis de Sales.

The wisest Catholic in the world is he who hearkens to the voice of God as it is demonstrated in the actions and writings of His saints, and at this time of the year the best way to begin the New Year is to lay before our readers a few extracts, appropriate to the season, from the writings of that great Doctor of the Church—St. Francis de Sales. —In the little work which the Benziger bros. published, and which we noticed a few weeks since, St. Francis then speculates upon the footsteps of time:

"O God! the years so swiftly pass away, one follows another so imperceptibly, and in dividing their duration they divide our mortal life, and in finishing they end our days. Months are reduced to weeks, and these to moment days, which glide into fleeting hours, made up of tiny minutes. These are all we possess, and we enjoy them only in proportion as they do and make our life parcels. This, however, should make us humble, since in this world of misery we can have no greater consolation than the vanishing of our miseries away. Every day, and hour, and minute, brings us nearer the promised reward of eternity, which awaits us in the fulness of time; and yet, though our soul aspires by continual sighs to be released by nature."

St Francis de Sales was greatly devoted to the Sacred Heart of Jesus, and he then beautifully sets forth the Divine influence of that heavenly devotion upon humble Catholic souls:

"I cannot suffer the first month of this bright new year to pass without admiring, and recommending to your devotion my heart home to yours, in which I never cease to wish every blessing; but I also recommend to you the sacred heart. Have a care to make it more and more agreeable to Jesus Christ, and pray that this year may be more fruitful than the preceding in the growth and increase of virtue. Let great fix our heart on God and never withdraw it. Are we not quite happy to be able to centre once in the Sacred Heart of Jesus, who is one with the Divinity? At least, I wish that Adorable Heart may be our home, and our only challenge to the Heart of Our Lord, and since the charity of this Divine Heart is our treasure and humility, it is our duty to implant firmly in our hearts the humble Jesus and God-whom virtues which shine in the sacred person, and which He has particularly recorded in his mystery, as if by them our hearts would be especially consecrated to His service. 'Learn of me, saith He, for I am meek and humble of heart.'"

"If you think of the Sacred Heart, it will most certainly attract you; it is so sweet, so humble, so full of remedies to unworthy creatures, yet ever ready to have them their mercy; so kind to the unfortunate, so good to the poor, so meek to the humble, so like Apostle St. Paul, wishing to make us conversing in the manner the love of our Lord for this virtue, says, 'He has humbled Himself even unto the death of the cross, which was the most abject and ignominious form of execution for malefactors.'

"At the Nativity, Jesus presents to you above all, the position of holy meekness and humility, and at the Passion, He gives you the example of patience, and at the Last Supper, He gives you the Sacrament of Love, and at the Ascension, He gives you the Sacrament of Hope, and at the Sacrament of the Altar, He gives you the Sacrament of Charity, which is the union of our souls with God, which is the union of our souls with God, which is the union of our souls with God

THE MONITOR.
TWENTY-SIXTH YEAR OF PUBLICATION.
WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 1, 1913.

to the New Year's Greeting of St. Francis de Sales.

The wheel Catholic in the world is to be also beneficent to the voice of God as it is demonstrated in the notices and writings of His saints, and at this time we think the best way to begin the New Year is to lay before our readers a few extracts, appropriate to the season, from the writings of that great Doctor of the Church—St. Francis de Sales.

—In the little work which the Bandgem has published, and which we noticed a few weeks since, St. Francis thus speculates upon the fleetness of time:

"O God! the years so swiftly pass away, one follows another so imperceptibly! and in dividing their duration they divide our mortal life, and in finishing they end our days. Months are reduced to weeks, and then to nominal days, which glide into fleeting hours made up of tiny minutes. These are all we possess, and we enjoy these only in proportion as they die and make our lives perished. This, however, should make us the happier, since in this world of misery we can have no greater consolation than the assurance that these pass away, every day, and hour, and minute, brings us nearer to the end of our days of misery, which awaits us in the Infinite of God's mercy, and wherein our souls will be at rest by continual thoughts suggested by nature."

St. Francis de Sales was greatly devoted to the Sacred Heart of Jesus, and he then beautifully cute forth the Divine influence of that heavenly devotion upon humble Catholic souls:

"I cannot suffer the first month of this bright new year to pass without adoring, and with some degree of the perfect devotion my heart bears to yours, for which I never cease to offer every blessing; but I also recommend to you your own heart, that it may be made to it more and more approachable. In the year, I pray, may you be more fruitful than the preceding in the growth and increase of virtue. We must give our heart as God and never withdraw it. Are we not happy to be able to centre our love in the Sacred Heart of Jesus which is one with the Divinity? At least, I wish that Adoremus to desire that it does not worship the Virgin Mary nor accept even the doctrine of her Immaculate Conception, as, if it did, the paper would be immediately suppressed by the Methodist brethren and the editor excommunicated for his Popish principles! Methodism allows no such latitude in its version; it boasts of the freedom of private judgment, but that judgment must be weighed according to Wesleyan weights and measured by the modern tape-line of Methodism. Yet, notwithstanding the immense erudition displayed by the Jesuits in refusing to believe Catholic dogma concerning the Mother of God, we feel convinced by the reflection that all the learned saints that ever won a crown of glory in Heaven, believed in giving Apostolic worship to the Blessed Virgin, and they could not all deceived her to be born without sin, which means the highest kind of worship, the most supreme adoration, and thus the Adoremus may learn that Catholic worship has due degrees, viz.: dulia, the veneration of the saints; hyperdulia, the superior veneration of the Blessed Virgin; and latria, the adoration of God alone.

Having thus adorned our erring brother a little regarding the difference between adoration, worship, and veneration, let us assure him that we pray seriously when he says that "Mary cannot help us, no more than Salome or Phoebe can." Mary, our Methodist brother should remember, is the Mother of God, a dignity which alone her infinitely beyond either of the Scripture characters mentioned, and immeasurably beyond all the mortals that ever lived or all the saints in heaven, in her influence with her Divine Son. She is called by the Church of God by the title of "Virgin most Powerful," "Gate of Heaven," "Queen of Angels," "Help of Christians, "Queen of all Saints," "Queen Conceived without Original Sin," and similar terms of exalted celestial dignity, and the Adoremus may rest assured that Rome is wiser than any reproaches, that the saints of God know more than sectarian sinners, and that the power of Mary will continue to manifest itself long after Methodism has become lost in the obscurity of its decline, and when the very meaning of the term will have become obliterated from the tablets of the memory of man!

Dr. Stebbins on "Religion and Religion."

In the Christmas number of the Sacramento Bee we find a communication from Dr. Stebbins—a Unitarian minister of this city—in which he sets forth the familiar Protestant plea that all religions are equally good, a fallacy that is so transparent as to bear its own refutation upon its very surface—from the very fact that such a proposition places God and the devil, true and error, right and wrong, justice and injustice—upon the same plane, and makes a mockery of morals and a sham of all the divine injunctions of our Blessed Redeemer.

If all religions are equally good, why was God so minute in His commands concerning the worship of Himself? Why was it that God punished so many nations who committed idolatry under the old law? Dr. Stebbins must admit that there was only one true religion prior to the birth of Christ, and that was the Jewish religion, and in the face of God changed that religion into the Christian religion, so there is now only one true Church—and that is the Catholic.

It will not do for Dr. Stebbins to say that religion is one, although religions are many, because, in order to come within the unbroken circle of Divine Truth, they each and all must conform to that religion founded and preached by our Divine Saviour, promulgated all over the world by the Apostles, and continuously co-existent with the Catholic Church. Does Unitarianism agree with Methodism? Do the Jumpers agree with the Quakers? Do any two of the jarring sectarian sects agree with each other? Yet, amidst all this Babel of error, Brother Stebbins—like the stage-father in a melodrama—would hold his paternal paws over the heads of these disobedient sects and says with a sardonic grin: "Bless you, my children, you are all saved on the gospel goose!"

To make such a declamation as that evamped by Dr. Stebbins argues that Christ never made a revelation to mankind of the rules which the faith and hope necessary to salvation. If all religions are equally good, why did Christ teach the truth Himself and ordain His Apostles to "teach all nations?" Why did Christ establish His Church and promise to be with her ever to the end of the world, to guide her with the spirit of truth—if every sanctimonious abomination who drops the hat and picks up the Bible is going into the religion-making business on his own book? Was it to prove that one religion is as good as another that the martyrs died? They might have saved their lives—every one of them—if they had so declared—but, thank God! there was one a Stebbins among the whole host of them! Why is it that Catholics have borne persecution for their religion, throughout all lands and all ages, if they imagined that one religion was just as good as another? But these heroic souls knew that their religion was heavenborn, hence they suffered persecution for justice sake, just as the Son of God did in order to establish the Catholic Church.

For some few points it will be easily apparent to our readers that Dr. Stebbins had no conception of the huge humbug he revealed when he published his creed in the Bee. Before doing so he should have asked the Methodist preacher if Mormonism was so good as Methodism! He should have asked the Episcopal Bishop if Congregationalism was as good as Episcopalianism! He should have asked those Protestants who believe in the Holy Trinity if the Unitarians are as much Christian as Mahomet is apart from them in this important doctrine! And, in spirit, we can fancy how the Methodism's nose would go up as his outraged feeling arose against such an insulting proposition. How the Episcopalian Bishop would have gathered up his shirts and "scooted" out of Dr. Stebbins' sight! In fine, the Doctor would soon discover that there is a vast difference between saying a thing yourself and having other people credit as true the same thing on the authority of a preacher without a profession of faith.

—The new combination letter-sheet and envelope, and folding postal card, which have been authorized by the Government, will probably be in circulation in January. The inventor of the combination has received an order for 20,000,000 of them; the price being $60,000. The letter-sheet is about the size of a modern letter paper. When written upon it is folded twice from the bottom and once from the right hand side, which makes it the size of an ordinary envelope. The folding postal card is half the size of the letter-sheet and has only a gummed flap at the top.

Protestant Regard for the Blessed Virgin.

The lively devotion which Catholics pretend to bestow towards Blessed Virgin has a powerful influence for good upon many non-Catholics. Even in religion people are more or less influenced by example, and this it comes about that non-Catholics have been induced with at least a portion of that love which Catholics give to the Mother of God.

It is not so many years ago since one of the tots of a true Presbyterian was the student to which he would proceed in reviling the holy name of Mary; now, however, all is changed, as we find hundreds of Protestant preachers who not only refuse to revile the name of the Blessed Virgin, but who actually sound her praises even in their sermons. This is notably the case in a volume of sermons recently issued in England by Rev. Steward D. Hamilton, B. A., who openly recommends devotion to the Blessed Virgin to his Anglican listeners: "It was intended that all generations should call her blessed; and yes are among those who know how grievously the generations of English men that have lived since the Reformation have suffered this want (of reverence to her."

It is not in England alone, however, that devotion to the Blessed Virgin is taking deep root in non-Catholic hearts, as we find by no less a paper than the Pittsburg Catholic Advocate, of this city, the organ of the Methodist fraternity. Alluding to Mrs. Brownlow's poem, entitled, "The Virgin Mary to the Child Jesus," which the Advocate published, that paper makes the following commentaries thereon: "We honor and love the Mother of our Lord. Her was highly honored and 'most blessed' among women. We do not worship the Virgin Mary, nor accept even the doctrine of her Immaculate Conception. * * * Blessed art thou, O woman, with all the grace, beauty, and purity of the very best types of Hebrew character. Blessed art thou, O woman, among ye, but not the Son of man." * * * *

We congratulate the Advocate upon its Catholic spirit when it has the courage to declare that it honor and love the Mother of our Lord. It is unless, however, for the Advocate to declare that it does not worship the Virgin Mary nor accept even the doctrine of her Immaculate Conception, as, if it did, the paper would be immediately suppressed by the Methodist brethren and the editor excommunicated for his Popish principles! Methodism allows no such latitude in its version; it boasts of the freedom of private judgment, but that judgment must be weighed according to Wesleyan weights and measured by the modern tape-line of Methodism. Yet, notwithstanding the immense erudition displayed by the Jesuits in refusing to believe Catholic dogma concerning the Mother of God, we feel convinced by the reflection that all the learned saints that ever won a crown of glory in Heaven, believed in giving Apostolic worship to the Blessed Virgin, and they could not all deceived her to be born without sin, which means the highest kind of worship, the most supreme adoration, and thus the Adoremus may learn that Catholic worship has due degrees, viz.: dulia, the veneration of the saints; hyperdulia, the superior veneration of the Blessed Virgin; and latria, the adoration of God alone.

Having thus adorned our erring brother a little regarding the difference between adoration, worship, and veneration, let us assure him that we pray seriously when he says that "Mary cannot help us, no more than Salome or Phoebe can." Mary, our Methodist brother should remember, is the Mother of God, a dignity which alone her infinitely beyond either of the Scripture characters mentioned, and immeasurably beyond all the mortals that ever lived or all the saints in heaven, in her influence with her Divine Son. She is called by the Church of God by the titles of "Virgin most Powerful," "Gate of Heaven," "Help of Christians, "Queen of all Saints," "Queen Conceived without Original Sin," and similar terms of exalted celestial dignity, and the Adoremus may rest assured that Rome is wiser than any reproaches, that the saints of God know more than sectarian sinners, and that the power of Mary will continue to manifest itself long after Methodism has become lost in the obscurity of its decline, and when the very meaning of the term will have become obliterated from the tablets of the memory of man!

Death of E. Gambetta.

The expiring hours of the past year were made memorable by the death of M. Gambetta, whose position in the French crusade against the Catholic Church has given him world-wide notoriety. And what a sad death was his! His last words—wrung from his burning consciences by the scenes of despair—are the living witness of the woe which enshrouded him as his vision was turned from his past career to the eternity of woe which was about to overwhelm his soul.

"Je suis perdu; il est inutile de dissimuler, mes l'on tout souffre que ce sera une deliverance."

"I am lost!" said this crusader of the Church in France. "It is," he added, "useless to dissimulate, but I have suffered so much that death will be a deliverance!" What a lesson for mankind do not these words of Gambetta, the great idol of French Jacobins, convey! And what a sad commentary upon a life spent in the fruitless folly of endeavoring to crush out Christianity from the hearts of the Catholic people of France. Jansenism tried to sever the sensitive mantle of the Church of Christ by establishing a National Church in France, but it failed. Jacobonism, in later years, tried long after Methodism has become lost in the obscurity of its decline, and when the very meaning of the term will have become obliterated from the tablets of the memory of man!

A Physician Marries a Nun.

VIENNA (N. Y.), December 29.—There is great excitement here over the secret marriage of Dr. Hugo Ehrlich, a well-known practising physician, and Sister Mary Pauline, a Roman Catholic convent of which Ehrlich is leaked out today. The doctor is a determined foe of Jesuits, and he proposed to keep his matrimonial rights in spite of the Church. Proofs are all ready to be taken with a grain of salt, and we copy it only for the purpose of saying that the Catholic Church never interferes with the deluded doctor in any "amusement" he may find in making himself possessed of in the premises. He is "determination," therefore, is all moonshine, both himself and his merciless companion will be allowed to stab or swim, survive or perish, according as they may elect themselves. But we can anticipate the fearful remorse of a conscience which will gnaw into the very vitals of the poor unfortunate Religious as the God of Heaven dies and he hears the soul-racking question: "Sister Mary Paul, why hast thou forsaken Me?"

Serious Religious Disturbances in Portugal.

The Irish Dominican Nuns of Lisbon have left the country for the capital for protection of her Majesty's Government against the threatened interference by the mob in a serious story. Some years ago a cockney nun of the Portuguese Government and the Holy See over the appointment of a successor to a deceased bishop. The King of Portugal had been nominated to succeed the whom Lisbon sympathizes made him obnoxious to the Vatican, which refused to ratify his appointment. The Portuguese Government thereupon refused to name any other candidate, and the see has never been filled up since. Not in the interval four other sees fell vacant. The King nominated in each case, and the nomination in each case being rejected by the Pope, the sees remained without a bishop. The other day the Papal Nuncio at Lisbon made a fresh effort to bring about a settlement. The Nuncio arrived at the office of the Minister of Crime and Justice, was admitted into the presence of the Minister of the door, and on entering he was received by the Minister standing, and with a cigar in his mouth. The question of the nuns was bitterness since that the Government talk of expelling the Jesuits, and that the sympathies of Paris. There are at Lisbon an English college for the education of clerical students, and two convents inhabited by English Dominican nuns. Both these establishments are under the protection of England, and these conducting them have, in face of the threatened expulsion, asked the Portuguese Government, appealed to the English representative. The British flag has been hoisted on each of the convents, and the British educational establishments. It is concluded that the Portuguese Government authorities may do with the religious orders what they please, but Portugal will not attempt to outrage the sanctity of the British flag.

Manuel Kipostric, a prominent citizen of Philadelphia, whose death occurred recently at that city, had the importance of being received face of Christ on his death-bed. He had been Roman Catholic from birth, but for many years had fallen into the true whatever. All his Pictures (including that of a first wife who was a Baptist) were banished from the Church, and remained preaching Catholicism. May he rest in peace!

ESSAYS ON THE PHILOSOPHY OF RELIGION.

Infallibility of the Pope.

The superiority of the Catholic Church over the Protestant sects appears clearly in the doctrine of the infallibility of the Pope. The solemn decree may be prepared to a human person possessing a soul. The soul is the Pope, and body the collective organization. As he has life per se, so the Pope is infallible, and as the body has no life of itself, only partakes in the life of the soul by union with the latter, so the body of the apostate has infallibility only inasmuch as united to the Pope, and thus partake his infallibility. Of course the Pope and apostate might be separated, but, a matter of fact, they never will, because it represent in their union the living person Jesus Christ, immortal and unchangeable. Taking the teaching of the Pope and Bishops as a merely human teaching, have not the highest human evidence? We hold the requisites for authoritative teaching—knowledge, probity, and the consent men who differ in language, habits thought, and natural characteristics—the fallibility of a certain kind is not unfamiliar to us. There is, for instance, the infallibility of the senses. When I see a man, is not infallibly certain that I see him? I not physically impossible for me not to see him? There is, then, an infallibility which every one can understand. But Protestants hold that the Bible is the rule of faith! Yet, then, they can believe that a book is infallible, they should experience little difficulty in believing a man to be infallible. Becomes strange to say, that while they withhold infallibility from the Pope, they claim it for themselves individually. Now, common-sense teaches men to make the majority, not the minority, the guide. But the Protestant may reply that the majority of those who church and set himself, a solitary individual, above all the divines of his denomination. It is a funny way of doing things. Apostolic Church, with the eminent men of France. He was, at best, only a successful, unscrupulous demagogue, and his insatiably enormous ambition only to the fervid style of declamation which he used when appealing to the passions of the worst elements of the French Communistic classes. As a wire-puller, in the wildest sense of that peculiar political phrase, Gambetta was a success, but his attempts at statesmanship were remarkably only for their intense anti-Christian bearing, and served only to show the worst characteristics of their author. His idol was Jacobinism, and he canonized Danton as the great model, are sports of atheism, but he lived long enough to learn—the many French atheists who have blasphemed before him—that he was a mere puppet in the hands of a power unknown to God, and that, as M. Jules Simon said, when pleading for Christianity against Gambetta's condemnation of it, God could use first duty that of teaching children about God.

Gambetta lived without God, and he died without an aspiration of hope in a happy hereafter. His own verdict upon his life was that "failure" had stamped upon its every feature. He proved in his own person, that the non-belief which brutalizes the pure principles of our nature is the worst for that man and that the belief of the dying, because it leaves him a wreck upon the rock of time, the billows overshoot him, the winds shriek through his frightened senses—yet, amidst the fury of the demons which horror around hungry for his soul, he sees nothing but the soothing flames of fire into which his soul must dart for eternal torment! Such in the end of life to the man without God, and such was the end picture painted upon the panorama of his life by the last words of the dying Gambetta.

A Beautiful Incident in New York.

The last number of Leslie's Pictorial contains an engraving which fully illustrates the following incident in New York life:

"The grief of the ambulance man at the sudden death of the many sounds which go to make up the busy hum of a city street. It takes the form of disaster in some unfortunate human being, and as the sympathy heaps on its way, everybody speculates who may be the victim, and how serious his hurt. Not a day passes but one or another of the New York hospitals is not called upon to send out its ambulance, which returns with the sufferer by some one of the countless accidents which are constantly occurring. The usual swift progress of the vehicle is sometimes interrupted as it passes the residence of a priest, to secure the services of the Church for an occupant who, it is feared, may not live to reach the hospital. This happened not long ago as a poor Italian, named Pallizzi, was being taken to St. Vincent's Hospital. When the ambulance came to the priest's house adjoining St. Joseph's church, the surgeon appeared at the top the steps. The door opened and Fathers Salters and Long came down. Father Long seized the unfortunate man's hand in a cordial way, and, as he did so, the Italian's face lighted up. A crowd soon gathered, and many peeping in the sidewalk, while men, bareheaded, crowd themselves. This lasted ten minutes, and then the ambulance drove on to the hospital, where the Italian died not long after."

It is thus that in the Catholic Church alone the poor have the consolation of our holy religion administered to them at all hours and under all circumstances. Catholic priests do not wait for the sufferer to call, what scenes of suffering or misery they witness; their duty is to succor from sin the suffering, the afflicted, and the dying; and in doing this they truly prove themselves shepherds of the one, true fold of Christ.

—The Rev. Fairway Gratz, O. S. F., pastor of St. Francis' Church, West Thirty-first street, New York, died on the 19th ult., in the 62nd year of his age. The revered gentleman was born in Rimsdall, Germany, on Feb. 17, 1850.

MONITOR MENTION.

For his services in behalf of religious music, chairman of the United States, President, barber, instructor and director of the choir society, has been made a knight of the of St. Gregory the Great.

The Pictures taken at the Imperial, 724 Market street.

Dr. W. E. Price, Dentist, No. 917 Market st. between Fifth and Sixth, San Francisco. Crown, $3 unless, $20 to $25. Tooth-ache painless. Tooth, 17 Tuck.

Teeth extracted painlessly without pain. Dentists, 1004 Market street, cor. Sixth.

Hermann's Remin Salve is an invaluable drug for inflamed and sore eyes. Price 25c.

Dr. C. W. Boyd, dentist, removed to S. E. Sixth and Howard streets.

Removed—Kimball Piano, M. B. to 840 Market street, opposite the Baldwin.

Carpet-beating and whitening, 333 Tyler, near Larkin, 2124 and Telegraph Hill, Jones, 2,196. Cushion Hem.

3,000 vols. old and new books, stationery Book and News Stand, S. W. cor. Sutter Kearny. JOHN N. BIRLEN.

New old stove, granite finish, John F. Myers, fourth street, and 809 Market street.

The cheapest house in the city for ladies' children's underwear is at I. Magnin's, 116 Grant street. Call and see.

Dr. Sterman has removed to 841 Market st., where he treats all diseases; lost manhood a specialty. Female Complaints and Cancer.

New in our time, Lamb Chops for Ladies, Kid Button Boots, at $2.50. French Kid $3.50. 250 Sixth street, corner Howard.

Dr. John Oppeler's Pile Ointment, sure to relieve or cure; 75c a box. Drug stores without the signature of Wm. Kohlers, Drug Store, nostrum owner Eddy and Jones streets.

Dissemination not equal no pay—I cured my after a long suffering where so doctors could not have relieved. I have the same for you free of charge. J. Sorkin, 201 Kearny street, 9 to 12, 2 to 4 p. m.

LIFE'S ELIXIR.—Gold coast year-cakes, artistically iced, 25c a dozen. Sold only by the favorite of California. The factory 1 Montgomery ave., near Market st. Sold by all grocers. It keeps for months.

Dr. Sterman's Medical Institute, Upon and eight, 824 Broadway below Montgomery, Diseases, San Francisco. Treatment, medicine, etc., $5 monthly. Meals prepared in every room. Dodges or hot, hot, hot, hot, hot. Promptly attended to. Pine wines and liquors directly on hand.

A Amazing—reduced rates; gold and silver wrapping and one, cents; Postal cards sent by mail or express; mixes sunshine, light or cool and cheerful. Cut flowers and real mining affairs. WM. LANE, agent, 1 Canary street.

The Stech piano lead the world, having on the highest awards in the European and America. Musicians and lovers of music are invited to call and test their merits. Sherman Warerooms, 22 and 25 Sutter st., opposite the Mint.

The French House, corner of Kearny street and Montgomery avenue, under the proprietorship of Mr. J. W. Decker, continues to be one of most comfortable hotels in the city, price for board and room ranges from $1 to $1.50 per day; by the week, $6 to $10 according to lived rooms, and country readers will find the month cheap, central and convenient.

Those of our readers who are housekeepers, or who may require home cures, dyspepsia, should do well to introduce Sperry's Graham Flour, Mr. Hick, alone with being ranks is his cheap, guarantee to recommend it to him to be first class. He is also a thoroughly honest maker. He makes a specialty of repairs and does it properly.

Sell your friends of Ammen's Cough Syrup.

Throat—Ammen's Cough Syrup.

Winter is now approaches and product gets always prepare for the coming by having a good supply of Ozan. Our readers will find the cheapest of C. W. Wyse & Co. of Pacific and Feed Depot, 847 Mission street, full supply of Ozan, and Ozan Feed, 1 cent per pound, delivered, at the lowest rates. Quality and Ozan Feed is unexcelled. Telephone Main 1,

Our country readers when visiting the city of Red the Brooklyn Hotel, Bush Street, the best and most reasonable hotel in the city. Rates $1 per day and upwards. Refurbished and elegantly furnished. Rates $1, $1.25 and $1.50 per day. The hotel has elegant rooms, with bath attached, and the best of accommodations, and the proprietors, Messrs. Dearness & Dailey—Gentlemen of the Sierra—are to the comfort of their guests.

The best wine and liquors are used in the construction of a good tonic. Tonic is a term used to cover a multitude of sins. It is not a tonic. It is a medicine. It is a tonic. It is a medicine. It is a tonic. It is a medicine. It is

The New Irish Movement.

GREAT MEETING IN TIPPERARY.

SPLENDID SPEECH OF FATHER JAMES RYAN.

Cheers for Archbishop Croke of Cashel.

From a recent issue of the Tipperary Free Press we glean the following account of a very important meeting held in Thurles for the purpose of forming a branch of the Irish National League. The speech of the day was made by Father James Ryan, C. C., who, in coming forward, said:

The object of the meeting for which we form a branch in the parish of Tipperary, of the Irish National League (hear, hear). In almost all the adjoining parishes and indeed in almost all the parishes in the county Tipperary branches of the National League have been established. It was most and proper then, that Tipperary town and parish should not be neglecting. Earlier than the present, the formation of a branch of the new organization would have been undertaken in Tipperary, but the city of Tipperary were engaged in another project, which, I suppose, caused the meeting which was such a splendid success, to be held in Cashel. (Hear, hear.) Everything which was said in Cashel, I suppose, I shall not have to repeat here. Nothing at a time, and that governed the people of Cashel, and of Tipperary. There was plenty of time yet for work, noble and national work, to be done. I, for one, would rather be asserting that it was the Land League movement, that it was the Land League movement, that it was the Land League movement,

Poetry.

(For the Monitor.)

EILEEN.

As fresh as a dew-freighted flower in the morning,
As fair as the blush in the heart of a rose,
With virtue and duty her every thought adorning,
Heaven bless her and keep her wherever she goes.

No lighter may step the sky fawn on the morning,
No crowder the birds sing in fair Sweet Jane,
Less sparkling the gleam of the silver bead from the fount,
And Eileen, sweet Eileen, will come to me soon.

So spirituelle and graceful I behold her move,
While right through her cheeks come trembling after breaths of the spring,
Outshrinking with happiness, fondly I'll greet her
Now,
Can, every me present, and may me long!

Sah! Bean, now! Bed-Bean now! you'll've been travel home,
For yonder! mind the green waving trees in her orbit!
Ha, begrim! Bed-Bean now, for I am the master—
We're on the mountain and Eileen is not.

But soon her white arms round my neck will be folding,
Her fair flower-face with the white lids dropped
I wonder if poisons, or hinge, not be holding
A suspicion, love, that is now to our eyes.

My God! what has come o'er the face of the morning?
The sun's behind wrath in the valley had birth;
The sky is in ashes—Oh Eileen, my darling!
You say she's in Heaven and I upon earth.

—Dante Marmeron.

HIVTTS PRATYS.

"The nightmare is dyin', the doctheen have said
Oh, who'd be a doctheen, to bring us out death!
Th'ph lay in bedn, with a hand on the head, as
A doctor the pulse to ascertain the trouble
Th'Arbra is our physic in a vehicle called Contentedness; hand for a Pat on the Th'ph lay in bedn, with a hand on the head,
An' very continuity tire'n to die!

"The nightmare is dyin', it is now—yiry!
The mother just wrapsin the ground 'mash her
Sh's such a vesta matter—so mild! and proper!
Is blood, that sweet mouse would go in her
Sh's gone to be kindly, on think it an house
To turn from herself her own impart ways,
I loved her the mistress! I set my eye on her,
An' what will I do while she's dead, if you
Pleas

"I hate one fine doctheen! he ought to be ayrie,
Th'ph mind's to be rude, th'ph carriage and Th'ph ahead in the hall, th'ph ahead in the
I know th'ph a gentleman—he's been in the city—
But God's sheve all—even doctors—ah
however,
Th'ph mind—little ayrie!" cry Bridey.
"But even a sacrist can pray, I suppose;"

So, down on her knees in a whirl of emotion,
With anger and grief in a terrible crisis,
Her Irish tongue praying with utter devotion,
Th'ph Bridey, hand to her thighs—by their praying
Bridey.

The poor Irish servant—her heart flowing over—
Th'ph Bridey, sigh, a form that my voice cannot
With the end of a relief and the glow of a lover, Th'ph in spite of the doctor, the nitrous might Bridey.

The mother sat down by his dwelling, drawn in
His emotions, and the sun, the sun, the sun
Th'ph prayer, to be sure, not so hope has his prayer is;
In fact, he was dazed, and could scarce understand
His delirious lips had a painful contraction,
A pallor ten shaggy—the symptoms suffered—
Th'ph spring to the floor in a sudden surprise—
Gobs Dublin—and Bridey, hand to her thighs—
The smiles at the mother, her soul in her eyes—

A wonderful hope—Is it hope! Is it terror!
Lasgo ye by hands—Is it hope! Is it terror!
Is it—
Is it life before death? Is it fancy's sweet error!
Or is it—or can it be—really Life.

Oh, send for the doctor—death hangs on each
Bridey!
They wait for his fate as they'd a good
"Well! keep the life in you, and you'll be
Drawing issue of life with an autocrat's nod.

Bridey! through the hours that so slow
Th'ph mother! believe that he ne'er felt despair,
And Kitty, the servant, hearts out, 'mid her
Th'ph
To think that they none of them knew of her prayer.

Literary Miscellany.

The Priest Hunt.

(By F. C. S. in the Catholic Tribune.)

(Continued from our last.)

CHAPTER III.

On the extreme verge of the cliff there had formerly stood the ruins of a mediæval watch-tower, that had perished in ages, like a hawk in his lofty eyrie. Some half a century prior to the Cromwellian invasion a rude erection had been constructed from its fallen masonry, which served the purpose of a wayside inn. Here, at the door of our fable, dwelt one Judith Neal, a widow of some seventy years of age, but still hale and sturdy in spite of her failing sight and silvery hair. A small plot of ground tilled by her own hands afforded her the means of support, for in those days of terror and poverty few travellers passed the door or sought lodgings in the humble cottage, which indeed had long been dismantled of all save the poor and meaty furniture retained for the widow's personal needs. The spot was a favorite one for the English viceroys for themes for miles around their eyes ranged over the valley of the Blackwater. But even the fierce and reckless troopers coming from wrecking hearths learned to pay a certain respect to the aged and self-reliant widow, and after a cursory search or two the unbidden tavern left her in peace. It was a lonely and desolate spot, but when the soldiers were posted at the head of bright, dusky figures would steal from the shadows of the woods and furtively glide in and out of the cottage, bringing or bearing away mysterious burdens. Sometimes there would be faint sounds upon the dark river, and vague white objects would move stealthily across its inky surface, but, gaining the bank, would prove to be the forms of men that disappeared up the cliff in the direction of the lonely inn, and descending again took to the water and were lost to view in the dense gloom, silently gliding away in the direction whence they had come.

This night the widow sat by her waning fire of dead-wood, her elbow resting upon her knee and her hand supporting her head while she gazed upon the flickering embers. Judith was crooning in a low voice one of those sad and pathetic ballads so dear to the hearts of the Irish peasantry, and which sang in a plaintive minor key, with quaint transitions and melancholy cadences, has for the hearer, even though unversed in the language of their burden, an effect inexpressibly touching. Rendered into English, Judith's song ran thus:

THE BANSHEE.

The night hangs black o'er Castle Grant,
And black is Castle Grant the
The lock wind moans a dismal wail,
And drear the moans and wailings low.
Where wooded
To rise so more,
Lest Ulah lies a-lying,
Hark!
Tis the wind is the forest sighing!
To midnight, and the Sickening lamp
Throws ghostly shadows on the wall,
That o'er the bow with death-dew damp
Throws gloom, and bosh with phantom call,
Alas! alas!
That life should pass
While youth and love are throbbing!
Hark!
Tis my wooful lady sobbing!

Upon the bed of my wooful lady
Her pillows soft the dying head!
"Oh Ulah, my love, my love, my
He whispers! "Ah, from one hard fate
Thy dear eyes shall
And life and light
My dark'ning eyes are falling!"
Hark!
Tis the hound for his master wailing!

Ah, false! he pants! death's horrid note
The spirit calls to sing to flight.
Hark, hark! Hear, hear, ye dreamy
From out the dark invading night—
Hark! hark!
Tis the Banshee's cry that's thrilling!

"Holy Mother of God protect me! cried the woman, crossing herself in alarm. "What is that?"

It was a sound as if a heavy body without had fallen against the door, and was attempted by a long, deep moan as of a man in agony. For a moment Judith stood with wide lips and trembling in every limb. Then gradually her innate courage revived. She crossed herself, muttered a prayer and unbolted the door. The night was pitch-dark, and the lattices of a deep gorge rendered still ghastlier by his long, dark and mantled hair." The cool rain was fast dissolving the coarse chint, which was hallowed in blood, that seemed more than would go in her breast.

Big frame or so kindly, or think it an house
To turn from herself her own impart ways,
I loved her the mistress! I set my eye on her,
An' what will I do while she's dead, if you
pleas

"I hate one fine doctheen! he ought to be ayrie,
Th'ph mind's to be rude, th'ph carriage and Th'ph ahead in the hall, th'ph ahead in the
I know th'ph a gentleman—he's been in the city—
But God's sheve all—even doctors—ah
however,
Th'ph mind—little ayrie!" cry Bridey.
"But even a sacrist can pray, I suppose;"

So, down on her knees in a whirl of emotion,
With anger and grief in a terrible crisis,
Her Irish tongue praying with utter devotion,
Th'ph Bridey, hand to her thighs—by their praying
Bridey.

The poor Irish servant—her heart flowing over—
Th'ph Bridey, sigh, a form that my voice cannot
With the end of a relief and the glow of a lover, Th'ph in spite of the doctor, the nitrous might Bridey.

The mother sat down by his dwelling, drawn in
His emotions, and the sun, the sun, the sun
Th'ph prayer, to be sure, not so hope has his prayer is;
In fact, he was dazed, and could scarce understand
His delirious lips had a painful contraction,
A pallor ten shaggy—the symptoms suffered—
Th'ph spring to the floor in a sudden surprise—
Gobs Dublin—and Bridey, hand to her thighs—
The smiles at the mother, her soul in her eyes—

A wonderful hope—Is it hope! Is it terror!
Lasgo ye by hands—Is it hope! Is it terror!
Is it—
Is it life before death? Is it fancy's sweet error!
Or is it—or can it be—really Life.

Oh, send for the doctor—death hangs on each
Bridey!
They wait for his fate as they'd a good
"Well! keep the life in you, and you'll be
Drawing issue of life with an autocrat's nod.

Bridey! through the hours that so slow
Th'ph mother! believe that he ne'er felt despair,
And Kitty, the servant, hearts out, 'mid her
Th'ph
To think that they none of them knew of her prayer.

Literary Miscellany.

The Priest Hunt.

(By F. C. S. in the Catholic Tribune.)

(Continued from our last.)

CHAPTER III.

On the extreme verge of the cliff there had formerly stood the ruins of a mediæval watch-tower, that had perished in ages, like a hawk in his lofty eyrie. Some half a century prior to the Cromwellian invasion a rude erection had been constructed from its fallen masonry, which served the purpose of a wayside inn. Here, at the door of our fable, dwelt one Judith Neal, a widow of some seventy years of age, but still hale and sturdy in spite of her failing sight and silvery hair. A small plot of ground tilled by her own hands afforded her the means of support, for in those days of terror and poverty few travellers passed the door or sought lodgings in the humble cottage, which indeed had long been dismantled of all save the poor and meaty furniture retained for the widow's personal needs. The spot was a favorite one for the English viceroys for themes for miles around their eyes ranged over the valley of the Blackwater. But even the fierce and reckless troopers coming from wrecking hearths learned to pay a certain respect to the aged and self-reliant widow, and after a cursory search or two the unbidden tavern left her in peace. It was a lonely and desolate spot, but when the soldiers were posted at the head of bright, dusky figures would steal from the shadows of the woods and furtively glide in and out of the cottage, bringing or bearing away mysterious burdens. Sometimes there would be faint sounds upon the dark river, and vague white objects would move stealthily across its inky surface, but, gaining the bank, would prove to be the forms of men that disappeared up the cliff in the direction of the lonely inn, and descending again took to the water and were lost to view in the dense gloom, silently gliding away in the direction whence they had come.

This night the widow sat by her waning fire of dead-wood, her elbow resting upon her knee and her hand supporting her head while she gazed upon the flickering embers. Judith was crooning in a low voice one of those sad and pathetic ballads so dear to the hearts of the Irish peasantry, and which sang in a plaintive minor key, with quaint transitions and melancholy cadences, has for the hearer, even though unversed in the language of their burden, an effect inexpressibly touching. Rendered into English, Judith's song ran thus:

THE BANSHEE.

The night hangs black o'er Castle Grant,
And black is Castle Grant the
The lock wind moans a dismal wail,
And drear the moans and wailings low.
Where wooded
To rise so more,
Lest Ulah lies a-lying,
Hark!
Tis the wind is the forest sighing!
To midnight, and the Sickening lamp
Throws ghostly shadows on the wall,
That o'er the bow with death-dew damp
Throws gloom, and bosh with phantom call,
Alas! alas!
That life should pass
While youth and love are throbbing!
Hark!
Tis my wooful lady sobbing!

Upon the bed of my wooful lady
Her pillows soft the dying head!
"Oh Ulah, my love, my love, my
He whispers! "Ah, from one hard fate
Thy dear eyes shall
And life and light
My dark'ning eyes are falling!"
Hark!
Tis the hound for his master wailing!

Ah, false! he pants! death's horrid note
The spirit calls to sing to flight.
Hark, hark! Hear, hear, ye dreamy
From out the dark invading night—
Hark! hark!
Tis the Banshee's cry that's thrilling!

"Holy Mother of God protect me! cried the woman, crossing herself in alarm. "What is that?"

It was a sound as if a heavy body without had fallen against the door, and was attempted by a long, deep moan as of a man in agony. For a moment Judith stood with wide lips and trembling in every limb. Then gradually her innate courage revived. She crossed herself, muttered a prayer and unbolted the door. The night was pitch-dark, and the lattices of a deep gorge rendered still ghastlier by his long, dark and mantled hair." The cool rain was fast dissolving the coarse chint, which was hallowed in blood, that seemed more than would go in her breast.

Big frame or so kindly, or think it an house
To turn from herself her own impart ways,
I loved her the mistress! I set my eye on her,
An' what will I do while she's dead, if you
pleas

"I hate one fine doctheen! he ought to be ayrie,
Th'ph mind's to be rude, th'ph carriage and Th'ph ahead in the hall, th'ph ahead in the
I know th'ph a gentleman—he's been in the city—
But God's sheve all—even doctors—ah
however,
Th'ph mind—little ayrie!" cry Bridey.
"But even a sacrist can pray, I suppose;"

So, down on her knees in a whirl of emotion,
With anger and grief in a terrible crisis,
Her Irish tongue praying with utter devotion,
Th'ph Bridey, hand to her thighs—by their praying
Bridey.

The poor Irish servant—her heart flowing over—
Th'ph Bridey, sigh, a form that my voice cannot
With the end of a relief and the glow of a lover, Th'ph in spite of the doctor, the nitrous might Bridey.

The mother sat down by his dwelling, drawn in
His emotions, and the sun, the sun, the sun
Th'ph prayer, to be sure, not so hope has his prayer is;
In fact, he was dazed, and could scarce understand
His delirious lips had a painful contraction,
A pallor ten shaggy—the symptoms suffered—
Th'ph spring to the floor in a sudden surprise—
Gobs Dublin—and Bridey, hand to her thighs—
The smiles at the mother, her soul in her eyes—

A wonderful hope—Is it hope! Is it terror!
Lasgo ye by hands—Is it hope! Is it terror!
Is it—
Is it life before death? Is it fancy's sweet error!
Or is it—or can it be—really Life.

Oh, send for the doctor—death hangs on each
Bridey!
They wait for his fate as they'd a good
"Well! keep the life in you, and you'll be
Drawing issue of life with an autocrat's nod.

Bridey! through the hours that so slow
Th'ph mother! believe that he ne'er felt despair,
And Kitty, the servant, hearts out, 'mid her
Th'ph
To think that they none of them knew of her prayer.

Literary Miscellany.

The Priest Hunt.

(By F. C. S. in the Catholic Tribune.)

(Continued from our last.)

CHAPTER III.

On the extreme verge of the cliff there had formerly stood the ruins of a mediæval watch-tower, that had perished in ages, like a hawk in his lofty eyrie. Some half a century prior to the Cromwellian invasion a rude erection had been constructed from its fallen masonry, which served the purpose of a wayside inn. Here, at the door of our fable, dwelt one Judith Neal, a widow of some seventy years of age, but still hale and sturdy in spite of her failing sight and silvery hair. A small plot of ground tilled by her own hands afforded her the means of support, for in those days of terror and poverty few travellers passed the door or sought lodgings in the humble cottage, which indeed had long been dismantled of all save the poor and meaty furniture retained for the widow's personal needs. The spot was a favorite one for the English viceroys for themes for miles around their eyes ranged over the valley of the Blackwater. But even the fierce and reckless troopers coming from wrecking hearths learned to pay a certain respect to the aged and self-reliant widow, and after a cursory search or two the unbidden tavern left her in peace. It was a lonely and desolate spot, but when the soldiers were posted at the head of bright, dusky figures would steal from the shadows of the woods and furtively glide in and out of the cottage, bringing or bearing away mysterious burdens. Sometimes there would be faint sounds upon the dark river, and vague white objects would move stealthily across its inky surface, but, gaining the bank, would prove to be the forms of men that disappeared up the cliff in the direction of the lonely inn, and descending again took to the water and were lost to view in the dense gloom, silently gliding away in the direction whence they had come.

This night the widow sat by her waning fire of dead-wood, her elbow resting upon her knee and her hand supporting her head while she gazed upon the flickering embers. Judith was crooning in a low voice one of those sad and pathetic ballads so dear to the hearts of the Irish peasantry, and which sang in a plaintive minor key,

Antiquity of Devotion to the Blessed Virgin

Devotion to the Mother of God is as old as the Church itself. In Rome—the heart and centre of Catholic unity—it has been wonderfully predicted from the time of the apostles up to the present day, and numberless are the monuments of this personal cultus which exists in Christendom. Under the dread shield of Mary and to confound those who assert it to be honor shown to Catholics to the exalted handmaid of the Lord.

A stranger even on a passing visit to the Eternal City must fall to other than in most ancient churches were raised in honor of Mary, and that many of her images exposed to public veneration date back to the primitive ages of Christianity. His visit to the catacombs will give him a still more striking illustration of what the Mother of God was to the primitive martyrs of the infant church. In every one of these ancient cemeteries and places of refuge he sees unmistakable pictures representing her surrounded by all that symbolize her great power and dignity.

In the catacombs of St. Priscilla (near the Salaria Nuova), which date from the dawn of the second century, there is a well-preserved picture of the Virgin Mother with her Divine Son, which seems to contain a prophet pointing to the star of Bethlehem. In another crypt there is an admirable fresco of the Virgin and Child, with the three magi reverentially approaching to offer their gold, frankincense and myrrh. In the catacombs of St. Domitilla, of St. Callixtus, of those of Sant Agnese and in the Prætorian camp are many images of the Blessed Virgin surrounded by angels, her faithful friends in her great power.

In the Oratorio (Adriana, near St. Agnes, our Lady is again represented with the divine Child between messengers of the celestial state of Christ. In the catacombs of Lucina, etc., she appears with great frescoes representing the Annunciation. In these she is represented in the act of prayer, with her hands extended and her head inclined by SS. Peter and Paul, as were those of Moses by Aaron and Hur when his power was necessary to the success of the Jewish army of the Amalekites. Numberless examples of a similar kind are to be found in the catacombs, and serve to show the reverence and power of Christians for the Mother of God, as well as their belief in her powerful intercession.

Ste. Sabina, Rome.

The most interesting church, once given by Honorius III. to Dominic, and where that saint received in a beatific vision the institution of the Rosary, and where, in the convent adjoining as still see his cell, has been adorned with the Dominican Cardinal McCabe as his title. The castellated structure that surrounds the convent and its spacious gardens and terraces, is the same that Dominic used as his Sacrist family. The church, built in 425, and rebuilt in 824 was consecrated anew, having been restored by Gregory IX. in 1228.

Few Medieval buildings in Rome have been more maltreated than this; and yet enough remains to show that its original no despoilers have effaced. In 1586 was swept away the ancient mosaics, the marble screens and ambones, all of the ninth century, and the old mosaic pavement being at the same time destroyed, as well as almost the entire interior decoration and inscriptions which dated back to 824. Nothing appeared the mosaic bands of our Saviour and fourteen saints on the triumphal arch, and also the whole upper part of the portals. But one inscription of 824 which put in the Old and New Testaments. Some "savants" suppose these carvings to be older than the church, perhaps as several place them later than the thirteenth. In the nave are twenty-four Corinthian columns of white marble, which are said to be "from Egypt," which once stood fore; above is an ancient frieze of Christ and Mary.

The Church of Ste. Sabina is built on the site of the house of the saint, in which she suffered martyrdom under the Emperor Hadrian, A. D. 423 by Peter, a priest of Illyria —preparing the lions and crying—"rich for the poor and poor for himself." St Dominic's cell is shown, with its wooden bed. The high altar covers the remains of Ste. Sabina and Seraphia, Pope St. Alexander, and Pope St. Eutychian, and Theodora. At the end of the right aisle is the Chapel of Our Lady, where one of the most beautiful pictures in Rome, by Sassoferrato, comprehends the vision of St. Dominic, on the very spot where he received the Rosary from the hands of the Blessed Virgin.

The Dominicans are distinguished by a severe simplicity approaching to their institution, their wooden shafts supporting narrow arches under plain, unornamented entablatures. A solemn scene at hours when dim light harmonizes with remembrances of monastic antiquity. The monastic establishment is on a scale of beyond description interesting; on one side a garden, and a still fresh Palestine tree planted by St. Dominic; in the saint's cell are Raphael's most impressive picture of him by Sassoferrato, and the Dominican indicties of a sepulchrum, described as redolently beautiful. The ancient church abounds in legends of the greatest interest of St. Dominic, of St. Thomas Aquinas, St. Pius V., St Norbert, St. Raymond de Pennafort, etc.

Illustration of a Mother's Love.

The following little story illustrates a mother's love. In some spring freshet a river widely washed its shores and swept away a lonely shanty and had built a cottage for her summer home. Down the sides and whirling stream drifted the green branch, its wicker cup of unfledged song, and fluttering bewilder, as it were in the midst of bird Unheeding the roaring river, on the wast, her nest of agony and fear pierced the pauses in the storm. How like the love of an old-fashioned mother, who follows the dove she gathered in her arms, all over the world! Swept away by passion and folly, she is—it matered not; though she was bearing away with her the fragments of the shattered roof-tree, yet that mother was with him, in spite, through all his life, and a Rachel at his death.

—The Bishop of Versailles has addressed to the clergy of his diocese a circular upon the subject of the recent robbery at the Cathedral of St. Denis and other places of worship. The bishop attributes these depredations to the violent attacks of bad newspapers and the impious doctrines they recommends, therefore, that henceforth nothing shall be left in churches of a nature to excite cupidity. The sacred vases should be secured every night, and the bones in which offerings are collected should be emptied as often as possible, particularly on days when they may be supposed to contain a larger sum than usual. The money should then be hidden in a safe place.

Heuvelet's Anti Phosphate-In Consumption.

Dr. J. N. ROBINSON, Medina, O., says: "I have used it in a case of indigestion, and consumption, with good results. In nervous prostration the results are happy.

"ROUGH ON CORN."

Ask for Wells' "Rough on Corns." Ds. Quick, complete, permanent cure. Corns, bunions.

Farm and Home.

Are You Grateful and Considerate?

It may be friend, you are a very good sort of a man judged by the commercial standard, by the standard of the world, and even of the church. We don't doubt but that you are a pretty good man, if we be measured by your own standard; but—I hope the competitors will place a long dash after the word "but"—but does your great deal of thinking that alone after it. What was I thinking about? Your wife, perhaps; your mother; your sister, or any one who with kindness or courtesy and affection minister to you, and who don't appreciate the ministry.

The unappreciated ones who love us and serve us; I am thinking of them. And as I think face come out of the dim past to me, and stand out to sight as if they were living faces.

There is the face of a mother—a worn face; a face that is wrinkled as years, and labor, and troubles wrinkle a face; eyes that show a growing dimness as they gaze at me; hands no longer plump, fingers no longer rounded; hair half gray and half brown. The face of a woman who has done work; work; work; and is still doing work for sixty years—does it faithfully, lovingly, reverentially approaching to other duties, and ministrations, and sympathies.

Do you know her? Certainly. Whose! Your wife's. Not old nor young—forty perhaps. The face of a woman who does everything for you; of a woman who has been busy all day long that your house might be a pleasant home for you; who will wake to kiss this morning, and whom you forgot to kiss; who gave you some to eat, and there were your slippers by your chair, the evening paper on the table; the table spread for tea; everything clean, orderly, homelike. And yet you hardly greeted her! Brute! Pretty name! Yes. What do you think?

Those Damp Feet.

Well, what about them? Simply this: that they are the cause of a great deal of the death of you yet. "Oh, dear, you are crazy!" Not at all, dear. Do you agree with my damp feet." Yes but the trouble is you do go about with them just in that condition, and three-quarters of all physical troubles and sickness you bring on yourselves as well as other people. Your little boys are at most more sensible in this respect. They do not go about with damp feet in their slippers, or wear thin slips of leather which are like blotting paper. One-half the time you are taking cold in your feet ought to be used exclusively for indoor wear. Outside, with a rubber on, they are a splendid example of the way in which people should behave in regard to the coming, nonsumption, or a sharp attack of illness in some other form. It is perfectly neat and tidy to put on your rubbers, you should take a pride in her foot. Wall shod, and with a nicely military, and not high French heel to her boot. It is proper that she should be constantly on her feet. Of course, we complement. But then cushioned upon never make a foot look well. At best they are flimsy and heathenish wear. A fairly drenching shower of rain, and the spray kicks up from the pavement drips down the stockings through, laying the foundation of any one of a dozen maladies. Take care of your Mrs. Caudle, the good lady whose certain lectures so long kept her patient and long suffering husband in order. Mr. Caudle, the good lady whose certain lectures so long kept her patient and long suffering husband in order. It stands written, through no more secret than the Bible, that "Mrs. Caudle's lectures were their carelessness, but after all she died, and—Caudle—he married another woman—lived to "mourn her loss." For the foundation of a lucrative doctor's practice, nothing is better than continuously damp feet. It is the source of more than one-half the complaints and sickness among "our girls." Keep those damp feet dry. I know it sounds odd, but it is just what I mean.

Wear thin shoes, or slippers in the house if you want to have a pleasant time down on the damp ground, and especially in the morning and evening, and be sure to put on thick shoes. Try to keep a cool head, but be sure to keep warm, dry feet.

Walnut Trees.

Mr. George H. Wright, of Sioux City, a surveyman, deals largely in forest trees. He has sold a million such trees to the Northern Pacific road, to be planted along its line, and for small plantations. A reporter of the Sioux City Journal says that him, "Wouldn't it be a good thing for a man to do if he wanted to make a fortune and sixty acres of land to walnut trees?" "I think it would," he replied. "It would be a fortune. Wouldn't the timber be large enough to use in twenty years?" "Yes, and in ten, if you wanted to, but it would be a good thing to do if you waited six or eight or ten years it would begin to pay. Plant the trees six feet apart and in five years you will have to begin to prune them and in ten years you will have enough to take out would be big enough for fence posts, and would pay twice over all the cost of the plant. In ten years more the trees would be 18 or 20 inches through, and would be enough for all black walnut purposes. There is no better thing to do for your boys, if you can wait long for your first return, and it is a good thing to do for the country." "Does not walnut do best on rich bottom land?" "Perhaps it does; but it will do well enough on the high or average prairie."

Celery

I have known many men and women, who, from various causes, have become so much affected with nervousness, that when they put out their hands they shook like the leaves of an aspen in a windy day—and by a daily moderate use of the blanched foot stalks of celery, they entirely overcome the shaking and steady in limbs as other people.

I have known others, so very nervous that the least annoyance put them in a state of agitation and were almost in constant fear of something or other happening to them, and by a daily moderate use of blanched celery as a salad at least twice a day, have known others cured by using celery for palpitation of the heart. Everybody engaged in labor weakening to the nerves should use celery daily in its season, and in addition to its stated when not in season.—Christian of Work.

—The days of the iron nail are apparently numbered. Pittsburg has a company, known as the Carnegie Steel Company, manufacture them of Bessemer steel, and factories in Wheeling will come only a little later. The steel article is softer and tougher than the iron nail, and so much lighter that the saving of a pound will be more than balanced by the increased number.

Family Fun.

His Uncle is Sick.

A girl might just as well be up and down about such thing as to suffer herself to be imposed on and have the feeling crushing at her heart from the discovery of a child suffering with small-pox and nearly frozen, lying in an open yard of a house in South Baltimore. The case was discovered early this morning by the inmates of a house, No. 1 Hamburg street, in whose house the child, Susan Green, aged 9 years, was found. It was at once reported to the health office, and Inspector Brown was dispatched to the scene. Upon entering the yard he encountered a pitiful spectacle. Lying prone on its back was the little sufferer, nearly naked, its only covering being a few filthy rags. The ground was frozen hard, while snow and around the child was several inches deep, which was covered with ice. The child was benumbed by the intense cold and unable to utter a word when placed in the ambulance and removed to the Quarantine hospital. Upon inquiry it was learned that the mother of the child, who lives in the neighborhood, upon discovering last night that the child had the small-pox at once left it out to die whether shown or not, and it is thought the child wandered about until benumbed by the cold. She entered the yard of the house of Mr. Green, and fell down in the yard, where she was found by the family. The child is now in a critical condition. The child was the daughter of a Mr. Green, who is a laborer, and has been out of work for some time. The child was taken sick on the day before Christmas, and the mother left it out to die whether shown or not, and it is thought the child wandered about until benumbed by the cold. She entered the yard of the house of

THE MONITOR.
OFFICIAL STATE TRIAL OF PUBLICATION.
WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 17, 1883.

Proposed Canonization of Joan of Arc.

We are in receipt of a long letter from our Rome correspondent, in which he envays the gratifying intelligence that steps have been taken for the purpose of consummating the canonization of Joan of Arc. Our correspondent sends us a very interesting and exhaustive biography of this saintly heroine, which we will publish next week, as we have room in this issue only for the following introductory remarks:

"Little more than half a half a year has passed away since the Sacred Congregation of Rites opened the cause of the beatification and canonization of the two illustrious heroes, Bishop Fisher and Sir Thomas More, whose unshakable devotion to the Catholic faith won for them the glorious crown of martyrdom under the rampacous English "reformer," Henry VIII. The cause of no fewer than one hundred and forty-seven other good and faithful servants of God are at present undergoing the rigid scrutiny which the Church always exercises in a matter of such vital importance to her children. Among this venerable throng stands the modest and girlish figure of JOAN OF ARC, the immortal "Maid of Orleans," who fell victim to English perfidy and injustice a century before the aged Bishop and the model Chancellor whose names we have just mentioned. The story of her brief but glorious life is invested with a deep and peculiar interest; it reveals the inner life of a saintly girl, shows how love of country is blessed and inspired from above, and results a succession of strange and momentous events that form a brilliant epoch in the history of France.

"At the time of which we write Henry VI. had been declared King of England and France by his General the Duke of Bedford. The northern portion of the latter kingdom had openly declared their allegiance to the new and youthful king; those of the centre and south adhered to the fortunes of Charles VII., their legitimate Sovereign, who had been proclaimed at Poitiers. War was declared between the contending parties. The English and Burgundians, who made common cause, reaped a harvest of easy conquests over the poverty and weakness of the French monarch, and at the battle of Verneuil inflicted upon him a blow which almost proved the utter downfall of his rapidly-declining power. Orleans, the last support of his tottering throne, was at length besieged, and, despite the gallantry of its brave defenders, was on the point of falling into the hands of the English; the king himself was about to retire for personal safety to the mountains of Languedoc, when it pleased Divine Providence to make JOAN OF ARC the instrument of one of those prompt and decisive interventions her unaught the calculations of human wisdom, and lead back people's thoughts to the fact of the only thing that is innovorable, of the only power that is eternal."

Our correspondent adds that the cause of the canonization of Joan of Arc has been vigorously stressed by the Archbishop of Rouen, the Bishop of Orleans, and many of the French clergy. The following eminent laymen have also been instrumental in laying before the Congregation of Rites the immense amount of documentary evidence which is at present under examination:

A. F. Mathieu Pomeron, Counsellor at Orleans; Count Germani P. de Toreni; N. Duchaunys, Counsellor; Achille L. Rigo, Baron of Myrogues and Mayor of the Cyr; Alexiu I. Germin, City Counsellor and President of the Tribunal of Commerce, Orleans; M. L. I. Pauchet, Judge of the Court of Appeal; M. L. de la Rochefoucault, Mayor of Dey; L. F. Dandier, merchant. Among the clergy valuable service was rendered by Rev. Emile Rapinel, Vicar-General of Orleans, and Rev. M. C. T. Cochard, Professor in the Petit Seminaire of the Holy Cross at Orleans.

Another Anti-Catholic Theory Exploded.

We publish on another page the full circumstances which led to the downfall of Sister Mary Paul, of the Academy of the Sacred Heart, Tankton, Dakota territory, and in doing so we are happy to be able to disprove the ancient calumny against the Church wherein our enemies sought to impress upon the public mind that convents were merely religious prisons wherein young ladies were immured, and from whence escape was impossible, no matter how great the trials and privations which unwilling inmates might endure. This false theory, by the voluntary crime of this unfortunate female, is thoroughly exploded, and then it is that the ancient saying "out of evil cometh good" is again verified. The fall of this female, who voluntarily vowed herself for life to the service of God, when she entered the colestial corps distinguished by the transcendant title of "the Bride of Christ," can injure no one but herself. Her crime cannot result on her community, nor will her disgrace detract from the Catholic religion, say more than the crime of Judas would work injurjy to Christianity. "Scandals must come," says the inspired writer, but the punishment therefor is clearly indicated when he adds: "Woe to that man by whom the scandal cometh." The severity of this sentence will be keenly felt by those unfortunate people who—having voluntarily vowed themselves to God's service—depart His standard of the Cross in order to return to the world, to gratify the flesh, and to serve the devil.

But the poor, fallen female is not altogether alone to blame in this iniquity. She was tempted to this sacrilege by a slimy, crawling serpent in the shape of a physician, who, unmindful of the honor of his profession and the dignity it imposes, took the opportunity of exhibiting the baseness of his brutal nature by betraying his trust and lavishing his beastly blandishments upon the guileless heart of a lady who had been reaged in innocence of all that is bad in depraved humanity. In an evil moment she listened to the voice of the unscrupulous physician, and she fell, as the angels fell through forgetfulness of God. What a lesson does not this unfortunate episode present to members of Religious Orders, who, more than all others, are the targets of the Evil One. How constantly they should watch, and now ceaselessly they should pray, that temptation might not come upon them like a thief in the hour when they are least prepared, and rob them of all those heaven-sent virtues which draws their daily lives nearer and nearer to the promised paradise of God. Let the lamentable fall of this unfortunate Religious also incite Religious communities to extra vigilance regarding the character of those physicians whom they employ. Let them be men of known morals, and, if married, they will be less likely to exercise any undue influence over the minds of those upon whom they may be called to visit professionally.

Experience is the best school for the scholar, as well as for the world, and by throwing proper safeguards around guileless souls they can be saved from the snares which Satan sets for them, and we cannot help feeling that if proper precautions had been taken regarding the physician who attended the fallen Sister, the community to which she belonged would not have to weep over her disaster to-day. The crime lays far more at the door of the doctor than it does in the soul of the poor victim who of country is blessed and inspired from above, and results a succession of strange and momentous events that form a brilliant epoch in the history of France.

"At the time of which we write Henry VI. had been declared King of England and France by his General the Duke of Bedford. The northern portion of the latter kingdom had openly declared their allegiance to the new and youthful king; those of the centre and south adhered to the fortunes of Charles VII., their legitimate Sovereign, who had been proclaimed at Poitiers. War was declared between the contending parties. The English and Burgundians, who made common cause, reaped a harvest of easy conquests over the poverty and weakness of the French monarch, and at the battle of Verneuil inflicted upon him a blow which almost proved the utter downfall of his rapidly-declining power. Orleans, the last support of his tottering throne, was at length besieged, and, despite the gallantry of its brave defenders, was on the point of falling into the hands of the English; the king himself was about to retire for personal safety to the mountains of Languedoc, when it pleased Divine Providence to make JOAN OF ARC the instrument of one of those prompt and decisive interventions her unaught the calculations of human wisdom, and lead back people's thoughts to the fact of the only thing that is innovorable, of the only power that is eternal."

Our correspondent adds that the cause of the canonization of Joan of Arc has been vigorously stressed by the Archbishop of Rouen, the Bishop of Orleans, and many of the French clergy. The following eminent laymen have also been instrumental in laying before the Congregation of Rites the immense amount of documentary evidence which is at present under examination:

A. F. Mathieu Pomeron, Counsellor at Orleans; Count Germani P. de Toreni; N. Duchaunys, Counsellor; Achille L. Rigo, Baron of Myrogues and Mayor of the Cyr; Alexiu I. Germin, City Counsellor and President of the Tribunal of Commerce, Orleans; M. L. I. Pauchet, Judge of the Court of Appeal; M. L. de la Rochefoucault, Mayor of Dey; L. F. Dandier, merchant. Among the clergy valuable service was rendered by Rev. Emile Rapinel, Vicar-General of Orleans, and Rev. M. C. T. Cochard, Professor in the Petit Seminaire of the Holy Cross at Orleans.

Another Anti-Catholic Theory Exploded.

We publish on another page the full circumstances which led to the downfall of Sister Mary Paul, of the Academy of the Sacred Heart, Tankton, Dakota territory, and in doing so we are happy to be able to disprove the ancient calumny against the Church wherein our enemies sought to impress upon the public mind that convents were merely religious prisons wherein young ladies were immured, and from whence escape was impossible, no matter how great the trials and privations which unwilling inmates might endure. This false theory, by the voluntary crime of this unfortunate female, is thoroughly exploded, and then it is that the ancient saying "out of evil cometh good" is again verified. The fall of this female, who voluntarily vowed herself for life to the service of God, when she entered the celestial corps distinguished by the transcendant title of "the Bride of Christ," can injure no one but herself. Her crime cannot result on her community, nor will her disgrace detract from the Catholic religion, say more than the crime of Judas would work injurjy to Christianity. "Scandals must come," says the inspired writer, but the punishment therefor is clearly indicated when he adds: "Woe to that man by whom the scandal cometh." The severity of this sentence will be keenly felt by those unfortunate people who—having voluntarily vowed themselves to God's service—depart His standard of the Cross in order to return to the world, to gratify the flesh, and to serve the devil.

But the poor, fallen female is not altogether alone to blame in this iniquity. She was tempted to this sacrilege by a slimy,

THE MONITOR.
WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 17, 1883.

FOUR NOTABLE WEDDINGS.

KELLY-BARRIGER NUPTIALS AT PORTLAND, OREGON.

Dispatch from Portland, Oregon, January 8, announcing marriage that day of ALFRED E. KELLY, of Sacramento, to Miss Lillie Barriger, daughter of Mr. Barriger, of Portland, on Monday last in the Church of St. Patrick, Rev. Father Chirouse officiating. The bride, who is a lady of the highest order of intellect, and a lady of the most amiable disposition, is a granddaughter of the late Hon. Jesse D. Fitzgerald, deceased, who was a prominent member of the Bar of this city, and a leading spirit in the bitter fight which was made for the adoption of the Constitution of California, and in this regard it is but fitting that the young lady should be selected for the location of an institution of this character. Already several of the Right Reverend Bishops, who are to form the faculty of professors, are expected to arrive, and the strongest enthusiasm regarding the curriculum of studies to be pursued and the best books which will be used. The building stands back a short distance from the main road which it faces. It is 100 feet long by 40 feet wide; it stories in height. Entering through the vestibule the first room on the right is the reception parlor opposite which is the apartment of the Rib Superior, adjacent to which are two large class rooms, and at the extreme end is a spacious library and lecture hall. The light of the sanctum in this story is lit from three windows, and is furnished in the all the apartments. On the second floor are to be found the dormitories for the students, and a community room. At the extreme end of the corridor are located the dormitories. The prospect from the windows on this floor is very fine, and the view of the ocean is very good. The third floor is devoted to the upper story of the building, but means have been taken to accommodate about forty students. The cost of the building, all in all, will be used for starting purposes.

The school is located on the first floor adjacent to the rear entrance, and is very neatly furnished.

At the rear of the main building, connected by a covered passage way, is the Convent, which building to be used as the dining hall, kitchen, etc. The Convent is a very neat, and, we understand, has been erected a trifle capable of holding about 100 persons, but means are being taken to enlarge the building. This very commodious building is furnished with the beauty and comfort of studious.

The Sisters of the Fathers to lay out the grounds in this country to say whether in Europe, and have interspersed with walks for the use of the pupils. Ample provision for gymnastic exercise in the open air, and when this work is completed it will be pronounced by the ecclesiastical seminary that for beauty of surrounding and general comfort and convenience accommodations will compare favorably with any institution of learning of a similar character in any portion of the Union.

COLLECTION FOR THE HOLY FATHER.

The following sums represent the several amounts received from the different churches throughout the Archdiocese for the Hat for Father Colombat, $476.50. St. Patrick's, $108. St. Mary's, $200. Sacred Heart, $200. Sacramento, $130. St. Francis, $130. St. Joseph's, $100. St. Mary's, $100. Oakland, $100. Alameda, $100. Petaluma, $100. Benicia, $100 20. Immaculate Conception, $100. Santa Rosa, $100. Healdsburg, $80. San Leandro, $75. St. Peter's, $50. Cloverdale, $50. Cotati, $50. Dixon, $50. Jackson, $50. Sonoma, $50. Stockton, $50. Oakland, $40. Napa, $35. Ukiah, $35. Petaluma, $30. Santa Clara, $30. Jackson, $25. Healdsburg, $15 50. St. Rose, $15. Sonoma, $10. St. Patrick's, San Jose, $270. St. Joseph's, $100. St. Mary's, $100. Gilroy, $100. Agnew's Church, $20. Santa Clara, $20. St. Joseph's, $20. Santa Cruz, $20. Hollister, $20. Mt. Hamilton, $20. Mt. Carmel, $20. Berkeley, $20. Mt. St. Joseph's, $20. Alameda, $17. St. Mary's, $15. Sunol, $15. Pescadero, $15. San Antonio, $10. Total, $2,756 30.

AN IMPORTANT CATHOLIC CHARITY

The manager of the Boys' Catholic Directory in Philadelphia, Mr. Thomas Kelly, has been at work for the last two years, thanks to the munificent gift of Mr. Peter Cooper, of New York, to have the Catholic Directory, which has been published annually for the last 40 years, distributed in the state of Ohio. The expense of distribution was about $70 50. This example is worthy of imitation by the Catholic Directory, which is published annually in the state of California, and in this regard it is but fitting that the Catholic Directory be selected for the location of an institution of this character. Already several of the Right Reverend Bishops, who are to form the faculty of professors, are expected to arrive, and the strongest enthusiasm regarding the curriculum of studies to be pursued and the best books which will be used. The building stands back a short distance from the main road which it faces. It is 100 feet long by 40 feet wide; it stories in height. Entering through the vestibule the first room on the right is the reception parlor opposite which is the apartment of the Rib Superior, adjacent to which are two large class rooms, and at the extreme end is a spacious library and lecture hall. The light of the sanctum in this story is lit from three windows, and is furnished in the all the apartments. On the second floor are to be found the dormitories for the students, and a community room. At the extreme end of the corridor are located the dormitories. The prospect from the windows on this floor is very fine, and the view of the ocean is very good. The third floor is devoted to the upper story of the building, but means have been taken to accommodate about forty students. The cost of the building, all in all, will be used for starting purposes.

The school is located on the first floor adjacent to the rear entrance, and is very neatly furnished.

At the rear of the main building, connected by a covered passage way, is the Convent, which building to be used as the dining hall, kitchen, etc. The Convent is a very neat, and, we understand, has been erected a trifle capable of holding about 100 persons, but means are being taken to enlarge the building. This very commodious building is furnished with the beauty and comfort of studious.

The Sisters of the Fathers to lay out the grounds in this country to say whether in Europe, and have interspersed with walks for the use of the pupils. Ample provision for gymnastic exercise in the open air, and when this work is completed it will be pronounced by the ecclesiastical seminary that for beauty of surrounding and general comfort and convenience accommodations will compare favorably with any institution of learning of a similar character in any portion of the Union.

COLLECTION FOR THE HOLY FATHER.

The following sums represent the several amounts received from the different churches throughout the Archdiocese for the Hat for Father Colombat, $476.50. St. Patrick's, $108. St. Mary's, $200. Sacred Heart, $200. Sacramento, $130. St. Francis, $130. St. Joseph's, $100. St. Mary's, $100. Oakland, $100. Alameda, $100. Petaluma, $100. Benicia, $100 20. Immaculate Conception, $100. Santa Rosa, $100. Healdsburg, $80. San Leandro, $75. St. Peter's, $50. Cloverdale, $50. Cotati, $50. Dixon, $50. Jackson, $50. Sonoma, $50. Stockton, $50. Oakland, $40. Napa, $35. Ukiah, $35. Petaluma, $30. Santa Clara, $30. Jackson, $25. Healdsburg, $15 50. St. Rose, $15. Sonoma, $10. St. Patrick's, San Jose, $270. St. Joseph's, $100. St. Mary's, $100. Gilroy, $100. Agnew's Church, $20. Santa Clara, $20. St. Joseph's, $20. Santa Cruz, $20. Hollister, $20. Mt. Hamilton, $20. Mt. Carmel, $20. Berkeley, $20. Mt. St. Joseph's, $20. Alameda, $17. St. Mary's, $15. Sunol, $15. Pescadero, $15. San Antonio, $10. Total, $2,756 30.

AN IMPORTANT CATHOLIC CHARITY

The manager of the Boys' Catholic Directory in Philadelphia, Mr. Thomas Kelly, has been at work for the last two years, thanks to the munificent gift of Mr. Peter Cooper, of New York, to have the Catholic Directory, which has been published annually for the last 40 years, distributed in the state of Ohio. The expense of distribution was about $70 50. This example is worthy of imitation by the Catholic Directory, which is published annually in the state of California, and in this regard it is but fitting that the Catholic Directory be selected for the location of an institution of this character.

MONITOR MENTION.

Rev. H. Martial, of Gnoumenpulle, Cotma, died on November 26. R. I. P.

Rev. J. Hake, of Jefferson, Wis., died on Thursday, December 21. R. I. P.

Read the lovely poem from a new political contributor on the second page.

Rev. Father Sorin has the honor of being the first priest in America to chronicle the news of the marriage of Joan of Arc.

On the eighth page will be found a very interesting article on the beginning of the Church in the Indian Territory.

On Saturday, Feb. 3, will be the 22nd anniversary of Rev. Father Gilmary Shea, Bishop of Hippo Valley.

Rev. Francis Bonnier, pastor of the Church, Salmon Falls, N. Y., for several years, died recently of heart disease. R. I. P.

A convention is called for next Sunday afternoon at 2 o'clock, at Irish-American Hall, to make arrangements for the celebration of St. Patrick's Day.

Easter Sunday falls upon the 25th of March this year. It will not occur so early a date again until 1891, when it will fall upon the same day as at present.

A musical and literary entertainment will be given at the Hall of Mercy's Academy, First street near Harrison, on Sunday Tuesday night, Feb. 4. The tickets are only 50c.

"A Friend of Sister Mary Francis Clare," has sent $2.00 to the MONITOR to help to erect the Convent at Kirwin, which we will forward to the Sisters of Mercy, Sacramento, to be used for the same purpose.

We are glad to see great obligations to Mr. F. Keating and Mrs. Lansdon, of Haywards, for the use of the Hall for the Sunday School, and promising a score of new subscribers is that lively town, which is so near us.

Archbishop Purcell on last Christmas Day gave to the Catholic Orphans of New York the ruling a fund for the relief of the Archbishop's Ward, which was opened, namely: John Lynch, Ellen Lynch, Mary Lynch, Catherine Lynch, Annie Lynch, Mrs. Bridget Lynch, Mrs. Ellen Lynch, Mrs. Mary Lynch, Mrs. Catherine Lynch, Mrs. Mary

Saving the Train

The usual crowd of autumn liars were gathered together in the store, occupying all the grocery seats—the only genus re-mains that the proprietor took no pride in—when a little, bow-legged, weather-beaten individual smoked in by the back door, and drank into a dark corner.

"That's him," said an ungrammatical bummer with a green patch over his left eye.

"Who is it?" asked several at once.

"Why, the chap who saved a train from being wrecked," was the reply.

"Come tell us about it," they demanded, as the small man crouched in the darkness, as if unwilling that his heroic deed should be brought out under the blazing kerosene lamp.

After much persuasion, reinforced by a stiff horn of applejack, he began:

"It was just such a night as this—bright and clear—and I was going home down the track, when, right before me, across the rails lay a great beam. There it was. Pale and ghostly as a lifeless body, and, light as it appeared, I had not the power to move it. A sudden rumble and roar told me the night express was thundering down, and soon would reach the fatal spot. Nearer and nearer it approached, till, just as the conductor was about lifting one, I sprang aside, placed myself between the obstruction and the train, and the train flew on unharmed."

The silence was so dense for a moment that one might have heard a dew drop. Presently somebody asked:

"What did you do with the beam?"

"I didn't do it," he replied; "I let it touched me."

"Well," persisted the questioner, "if you couldn't lift it, and didn't touch it, how in the deuce did the train get over it?"

"Why, don't you see?" said the unfortunate man, as he rose from his seat and sailed towards the door, "the beam was a moonbeam, and I stepped on that the shadow of my body could lie upon, and—"

Bang! flew a him against the door; and if it had struck the body of the unfortunate hero, there would have been a much bigger green spot frescoed on the panel.

Forty Years Experience of an Old Nurse.

Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup is the prescription of one of the best F nale nurses in the United States, and has been used for forty years with never-failing success by millions of mothers for their children. It relieves the child from pain, such dysentery and diarrhœa, relieves the bowels, and wind colic. By giving health to the child it rests the mother. Price twenty-five cents a bottle.

A Change of Locale.

Mrs. Mitchell Maybe has removed to 108, 106 and 110 Pinkney building, and will resume her business Monday, December 10th, in vocal music, elocution, oratory and the drama. Take elevator.

Ask for Ammen's Cough Syrup.

Large bottle, $1.00—Ammen's Cough Syrup.

It cured my cold—Ammen's Cough Syrup.

Honor and Friendship Patronize Him.

We recommend our readers to patronize Thos. H. Dennis, 1105 Market street, opposite New City Hall, the cheapest and best place in the city for interior decoration in frescoing and artistical paper hangings, fine window shades, house painting, whitewashing and tinting, neatly done. Give him a call and be convinced.

Stymyer Bros.—Another Good Testimonial.

PERRY, A. T., December 29, 1882.

The bell (00) arrived in good condition. Every one says it is the best bell in the territory, and unbroken. It has a splendid tone and great volume. Yours truly, W. JONES SCOTT.

Lisbon, Iles & Co., San Francisco, agents for Stymyer Bell Foundry, 1003 and 1005 Market street, San Francisco.

Superior Gumbrel.

Improving safe, etc.; all fast famous permanently cured. No knowledge necessary, or false pretences. Charge very moderate. A trial solicited. Dr. Lynch, the noted celebrated and renowned foot surgeon, 12 Geary street, Office hours, 9 a. m. to 9 p. m. The Dr. Geary at half price.

Nothing but intrinsic merit can account for the enormous sales of Emil Frank's Hamburg Tea, the delicious drink which is causing universal buzz. The reason is obvious to all. It is a purely vegetable preparation, safe, and yet efficacious in its action carrying off all impurities from the system, and imparting a glow and vigor, which only those who have used it can appreciate.

Do not delay using Ammen's Cough Syrup.

Buy 50 cent bottle—Ammen's Cough Syrup.

Ashes are large bottle—Ammen's Cough Syrup.

—John Smith, Wood and Coal dealer, 223 Post street, San Francisco. Fined $50 for selling less than the price of a cord established by the legal measure. Don't be imposed upon, but buy your wood from a man who tries to break down a combination to rob a poor man.

—We recommend our readers to patronize the Best Dyeing and Scouring Works, Bush St., near Montgomery, the finest street, between Hotel Lick and Palace Hotel, Office, 638 Market St. Labor Every one should call at Kinds at living rates.

—John T. Scott, Cleaning and Dyeing Works, office 106 Post street.—Old and faded suits refreshed and made as good as new by the Scott Dyeing Works.

Mishleen on Ammen's Cough Syrup.

Many Druggists recommend and try to sell what pays them the largest profit. Be not be deceived. Ask for Ammen's Cough Syrup. Take no other. The sale is larger than all others merits. You can buy a sample bottle for 15 cents, and test it yourself, regular bottles at 25 cents and $1.00. Ask to see larger size and read the wrapper.

—Having been appointed sole agents of the Pacific Coast for the Steele Hip Corset we are prepared to supply the public with same. It is specially adapted for stout ladies. All ladies who have suffered from side bones breaking in her corset will appreciate the Steele Hip, as the defect is entirely obviated in this corset. Made of all white bone and price only $1. Sold only by Roth Bros., Mitchell Bros. Corset can be too stamped with their name. All other leading brands of corsets always kept in stock.

—Our readers who need that household article, Coal, will do well to send a postal card to W. E. Tilley & Co., 130 Ellis street, where their wagons will be supplied at lowest prices and full weight besides; we speak from experience.

—If a set for teeth—warranted as good as new—made, inserted, $5. Dr. Thomas, Dentist, 935 Market street.

—Removed—Dr. F. V. Hawkins, Residence, No. 2033 California street, office, No. 22 Geary street; office hours, 12 to 3 p. m.

—Our numerous readers in the northern part of the city will see in advertising Boots and Shoes from P. Connor, S. W. corner Union street and Montgomery ave., A full line of United Workingmen and Schoebith's goods always on stock at lower rates than can be bought in the heart of the city. Custom work a specialty.

—"Tell Sanitarium" 1020 Market street, S. F. Thermo Electric, Vapor, Hot Air, Russian and all useful baths. Masseur, Galvanic Electric Magnetism, Health Lift Spirometer, etc. Cancer, Consumption, Bright's Disease, Dyspepsia, Rheumatism, Nervous Exhaustion, and all chronic and incurable cases a specialty. Drs. D. C. & Ellen D. Moore.

Thrilling in Throat—Ammen's Cough Syrup.

Cough—Ammen's Cough Syrup.

Colds—Ammen's Cough Syrup.

MISCELLANEOUS.

ROOFS [TIN! ASPHALTUM!!] Five Rounds to Lower Rates. Old Roofs Repaired. And GUARANTEED when so Repaired. MY MAXIM—Quick Work and Low Prices. Orders in rear left office. H. G. FISKE.

TELEPHONE Cab and Carriage COMPANY.

STABLES:
1324 and 1326 Market St.
PRINCIPAL STANDS: S. F. Ferry Depot and CENTRAL STAND, 5 Kearny St.

The Latest Styles of
CARRIAGES, CABS & COUPES
Always in attendance at the Stables and Stands.

Any coachman, or porter of drivers, if reported to owner and manager, P. A. DOLAN, at the Stand or Stables, will be discharged if just and satisfaction guaranteed.

RATES OF FARE.

CABS AND COUPES.

Single Fare	$ .50
Per Hour	1.00
Parties, 2 to 4 each way	1.00
Calls Hours and Return	2.00
Per Mile	2.00
Funerals	5.00

HACKS AND CARRIAGES.

Per Hour	$1.50
Calls Hours and Return	3.00
Parties, 2 to 4 each way	3.00
Theatres, etc.	2.00
Funerals	6.00

To all regular orders a reduction from the above rates will be made, by applying to the owner.

P. A. DOLAN.

Telephone No.

MURPHY, GRANT & CO.,
IMPORTERS OF DRY GOODS,
And Sole Agents for the Pacific Coast
—OF THE—
Veuve Xavier Jouvin Kid Gloves
Dash and Seamless Hose, San Francisco.

P. J. CASSIN & CO.,
—SUCCESSORS OF—Pure Kentucky Bourbon WHISKIES.
—AGENTS FOR—
O. K. Golden Plantation Whiskey,
And wholesale dealers in Foreign and Domestic Wines and Liquors.
422 BATTERY ST. NEAR cor. Washington
Opposite Post Office, San Francisco, Cal.

On and after Sunday, October 22, 1882, Trains will run as follows:

SUNDAY EXCURSIONS.

10.15 A. M. (Sundays only) via San Rafael from Market street wharf, for Fulton and Way Points. Round trip tickets to Milleri, Tai ro Pedro, Duncans Mills, $1 50; to Cazadero, $2 50; to Sonoma, $1 25; Santa Rosa, $2; to Fulton and Healdsburg, $2 50. Return to San Francisco at 3.05 p. m.

ARTHUR HUGHES, Gen. Manager. PETER J. McGLYNN, Gen. Pass. & Tkt. Agent.

NOTICE OF REMOVAL.

JERRY LOWNEY & SON

HAVE REMOVED THEIR CARRIAGE FACTORY 11 from corner of Howard and Eighth streets, to 426 Bush street, all kinds of carriages, wagons or express made to order, and repairing promptly attended to.

HALL'S SAFE AND LOCK COMPANY.
—RESTORATION OF—
Hall's Patent & Fire Burglar Proof Safes,
311 and 313 California Street.
Safes made to stand alone and other fireproof hand safes always on hand for sale cheap.

THE GREAT CONVENIENCE
OF THE NEW YORK CATHOLIC AGENCY is that to the office any kind of ecclesiastical organs or sacred music to order, and repairing promptly attended to.

THOMAS D. EGAN,
New York Catholic Agency, 36 Barclay street, and 32 Park Place.

BOOTS AND SHOES.

BOOTS AND SHOES.

JOHN SULLIVAN,
NORTHEAST COR. OF BATTERY AND JACKSON streets, office to make to order and ready Patent Calf Leather BOOTS, as fresh ..... $6 50 to $8
Calfskin Leather Boots $6 00
French Calf Oxford Ties $4 50
Calfskin $4 00
Boys' and Children's Boots and Shoes made to order. Persons residing out of the city can send their measurement or Twelve Dollars or more, will be allowed receipt of boot per mail, or as to make the express charges light. I sell Boots and Shoes of MY OWN MANUFACTURE ONLY. Boots and Shoes sent C. O. D. Positively one price.

WINES, LIQUORS, ETC.

NATIVE WINES.

Gem Bottle	From 50 to 50 cents.
Half Bottle	50 to 75 cents.
By the Gallon	50 cts. to $1.25.

Fifteen year Foreign Wines and Brandies by the gallon, sold at moderate prices.

J. C. HABERLING, 116 Dupont Street.

PROFESSIONAL CARDS

M. COONEY,
Attorney and Counsellor at Law.
605 Kearny street, cor. Pine,
Rooms 3 and 4 ..... San Francisco.

JOHN M. BURNETT,
Attorney and Counsellor at Law.
Rooms 1 and 2,
327 Montgomery street, cor. Sacramento
San Francisco.

J. D. SULLIVAN,
ATTORNEY-AT-LAW,
Rooms 5, 6, and 16.
324 MONTGOMERY ST. ..... San Francisco.

A. H. LOUGHBOROUGH.
Law Office,
N. W. Cor. Sacramento and Montgomery Streets.

M. C. HASSETT,
Attorney and Counsellor at Law,
HAS REMOVED HIS OFFICE TO
PHELAN'S BUILDING,
Rooms 110 and 111 Take Elevator.

LAW OFFICE
—OF—
HENRY PERRY
230 Montgomery Street,
Rooms 12 and 13, SAN FRANCISCO.

WM. W. BISHOP,
Attorney at Law,
324 PINE STREET,
ROOMS 1, 2, AND 3. Dividend Building.

Piano, Singing, Guitar, Violin, Accordeon and Banjo
TAUGHT AT MODERATE PRICES BY
MRS. H. BENNETT,
145 Fourth St., near Howard.

MISCELLANEOUS.

MRS. JEROME DEASY,
CENTRAL
Floral Depot,
736 Market St.,
San Francisco ..... Cal.
Bouquets, Crosses and Cut Flowers constantly on hand.
Funeral and Wedding Decorations Made to Order.

RIO PAY in all our Rubber Printing Stamps. See plan free. TAYLOR BROS. & CO., Cleveland, O.

Headquarters for the Manufactory of all kinds of

Silk and Bunting Flags
ROSETTES, REGALIAS, BANNERS.
Gold and Silver Trimmings, Wholesale and Retail.
B. PANGALE,
638 Washington and 207 Howard Street.

RAZORS!
FOR $1,000
I WILL MAKE A BETTER RAZOR AND HONE OF THEM to the same time than any man IN THE WORLD

My razors make guaranteed	$2
My Guard Razor warranted not to cut the finch while shaving	2
Good English Razors	1 50
Best English Razors	1 50

Sent C. O. D. or by mail.

M. PRICE,
418 Kearny Street.
Grinding and Repairing.

PHILADELPHIA BREWERY.
JOHN WIELAND - - - PROPRIETOR
SECOND STREET, NEAR FOLSOM,
SAN FRANCISCO.
Amount of Beer sold in 1881, 39,182 barrels.

BANKING HOUSES.

Jos. A. Donohoe, San Francisco. | Hughes Knox, New York.

DONOHOE, KELLY & CO.
SAN FRANCISCO.
EUGENE, KELLY & CO.,
NEW YORK.
BANKERS.
EXCHANGE ON
NEW YORK, LONDON, AND BANK IRELAND (Dublin),
Payable at all the Branches
AND IN EVERY COUNTY TOWN IN IRELAND.

MISCELLANEOUS.

TEACHER OF VOCAL AND INSTRUMENTAL MUSIC.
Pupil of Henry Herz,
Room 119, - - - 24 Ann's Buildings

OIL PAINTING, FRESCOING AND DECORATING.
J. BROUSSOUD,
217 Stockton Street, S. F.
FRESCOES, DECORATIONS, AND STAINED GLASS a designer. Church work a specialty. Particular attention given to the painting of religious subjects and designs.
ESTABLISHED 1864.

J. COONEY,
PRACTICAL
Painter and Whitener,
SIGNS NEATLY EXECUTED.
NO. 113 FOURTH STREET,
San Francisco, Cal.

W. D. S. HARRINGTON,
BOOK SELLER, BOOK BINDER,
Blank Book Manufacturer AND PRINTER.
509 CLAY STREET,
Above Sansome ..... SAN FRANCISCO

MUSIC, MAGAZINES, ILLUSTRATED WORKS, ETC. Bound in Best Style at the lowest cash prices. Weekly or monthly payments received. No extra charge.

THE BEST PLACE IN THE CITY —TO BUY—GROCERIES, TEA & COFFEE
—AT THE—
LOWEST MARKET PRICES FOR CASH.

Extra Family Mixed Tea, per lb	50c
Colored Japan Tea, per lb	60c
Extra Fine S. S. Tea, per lb	75c
Best O. O. Java Coffee roasted, per lb	30c
Best Mocha Coffee, ground, roasted, per lb	35c
Best Costa Rica, roasted, per lb	25c
Mocha Costa Rica, ground, roasted, per lb	30c
Best Sacramento Floor, per bbl	$4 50
Best Mint, per month per lb	50c
20 lb. sack Salt, extra fine	50c
Eagle Chocolate, per lb	25c

SUGARS AT REFINERY RATES.
Rice, Sagoand Tapioca, 17 lbs for $1
—AT—
824 Third Street, near Folsom.
O. M. NICHUALS & CO.

THE CATHOLIC
Mutual Beneficial ASSOCIATION
—OF THE—
Archdiocese of San Francisco.
President - - Rev. J. B. McNally.
PRESENTS A PLAN OF LIFE INSURANCE FOR Catholics that should be endorsed by all practical people. It is the most method of Life Insurance extant, and is open to a Catholic from 18 to 55 years of age. Archbishop Alemany and nearly all the priests of the archdiocese hat. Information, Circulars, etc., will be sent by Leo Lynch the Historical Hall, and the officers of the Association are administrated with the most right among the office of the association has been removed to 24 Montgomery street (under the Occidental Hotel where Secretary will be in attendance every evening (except Sundays) from 7 to 10 o'clock, for whom all communications should be addressed in the meantime. Written communications should be addressed to EDWARD GILSON, Secretary,
SAFE AND ECONOMICAL
2128 Jones Street.

Marble Works.
Monuments & Headstones
—IN—
Marble and Scotch Granite.
MANTLES & GRATES.
Marble and Encaustic Tiles.
Our Designs cost as applying for them
W. H. McCORMICK,
207 MARKET ST. - - bet. Fourth and Fifth

MISCELLANEOUS.

John Kavanagh,
MERCHANT TAILOR,
6 New Montgomery Street.
PALACE HOTEL, S. F.
The Making of Clergymens' Cassocks a Specialty

N. SWEENY,
MERCHANT TAILOR
41 Second street,
Opposite Jewish Synagogue ..... San Francisco
Cassocks and Clerical Clothing a Specialty.

M. FITZPATRICK
—IS—
The BOSS Tailor,
Of the Pacific Coast.
36 1-2 FOURTH STREET,
Corner of Howard ..... San Francisco

Go there for your CLOTHES. You are sure to be suited and don't you forget it.

THOMAS DRADY,
MERCHANT TAILOR
No. 6 Third Street,
Near Market, S. F.

JOHN HICKEY,
Merchant Tailor,
36 Fourth street,
Between Market and Mission streets ..... San Francisco.

Business Suits to order from	$20
Pants " "	5
Fine Dress Suits "	35
Black Beeskin Pants "	7

DENNIS REDMOND,
MERCHANT TAILOR,
No. 506 Hayes street.
Perfect fit and good work guaranteed.

BELLS ETC.

MENEELY BELL FOUNDRY.
Celebrated known to the public since 1826. Bells for Churches, Schools, Factories and other bells; also Chimes and Peals.
MENEELY & CO., WEST TROY, N. Y.

BUCKEYE BELL FOUNDRY.
Manufacture Church Chimes and Peals, Fire Alarm Bells, Farms, Factories, etc. VERY CATALOGUE FREE. VANDUZEN & TIFT, Cincinnati, O.

BLYMYER MANUFACTURING CO. BELLS
Church, School, Factory, Fire Alarm Bells, Chimes and Peals. Prices and catalogue free. CINCINNATI, O.

LINFORTH, RICE & CO.,
Sole Agents, 205 and 207 Market Street, S. F.

E. SOULE,
—MANUFACTURER OF—WAGONS, TRUCKS
AND Agricultural Implements,
BLACKSMITHING REPAIRING, ETC.,
Done to order at short notice.
Cor. 4th and Bryant Sts.,
SAN FRANCISCO.

P. GALLAGHER & SON,
—DEALERS IN—
POULTRY AND GAME.
STALLS 1 and 2,
QUEEN CITY MARKET,
1158 Market Street.
Opposite Sixth.

LA GRANDE LAUNDRY,
PRINCIPAL OFFICE,
646 MARKET STREET.
BRANCHES,
1132 Market and 212 Dupont Sts.
LAUNDRY,
18th St., bet. Folsom and Howard, S. F. Cal.

W. A. HAMMOND,
Watchmaker and Jeweler,
No. 4 Sixth Street,
(Second door from Market.)
Watches Cleaned, $1. Glasses, 10c.

AGENTS WANTED everywhere to sell Wing Machine and Attachments. Family Rights for sale. Agents wanted everywhere to sell Family Rights. It will last a great variety of Recipes, Receipts, Formulas, Secrets, Mysteries, Business, Social, Sporting, Medical, Mechanical, Manufacturing, Chemical, Dyeing, Tanning, Soap, Perfumery, Cosmetics, Wine, Cider, Beer, Candy, Ice Cream, Baking Powder, Machine Oil, Stamping, Gold Pens and Pencils, Gold Paint, Gold Leaf, Bronzing, Gilding, Silvering, Plating, Japanning, Varnishing, Painting, Glass Staining, Etching, Engraving, Photography, Lithography, Printing, Bookbinding, Paper Ruling, Stereotyping, Electrotyping, Gunsmithing, Locksmithing, Tinsmithing, Coppersmithing, Blacksmithing, Carpentering, Cabinet Making, Turning, Jewelry, Watchmaking, Engraving, Etc., Etc., Etc. Sent by mail, postpaid, for $1. Address, Wing Manufacturing Co., 102 Fulton St., New York.

WATCHES CLEANED, C. S. WEBSTER, J. A. CRAPSEY.

N. Gray & Co.,
UNDERTAKERS,
641 Sacramento Street,
Nr. Wash ..... San Francisco

EMBALMING.
Metallic Burial Cases and Caskets

LITHOGRAPHERS.
P. E. DOUGHERTY & CO.,
STEAM
BOOK AND JOB PRINTERS,
412 Commercial St., and 411 Clay St.
Between Sansome and Battery.

JOHN A. LENNON,
Wholesale Grocer,
AND IMPORTER OF
Choice Brands
Japan and English Breakfast Tea.
Fine Teas and Fine Cigars.
Nos. 213 and 217 Clay Street ..... San Francisco

IMMENSE REDUCTION IN PRICES
FOR THE NEXT 90 DAYS!
—AT—JOE POHEIM'S!
THE TAILOR,
724 Market and 203 Montgomery St.

Suits formerly made to order, $25, Reduced to $20
" " " 30, " 25
" " " 45, " 35
Fine French Cassimere Pants to order, from $8 up.

By all means call and see Joe Poheim before buying elsewhere. You will get a stylish cut and the best of workmanship. Perfect fit guaranteed or no sale. Just received a large assortment of the latest styles Woolens for Fall and Winter wear. Simple rules for self-measurement sent free to any address on application to

JOE POHEIM,
724 MARKET
—AND—203 Montgomery St., San Francisco

R. W. THEOBALD,
IMPORTER AND DEALER IN ALL KINDS OF

FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC COALS
23 and 27 CLAY STREET, SAN FRANCISCO.
Connected with the Pacific Bell Telephone Exchange. Orders sent through this medium will receive prompt attention.

HARVEY'S
HOT-WATER RADIATOR.

SECURES A MILD UNIFORM TEMPER in air without the extravagant waste of fuel or litter of open grates; a most healthful atmosphere without the dry, parching air so notorious of the hot-air furnace or stove; a noxious diffusion of heat without the leakage or cracking of the steam system.

For Information or Descriptive Circulars send free.

NO. 213
MISSION ST.
Bet. Main and Beale. SAN FRANCISCO.

WHAT WILL THE WEATHER BE TO-MORROW
O Pool's Signal Service Barometer

Will tell you and indicate every change of weather. It is a perfect barometer, and from a glass tube, is not easily broken, and is not affected by the HORRORS OF A BLAZING HOTEL.

[CONCLUDED FROM FIRST PAGE.]

could be heard screams and heartrending moans, as if many poor unfortunates were in the pages of death. In all probability the bodies of three persons be are lying in the hall are buried beneath the ruins.

AN OLD MAN'S HOUSEHOLD STOOT.

James Gillard, formerly steward of the hotel, says, "I was in the building at five minutes past 4 o'clock, and asked the night clerk if my boys, Willie and Walter were out. The clerk said all the help were out; so I then turned my attention to the guests, knowing many of them. On the second floor I recognized Mr. William E. Crosser and wife and helped them out. I returned and assisted James Livingston and Judge Pratt out. Then I went to the Michigan street side of the house, and assisted another man across the alley. Then I found out that my boys were lost. The last words my little boy said to me but night was, 'Good by, papa; to-morrow is pay-day.' My old man was completely over-come when he finished telling his story, and went away sobbing.

HOW THE STUDENTS WERE KILLED.

John Gilbert, comedian, of the Michigan Palace Gardens, says, he jumped from the third-story window with his wife in his arms. Both his arms were broken and he was thrown a window above and fell on Mr. and Mrs. Gilbert. The united weight of both was crushed the wife to death. The actor's head was cut and bruised in a frightful manner and he was placed upon a bed in an omnibus state and conveyed to the Plank-ington House. The death is immediately expected.

THE DEADLY FOG PLAYS.

Since daylight this morning a large gang of laborers have been at work hunting for the victims of the fire. The fire-department is engaged pulling down remnants of walls. The police report that two more children have fully fifty people are buried in the ruins, including a number of people of color, reported to be in the hotel.

DEAD BODIES IN A HEAP.

At the morgue at 9 o'clock sight was behold. The two small boys were seen filled with bodies tightly packed and then the bodies of girls, women and children were laid on the stone flags almost in a heap, as the poice passed the bodies there were three and four at a time. At 6:30 several bodies were laid down. The place was looked up between the trips of the patrol wagon and therefore no accurate account was possible. The foor of the general office in Central Police Station was turned into a bazaar, corpses totally burned.

WINDOWS THEMSELVES IN THE BLAZING HOTEL.

Mr. Gillard, formerly steward of the hotel, says, "I was in the building at five minutes past 4 o'clock, and asked the night clerk if my boys, Willie and Walter were out. The clerk said all the help were out; so I then turned my attention to the guests, knowing many of them. On the second floor I recognized Mr. William E. Crosser and wife and helped them out. I returned and assisted James Livingston and Judge Pratt out. Then I went to the Michigan-street side of the house, and assisted another man across the alley. Then I found out that my boys were lost. The last words my little boy said to me but night was, 'Good by, papa; to-morrow is pay-day.' My old man was completely over-come when he finished telling his story, and went away sobbing.

HOW THE STUDENTS WERE KILLED.

John Gilbert, comedian, of the Michigan Palace Gardens, says, he jumped from the third-story window with his wife in his arms. Both his arms were broken and he was thrown a window above and fell on Mr. and Mrs. Gilbert. The united weight of both was crushed the wife to death. The actor's head was cut and bruised in a frightful manner and he was placed upon a bed in an omnibus state and conveyed to the Plank-ington House. The death is immediately expected.

DEAD BODIES FOR THE MORGUE.

Since daylight this morning a large gang of laborers have been at work hunting for the victims of the fire. The fire-department is engaged pulling down remnants of walls. The police report that two more children are fully fifty people are buried in the ruins, including a number of people of color, reported to be in the hotel.

A review list of the dead is as follows: Allen Johnson, of Milwaukee; Mrs. Jones, wife of Milwaukee; Mrs. Dr. Powers, of Milwaukee; Walter Scott, of Milwaukee; J. W. Van Loon, of Albany; H. L. Mac John Gilbert, of Chicago; J. J. Jones, of Milwaukee; J. Michael Bach, of Milwaukee; Mary Holand, of Mahwaqo; Mary Mahlkow, of Milwaukee; Bessie Bowe, of Milwaukee; Cotilia Waldercof, of Milwaukee; Augusta Gane, of Milwaukee; Bridget O'Connor, of Beaverdam, Wis; Ben Flanagan, of Waukesha; Michael Burke, of Appleton; Mrs. Dr. Hale, of Milwaukee; Mary Anderson, of Dupletown; Julia Murphy, of Milwaukee.

The missing are: Of the guests—R. Burns, Detroit; Miss Libbie Chollin, Milwaukee; Miss E. Mason, Milwaukee; Capt. Geo. F. Vose, Milwaukee; L. W. Stern, Philadelphia; Mrs. Mina Brown, Allegheny, Pa.; John H. Foley, Milwaukee; J. H. Chaffee, Chicago; Bradford Kellogg, Milwaukee; Louis Smith, Milwaukee; Quinlan Brown, St. Louis; Dan Marsh, Milwaukee; Charles Kenny, of the Tow-Thomas Company; Jay Hall, Laporte, Ind.; Geo. Ward, Stockbridge, Wis.; E. Goggin, Milwaukee; W. D. Rowell, Freeport, Ill.; Wm. Smith, Chicago; B. G. Butler and family, Milwaukee; James A. Sipe, Milwaukee; Mrs. Dr. Powers and Miss Chollin; Wyman S. Palmer, Oconomowoc.

Of the servants missing—Lizzie Kelly, Mary and Maggie Owens, George Lowry—all of Milwaukee; Mrs. Hughes and Nora Finnigan, Pewaukee; J. Schoenbower, Milwaukee; Miss Mary Kelly, Milwaukee; Conner Augusta Tyler, Jane Conay, Eliza Ann Ellis, Mrs. Dr. Hale, Julia Meahan, Martha Schlossmaier—all of Milwaukee; Louise Hunt, Oconomowoc; Anni Gaines, Mary Smith, Pee-Gomery, Chas. Collins, Genie Frederick, Tom Conay, Sam Murray and Ida Dunlap—all of Milwaukee.

The Saints and their Religious Orders.

A Grand Galaxy of Holy Men and Women.

CANONIZED SAINTS NOT IN THE CALENDAR OF THE CHURCH.

A Learned Disquisition on Hagiology.

We call from a recent issue of the London Tablet the following interesting chapter upon the hagiology of the Church which we be read with great interest by our readers:

While the Church has been celebrating several centenaries of her Saints—St. Benedict, St. Francis, St. Teresa, St. Thomas Aquinas, St. Thomas of Hereford—and especially now while the Pope, in repeated utterances, is recommending the faithful to join the Third Order of St. Francis, a little hagiology may prove interesting to many of our readers. Some have asked, what particular claim in sanctity have St. Francis and his Orders upon our consideration and good will. We shall presently see. It is difficult to ascertain in many cases to what particular Order of Institute the Religious who lived prior to the 16th century, and who are reverenced as saints, belonged. First because so fashionable, in the later sense of the word, existed in early ages. Each religious house stood by itself, and sometimes a house, even founded by a great Saint, adopted after his death a rule, generally that of St. Basil in the East, and either that of St. Benedict or of St. Augustine in the West. The celebrated Abbey of Holyrood is an example of this, which figures in history as a Benedictine, while St. Columba, who founds the founder, was not a Benedictine. The same may be said of Iona and St. Columba, and of various others.

Secondly, Religious houses sometimes passed from one rule to another, so that there are instances in which two or three different Orders can claim Saints as their confirers. We have an instance of this in the great Pope St. Agatho, who is claimed by the Benedictines and by the Basilians; and in the Spanish Saint Leander, Isidore, and Ildephonsus, who are claimed by the Benedictines and by the Canons Regular; and in also the man with St. Cyril of Jerusalem, claimed by the Carmelites and by the Basilians, and of others. A more recent example of this is St. Clare of Montefalco, formerly canonized, who, having made her convent, is now claimed by the Augustinians and by the Franciscans; the real truth being that she was not a member of either Order, but that the larger portion of her community, after her death, adopted the Augustian rule, while the smaller portion adopted that of St. Clare.

Thirdly, such Order has adopted certain Saints, who were relatives of their founders, or had intimate connection with them, that these Saints are regarded as part of that Order, to which they could never have lived. An instance of this is the numerous family of St. Basil, some 18 or 20 Saints, who, with the exception of St. Macrina, were not Basilians. Neither is St. Monica, the mother of St. Augustine, an Augustinian.

Let us now come to the Saints belonging to the different Orders.

First there are the Basilians: Some 50 Saints are members of this Order, or adopted the rule. Of Western Basilians we have Saint Nilus, the founder of Abbey of the Greeks, born at Syracuse, St. John Theosiotes in Calabria, the St. Vitus and Bartholomew, of Grotta Ferrata, the great Martyr, St. Josaphat, Archbishop of Polotsk.

The Canons Regular: Leaving aside St. Augustine and other Saints whom they claim as their own, we have about 20 canonized, of whom St. Ubaldus, St. Norbert, and St. Laurence Justinian are venerated in the Universal Church. St. William, Abbot of Eschild in Denmark; St. William, Archbishop of York; St. Laurence O'Toole, Archbishop of Dublin; St. Ulric, Bishop of Bringham; St. Thomas of Hereford; St. Bernard de Menthon; St. Sebastian of Portenzi; St. Guarino, the Cardinal of Palestrina; St. Bonom of Mainz; St. Peter Martyr St. Peter Arbuse, St. John James and Adrian of Corcum, canonized by Pius IX., are amongst the canonized Saints of this Order. St. Leo II. was also a Clerk Regular.

Benedictines: We read of thousands and hundreds of Saints of this Order, and we are convinced there are about 200 Martyrs in Spain, with the Abbot St. Boniface, and 20 Martyrs in Sicily, with St. Placid. Besides these there are some 120 or 130 canonized Martyrs—St. Benedict and St. Scholastica, St. Maur, St. Benedict the Martyr, St. Gregory of Armenia, and St. Gregory the Great, St. Gregory II., St. Boniface the Martyr, St. Leo III. and St. Leo IV., down to all the branches into which, from the 7th century, the Benedictine Order was divided. Perhaps, as we have said, not all claimed by them, as are St. Gregory III., St. Zachary and St. Paschal II., and certainly belong to them St. Augustine with all his companions of English Saints, St. Willibrord and Boniface, with all the German Dutch Saints, and St. Ansehrius, St. Bruno the Martyr; St. Otho, and St. Adalbert, with other Apostles of the Northern countries; St. Anselm, Dominic of Silos, St. Alphonsus, Bishop of Zamora, and others in Spain; St. Robert of Molesme, St. Bernard, Stephen of Grandmont and others in France. The celebrated Abbey of Holyrood is an example of this, which figures in history as a Benedictine, while St. Columba, who founds the founder, was not a Benedictine. The same may be said of Iona and St. Columba, and of various others.

Secondly, Religious houses sometimes passed from one rule to another, so that there are instances in which two or three different Orders can claim Saints as their confirers. We have an instance of this in the great Pope St. Agatho, who is claimed by the Benedictines and by the Basilians; and in the Spanish Saint Leander, Isidore, and Ildephonsus, who are claimed by the Benedictines and by the Canons Regular; and in also the man with St. Cyril of Jerusalem, claimed by the Carmelites and by the Basilians, and of others. A more recent example of this is St. Clare of Montefalco, formerly canonized, who, having made her convent, is now claimed by the Augustinians and by the Franciscans; the real truth being that she was not a member of either Order, but that the larger portion of her community, after her death, adopted the Augustian rule, while the smaller portion adopted that of St. Clare.

Thirdly, such Order has adopted certain Saints, who were relatives of their founders, or had intimate connection with them, that these Saints are regarded as part of that Order, to which they could never lived. An instance of this is the numerous family of St. Basil, some 18 or 20 Saints, who, with the exception of St. Macrina, were not Basilians. Neither is St. Monica, the mother of St. Augustine, an Augustinian.

Let us now come to the Saints belonging to the different Orders.

First there are the Basilians: Some 50 Saints are members of this Order, or adopted the rule. Of Western Basilians we have Saint Nilus, the founder of Abbey of the Greeks, born at Syracuse, St. John Theosiotes in Calabria, the St. Vitus and Bartholomew, of Grotta Ferrata, the great Martyr, St. Josaphat, Archbishop of Polotsk.

The Canons Regular: Leaving aside St. Augustine and other Saints whom they claim as their own, we have about 20 canonized, of whom St. Ubaldus, St. Norbert, and St. Laurence Justinian are venerated in the Universal Church. St. William, Abbot of Eschild in Denmark; St. William, Archbishop of York; St. Laurence O'Toole, Archbishop of Dublin; St. Ulric, Bishop of Bringham; St. Thomas of Hereford; St. Bernard de Menthon; St. Sebastian of Portenzi; St. Guarino, the Cardinal of Palestrina; St. Bonom of Mainz; St. Peter Martyr St. Peter Arbuse, St. John James and Adrian of Corcum, canonized by Pius IX., are amongst the canonized Saints of this Order. St. Leo II. was also a Clerk Regular.

Benedictines: We read of thousands and hundreds of Saints of this Order, and we are convinced there are about 200 Martyrs in Spain, with the Abbot St. Boniface, and 20 Martyrs in Sicily, with St. Placid. Besides these there are some 120 or 130 canonized Martyrs—St. Benedict and St. Scholastica, St. Maur, St. Benedict the Martyr, St. Gregory of Armenia, and St. Gregory the Great, St. Gregory II., St. Gregory III

Poetry.

[FOR THE MONITOR.]

AT THE END.

BY ELEANOR C. DONNELLY.

I.

When the end of all things comes,
What will gold or greed avail?
Pleasure? Ease? Ancestral pride?
To a dead man, stark and pale?
Hath a coffin no place at banquets?
Count their flesh its cheek with wine?
Does the worm feed through the shroud,
With its black eyes fixed on thine?
Gold and treasure,
Pomp and pleasure,
Pass like wreaths, but stiffed drama
Beat a sad, funeral measure,
When the end of all things comes.

II.

When the end of all things comes,
Where will Honor be, and Fame?
As a dead man's ear, indifferent,
Then meet other praise or blame.
Though the trumpets blare his triumphs,
Though the bards his deeds rehearse,
Crown a grinning skull with laurels,
It will only grin the worse.
Honor, glory,
Song and story,
Mock the ears of Death (death benumbs)
Ere the end of all things comes.

III.

When the end of all things comes,
Where will Honor be, and Fame?
As a dead man's ear, indifferent,
Then meet other praise or blame.
Though the trumpets blare his triumphs,
Though the bards his deeds rehearse,
Crown a grinning skull with laurels,
It will only grin the worse.
Honor, glory,
Song and story,
Mock the ears of Death (death benumbs)
Ere the end of all things comes.

[FOR THE MONITOR.]

BRIAN DORU AT CLONTARF.

BY REV. P. A. TISSAY.

Men of Erin! men of Erin! grasp the battle-axe and spear,
Chase those northern wolves before you like a herd of timorous deer!
Let their souls be taken from Heaven, down to the bottom over!
For the glory of the swords, and Erin's glory too.
WILLIE RIORDAN.

The time is fleeting, the clans are gathering! Dark Danes, the avenger's wrath, shall crush you! Dark Danes, the Irish and the Danish banner dance
In Irish lightning forks they tower! Dark Danes, fold to gain, Irish king will strike the utmost. Brian waves a lofty his sword; his left hand grasps a young
He weighs in mind the triumph and the loss. Brian, Brian, Brian Boru! Brian, Brian, Brian Boru!
Why relate usual? Erin was subject! Our sons groaned under. This very hospital day,
Our God's Good Friday, Good Friday, Good Friday
The sons grown to us, that we wish hold,
Immoral hearts should in the pulpit, Brian Boru!
And through God's all His enemy overthrew.
Oxford, N. J.

[FOR THE MONITOR.]

A PASSAGE IN THE LIFE OF ST. AUGUSTINE.

Long period St. Augustine's life the ancient years, Authority of Mathew, Mark, Luke, and John, which
Our God's representations being, thought the days,
Of Christ, the Word, the Son of God, the Word,
Thought the thought, the harder did he find
To relate the Word, the Son of God, the Word
And, as a child, struggle by reason of the Word
Of God, the Word, the Son of God, the Word
Thought the troubled soul and nowhere found repose.

Heated and feverish, then he closed his home,
Nothing remarked that he was gone,
Where the cool breezes of evening lived to cool,
Beneath a fig tree he threw himself down
And, as Augustine o'er the company with Tears, he cried out, "How long, how long, how long,
A little while! Why not now, why not Why shall I not end my life in this hour?
Why shall I not be a sinner, I, the sinner?
Why shall I not be a sinner, I, the sinner?"

He looked and saw the child a little had passed,
Hushed and whispering, "Take and read, take and read."
Our which at work the laboring fellow
Nothing remarked, but he was stopped,
The Bible, the Bible, the Bible, the Bible
Taken up, he read the Bible, the Bible
Taken up, he read the Bible, the Bible
Taken up, he read

THE MONITOR.

TWENTY-SIXTH YEAR OF PUBLICATION.

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 21, 1885.

Joseph Cook on "Romanism."

Glancing over the "lecture" which Joseph Cook delivered before a Young Men's Christian Association, in this city, as it appeared in the Golden Era last week, we noticed a reference made by the lecturer, a member of Boston to the Church, which we thought of sufficient importance to introduce to our readers. To those who do not know Joseph Cook, it is only necessary to say that he is one of those itinerant lecturers who hail from "Boston," and whose noise in the world may be likened a good deal to that made by a drum, the sounds proceeding from the hollow inside. Joseph Cook, then, is both trashy and flatulent, but he "takes" with a class of people everywhere who think more of sound than sense, and whose religious principles partake a good deal of the nature of those demonstrated by "Halleluiah" Cox, in this city, whose peculiar, practical way of utilizing his piety is thus set forth in the Chronicle of last week:—

"For a minister of the gospel, the fervency of his religious feeling reminded him the subject of "Methodist," the Rev. Henry Cox, D.D., Unitarian Pastor, Great Arch, as a peculiarly thrifty man. When Secretary of the Young Men's Christian Association, at a salary of $900 a month, he combined the business of soul insurance with that of life insurance, and when not engaged in either he took part in Republican party politics, always with an eye single to the main chance. In the time honored case, for he was appointed Custom House at a salary of $6,000 a year. All went well with the domicile for a while, and until the Unitarian and Christian Association began to grass under a heavy mortgage and the heavy incompetency and backsliding of the Pastor. The consequence had to be by the Rev. Dr. Cox, who was a man of great personal activity to the Judge hearing upon our soul's banner, but who turned the energy in the direction of several money collectors."

This man Cox is a fair sample of the sleek-haired, smooth-faced, smart-dressed Dolly Vardens who make up the "praying band" of the same order, and who, with such sounding "aliases," of course Joseph Cook is considered as a great gospel gun, because he often gets off "half cocked" without having the "fine feelings" of those false-hearted frauds who pretend to preach Christianity, while, at the same time, they are plotting and planning in their evil minds how they can rob some rich widow, or steal from the safe of their employers, or otherwise gratify their love for "gospel people" by disreputable acts of dishonesty.

With people of this calibre Joseph Cook is the jumping-jack they idolize, hence his fame in crowds to his lectures, just as they did here to listen to his highfalutin swash about "The genius of the Times," in the course of which he made the following allusion to "Romanism:"

"We are so much permeated with Christianity we may either notice it or not in the pulpit. With all the errors of America, with all its excesses, I regard the Republic as the least unsatisfactory portion of the planet I have seen. In 1860 but one in fifteen of the population of the United States was inside the evangelical churches. To-day the proportion of the Protestant Christian churches, of which population is one in five, increased. I have been in Europe twice, I have met 40 million Romanists, and I can say to you that I have found no Christianity that I think Romanists cannot be Christians under, and I have found no Romanism, (Laughter.) What assertion have I made? You will find the whole condensed in the last sentence of the opening of the monthly of St. Ignatius, published in Rome, in 1869, by Pius IX. Pontifex, I will informally translate it: 'Let the Romanists be Christians, and if its doctrine is opposed to the Christian Verities, and contrary to the Christian Gospel, let it have no Vatican, but give it a wide berth.'"

This Christianity with which howling Joe supplies "Romanism" is simply that fundamental Christianity which bank clerks, brokers, dishonest officials, defaulting trustees, and other disciples of deceit wear upon the outside of their every-day life, but which they lay aside very promptly when they fall into the hands of the police and "take up the shovel and the pick" in some Stateprison. Cant is not Christianity, because Almighty God hates that spurious of lip-service which gives Him but words, while the hearts of those who generalize upon gospel subjects are the abiding places of the devil.

Some of the most unscrupulous moneydeals, whose defalcations and dishonesty are subjects for newspaper comments every day, were once bright lights in the Christian band of whom Joseph Cook is chief bugler. Every municipality in the Union has to lament over the criminal career of some of its most trusted "Christians" who were Cook's clock of shoddy "Christianity" as church members in some congregal sect in order to cover up the corruption of their characters. Hence, such "Christianity" as that which generates Joseph boasts of is as bad as it is vague, and more to be lamented than bolded.

We sincerely thank Joseph Cook for having omitted from his enumeration of "Christians" of the character we have analyzed, "six million Romanists," because Catholics do not desire to be associated with such bad company! "Evil communication corrupts good morals," and the daily developments of the doings of this class of "Christians" proves that the devil is the foster father of the whole fraud-giant movement. But this we not Joseph's reason for renouncing connection with Romanists, as he told his hearers when they laughed like so many lunatics at his nonsensical notion to be demonstrated by the idiotic expression: "Romanism is—Romanism." And then how the vanity of jumping-jack Joseph was manifested by his gracious condescension to "fellowship" with Romanism, provided it meant something short which Barnum's Jumbo and Joseph Cook have equal intelligence!

The egotism of the average evangelical thimble-rigger is certainly refreshing. He, Joe Cook, the clown of the circus of Cant, would so humble himself as to take "Romanism" into his good graces if he thought that "Vatianism" could be left out in the cold! Clowns are generally possessed of a good deal of "cheek," but Joe Cook's assurance stops the climax of any army mule we ever read of! Who cares a rotten egg whether Joe Cook, or Joe Grimaldi, or Joe Smith, or any other charlatan of the circus or the sanctuaries of Cant refuse to recognize the Catholic Church? Such sublime sufficient assurances are only so many stones in the atmosphere of Hell. His Church requires neither cods to connect its gospel soap or clowns to attract audiences to the gospel tent. Catholic sanctuaries are the abiding places of that Christ who whipped the cooks, the clerks, and the money changers out of the Temple more than eighteen centuries before jumping-jack Joe refused to "fellowship" with the only true Christians extant on the face of God's universe.

The terms Catholic and Christian are synonymous from our standpoint, because every Catholic is a Christian—a—a follower of Christ. But every non-Catholic who calls himself a Christian cannot prove his claim to the title, because there are those among them who were never baptized, there are those among them who refuse to recognize Christ as God; there are those among them who refuse to believe in the Trinity, and there are those among them who—like Joseph Cook—prove their lack of Christianity by their want of charity—a virtue, without which, as St. Paul says, "we are nothing."

As God is above the world, so must Catholics be Catholics first and patriots afterward. It will not do—(even though as great a disciple of demagogism as Joe Cook says the contrary)—to go before the judgment seat of God with the plea that we have been "great" as Germans, or Englishmen, or Americans, because even Judas offered our Blessed Saviour the whole world if he would fall down and adore him, but we must enter into the presence of our awful Judge bearing upon our souls' banner the legend of the law of God: "I was a true Catholic; I have fought the good fight; I have kept the faith. Lord, let me enter into the regions of eternal joy."

This is the standard by which our future reward or punishment will be meted out to us, and Joe Cook, as a gospel-slinger, ought to know that nowhere in Biblical history is it recorded that men were admitted into Heaven because they were "great" as warriors, statesmen or politicians, unless their Christian belief and practice outshone in a superlative degree all their worldly valor, patriotic aspirations, or surpassing wisdom. But neither Joe Cook, nor any of the present "Christians" who applauded his shallow sophistry, ever reflect upon this fact. Their whole creed is carried in their pockets, and the Bible most often read by them is that metallic magnet known as "the almighty dollar," upon which they read their whole set of faith thus: "In God I trust—one dollar." That's the Christianity of the Cooks and the Cox's and the other ring masters of the circus of Cant, and because the Church of God goes triumphantly on its way sweeping such scruff into the sewers of civilization, these itinerant pedlers of infidelity, under the guise of gospel Christianity, think they can treat the true Church of God with scorn. But we glory in belonging to that Church which has evoked the contempt of all diabolical agents from long before Lucifer down to long-eared Joe, and we feel happy in knowing that such howling bigots can have no "fellowship" in heaven with those where frauds are frowned down upon and where demagogues are denounced. As the once popular song says, we are "Not for Joseph, oh! dear sir!

He knows it—not for Joe!"

Education and Crime.

The oft-repeated assertion that ignorance begets crime is rapidly receiving the lie from the statistics occasionally published regarding illiteracy and the unusual number of educated people who fill the prisons in every State in the Union where education is universal. Attention is called to this state of affairs by the Catholic Mirror, wherein we find this excellent homily upon the subject:

"The latest census reports furnish us with abundant material for thought. The record of the number of illiterate adults in the United States is terrifying. In the South, the Indian illiteracy is almost universal. Both whites and blacks are woefully ignorant, and that notwithstanding the amount yearly expended for public school use by the different States. But it is not the record of illiteracy alone to which we would call attention, but to the rapid increase in what might be called educated crime. The number of educated persons now in our prisons is simply appalling, and is in itself a standing rebuke to those who would say that our present system of schools is calculated to make of our children good as well as intelligent citizens. In crime of a certain order the South, where illiteracy generally prevails, leads; but in most grades of crime the North, with all its intelligence and culture, is far in advance. Our jails are fairly swarming with educated men—men thoroughly acquainted with the nature of their offenses. Such men do not commit crime for the love of so doing, nor is it reasonable to suppose that they do so from a natural or inherent depravity. But it is tolerably certain that their moral senses have, from lack of proper training and cultivation, become so blunted that they have drifted into crime almost as a logical sequence. The fact that such men thus become criminals should in itself be abundant proof of the necessity of providing for our children such moral training as will make impossible such a deplorable state of affairs as is now shown to exist by the reports before mentioned. All great minds are agreed upon the necessity of giving every child a religious education. All the great English statesmen, from Burke to Gladstone, have asserted as much publicly. What was true in the past is especially true at present. Forces are being now arrayed against Christianity in general and Catholicity in particular that are most potent and powerful. To successfully meet these forces the coming generation will have great need to be strong morally as well as mentally. That the present system of paying all attention to the child's mental condition and none to his moral condition is most likely to make it a valuable factor in coming battles for the faith. Better illiteracy than an educated education which teaches our children to scoff at everything religious, and to deem it unfashionable and crime, simply from want of a timely and proper check. Better the condition of South Carolina with its thousands of uneducated whites and blacks, and its limited number of crimes, than Massachusetts with its array of intelligence and culture, its crowded prisons, its jails filled with educated criminals. There is much about our public school that is excellent. Its discipline is good; its system of drilling, while admitting of improvement, is also good. But there is still something lacking, and that can only be supplied by schools that will train children both morally and mentally. Sooner or later our Protestant brethren will see this necessity. Many of them seem to be groping for the light, and it is only a question of time as to when the scales will fall from their eyes."

A French Paper on Leo XIII.

Anything pertaining to the public or private life of the Sovereign Pontiff possesses peculiar interest for Catholics, hence we extract from a recent issue of the Paris Figaro a few interesting paragraphs regarding the present Pontiff:

"Leo XIII. puts in practice the advice given by an Italian Princess to a King of France: 'Now, my son, you must stink!' (Il faut sentir). The Pope has been reigning for five years with wonderful patience and perseverance. He has desired to bring back the Government of Europe to himself, and everybody knows how he has succeeded. Envoys, more or less recognised, of Mr. Gladstone sound the great Vatican near one side by side with the Ambassador of the German Empire, with the friend Duke Constantin Nieolaevitch, the Tsar's uncle, and Russian diplomats, greatly surprised to meet them. The venerable old man may congratulate himself on his work. At the price of what labor he thus guides the bark of Peter to port, we shall see."

The writer next gives us a glimpse of the Pope's daily life including:

"His early Mass, his audience t. the Secretary of State, Cardinal Jacobini, 'of rare political knowledge,' and to the other Cardinal Secretaries, each of whom has his fixed day; the meagre one o'clock dinner of a plate of soup, one plate of meat, and cheese, "lasting only a few minutes," his afternoon walk or ride, utilized in reading the reports of Bishops or Nuncios; his public and private audiences at four p. m.; his reception of Bishops in the evening; and then, at the end of his long day, his hours in his private cabinet; then it is that Leo XIII. is able to work."

The personal appearance of the Pope, the economy of his household, and his manner, are then photographed:

"Tall, thin, dry, his face long, pale, and wrinkled, Leo XIII. is of delicate health, which he takes little care of. His austerity is the result of his habits, and of his mental indulgences are applicable by way of mitigage to the souls in Purgatory.

It is needless to urge Catholics to take up this devotion, as all who appreciate the spiritual graces they receive through the devotional exercise will enter into its spirit of zeal, because God loves the Blessed Virgin gives Him his heart promptly and cheerfully, while those laggard Catholics who will "see about it," or who procrastinate in their pious actions, scarcely ever have sufficient fervor to support them in saying any prayers save those formal ones of morning and night. Let the blue scapular, wear it, say the prescribed prayers for the prescribed intentions, and God will bless you here and hereafter.

The Assassination Plots in Ireland.

Whoever has read the history of Ireland during the last century must have been forcibly struck with the fact that every time there was political excitement in Ireland a crop of "informers" was generated who swore away the lives of innocent men for the blood-money they received from the British Government. This was the case in the days of Tone, Emmet, and Fitzgerald; it was the foul source which sent many of the United Irishmen to jail or the gallows, and the same system of spies and informers is now at to work so admirably than, and to subserve in such an excellent manner the infamous ends of the English Government, that blood-money has brought forward blood-hounds from their haunts of vice every time England offered sufficient money for their service.

The dispatches of the week from Ireland assert upon England's resources to her ancient policy of plotting and of securing the conviction of innocent men. No less a sum than one hundred thousand dollars (£20,000) has been paid to a man for some scoundrels to swear away the lives of men against whom the British Government could find no criminal evidence wherefore such as was purposely invented in order to carry conviction to a packed jury. The failure to discover the participants in the Phœnix Park tragedy is looked upon as a blot upon the British spy system, hence the English Government has determined to sacrifice something of the victim of their vengeance, and for that purpose they have arrested large numbers of the Nationalists in Ireland, and in the shadow of each they have placed the red-handed informer, who is willing to swear away the lives of innocent people, provided he is paid British blood-money and guaranteed no punishment for his perjury.

This is the truth concerning the so-called discovery of "assassination" societies in Ireland, and we shall only know the depth of infamy to which England has resorted in this conspiracy when the history of Ireland's evil deeds are revealed to the world.

Justice to Catholics in State Institutions.

General Butler has signalized his entry upon the duties of Governor of Massachusetts by an act of justice toward Catholic children confined in State institutions, whereby liberty of conscience is guaranteed to them. The former code of rules for the government of penal institutions in Massachusetts have been amended so as to permit Catholic priests to celebrate Mass for Catholic inmates every Sunday, and to instruct those who desire it, at least once a week.

We hope Governor Stoneman will copy after Governor Butler in this regard, and permit such institutions as the Deaf, Dumb, and Blind Asylum at Berkeley to be turned into Protestant proselytizing places where the afflicted Catholic children are coerced into a renunciation of their Christian belief at the behest of their officers and teachers. We plead for freedom of conscience for those whose misfortune or youth prevent them for pleading for themselves, and we mean to keep harping upon this subject until every Catholic child in the State is secure in the religious rights guaranteed by the Constitution. There are enough traps and dead falls set for poor Catholic children outside the walls of State institutions without turning these places—which many relous of the dim past which will interest the visitors. All rail-sails are promising great reduction of rates, so that we may expect a grand affair. We doubt our readers will be there in spirit if not in person sanfelmer upon unsuspecting people, although Governor Stoddard is making war upon them every where.

Our mining interests are on the increase, thousands of Colorado prospectors have left the cold north Dakotas to come down and prospect in our warm Sierras. New Mexico is developing its material interests very fast. Mexicans, until now indifferent and sleepy, commence to enter into the general work. Will it be for their spiritual welfare? Quien sabe? But, sure, we are going for real rapidly towards material amelioration.

BISHOP MORA RAPIDLY RECOVERING.

We are glad to learn from a friend who recently returned from Los Angeles, that Bishop Mora is rapidly recovering from the severe shock of his late accident, and that he will be able to be back with Catholics in the course of a few days. Our personal last accounts of the venerable prelate were not so encouraging as will appear, but his general health is excellent, thanks to the prayers of his priests and the people, together with the excellent care he received at his home in Los Angeles.

We are indebted to P. J. Thomas, 305 City street, for a copy of the new City Charter prepared by the Board of Freeholders. It is a very valuable document, and we hope the Charter will be adopted in toto, as it will make it more easily read than the old Charter, and prevent much wrangling as will be apparent. Copies of this useful publication can be had at the office of publication.

— There are three Catholic churches in course of erection in New York City. At the corner of 59th street and 9th avenue the Church of St. Paul is in course of erection. A church is being built on the corner of 79th street and First avenue, to be known as the Church of Our Lady of Lourdes, and on Madison avenue, between 125th and 126th streets.

Important Anniversary in New Mexico.

A reverend correspondent, writing from Santa Fe, New Mexico, sends us the following interesting account from that ancient city:

Santa Fe is this year 333 years old, and will have a celebration in June next. Too much stress cannot be laid upon the importance of this anniversary, and it is calculated that it will last three weeks, commencing in the middle of June. All the priests of the Archdiocese of Santa Fe are invited. All the Indians, pueblo, and savage, will be represented with their various costumes, dancing their own dances. The immense resources of the mining districts will be there, with their best specimens. The cattle and sheepmen will not be forgotten. Immense corrosion are to be rung gathered by committees appointed for that purpose. The wheel is in motion, the ball has started for poor Jonah to be cast out of the territory. It will be a glorious time for the ancient city. We have a great many relics of its dim past which will interest the visitors. All railroads are promising great reduction of rates, so that we may expect a grand affair. No doubt our readers will be there in spirit if not in person sanfelmer upon unsuspecting people, although Governor Stoddard is making war upon them every where.

The Pope to the Irish Bishops.

A dispatch published in yesterday's papers purports to be the Pope has written a letter to Cardinal McCabe, in which he congratulates all the Bishops of Ireland on their zeal in calming the country and guiding the people. He regrets, however, that evil societies have not ceased to resort to deeds of crime, but sent remedies which lead to the destruction of the faithful. The people should be firmly persuaded that the national cause should be kept distinct from the deeds of those individual associations. He suggests that leave to attend popular meetings should only be allowed to those of the clergy in whose ranks the Bishops have especial confidence as able to guide an excited assembly and advise the most judicious course to pursue. The clergy thus constituted the guardians of the public security and defenders of the commonwealth, will be of great utility to the country in its disturbed state.

Important Anniversary in New Mexico.

A reverend correspondent, writing from Santa Fe, New Mexico, sends us the following interesting account from that ancient city:

Santa Fe is this year 333 years old, and will have a celebration in June next. Too much stress cannot be laid upon the importance of this anniversary, and it is calculated that it will last three weeks, commencing in the middle of June. All the priests of the Archdiocese of Santa Fe are invited. All the Indians, pueblo, and savage, will be represented with their various costumes, dancing their own dances. The immense resources of the mining districts will be there, with their best specimens. The cattle and sheepmen will not be forgotten. Immense corrosion are to be rung gathered by committees appointed for that purpose. The wheel is in motion, the ball has started for poor Jonah to be cast out of the territory. It will be a glorious time for the ancient city. We have a great many relics of its dim past which will interest the visitors. All railroads are promising great reduction of rates, so that we may expect a grand affair. No doubt our readers will be there in spirit if not in person sanfelmer upon unsuspecting people, although Governor Stoddard is making war upon them every where.

The Sacredness of Marriage Engagements.

This is a good time of the year to tell people as does the Baltimore Catholic Mirror that "marriage engagements are sacred."

Taken from the Mirror:

"A tragedy ending in two deaths took place the other day at Hyde ville, Illinois, which is attributed to that disregard of the binding force of betrothals which is one of the evils of our modern society.

"The facts in this dreadful occurrence are briefly told. William Wade was twenty-five years old, and had been engaged to be married at Christmas. Several weeks ago the shocked him with the information that she had just promised to wed her employer, a rich widower named Stevenson, and that the date of the ceremony had been fixed for Jan. 1. Year. He implored her to be true to her engagement and to keep her word. He pleaded with her to remember her plighted word, to be true to herself, and not to blight his life. She persisted in refusing to grant his wishes, adding, however, that while she loved him far better than her later suitor, she preferred the latter's wealth to the quietly comfortable home that Wade could offer. Her faithlessness prepared upon his mind. He brooded on it until it became insanity. Meeting her at the house of a common friend, he obtained with her for a while, and then said: 'Jennie, come into the yard with me. I want to speak to you.' She was loth to go, and remained. It was only a little while he was that look in his face.' Then turning to the friend he said: 'If you have anything to tell me, say it here.' He opened the door of an adjoining apartment, and called out: 'Come into the room with me.' She was terribly frightened. The common friend heard him entreat her on her knees to live, and to turn back from the man she was about to wed, but in vain. Presently he heard a shot, and ran to the room. She would not, and when he lost consciousness in the agony of his heart, he laughed scornfully, and observed: 'Half an hour ago I was a man of intelligence and emotion, and spoke in a loud tone: 'Jennie, I am going to Jesus Christ, and I want you to go with me.' Stevenson—one of those men who are so many and so rich as to be able to marry one; can you do it, sir? Wade, James, the other thing you do? As he spoke the young woman cried out: 'Will, Will, you wouldn't do it!' Then repeated shots were heard. The common friend rushed into the room and discovered Walton Stevenson in a pool of his own blood, upon which had one wound in the forehead and one in the region of the heart. He said in quiet tones: 'She is dead. There is no doubt of it. I tried to bear it too long. Then turning the revolver upward he fired his last ball into his brain, and fell down by the corpse of her who should have been his wife.'

"The young woman," continues our exchange, "brought destruction on herself. Marriage engagements are not sacred to be broken, and she was not justified in discarding the man to whom she had given her troth for no other reason than that a rich suitor had offered her hand. Of course, her faithless conduct was no excuse for her murder, and the Mirror has many sentiments with which we cordially agree, but we cannot help thinking that if Wade, and men of his stamp, had been made to feel that if they should be guilty of such a crime, they would be hanged, the Mirror's law many sentiments would be more effective than the Mirror's sentiments. Wade, and men of his stamp, will continue to be the prey of frenzied infidelity and passion, and of the crime of suicide, until religion is made for the young as well as for the old.

Speculating on Delay.

Lourdes, Jan. 22.—The Times says: It is not deed Saturday's speechless Bishops travelled in a company to ponder the situation offered. Although the secrets of the proceedings thus have been kept with praiseworthy discretion, it is not believed the council for the Crown has come with the support of the clergy. It will probably be protested several weeks.

The WEEK'S NEWS from IRELAND.

INFORMERS TO THE FRONT.

Men who Work for Blood Money.

DUBLIN, January 20.—The twenty-one persons in custody on charges of being accessories to the Phœnix Park murders, which resulting to most serious consequences, are all Catholics, and most of them are young men, although far from being in the degree of the Catholic Church overcoming the Blessed Virgin, are daily observed for some time past to be their pious actions, scarcely ever have sufficient fervor to support them in saying any prayers save those formal ones of morning and night. Let the blue scapular, wear it, say the prescribed prayers for the prescribed intentions, and God will bless you here and hereafter.

The Assassination Plots in Ireland.

Whoever has read the history of Ireland during the last century must have been forcibly struck with the fact that every time there was political excitement in Ireland a crop of "informers" was generated who swore away the lives of innocent men for the blood-money they received from the British Government. This was the case in the days of Tone, Emmet, and Fitzgerald; it was the foul source which sent many of the United Irishmen to jail or the gallows, and the same system of spies and informers is now at to work so admirably than, and to subserve in such an excellent manner the infamous ends of the English Government, that blood-money has brought forward blood-hounds from their haunts of vice every time England offered sufficient money for their service.

The dispatches of the week from Ireland assert upon England's resources to her ancient policy of plotting and of securing the conviction of innocent men. No less a sum than one hundred thousand dollars (£20,000) has been paid to a man for some scoundrels to swear away the lives of men against whom the British Government could find no criminal evidence wherefore such as was purposely invented in order to carry conviction to a packed jury. The failure to discover the participants in the Phœnix Park tragedy is looked upon as a blot upon the British spy system, hence the English Government has determined to sacrifice something of the victim of their vengeance, and for that purpose they have arrested large numbers of the Nationalists in Ireland, and in the shadow of each they have placed the red-handed informer, who is willing to swear away the lives of innocent people, provided he is paid British blood-money and guaranteed no punishment for his perjury.

This is the truth concerning the so-called discovery of "assassination" societies in Ireland, and we shall only know the depth of infamy to which England has resorted in this conspiracy when the history of Ireland's evil deeds are revealed to the world.

Justice to Catholics in State Institutions.

General Butler has signalized his entry upon the duties of Governor of Massachusetts by an act of justice toward Catholic children confined in State institutions, whereby liberty of conscience is guaranteed to them. The former code of rules for the government of penal institutions in Massachusetts have been amended so as to permit Catholic priests to celebrate Mass for Catholic inmates every Sunday, and to instruct those who desire it, at least once a week.

We hope Governor Stoneman will copy after Governor Butler in this regard, and permit such institutions as the Deaf, Dumb, and Blind Asylum at Berkeley to be turned into Protestant proselytizing places where the afflicted Catholic children are coerced into a renunciation of their Christian belief at the behest of their officers and teachers. We plead for freedom of conscience for those whose misfortune or youth prevent them for pleading for themselves, and we mean to keep harping upon this subject until every Catholic child in the State is secure in the religious rights guaranteed by the Constitution. There are enough traps and dead falls set for poor Jonah's children outside the walls of State institutions without turning these places—which many relous of the dim past which will interest the visitors. All railroads are promising great reduction of rates, so that we may expect a grand affair. No doubt our readers will be there in spirit if not in person sanfelmer upon unsuspecting people, although Governor Stoddard is making war upon them every where.

Our mining interests are on the increase, thousands of Colorado prospectors have left the cold north Dakotas to come down and prospect in our warm Sierras. New Mexico is developing its material interests very fast. Mexicans, until now indifferent and sleepy, commence to enter into the general work. Will it be for their spiritual welfare? Quien sabe? But, sure, we are going for real rapidly towards material amelioration.

BISHOP MORA RAPIDLY RECOVERING.

We are glad to learn from a friend who recently returned from Los Angeles, that Bishop Mora is rapidly recovering from the severe shock of his late accident, and that he will be able to be back with Catholics in the course of a few days. Our personal last accounts of the venerable prelate were not so encouraging as will appear, but his general health is excellent, thanks to the prayers of his priests and the people, together with the excellent care he received at his home in Los Angeles.

We are indebted to P. J. Thomas, 305 City street, for a copy of the new City Charter prepared by the Board of Freeholders. It is a very valuable document, and we hope the Charter will be adopted in toto, as it will make it more easily read than the old Charter, and prevent much wrangling as will be apparent. Copies of this useful publication can be had at the office of publication.

— There are three Catholic churches in course of erection in New York City. At the corner of 59th street and 9th avenue the Church of St. Paul is in course of erection. A church is being built on the corner of 79th street and First avenue, to be known as the Church of Our Lady of Lourdes, and on Madison avenue, between 125th and 126th streets.

ST. AUGUSTINE'S NEW CHURCH AT PLEASANTON.

Pleasanton, Alameda Co., Jan. 22, 1885.

Editor of the Monitor:

Dear Sir: The little town of Pleasanton, Alameda, was the scene of an interesting event last Sunday on the occasion of the opening of a new temple to the worship of God. It was named that his Grace Archbishop, assisted by his priests, the people, their money, and the people flocked in to fill and to hear him, like the sacred author relates.

The Church is a handsome, substantial structure, in the Gothic style, and will seat comfortably about six hundred people. It was the whole work of the people, for the people. Generously, as is so common of what has been by a Catholic people, the people of Pleasanton, with a few honorable exceptions, built the church. The Catholics of Pleasanton number

Cheaper than Ever.

Baskets of the Mottron cream call at 10 Post street, for fresh, fresh from the ranch; Point Reyes butter, the so-to; pickled roll, at 15; 30c; tub butter, 35; in 1lbs; fresh eggs, fresh laid, 30 to 35c; "ten point" 37 1/2 lower at market rates. Apples—Spitzenbergs, Newtowns, Pippins, Russets, Bellflowers, Greenings, Ben Davis, Jonathans, Golden Pippins, Golden Russets, Golden Pippins, Golden Russets, Golden Pippins, Golden Russets

THE ARCHBISHOPS OF TUAM.

(CONCLUDED FROM FIRST PAGE.)

restry, he was surrounded by a multitude of beggars, who brought out the wayside to the Cathedral, which, like the way to the Temple of Jerusalem, might well be called "the way of wailing." To give alms to the beggars seemed to him through life to be a high privilege, and his custom was to give then of his charity de dio in diem, from day to day. "The young," says Aelaelius, "live forward in hope; the old live backwards in memory," and on the rocks of his memory the sunbeams of youth lay on the deepest foot-marks, and the long-ago and distant past were more deeply impressed upon his mind than the occurrence of yesterday.

The following, is the eloquent conclusion of the author from whom work we quoted:

A SORROWFUL PROCESSION.

Reader, have you ever stood within the walls of some great old gothic cathedral of the continent, when the bells summoned to solemn worship? I have stood in such a place, at such a time, and when I saw the train of long-robed priests swept by me, when I heard those notes of sacred song which venerable tradition tells us were composed in the boughs of Solomon; when I saw the smoke rising from the censer as it rose of old from the altar of incense; when I behold the lights shining from the altar, and saw in they shoot from the aisles of the middle age—such as the early Christian lighted in the Catacombs; and—older than the Christian—such as Ile of Patmos beheld in the Apocalypse—such as Aaron kindled in the golden candle-stick; when, I say I witnessed that majestic ceremonial, I felt that there was a spirit which I need was holy; and that angels, as of old, are still attending and descending the ladder which joins the earth to Heaven. Henceforth it was, more than ever, a work of love to me to search into the history of the Church—to ask from the past what the present ought to be. And such I felt it would be if done, that work has not been done in vain if I have added one grey to the glories of that Church upon which my humble but immortal hope depends.

THE FAMINE IN IRELAND.

The Distress in Donegal.

KILCAR, CHRISTMAS EVE.

To the Editor of the Freeman's Journal.

SIR,—On this Christmas Eve you will, I hope, allow me through the medium of your excellent journal to again appeal to the sympathy and Christian charity of your readers in behalf of the poorest, most wretched creatures in God's creation. Christmas brought nothing but misery and sorrow to these. They are God's poor, and the poor are His children on earth. We have them here, not in isolated cases or individuals, but in whole families. Yes, we have 450 families in parish of Kilcar, and have no means at present depending on the alms of a fellow-man to relieve them from want and a little of the goods of this world. Two years ago hundreds of families in this parish were saved from starvation and death by the rockfish fly that came great and good to our world. The year is a repetition of 1880, and more than that; its horrors are more intense than ever. In the year of 1880 we had the money, but they had not the Indian meal to buy. This year we have the meal but no money, and alas! no credit! At this moment there are hundreds of families come knocking at the doors of more than two-thirds of the parish, and I have not a meal to give them, or a penny to give them. Of this I can see plain proof in the individual of smoke was then walled up through the ear, giving me timely notice of the impending peril. To the right and left in my rear I saw Mr. and Mrs. Porter half prostrate in the party railing the meal, by reason of the party railing the meal, by reason of the fact that I may in a few days get it from those who have pity for the starving poor. Mr. John Porter, a friend in deed, was sick and dying in their hovels. I visit many who are in reality suffering nothing but famine, and in reality suffering nothing but famine, and I assisted in clearing away the rubbish. We were succeeded in pulling her out, and I assisted in clearing away the rubbish. We were succeeded in pulling her out, and I assisted in clearing away the rubbish. We were succeeded in pulling her out

Poetry.

SOMEHOW OR OTHER WE GET ALONG.

The good with trusted about the house,
Her loss still bright with a pleasant smile,
As broken matches of happy song
Strewthrough her heart and haunt her head the while.
The good man sat in the shingly nook,
His little clay pipe within his lips,
And all he'd made, and all he had lost,
Ready and clear on his finger-tips.

II.

"Good wife, I've just been thinking a bit,
Nothing has done very well this year,
Money is bound to be hard to win,
Everything's sure to be very dear.
Hey! the times are going to be hard,
But we've to keep the boys at school,
Ea is kind of delicate, and—you know,
I can't make balance by my rule."

III.

She turned her around from the baking
And she found him with a cheerful laugh;
"Why, husband dear, we could think
Then the good rich wheat was only chaff.
And what if wheat is only chaff,
As long as we both are well and strong?
I'm quite a woman to worry a bit,
Somehow or other we get along.

IV.

"Why, Ea's better, thank God!
But when he's well, and the school's over
The after solution is twice as sweet,
Though every crook we have had a crook,
In every grief we have found a song.
We have had our share, and we have still
But somehow or other we have got along."

V.

"For thirty years we have loved each other,
Sharing in joy and sorrow alike;
Six boys have called us 'father' and 'mother',
And all of them living and doing well.
We owe no man a penny, my dear,
We have lost no child, and we've gained one,
Goodman, I wish you would smoke again,
And think how well we have got along."

He filled his pipe with a pleasant laugh,
He kissed her with a smile in her pride,
He said, I'll do as you tell me, love,
I'll smoke the pipe, and I will. Rebecca
She left him then with his better thought,
And he filled her pipe with a fine, young song,
A song that followed me many a year—
"Somehow or other we get along!"

Literary Miscellany.

The Ghost.

"I don't believe a word of it," said Aunt Rebecca.

The wine-like glow of sunset yet illumined the great bay window, but the rest of the apartment was already submerged in the gray shadows of twilight, in whose misty indistinctness the high backs of carved oak looked like gigantic monsters from some fairy-stage shore. From the wall frowned dark portraits, and the old-fashioned chairs hung above the arched doors waved restlessly back and forth in the draughts of wind that swept through the vast corridor.

"I don't believe a word of it repeated Aunt Rebecca, with more emphasis than before. "A ghost, story, indeed!"

"Tell me about it, Violet," said young Hazelwood, to whom the echoing hall and deep bay window with its far-off prospect reigns of Alswick Place.

"It is not much of a story," said Violet, dangling by her two very symmetrical slippers, and with a little pensive sigh, "only a mere hint, hardly even a whisper. Some one, I suppose, in the course of her long life, has seen the ghost, and the story has grown up."

"Nothing, nothing," said Miss Rebecca, with a little impatient tap of her foot on the floor. "Come—don't stay here any longer in the biting cold, unless you both want a week's medicine and doctor's visits.

"It seems to me, Aunt Rebecca," pleaded Violet; and the starlight in so beautiful on the snow persuasive. Feel let us wait until that poor ancestor of mine—the—the—

The tall, old-fashioned clock in the hall was striking twelve, and the colony of crickets under the warm hearth-stone was falling into a dreamy, sleepy sort of chirp, as though they were fairly overpowered by it. Aunt Rebecca emerged from her door, treading on tiptoe, and carrying a dim light in her hand. Now Aunt Rebecca in dancing false curls, spectacles, and eighteen-year old style of dress, as a very different personage from Aunt Rebecca with her hand tied up in a silk handkerchief, her false teeth and curls laid aside, and a long, white dressing-robe enveloping her figure; and the latter was by no means the most prominent feature of the two. Probably some such consciousness passed across the sleepy brain, for she scuffled with accelerated rapidity past the sunken eyes of the great old family portraits on the wall.

"I am sure I dropped them somewhere here," she murmured vaguely in front of the bay window.

"How provoking, there goes my candle out; but I believe I can find them, however; the starlight is so bright. Mercy upon me what is that? The ghost! the ghost!"

And Aunt Rebecca fled shrieking down the corridor, her hands clasped before her eyes, before which was imprinted the appalling vision of a tall figure sweeping past, all in white, with a crimson stain at its pallid throat.

The house was aroused into instantaneous commotion. Lights flashed into brightness at the various doors, and an eager circle of inquiries surrounded Aunt Rebecca, who evinced strong symptoms of an intention to go into hysterics.

"It glided past me like a gust of wind," she shrieked, replying at hazards to the questions rained down upon her, "all in white, with that dreadful mark of blood upon its throat! Its warning—I know its warning! I'm—I shan't last long!"

"But I don't understand what you were doing out in the Blue Chamber at this time of the night?" interrupted Colonel Orme, staring at his sister as if not quite certain whether his eyes were actual or hallucinations.

"For thirty years we have loved each other, Sound by sound and color blind to color, Sister, I'm called an 'father' and 'mother', And all of them living and doing well. Hey, I owe no man a penny, my dear, We have lost no child, and we've gained one, Goodman, I wish you would smoke again, And think how well we have got along."

He filled his pipe with a pleasant laugh,
He kissed her with a smile in her pride,
He said, I'll do as you tell me, love,
I'll smoke the pipe, and I will. Rebecca
She left him then with his better thought,
And he filled her pipe with a fine, young song,
A song that followed me many a year—
"Somehow or other we get along!"

"Well, Aunt Rebecca," said Violet, dangling by her two very symmetrical slippers, and with a little pensive sigh, "only a mere hint, hardly even a whisper. Some one, I suppose, in the course of her long life, has seen the ghost, and the story has grown up."

"Nothing, nothing," said Miss Rebecca, with a little impatient tap of her foot on the floor. "Come—don't stay here any longer in the biting cold, unless you both want a week's medicine and doctor's visits.

"It seems to me, Aunt Rebecca," pleaded Violet; and the starlight is so beautiful on the snow persuasive. Feel let us wait until that poor ancestor of mine—the—the—"

The tall, old-fashioned clock in the hall was striking twelve, and the colony of crickets under the warm hearth-stone was falling into a dreamy, sleepy sort of chirp, as though they were fairly overpowered by it. Aunt Rebecca emerged from her door, treading on tiptoe, and carrying a dim light in her hand. Now Aunt Rebecca in dancing false curls, spectacles, and eighteen-year old style of dress, as a very different personage from Aunt Rebecca with her hand

"CURIOUS CASUALTIES.

Some of the Singular Accidents That Happen to People from Time to Time—Good Luck and Bad.

If there should also some day an author or a dramatist who would make a tale or his plays nothing but facts he would be regarded—and justly—as a wholesale tissue of impossible incidents and improbabilities. For instance, it would be thought absurd to have a boaty villain, killed off by lettings ship fall on him, as John Pirie was killed but fall in the floating dock at the foot of Clinton st. East River, or to have a woman who was in the garden hanging out the clothes crushed by a horse falling on her from an adjoining house, which was the fate of Mrs. Spier, of No. 64 Hudson street. Atlantic, N. J., Jacob Wagner was killed by a falling tree while the well be wadging. On the other hand, as Lotta opposite Tuesday, a dancer with his team and a sleigh loaded with cord wood fell over a cliff sixty feet high without himself or the animals or the sleigh suffering injury. The now of Edward Bookman, of Middletown, N. J., was doomed animal. She had been mired, but was drawn out and placed in a safe place to recover her strength, and a spark from a locomotive set fire to the straw covering a stack in Lonn ville, and the red hot blast dropped into a barrel of flour left in a convenient place to cool. They could not agree which should have the cinder, and so the stack of oats, the barrel of flour and the horse all both were burned to death. A Reading, Pa., John Dreher went to carnate the cinders of a beer-vat with a lamp in his hand, and the gas exploding blew him out of the machine, he was not killed. At Erie boiler-maker, Joseph Herbe, was similarly blown out of a boiler he was cleaning, and yet a boy, of children, in the sand, and the lid of a boiler fell on him, and he was not injured greatly. Dr. Rudolph, of Paterson, N. J., lost himself over while plowing in the mouth of Mr. Van Meter, of Orange, and he was not injured. The well was closed up, and he died instantly. At Marlboro, in England, an owl whipped three boys who had taken her young, blinded one of the lads, and in one street in London two children were killed by a runaway horse. At a Michigan youth was leading a horse by the halter, the animal kicked suddenly on one side and the jerk broke the boy's neck. At Erie, Pa., Mr. Frederick Eller Coleman, aged 104, died of a cough. At Brooklyn Office G. K. Payne sawed his shoulder out of joint. At Newark, in August last, a red hot bar, from a rolling mill machine pierced Michael Maffey through the leg, as he sprang to prevent a fellow workman from being pierced by a bar from another machine. At Albany John Kilkeen was killed not long afterwards by a similar but more serious accident. He was sleeping. As Sarah Daniels was driving a team of oxen on the Connecticut River, a city one of the ropes by which the harness of the oxen from the roof caught him round the neck, and he was dragged to his death. At Albert N. Y., a boy driving along a tree saw a man coming, and by a laugh which ran into his thick wooden throat, he was so scared that he died. At Mr. Church, of Passaic, who drove into a hanging telephone wire. At Saginaw, Mich., while a man was sitting in the crotch of a tree to saw off a limb, the crotch split and he fell, falling his axe into the opening and then sinking on him. It took an hour of cutting and prying to free him out of the trap, and several of his ribs were broken by the squeezing. A lady in Philadelphia, who was sitting in a rocking chair a book, caught her ring in the hook and fainted, but her finger was torn from her hand. At Chicago, Ill., a truck which struck by a train running on the Illinois Central, was thrown from the track, and the driver was killed. If Philomena Long, of Newark, N. J., had not endeavored to pull her dog away from in front of an approaching locomotive she would not have been killed. At Nible's Garden, New York, one of the soldiers in "Michael Strogoff," was shot twice in the head, the fierce applauding his relentic writhing; at Indianapolis Ind., a man was killed on the moment at which a cannon was discharged in the Wolf's Opera House, by the door, receiving the blank cartridge in his head. At Clapton N. Y., Master Shoot, aged eight, attempting to produce an echo, fired a pistol into a mortar set with a firecracker and a cannon cracker, and one of the third story window, and at Harrisburg Pa., a soldiers and sailors' monument, a cross, stood on his head until he broke his neck. At Bangor, Me., Mr. Rhea of Norfolk, Va., fell dead while romping with a large company of children on the sand, and the little ones, thinking he a part of the game, romped it greatly. Dr. Rudolph, of Paterson, N. J., lost himself over while plowing in the mouth of Mr. Van Meter, of Orange, and he was not injured. The well was closed up, and he died instantly. At Marlboro, in England, an owl whipped three boys who had taken her young, blinded one of the lads, and in one street in London two children were killed by a runaway horse. At a Michigan youth was leading a horse by the halter, the animal kicked suddenly on one side and the jerk broke the boy's neck. At Erie, Pa., Mr. Frederick Eller Coleman, aged 104, died of a cough. At Brooklyn Office G. K. Payne sawed his shoulder out of joint. At Newark, in August last, a red hot bar, from a rolling mill machine pierced Michael Maffey through the leg, as he sprang to prevent a fellow workman from being pierced by a bar from another machine. At Albany John Kilkeen was killed not long afterwards by a similar but more serious accident. He was sleeping. As Sarah Daniels was driving a team of oxen on the Connecticut River, a city one of the ropes by which the harness of the oxen from the roof caught him round the neck, and he was dragged to his death. At Albert N. Y., a boy driving along a tree saw a man coming, and by a laugh which ran into his thick wooden throat, he was so scared that he died. At Mr. Church, of Passaic, who drove into a hanging telephone wire. At Saginaw, Mich., while a man was sitting in the crotch of a tree to saw off a limb, the crotch split and he fell, falling his axe into the opening and then sinking on him. It took an hour of cutting and prying to free him out of the trap, and several of his ribs were broken by the squeezing. A lady in Philadelphi, who leaped up to hang a cross up

THE MONITOR.

PERIODICAL TRAC OF PUBLICATION

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 7, 1883.

Eulogiums on the Rosary.

As the penitential season of Lent is now here, and as it is the pious custom in many Catholic families to recite the Rosary in common every evening during that season of prayer and penance, we think the present an opportune time to lay before our readers a few of the eulogiums passed upon the Rosary and the beneficial results which have followed from the performance of this great devotion.

Every Catholic knows that the Rosary is a form of prayer instituted by the glorious and Immaculate Queen of Heaven and presented by the Blessed Virgin to that child of Mary—St. Dominic, but not every Catholic is aware of the exalted encomiums passed upon this form of prayer by our Divine Saviour, the Mother of God, the Saints, Pontiffs and Rulers of the world throughout all the ages since its miraculous institution in the sanctuary of Notre Dame de Dyadoe.

The following eulogiums are compiled from the works of Father Meraisi, O. P., on the Rosary, and Father Thomas Venturi, O. P., on the Grandeur of the Holy Rosary, and we hope they will be treasured up in the hearts of those who already recite this edifying and fruitful form of prayer as well as incite other Catholics to practice this holy source of securing the grace of God. First on the list we place the voice of the Most High:

The Psalter (or Rosary) is the crown of glory conferred upon the elements of earth from the gold of divinity. My mother is crowned each time that the Rosary is said by any one. (Our Lord to Blessed Alain, Et Cat. Alan, l. 1. c. xxiv).

Whatever then support ask through the Rosary, then shall obtain. (Our Lord to a penitent, Et Hoosfie Eliste).

Preach the Rosary, which is a buckler against the darts of the enemy, the rampart of the Church of God, and the Rock of Life. (The Blessed Virgin to St. Dominic, Et Jean Copinen, l. 2 et Compiers, l. 3. c. 9).

Robert prayer can be be devout to my Rosary, and then shall produce wonderful fruits in souls. (The blessed Virgin to St. Dominic. Et Abich. Dion. 245).

Devotion to the Rosary is a sign of election and of predestination to glory. (The Blessed Virgin to St. Dominic. Et Abich. Al. p. 2).

I desire that my Psalmists (Rosaries) have both in life and death, the lilies, bath, plentitude of roses and liberty. (Ibid. p. 2. c. 1).

Those who recite my Rosary are my children, and are the brethren of Jesus Christ, my only Son. (Ibid.)

I have asked of my Son that all the members of the Confraternity of the Rosary be holy. Rosary may have as their brethren both in this world and in the next all the blessed in Heaven. (Ibid. c. xlii).

After the Mass, the Rosary is the devotion that is most acceptable to me. (Ex Cod. de digit. Pash., c. xvii).

As long as my Rosary shall be kept up in all the vigor in the Order of the Friars Preachers, so long too shall wisdom, observance, the brilliancy of learning, and the fervor of zeal for God and souls grow in that Order. (Et Cod., lib. II. de 10 Cons.).

Preserve my daughter, in devotion to my Rosary, and you will be my own in heaven.

He who recommends his soul to me through the Rosary shall not perish. (Et Dicta, in compiers).

Every day increases blessings come to the faithful through the Rosary. (Pope Urban IV. Bull Apostol.).

The Rosary of Mary is the tree of life, which nourishes those dead to life, cures the sick, and preserves those who are in health. (Pope Nicholas I., Bonum est Confiteri.)

The Rosary has been established for the glory of the Omnipotent God, and for the honor of the most glorious Virgin Mary. (Pope Sixtus IV. of Rpiles, Ecclesiae).

The Rosary has been established against the sects which transformed the world. (Pope Leo X. ad Rpiloqo. Ren.).

The Rosary scourges the devil. (Pope Adrain VI. ad Consilia).

The devotion of the Rosary is the salvation of Christian Republics. (Clement VII. Consist. Ital.).

By the Rosary St. Dominic has spreading the light of God in France, Friends and Italy. (Pope Pius III. ad Mag. Gen. O. P.).

The Rosary is the Psalter of the Roman Church. (Pope Julius III. Const. Cum Romae.).

By the Rosary the darkness of heresy has been dissipated, and the light of Catholic faith shines out in all its brilliancy. (B. P. V. Conservatori).

Through the Rosary the anger of God gives way, and the lustrous mercy of God is extended. (Pope Gregory XIII. Motu Apostolici).

The Rosary was revealed and established by Saint Dominic under the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, for the salvation of the Catholic Religion (Pope Sixtus V. Ideo Laudabilis).

The Rosary is the destruction of sin, the preserver of good and of the glory of God. (Gregory XIV. ad Epist. Sycrosa).

The Rosary is the treasury of graces. (Pope Paul V. ad Epist. Tuetur).

The Rosary increases the number of the faithful. (Pope Urban VIII. ad Ruyer. Jesus).

God, Redeemer of the human race, Queen of His Mother, has ordained our faith. (King Ferdinand to his Council of Trent).

My son, in order to guard thy kingdom and preserve it from ruin, always have the Rosary with thee. (Philip 2nd, King of Spain to Philip 3rd).

Let us contest the Blessed Virgin to preserve Christendom by Rosary, our Hospices. (Alphonse King of Portugal, to his daughter, Duchess).

We will go to St. Mary's on the Minerva to offer our Rosaries for the victory of the Christian. (St. Pius V. Pope).

It was not generals, nor battalions, nor arms that brought us victory; it was Our Lady of the Rosary. (The Senate of Venice).

The Rosary, O Blessed Dominic, has established my kingdom (I pray, Dominic, and return thanks to thee. (Louis IX. King of France).

I venerate your holy habit; I kiss your sacred beads, and I implore you to call on me presence of the Rosary that they may return to my people. (Contesta Mag. King of Poland to the General of the Dominicans).

The Rosary brings the whole hope of my salvation. (Henry, Duke of Bavaria).

We attest under oath that the greatest portion of our beloved France has been purged from the plague of heresy through the Rosary of St. Dominic. (The Bishops).

The Rosary of the Royal Order of Preachers has conferred the kingdoms of Spain in the Catholic faith. (The University of Salamanca).

God has delivered us from plague, heresy and wars through Our Lady of the Rosary; let us also take her for our Sovereign and Patroness. (The University of Bologna).

We pledge ourselves to the Virgin Mary of the Rosary, because God has preserved us through her from the plague. (Senate of the Congregation of the Rosary in Perla).

Remember how fought against us, but our Lady of the Rosary fought against them, they vanished. (F. M. Cherry, O. P. En theologie de Salut Wonder Tract, Ed. 1676, p. 1).

Blessed indeed are the members of the Confraternity of the most holy Rosary; since the Sacred Mysteries of God has found all ... cleared in the revelations made to Blessed Alain de la Roche, 1st, that God Most Powerful, who is the Father of Jesus Christ, our Lord, and who is the Son of God, and who is the Holy Ghost, and who is the Trinity, and who is the Unity, and who is the Creator of all things visible and invisible, and who is the Redeemer of all the elect, and who is the Judge of all the reprobate, and who is the Glorifier of all the blessed, and who is the Punisher of all the damned, and who is the Preserver of all the creatures, and who is the Destroyer of all the sinners, and who is the Rewarder of all the just, and who is the Crowner of all the saints, and who is the Lover of all the just, and who is the Hater of all the sinners, and who is the Lover of all the just, and who is the Hater of all the sinners, and who is the Lover of all the just, and who is the Hater of all the sinners

REGULATIONS FOR LENT, IN 1883,

ON THE DIOCESE OF SAN FRANCISCO.

1. All the WEEK DAYS of Lent, from Ash Wednesday (February 7th) till Easter Sunday are fast days of precept, one meal, with the allowance of a moderate collation.

2. The precept of fasting implies also that of abstinence from the use of flesh meat. But, by dispensation, the use of flesh meat is allowed in Lent, at the principal meal, on the following days: to wit, the Wednesdays and Fridays, and Saturdays, with the Sundays of Lent, the Holy Week, and the vigil of St. Joseph (patron of the Annunciation) on that days there is no leave to use fish meat, except by dispensation from the respective Pastors, which they are hereby authorized to grant in case of necessity. All Saturdays are also days of abstinence, but not of obligation. The Holy Week includes the use of flesh meat to one meal on the day in which abstinence is prescribed, except for those employed in heavy labor, and for all on Sundays.

3. The prohibition of fish and flesh meat at the same meal is forbidden in Lent, even on Sundays.

4. It should be carefully observed that, according to an answer of the Sacred Congregation of the Holy Office, to the Bishops of England, in 1830, and to the Bishops of Ireland in 1840, the lifting fat has never ceased to have, notwithstanding the use of milk, butter, and, still less, of cheese, of the meaning attached to fast days. But, owing to the peculiar condition of the faithful in this Province, the Holy See has kindly consented to dispense in the use of milk, butter and cheese in a small quantity, sage, however, excepted. But persons not bound to fast are not subject to the above restrictions, nor to abstinence from eggs.

5. The use of lard or other fat condiment is allowed in Lent, and throughout the year, on Ash Wednesday, Wednesday, Ember-days through out the year, on the Saturdays of Ember-days, the four days of Holy Week, and the Eve of Pentecost, of the Assumption, of All Saints (Christmas) and Christmas Eve. Butter remains still the universal condiment and is not forbidden.

6. Some prayers, or actions, are recommended during Lent, particularly on those days in which flesh meat is used.

7. Lent being a penitential time, the Pastors are requested to lay before the Faithful the importance of Christian penance, and also the grievous obligation of complying with their Easter duty, which, for the Faithful of this Diocese, begins on the first Sunday of Lent; they will frequently and earnestly inculcate the necessity of a sincere conversion of heart, without which all other practices, tending to the alleviation of their souls, and they will select them to the faithful during Lent, as the Christian duties, the only thing that can secure to us the Divine Mercy, and the fruits of this penance, which, in fact, all religious exercises in their observance prove having a tendency to what they are, or may be, an expiation.

+JOSEPH S. ALEMANY,
Archbishop of San Francisco.

San Francisco, January 30, 1883.

FOR THE DIOCESE OF GRASS VALLEY.

1. All the week days of Lent, from Ash Wednesday (February 7th) till Easter Sunday, are fasting days of precept, one meal, with the allowance of a moderate collation.

2. The precept of fasting implies also that of abstinence from the use of flesh meat. But, by dispensation, the use of flesh meat is allowed in Lent, at the principal meal, on the following days, to wit, the Wednesdays and Fridays, the Saturdays and the Sundays of Lent, the Holy Week, and the vigil of St. Joseph (patron of the Annunciation); on which days there is no leave to use flesh meat, except by dispensation from the respective Pastors, which they are hereby authorized to grant in case of necessity. All Saturdays are also days of abstinence, but not of obligation. The Holy Week includes the use of flesh meat to one meal on the day in which abstinence is prescribed, except for those employed in heavy labor, and for all on Sundays.

3. The prohibition of fish and flesh meat at the same meal is forbidden in Lent, even on Sundays.

4. It should be carefully observed that, according to an answer of the Sacred Congregation of the Holy Office, to the Bishops of England, in 1830, and to the Bishops of Ireland in 1840, the lifting fat has never ceased to have, notwithstanding the use of milk, butter, and, still less, of cheese, of the meaning attached to fast days. But, owing to the peculiar condition of the faithful in this Province, the Holy See has kindly consented to dispense in the use of milk, butter and cheese in a small quantity, sage, however, excepted. But persons not bound to fast are not subject to the above restrictions, nor to abstinence from eggs.

5. The use of lard or other fat condiment is allowed in Lent, and throughout the year, on Ash Wednesday, Wednesday, Ember-days through out the year, on the Saturdays of Ember-days, the four days of Holy Week, and the Eve of Pentecost, of the Assumption, of All Saints (Christmas) and Christmas Eve. Butter remains still the universal condiment and is not forbidden.

6. Some prayers, or actions, are recommended during Lent, particularly on those days in which flesh meat is used.

7. Lent being a penitential time, the Pastors are requested to lay before the Faithful the importance of Christian penance, and also the grievous obligation of complying with their Easter duty, which, for the Faithful of this Diocese, begins on the first Sunday of Lent; they will frequently and earnestly inculcate the necessity of a sincere conversion of heart, without which all other practices, tending to the alleviation of their souls, and they will select them to the faithful during Lent, as the Christian duties, the only thing that can secure to us the Divine Mercy, and the fruits of this penance, which, in fact, all religious exercises in their observance prove having a tendency to what they are, or may be, an expiation.

+JOSEPH S. ALEMANY,
Archbishop of San Francisco.

San Francisco, January 30, 1883.

Cheaper than Ever.

Readers of the Monitor should send for 25 lb Post stress, for family requisites, viz: 25 lbs best family flour, 25 lbs butter, 50 lbs. potatoes, 25 lbs. pickled pork, 25 lbs. bacon, 25 lbs. lard, 25 lbs. beans, 25 lbs. rice, 25 lbs. best prunes, 25 lbs. best apples, 25 lbs. apricots, 25 lbs. peaches, 25 lbs. pears, 25 lbs. plums, 25 lbs. raisins, 25 lbs. currants, 25 lbs. prunes, 25 lbs. figs, 25 lbs. peaches, 25 lbs. pears, 25 lbs. plums, 25 lbs. raisins, 25 lbs. currants, 25 lbs. prunes, 25 lbs. figs, 25 lbs. apricots

AN IMPORTANT PASTORAL.

ARCHBISHOP GIBBONS

—ON—

Christian Education.

"NOW SHALL WE SAVE OUR CHILDREN?

CHRISTIAN EDUCATION THE ARK OF SALVATION.

"A Parish Without a School Scarcely Deserves the Name."

Parents Responsible for the Christian Education of their Children.

The following Pastoral of Most Rev. Archbishop of Baltimore contains so many timeliest truths touching upon one of the most important questions Catholics are concerned in that we think it should be laid before priests and people in every section of the Union, hence we copy it entire from our excellent contemporary the Baltimore Mirror:

Dear Brethren and Children in Jesus Christ: Impressed with the obligation which our sacred office imposes on us, of feeding the flock, and especially the lambs committed to our pastoral care, we address you towards the opening of the season of Lent, on the important subject of Christian Education.

The attention of youth is the engrossing topic of our times. The Supreme Head of the Catholic Church has handed down his voice. He points out the necessity of daily Christian instruction as the only safeguard for preserving the rising generation from the dangers which imperil their faith and morals.

The Bishops and clergy of Christendom re-echo the voice of the Holy Father. It may be safely stated, that the future status of Catholicity in the United States is to be determined by the course or failure of our daily schools; and that the rule of our Catholic population, in the coming generation, will be in mathematical proportion to the number and advantage of our parochial institutions of learning.

THE VITAL QUESTION OF THE DAY is not, "How shall we preserve the idea of the faith?" but, "How shall we shelter the lambs?" Shall they be pastured by the teachers who have proved an temptingly placed before them, or shall their tender souls be nourished under the guidance of those who are Divinely constituted shepherds?

We are persuaded that the popular errors now existing in reference to education arise from an innocent but fatal delusion or conjuring. Their influence is too frequently a stumbling block in their way, and a snare to the blind, and an endless source of temptation.

Believe, parents, as far as circumstances will allow, to secure for your children a solid and practical course of instruction. Develop their mind and heart. Make them intimately familiar with those branches of knowledge they are likely afterwards to pursue. Then they can go forth into the world, gifted with a well-furnished mind, and great confidence in God. They will be a source of power by which they can elevate themselves in the social circle, and become valuable members of society.

IT IS PARTICULARLY DESIRABLE

that our youth should be so trained, in the course of their studies, with the history of our country, with its origin and principles of its government, and with the eminent men who have served it by their statesmanship, and defended it by their valor. This knowledge will instruct them in their civic duties and rights, and will contribute to make them enlightened citizens and devoted patriots.

And who are they who are exceeding best by the success in our own country, where every honest work is honorable? Your own observation will enable you to see, that they are men who enter the world, bearing their confidence not in wealth already acquired from others, but relying upon God, and profiting by the judicious use of the advantages imparted to them in their youth.

But it is not enough for your children to have a secular education; they must also acquire a religious training. Indeed, religious knowledge is so far above human science as the soul is above the body; and serves in this world, and beyond every time. The little child that is familiar with the Catechism, is really more enlightened on truths that concern his eternal welfare, than the most profound philosophers of Pagan antiquity, or even their many so-called philosophers of our times. It has neither the vast ocean problem of life. He knows its origin, its sublime destiny and the means of attaining the end designed which no human heart can impart without the light of revelation.

GOD HAS GIVEN US A HEART

to be formed to virtue, and to be made to be enlightened. By secular education, we improve the mind; by religious training, we direct the heart.

It is not sufficient, therefore, to know how to read and write; or to understand the rudiments of grammar and arithmetic. It does not suffice to know that two and two make four; we must also practically learn the great distance between time and eternity. The knowledge of bookkeeping is not sufficient unless we learn how to cast and balance our accounts daily between our conscience and our God. It will profit nothing to understand all the chemical and mechanical motions of the earth, unless we add to this science some heavenly astronomy. We should know and feel that our future home is beyond the stars in heaven, and that if we lead virtuous lives here, we will shine "as stars for all eternity."—(Dan. xii 3.)

A SCIENCE OF SCIENCES

is most important and useful for the student. He should be acquainted with the lives of those illustrious heroes who founded empires,—of those men of genius who enlightened the world by their wisdom and learning, and embellished it by their works of art.

But is it not more important to learn something of the King of kings, who created all these kingdoms, and by whom kings reign; is it not more important to study that unrevealed Wisdom before whom all earthly wisdom is folly, and to admire the works of the divine Artist who paints the lilly and gilds the cloud.

If indeed our souls were to die with the body; if we had no future existence beyond the grave; if we had no future account to render to God of our actions, we might more easily dispense with the Catechism in our schools. Though even then Christian morality would be a fruitful source of temporal blessings, for, as the Apostle teaches: "Piety is profitable to all things having promise of the life that now is, and that which is to come."—(Tim. iv. 8.)

But our youth cherish the hope of being one day citizens of heaven, as well as of this land. And as they cannot be good citizens of this country, without loving and observing its laws, neither can they become citizens of heaven, unless they keep the precepts and the laws of God. Now it is only by a good religious education, that we teach them to know and to fulfill our duties towards our Creator.

THE RELIGIOUS AND SECULAR EDUCATION

of your children cannot be divided, the one each other without inflicting a fatal wound upon the soul. The usual consequence of such a separation is to paralyze the moral faculties, and to foment a spirit of indifference to religion. Hence, the anxiety in the soul, when food is to the body. The milk with which the infant is nourished at its mother's breast, feeds not only its body, but permeates also all its mind and its heart and, the other organs of the body. In like manner, the intellectual and moral growth of your children must go hand in hand. Otherwise, their education is shallow and fragmentary, and proves then it curse instead of a blessing.

Piety is not to be put on like a holiday dress, to be worn on state occasions, but it is to be exhibited in our conduct at all times. Our youth must put in practice, every day, the commandments of God, and the principles of the Church as well as the rules of grammar and arithmetic. How can they practise themselves what they have never taught, if they are not daily inculcated?

CURIOUS, AN EMINENT PROTESTANT

writer of France, expresses himself so clearly and forcibly on this point, that we cannot forbear quoting what he says. He says, "to make popular education truly profitable, it must be moral and religious, not merely intellectual.

It is necessary that national education be given and received in the midst of a religious atmosphere, and that schools, processions, and religious observances should penetrate into all its parts. Religion is not only an object of study, it constitutes a certain place, or a certain hour; it is a faith and a law which after this manner alone can exercise all its beneficial influence upon our minds and our lives."

THE CATECHETICAL INSTRUCTIONS

given once a week in our Sunday schools, and produced of very questionable results, are insufficient to supply the religious wants of our children. They should be as frequently, every day, breathe a healthy religious atmosphere in those schools, where not only their minds are enlightened, but where the seeds of faith, piety and sound morals are nourished and strengthened. By what principal of justice can you store your minds with earthly knowledge, for several hours each day, while their hearts, which are capable for more elevation, must be content with the paltry allowance of a few weekly lessons!

Young men who fall hairs to rich estates, but whose education was neglected, seldom reflect on their folly, and blame or scorn. Their father are too frequently a stumbling block in their way, and a snare to the blind, and an endless source of temptation.

Believe, parents, as far as circumstances will allow, to secure for your children a solid and practical course of instruction. Develop their mind and heart. Make them intimately familiar with those branches of knowledge they are likely afterwards to pursue. Then they can go forth into the world, gifted with a well-furnished mind, and great confidence in God. They will be a source of power by which they can elevate themselves in the social circle, and become valuable members of society.

IT IS PARTICULARLY DESIRABLE

that our youth should be so trained, in the course of their studies, with the history of our country, with its origin and principles of its government, and with the eminent men who have served it by their statesmanship, and defended it by their valor. This knowledge will instruct them in their civic duties and rights, and will contribute to make them enlightened citizens and devoted patriots.

And who are they who are succeeding best by the success in our own country, where every honest work is honorable? Your own observation will enable you to see, that they are men who enter the world, bearing their confidence not in wealth already acquired from others, but relying upon God, and profiting by the judicious use of the advantages imparted to them in their youth.

But it is not enough for your children to have a secular education; they must also acquire a religious training. Indeed, religious knowledge is so far above human science as the soul is above the body; as heaven is far more elevated than this earth, and serves in this world, and beyond every time. The little child that is familiar with the Catechism, is really more enlightened on truths that concern his eternal welfare, than the most profound philosophers of Pagan antiquity, or even their many so-called philosophers of our times. It has neither the vast ocean problem of life. He knows his origin, his sublime destiny and the means of attaining the end designed which no human heart can impart without the light of revelation.

GOD HAS GIVEN US A HEART

to be formed to virtue, and to be made to be enlightened. By secular education, we improve the mind; by religious training, we direct the heart.

It is not sufficient, therefore, to know how to read and write; or to understand the rudiments of grammar and arithmetic. It does not suffice to know that two and two make four; we must also practically learn the great distance between time and eternity. The knowledge of bookkeeping is not sufficient unless we learn how to cast and balance our accounts daily between our conscience and our God. It will profit nothing to understand all the chemical and mechanical motions of the earth, unless we add to this science some heavenly astronomy. We should know and feel that our future home is beyond the stars in heaven, and that if we lead virtuous lives here, we will shine "as stars for all eternity."—(Dan. xii 3.)

A SCIENCE OF SCIENCES

is most important and useful for the student. He should be acquainted with the lives of those illustrious heroes who founded empires,—of those men of genius who enlightened the world by their wisdom and learning, and embellished it by their works of art.

But is it not more important to learn something of the King of kings, who created all these kingdoms, and by whom kings reign; is it not more important to study that unrevealed Wisdom before whom all earthly wisdom is folly, and to admire the works of the divine Artist who paints the lilly and gilds the cloud.

If indeed our souls were to die with the body; if we had no future existence beyond the grave; if we had no future account to render to God of our actions, we might more easily dispense with the Catechism in our schools. Though even then Christian morality would be a fruitful source of temporal blessings, for, as the Apostle teaches: "Piety is profitable to all things having promise of the life that now is, and that which is to come."—(Tim. iv. 8.)

But our youth cherish the hope of being one day citizens of heaven, as well as of this land. And as they cannot be good citizens of this country, without loving and observing its laws, neither can they become citizens of heaven, unless they keep the precepts and the laws of God. Now it is only by a good religious education, that we teach them to know and to fulfill our duties towards our Creator.

THE RELIGIOUS AND SECULAR EDUCATION

of your children cannot be divided, the one each other without inflicting a fatal wound upon the soul. The usual consequence of such a separation is to paralyze the moral faculties, and to foment a spirit of indifference to religion. Hence, the anxiety in the soul, when food is to the body. The milk with which the infant is nourished at its mother's breast, feeds not only its body, but permeates also all its mind and its heart and, the other organs of the body. In like manner, the intellectual and moral growth of your children must go hand in hand. Otherwise, their education is shallow and fragmentary, and proves then it curse instead of a blessing.

Piety is not to be put on like a holiday dress, to be worn on state occasions, but it is to be exhibited in our conduct at all times. Our youth must put in practice, every day, the commandments of God, and the principles of the Church as well as the rules of grammar and arithmetic. How can they practise themselves what they have never taught, if they are not daily inculcated?

CURIOUS, AN EMINENT PROTESTANT

writer of France, expresses himself so clearly and forcibly on this point, that we cannot forbear quoting what he says. He says, "to make popular education truly profitable, it must be moral and religious, not merely intellectual.

It is necessary that national education be given and received in the midst of a religious atmosphere, and that schools, processions, and religious observances should penetrate into all its parts. Religion is not only an object of study, it constitutes a certain place, or a certain hour; it is a faith and a law which after this manner alone can exercise all its beneficial influence upon our minds and our lives."

THE CATHOLICITY OF THE CHURCH gives

Poetry.

(FOR THE MONITOR.)

MUSINGS.

"Even shadowy! ye brought."

(Inscribed to the Mutual Alliance Association, No. 1, Berkeley, City of California.)

Slowly sinks the sun in mellowed glory,
Along the purple hills' far mystic height;
Shedding hues, not silvery and cold as heavy,
But wild, red flames of living, blazing light—
Like a golden dream of ancient spirit land,
Or storied sway, of deep, broad, inserted Nile.
Bells the meadows soft, unclouded skies
On—bathing continine worlds, in a deathless smile.

And from out the silent, spectral windings,
That haunt grey aisles of the mountain, dim,
Comes, in voiceless, calm immortality,
Bright rays that on the sun's fair beams o'er-cast,
From point Marathon by Ægean waters,
To Yorktown, near Atlantic's surging swell,
Pure great Chenier's pebble of the present,
Irish movement, as t the mission of Parnell;

Comes then at all, the glamour of glory melting,
Over changing time's pearl-crested ocean waves,
Brilliant stars of long-gone age glowing,
Twilight lights, that, over the vision dome,
Telling of men on Life's field of action—
The good, the brave, the noble and the great,
Of the rise and fall of kingdoms—empires—
Around whom men fall, glories ever wait.

And round one spot, unrivalled, unsurpassed,
This bright, unending ray of glory shines—
Bright, as Christ's fair face, and pure as Christ—
Shines, and shines, and will ever shine,
That last, only place on earth, over hallowed
Its sacred ashes, by the tears and bows;
Pathos, who for freedom of their country,
Died that man's blood, or found an—unknown grave.

Sweet soul, the birthplace of an Emmet,
Thy sons, and daughters, have written thee
Thy fame, and glorious, ever bright for liberty,
Thy shrine and footstool—thy throne for liberty,
Emmet, the only home of Freedom's hope
The only refuge of the liberty
Of—Ireland's—Ireland's—Christ's—Christ's
Words, and fulfilled whose import yet shall be.

Rule's darkest hour is slowly passing,
Yet Freedom's golden dawn is near and near,
When the sun of Freedom beam the meridian,
Ireland's—Ireland's—Ireland's—Ireland's
Land of century and sleepness,
Where is Burke, Grattan, O'Connor, Sheridan,
Tried her rostrum, while Cheers's pastor
Pated hands, and—Ireland's—Ireland's—

Isle of melancholy, and classic song, when Hierophantic Morrow's tone has—been—been pealing enough,
Echoes of its grand wondrous melodies
Shall live, till an Eternity has slept.
Ireland's—Ireland's—Ireland's—Ireland's—
Upon your shores the loveliest scenes abound,
Your verdant valleys, your mountains and grey,
Rolling, jutting, towers casting shadows round.

Gleaming Carpeted, Ever-mantled Silver,
With all the beauty, grandeur, and glory,
Round the proverbial—Ireland's—Ireland's—
Ireland's—Ireland's—Ireland's—Ireland's—
Ireland's—Ireland's—Ireland's—Ireland's—
Her deep mountain glen and stony dale,
All add unanimous—Ireland's—Ireland's—
A chime, on which Heaven's smiles in beauty

And from after comes her greatness sweeping
Or such one; her nations act in each clime,
Ireland's—Ireland's—Ireland's—Ireland's—
Are world-wide, glittering on each wave of Tell me now by Pacific's peaceful shadows,
Her antipodean—Ireland's—Ireland's—
Speaking of the mighty dominant power
And power, Ireland's—Ireland's—Ireland's—

In the golden glow of the mighty—Ireland's—
Ireland's—Ireland's—Ireland's—Ireland's—
Ireland's—Ireland's—Ireland's—Ireland's—
Ireland's—Ireland's—Ireland's

THE MONITOR.

TWENTY NINTH YEAR OF PUBLICATION.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 14, 1883.

Bishop McQuaid on the Public School System.

On the eighth page of the present issue we publish an admirable article from Bishop McQuaid, which recently appeared in the New England Journal of Education, and which we commend to the careful perusal of our readers. The San Jose Mercury is the only paper wherein we have seen any adverse criticism of the Bishop's ideas, and in that journal his statements are false in conception, absurd in their application, and erroneous in their conclusions.

Commenting upon Bishop McQuaid's expression:

"If the State owes its children an education at the common expense, there is no reason why the community's demand for food, shelter and clothing at the common expense," the Mercury calls it "a remarkable passage, and considers it a "strange" and "untenable position" in which the Bishop "exposes his weak spot." But the Mercury forgets that in this age of doubt and delusion, infidelity and infidelity, all Pastoral Letters and communications of Bishops of the Catholic Church are discovered to contain some strange whale spouts of "very remarkable" or shoaling and sectarian. The Christian doctrines laid down by our Divine Lord during his pilgrimage on earth, the gospels of SS. Matthew, Mark, Luke and John, the epistles of SS. Paul, James, Peter and John—all appeared to contain "remarkable passages" sounding "very strange and untenable" to those scribes and pharisees who heard them. But, let us ask the Mercury, were they true truths? Assume some man, in the blindness of their vision or their hardness of heart, refused to recognize in their Christian teaching the infallible voice of Almighty God and to deny it, is, perchance, the sentiment advanced by Bishop McQuaid, who is one of the lawful successors of those very apostles to whom our Blessed Lord appointed to preach and teach the truths of God to all people, and in all lands, even so far as the lonely valley of San Jose!

The Mercury, in its spotless and error, imagines that it demolishes the entire document of Bishop McQuaid when it assumes the insane idea contained in this brief sentence:

"In a government by the people intelligence and morality be the chief corner-stone."

To show the fallacy of this elevation of intelligence as the demi-god of our day, it is only necessary to reflect upon the fact that every States' prison in the whole land contains within their walls an infinite number of "intelligent" people, to say nothing of the vast brigade of the thieving officials who steal the people's money in every department of the Government from the lowest round of the political ladder to the uppermost rung of political rascality. These men are all "intelligent," say, some of them, indeed, are "highly cultured," but yet, neither their "intelligence" nor their "culture" is troubled by that Christian monitor known as "conscience," hence they Steal, and steal, and steal away,

While wives, beauty, and truth decay!

All the defaulters in banks, corporations, or public office, are remarkably intelligent men. Every gambler in stocks or card curbstone has a bogus "conscience" of intelligence to rest upon. Swindlers who stand on street corners, society beans who boast of their locations lives, women who work destruction among the upper ten thousand and the lower ten million, are all so many corner-stones of that fabric of infidelity which the devil has enamelled with the "intelligent" mortar so highly commended by the Mercury!

These hordes of iniquity—from the heavy men whose sins are read as starlet, to the hoodlum who is an infantile imp of the Infernal One—all pride themselves upon their "intelligence" and "culture." It helps them to "get away with" the money they have stolen, the virtue they have ruined, the reputations they have robbed, the lives they have broken—and yet so stubbornly have they clung to the "corner-stone" that conshabbing scoundrels think their sure reputation overtakes them in their criminal career!

Such is the result of "intelligence," as derived from education without moral or religious training, and it is only to discern from these facts why it is that the Mercury chides the ideas advanced by a Christian Bishop as "very remarkable," but, nevertheless, the Bishop's logic will stand the test of time, while the Mercury's meaningless sentiment will only serve to remind men of the old adage:

"A little hoarding is a dangerous thing."

"LENT.—Archbishop Alemany has issued regulations for Lent. The bill of fare is very frugal and the only trouble we have is to get all the good things allowed. We intend to do our best, however, and hope that we shall be crowned if we do not set in much fish, milk, butter, eggs, cheese, etc., on the last slices." P. C. Edmonds.

Whenever a Methodist preacher attempts to say anything "smart" it sounds as much like a sick ass the braying of a donkey sounds like music! For the information of Brother Crary, who gets off the above clownish paragraph in the last Edmonds, we tell him that the Lenten regulations are not addressed to any but Christians, and experience has taught all ecclesiastical authorities the inability of trying to get Methodist preachers to fast or obtain from anything "good for the stomach," so Brother Crary can carry out his natural inclination of making a glutton of himself without the least danger of scandalizing anybody!

ARCHBISHOP SEGHERS' PASTORAL.

His Grace Archbishop Seghers, of Oregon, has issued a very strong Pastoral on the so-called Hierophany, unfortunately so common in this country. We have a portion of it in type for the issue but find we cannot make room for it, so we can only refer to it by word for several days. We will publish it entire in our next issue of the Monitor, and hope that we shall be crowned if we do not set in much fish, milk, butter, eggs, cheese, etc., on the last slices." P. C. Edmonds.

Sub Ingersoll Annihilated.

We sincerely thank the Catholic Union and Times, of Buffalo, N. Y., for a copy of Father Lambert's "Notes on Ingersoll," and we hope that the work will find many readers among the Catholic people of the Pacific coast. Already in these columns we have pronounced and proved Bob Ingersoll to be a frothy fraud whose "lectures" are attended by people who love to listen to his stage-orator style of assailing Christianity by attributing to it doctrines it never held, and by accusing it of crimes which it never committed. Father Lambert criticises so mercifully every antagonistic utterance of Ingersoll against Christianity, and he shows up the shallow-minded and unabashedly theoretical principles, he brought to protest him against the fury of the exasperated people. The rage of the townsmen, however, owing to the calming endeavors of the Catholic priest and those in authority, soon abated, but it was some time before the apostle of Methodism ventured to show himself abroad, and when he did, it was to take a hasty leave of the (to him) very unwholesome neighborhood, and to recount, in soliloquizing words, his martyr-like experiences to his sympathizing and credulous brethren in America.

It was fortunate for him that his presumption not severely punished, but, as it was, the fright that seized his unnerved soul and was so potent in lending wings to his feet may cause him to think twice, in the future, before he attempts a similar action. In the United States, in a similar conjuncture, Mr. Wellkin would have been promptly arrested as a sory "crank," but the impulsive Mexican, resenting the gratuitous insult to his religion by this medicinous "go pinge" with more vigor, sent him all likelihood, have gibbeted the Waterjan upon the first convenient tree or cross beam but for the protection accorded him in the nick of time.

Of pretty much the same character, and of a like origin, are the often recounted tales of persecution of our Protestant friends in Spanish-American countries. Imperfectly understanding the temper of the people, and unable to make sufficient headway in their evangelizing work with the distribution of Bibles and tracts, they resort to such bold and outrageous methods of aggression Christianity as those of Mr. Watkins, advantaging themselves of their standing as a American citizens to perpetrate such absurd indignities against the natural and religious feelings of the Spanish-Americans, as some the indignation of Americans at home and are the cause of shame and injury to those abroad.

"Catholics First and Patriots Afterwards."

We are not astonished to find the caption of this article displeasing to the Methodist Advocate of this city, because our neighbor belongs to that blind tribe alluded to by the inspired writer as those who, "having eyes, will not see, and, having ears, will not hear." If the Advocate understood Christianity in its true sense, and could appreciate fully the responsibilities which it imposes upon those who claim to belong to the fold of Christ; it would accept our words as a ready avow of our allegiance to God. Pagans may be patriots, they may see in the temporal power the highest authority they acknowledge, but with Christians their first duty, their highest allegiance, their most steadfast devotion—must be given to Almighty God, if they desire to be called worthy disciples of our Blessed Redeemer. The millions of martyrs who have died in defence of Christianity could have saved their lives if they sacrificed their faith on the altar of temporal rulers. Acknowledge Caesar and live—proclaim Christ and die, was the fiat declared by the persecuting Emperors of Rome in the infancy of the Christian Church. But these martyrs avowed themselves Christians first, and refused to give to the idols set up by the temporal power the worship due to God, so they sealed their faith with their blood.

Half Writ is filled with passages which admonish the faithful that they must first follow the mandates of God, even though they break through law, license, and custom in doing so. Any human law, no matter by whom promulgated, that is inconsistent with the law of God, is not binding on the conscience of a Christian, and when Methodist persons prate about patriotism being above our duty to God they only exhibit the poverty of their belief and the blindness of their spiritual vision. Some of the greatest patriots in America during the trying times when patriotism meant death and loss of property—were Catholics, while, on the other hand, Wesley and his followers were among the bitterest foes those Catholic heroes had to combat against. Has our Methodist growler forgotten that during the Revolutionary struggle one of the Wesley's tried to raise a regiment of rearing, roaring Methodist regulars in England in order to come over here and bew down the American rebelsters? Has he forgotten that while the Catholic Irish all fought on the side of freedom's forlorn hope, the canting, crawling, hypocritical Methodists maintained under the baneful banner of the Hessians of King George? All these facts go far to prove that the more ardent the Catholic faith burns in the breast of a citizen the more true and courageous he is in the demonstration of his patriotism.

It is too late in the day for the Advocate to refurbish the very rubbish of the past by insinuating that a Catholic citizen's allegiance to the Republic is secondary to his allegiance to the Pope. That cry had its origin in a hundred years ago, and all intelligent people are aware of its falsity. Catholic bravery on the battle-field, Catholic aid to the treasury, Catholic stadons in its counsels—helped materially to make this Union "the home of the brave and the land of the free," and all this was accomplished while the Methodists were secretly plotting, and planning, and praying even—for the perpetuation of monarchy on the soil consecrated by Catholic blood, brains, and bullion to the spirit of civil and religious liberty.

The Works of Hubert Howe Bancroft.

VOLUME VI.—HISTORY OF CENTRAL AMERICA.

THIRD ARTICLE.

We must frankly admit that the chapters of the volume under review which we have read this week, have not helped to elevate our opinion of Mr. Bancroft's ability in our estimation. We find on page 203 a footnote which cannot but be obnoxious to any intelligent man who has read sufficient regarding Christopher Columbus to know the glorious anniversary, the grandeur of his enterprise, and the sacrifices, disappointed hopes, unfulfilled predictions, and unperformed promises. And, with such a portrait of Columbus in his mind, we were not so much astonished to be told that Ferdinand and Isabella were merely bigots whose actions were guided by the frenzy of a fanaticism born of their religious training! Moreover, if we are to believe our local historian, Isabella never helped Columbus to carry the relations of Prescott and Irving on this historical matter, he says, will do well enough as pleasing story for children, and very stupid children they must be who believe it!

As we read these lines, we recount of illiteracy, and the ability of the Queen's sanctions on this point, so it winds up its rancorous rigmarole by saying that the Bishop should have consulted with wiser heads before he gave to the world his crushing array of facts which made the Occident a very sore spot in the side of the Pope. Keep cool, dear Occident, your passion ill-becometh your calling, and you only besmirch your cloth with Friday's pitch when you rave about the Pope's Irish congregating in cities.

The ultimate disappearance of Protestantism from the Christian world is only a question of time. Just as the rays of the sun increase the winter's snow to disappear from the earth, so will the sun of Eternal Truth, when it shall be permitted to shine, melt the tartan snowflakes of false sectarianism and leave to the world but two conflicting powers—the Catholic Church and infidelity. The Occident may not realize the truth of the assertion, but truth penetrates some minds very slowly, and it is only a little more than a century since the Church's precursors in Portlandom flattered themselves that Popery could never gain a foothold in New England, and now the cross of the Catholic Church meets the eye of the visitor every mile he travels from Plymouth Rock to Bunker Hill!

The Occident, therefore, will have to make up its mind to accept the inevitable, and it may as well do so with good grace as to manifest its unseemly wrath because it has to bow at the fiat of facts which Bishop McQuaid has arrayed against it.

The Peculiar Position of Governor Stoneman.

A letter published in the Morning Herald of last Saturday, being written by a Democrat who is a Democratic Governor refused to recognize the claims of the Irish-American element in the Democratic party to any share of the appointments to office, and that only such in spiritual matters, and are Wet-Blankets" in respect to all and hoary headed errors and a growing detestation of hypocrisy, cant, and spiritual fraud. A compact organization of all Protestant Church creeds into one might stem the tide of the Pope's influence, but the selfishness of the clergy renders that impossible.

The "Occident" on Bishop McQuaid.

The reading of Bishop McQuaid's article on "The Decline of Protestantism" seems to have given the Occident a virulent attack of yellow jaundice. It says the Bishop's statements "are positively amusing," and thus it shows its sharp sectarian spleen by flying at him with its fingers pressed in the usual feminine fashion, females adopt when they fly at their neighbors in order to "scratch their eyes out!" We look for a very foolish on the part of the Occident. Better, far better, to attempt to refute the Bishop's facts than to style the Protestant authorities he quotes "dyspeptics and pessimists," because a Protestant preacher may be dyspeptic and yet tell the truth concerning the decay of the sect over which he has religious control.

If the Occident can meet the Bishop's statistics showing the decay of Protestantism with equally reliable statistics proving that such decay does not exist, why not publish them? But the Occident knows too well that it dare not dispute Bishop McQuaid's

---

Another Lay Sermon for Lent.

During this holy season the Church preaches for her children three ralos, viz: To pray, to fast, and to give alms. It may, therefore, be highly profitable as well as pleasing, to ascertain which of these good works is most pleasing to God. The sage who spoke to Tobias, telling him that "prayer is good with fasting and alms, more than to lay up treasures of gold," did not decide which of these pious practices is most acceptable to God. But the Angel of the Resurrection, The National Guard of California, statistics and secretion carnal vices in ourselves; alms-deeds help our neighbors' necessities. By prayer satisfaction to God is made in the soul—the highest part of us; by fasting satisfaction is made by the animal portion of us—the body; by alms-giving we make our temporal wants good.

There is a sense in which alms-deeds may be said to surpass even prayer or fasting, for it is not possible to pray or fast for our neighbors' existence, and alms-giving is said to bear as its fruit all the goods of nature, and grace, and glory which are involved in that existence—life as understood possible. Again, alms-giving involves an obligation on the recipient of assisting the giver in the exercise of his power, and the prayers and penances are purchased, as it were, by the alms which he gives.

Again, alms-giving is an offering to God, and, as such is a species of more effective prayer; it is also an act of self-denial, so that we may do unto others as we have lived in sympathy with the poor. The poor, in all ages of the world, have been, and, in all lands, are, the Christian Church, Mohammedan, or pagan, are those who make religion a reality, and who, in their poverty, are the most generous, the most virtuous, the most sorrowing, the most patient, the most Christ-like of all people. It is the poor who are the most generous of all others, who sympathize with all others, who implore the poor from the doors of his club and wrapt himself in his mantle of self-complacency.

"Is there reason to anticipate a favorable action against this decay of Protestantism? If there is it does not be much or close to the author of the Gospel preparation which followed the Reformation and drew half the civilized world away from the Catholic Church forty centuries ago. Another man's genius arrived at the Church's defense and it is the latter spiritual but not not temporal power. What Luther failed to do Leo XIII. successfully accomplished, perhaps in a more enduring, certainly on a more extensive scale. The Church's enemies produce a Leopold and a Bismarck, a Garibaldi and a Victor Emanuel, and yet the Church stands as firm as a rock, and the Protestant sects are neither so numerous nor so powerful as they were when Luther, make an disguise of great danger, and with the view to the spiritual preparation of the world.

A Bishop's Warning.

Ottawa (Ont.), Feb. 12.—A pastoral letter of Bishop Duhamel, of Ottawa, was read in the Catholic churches here yesterday. He forbids footnote the clergy and laity of his diocese to discourage all publications which oppose the interests of the Church and nationality, and warns the faithful against receiving religious, and indulge in attacks upon ecclesiastical persons and ceremonies.

The "Chronicle" on Bishop McQuaid's "Decay of Protestantism."

One of the most sensible and impartial articles which has thus far appeared in the non Catholic press criticising the spoken words of Bishop McQuaid, which he recently contributed to the North American Review, appeared in the Chronicle of Sunday last. Although it contains a few sentiments which the Quaid introduced in order to show, from a seen a Protestant stand-point, the sectarian dry-rot which he claimed to be at work decay of Protestantism, it concludes as follows:

"These are all purely secular statistics. They are ordered by enterprising publishers of papers and are intended to sell publications, not only on finding out the truth, and taken by religious and sectarian people, but in order to prejudice and sectarian so it is possible for to be taken by people who are not Christians. Bishop McQuaid is a Roman Catholic, and the head of the Protestant churches and sidelines, and he is a man who is not blind to the dangers of religion which they imply in the Protestant sects, and the spirit of the Reformation and out of the revolution in Europe and Protestantism. The National Guard of California naturally asked if there was no soldier who had fought under the Union flag for this place, or most a Confederate patriot to take the place of the Bishop's allegiance to the Union never wavered! When staunch Democrats like Mayor Harper, of Sacramento, Colonel J. J. Tobin, of this city, and dozens of other competent patriots are passed over, it is time to ask if there is not some Stoneman in the wind and in the ladder which has helped him to ascend to the elevation he occupies?

It may be that our Governor thinks his party is composed of but one element, and that he intends to ally himself with the corporals' guard known as "the chivalry wing." But he will not be wise if he loses sight of the fact that the masses—"the shovelry" as they are sometimes designated, have it in their power, by their votes, to unmake, as well as to make Governors. It would show a degree of wisdom, therefore, on the part of our Democratic Governor, to cement his party by patronizing the officers within his gift among the representatives of all the nationalities which combined to secure victory for him and his fellow-candidates, rather than to rupture the ranks by refusing to recognize the States for position of any man not born south of Mason and Dixon's line.

Our plea on behalf of Northern born Democrats and adopted citizens is not based on any exclusive spirit, but is the reflection of that marked discontent and disappointment which we see visible in the ranks of our fellow-citizens, who feel, with Tobias, that "if we have plenty, we shall be able to pray for thee, and thy kingdom, and thy glorious, the self seeking, the aristocratic and selfish classes, alms-giving, alms, who implore the poor from the doors of his club and wrapt himself in his mantle of self-complacency.

"Is there reason to anticipate a favorable action against this decay of Protestantism? If there is it does not be much or close to the author of the Gospel preparation which followed the Reformation and drew half the civilized world away from the Catholic Church forty centuries ago. Another man's genius arrived at the Church's defense and it is the latter spiritual but not not temporal power. What Luther failed to do Leo XIII. successfully accomplished, perhaps in a more enduring, certainly on a more extensive scale. The Church's enemies produce a Leopold and a Bismarck, a Garibaldi and a Victor Emanuel, and yet the Church stands as firm as a rock, and the Protestant sects are neither so numerous nor so powerful as they were when Luther, make an disguise of great danger, and with the view to the spiritual preparation of the world.

A Bishop's Warning.

Ottawa (Ont.), Feb. 12.—A pastoral letter of Bishop Duhamel, of Ottawa, was read in the Catholic churches here yesterday. He forbids footnote the clergy and laity of his diocese to discourage all publications which oppose the interests of the Church and nationality, and warns the faithful against receiving religious, and indulge in attacks upon ecclesiastical persons and ceremonies.

Another Lay Sermon for Lent.

During this holy season the Church preaches for her children three ralos, viz: To pray, to fast, and to give alms. It may, therefore, be highly profitable as well as pleasing, to ascertain which of these good works is most pleasing to God. The sage who spoke to Tobias, telling him that "prayer is good with fasting and alms, more than to lay up treasures of gold," did not decide which of these pious practices is most acceptable to God. But the Angel of the Resurrection, The National Guard of California, statistics and secretion carnal vices in ourselves; alms-deeds help our neighbors' necessities. By prayer satisfaction to God is made in the soul—the highest part of us; by fasting satisfaction is made by the animal portion of us—the body; by alms-giving we make our temporal wants good.

There is a sense in which alms-deeds may be said to surpass even prayer or fasting, for it is not possible to pray or fast for our neighbors' existence, and alms-giving is said to bear as its fruit all the goods of nature, and grace, and glory which are involved in that existence—life as understood possible. Again, alms-giving involves an obligation on the recipient of assisting the giver in the exercise of his power, and the prayers and penances are purchased, as it were, by the alms which he gives.

Again, alms-giving is an offering to God, and, as such is a species of more effective prayer; it is also an act of self-denial, so that we may do unto others as we have lived in sympathy with the poor. The poor, in all ages of the world, have been, and, in all lands, are, the Christian Church, Mohammedan, or pagan, are those who make religion a reality, and who, in their poverty, are the most generous, the most virtuous, the most sorrowing, the most patient, the most Christ-like of all people. It is the poor who are the most generous of all others, who sympathize with all others, who implore the poor from the doors of his club and wrapt himself in his mantle of self-complacency.

"Is there reason to anticipate a favorable action against this decay of Protestantism? If there is it does not be much or close to the author of the Gospel preparation which followed the Reformation and drew half the civilized world away from the Catholic Church forty centuries ago. Another man's genius arrived at the Church's defense and it is the latter spiritual but not not temporal power. What Luther failed to do Leo XIII. successfully accomplished, perhaps in a more enduring, certainly on a more extensive scale. The Church's enemies produce a Leopold and a Bismarck, a Garibaldi and a Victor Emanuel, and yet the Church stands as firm as a rock, and the Protestant sects are neither so numerous nor so powerful as they were when Luther, make an disguise of great danger, and with the view to the spiritual preparation of the world.

A Bishop's Warning.

Ottawa (Ont.), Feb. 12.—A pastoral letter of Bishop Duhamel, of Ottawa, was read in the Catholic churches here yesterday. He forbids footnote the clergy and laity of his diocese to discourage all publications which oppose the interests of the Church and nationality, and warns the faithful against receiving religious, and indulge in attacks upon ecclesiastical persons and ceremonies.

Another Lay Sermon for Lent.

During this holy season the Church preaches for her children three ralos, viz: To pray, to fast, and to give alms. It may, therefore, be highly profitable as well as pleasing, to ascertain which of these good works is most pleasing to God. The sage who spoke to Tobias, telling him that "prayer is good with fasting and alms, more than to lay up treasures of gold," did not decide which of these pious practices is most acceptable to God. But the Angel of the Resurrection, The National Guard of California, statistics and secretion carnal vices in ourselves; alms-deeds help our neighbors' necessities. By prayer satisfaction to God is made in the soul—the highest part of us; by fasting satisfaction is made by the animal portion of us—the body; by alms-giving we make our temporal wants good.

There is a sense in which alms-deeds may be said to surpass even prayer or fasting, for it is not possible to pray or fast for our neighbors' existence, and alms-giving is said to bear as its fruit all the goods of nature, and grace, and glory which are involved in that existence—life as understood possible. Again, alms-giving involves an obligation on the recipient of assisting the giver in the exercise of his power, and the prayers and penances are purchased, as it were, by the alms which he gives.

Again, alms-giving is an offering to God, and, as such is a species of more effective prayer; it is also an act of self-denial, so that we may do unto others as we have lived in sympathy with the poor. The poor, in all ages of the world, have been, and, in all lands, are, the Christian Church, Mohammedan, or pagan, are those who make religion a reality, and who, in their poverty, are the most generous, the most virtuous, the most sorrowing, the most patient, the most Christ-like of all people. It is the poor who are the most generous of all others, who sympathize with all others, who implore the poor from the doors of his club and wrapt himself in his mantle of self-complacency.

"Is there reason to anticipate a favorable action against this decay of Protestantism? If there is it does not be much or close to the author of the Gospel preparation which followed the Reformation and drew half the civilized world away from the Catholic Church forty centuries ago. Another man's genius arrived at the Church's defense and it is the latter spiritual but not not temporal power. What Luther failed to do Leo XIII. successfully accomplished, perhaps in a more enduring, certainly on a more extensive scale. The Church's enemies produce a Leopold and a Bismarck, a Garibaldi and a Victor Emanuel, and yet the Church stands as firm as a rock, and the Protestant sects are neither so numerous nor so powerful as they were when Luther, make an disguise of great danger, and with the view to the spiritual preparation of the world.

Paul Bert's Book Condemned.

The Congregation of the Index has taken an important step which will be of very serious consequence to a very numerous class of people in France. By its decree, it has prohibited the sale of a book which has been very widely read by people in accordance with the official programme of the Lay Party, and which is known as the Catechism of M. Paul Bert. These official school books may, therefore, be regarded as condemned by any Catholic; no Catholic parent may allow his children to read it, and no Catholic can be frequent any school in which they are employed.

A General Catholic Congregation.

The rapid growth of the Church in America is aptly illustrated by the program made in Cathedral Cemetery, on Sunday, Feb. 11, when only a few years ago, Mass was said for the first time in a small wooden shanty. The Rev. Father Seghers applauded Rev. J. J. Jolie, as Rector, his choice was not a little, but from this serious priest and his generous congregation have erected a spacious hospital costing $12,000, and all paid for. A spacious parochial residence costing $8,000 is now in course of erection, and Father Dole has purchased for each of the Irish societies of the Cathedral parish a hall, which will be known as the Hibernian Hall, and all those who wish to enjoy this spirited entertainment, will be gladly welcomed. Father Dole has been very active in the Land League, and is a man who is well known to the Irish people, and he is a man who is well known to the Irish people, and he is a man who is well known to the Irish people, and he REGULATIONS FOR LENT, IN 1883, FOR THE DIOCESE OF SAN FRANCISCO.

1. All the week days of Lent, from Ash Wednesday (February 7th) till Easter Sunday, are fast days of penance, to be observed, with the advantage of a moderate collation.

2. The precept of fasting implies also that of abstinence, from the use of flesh meat. But, by dispensation, the use of flesh meat is allowed in this Diocese during Lent, except on the following days, to wit: the Wednesdays, Fridays, and Saturdays of Ember Days, the Thursday of Holy Week, and the vigil of St. Joseph. The Ascension Day, on which days meat is allowed, have to use fish meat, except by dispensation from the respective Pastors, which they are hereby authorized to grant in case of necessity. Dispensations for the days of abstinence, lost sight of obligation. The Holy See restricts the use of flesh meat, by dispensation on the day in which abstinence is dispensed, except for those employed in heavy labor, and in the Missions.

3. The prohibition not to eat fish and flesh meat at the same meal is forbidden in Lent, even on Sundays.

4. It should be carefully observed that, according to an answer of the Sacred Congregation of the Holy Office, to the Bishops of England in 1830, and to the Bishops of Ireland in 1877, the Holy See has never dispensed to have introduced the use of butter, lard, and lard, of chyme, of the fat of animals, on fast days. But, owing to the peculiar conditions of the Missions, in the Province, the Holy See has hitherto consented to tolerate it in the use of milk, and butter, in a small quantity, eggs, however, excepted, but permission not bound to fast are not subject, as always permitted, not to abstinence from eggs.

5. The use of lard or other fat, condiment is allowed in Lent and throughout the year, excepting Ash Wednesday, Ember-days through Lent, Holy Week, the Vigil of Pentecost, the last three days of Holy Week, and the Eves of Particular Feasts, and the Vigil of All Saints, and of Christmas; as, on Good Friday eggs and all kinds of food, are to be abstained from, throughout the Lent.

6. Some purpose, as explicit, are recommended during Lent, particularly on those days in which flesh meat is used.

7. In lieu, taking a pecuniary tax, as purposes mentioned in lay before the Faithful the importance of Christian mortification, and the Scriptural obligation of complying with their Easter duty, which is to be fulfilled from the first Sunday of Lent; they will frequently and earnestly exhort the Faithful to comply with the Precept of Confession and Communion, at Easter, and to have to use fish meat, except by dispensation from the respective Pastors, which they are hereby authorized to grant in case of necessity. Dispensations for the days of abstinence, lost sight of obligation. The Holy See restricts the use of flesh meat, by dispensation on the day in which abstinence is dispensed, except for those employed in heavy labor, and in the Missions.

8. The prohibition not to eat fish and flesh meat at the same meal is forbidden in Lent, even on Sundays.

9. It should be carefully observed that, according to an answer of the Sacred Congregation of the Holy Office, to the Bishops of England in 1830, and to the Bishops of Ireland in 1877, the Holy See has never dispensed to have introduced the use of butter, lard, and lard, of chyme, of the fat of animals, on fast days. But, owing to the peculiar conditions of the Missions, in the Province, the Holy See has hitherto consented to tolerate it in the use of milk, and butter, in a small quantity, eggs, however, excepted, but permission not bound to fast are not subject, as always permitted, not to abstinence from eggs.

10. The use of lard or other fat, condiment is allowed in Lent and throughout the year, excepting Ash Wednesday, Ember-days through Lent, Holy Week, the Vigil of Pentecost, the last three days of Holy Week, and the Eves of Particular Feasts, and the Vigil of All Saints, and of Christmas; as, on Good Friday eggs and all kinds of food, are to be abstained from, throughout the Lent.

11. Some purpose, as explicit, are recommended during Lent, particularly on those days in which flesh meat is used.

12. In lieu, taking a pecuniary tax, as purposes mentioned in lay before the Faithful the importance of Christian mortification, and the Scriptural obligation of complying with their Easter duty, which is to be fulfilled from the first Sunday of Lent; they will frequently and earnestly exhort the Faithful to comply with the Precept of Confession and Communion, at Easter, and to have to use fish meat, except by dispensation from the respective Pastors, which they are hereby authorized to grant in case of necessity. Dispensations for the days of abstinence, lost sight of obligation. The Holy See restricts the use of flesh meat, by dispensation on the day in which abstinence is dispensed, except for those employed in heavy labor, and in the Missions.

13. The prohibition not to eat fish and flesh meat at the same meal is forbidden in Lent, even on Sundays.

14. It should be carefully observed that, according to an answer of the Sacred Congregation of the Holy Office, to the Bishops of England in 1830, and to the Bishops of Ireland in 1877, the Holy See has never dispensed to have introduced the use of butter, lard, and lard, of chyme, of the fat of animals, on fast days. But, owing to the peculiar conditions of the Missions, in the Province, the Holy See has hitherto consented to tolerate it in the use of milk, and butter, in a small quantity, eggs, however, excepted, but permission not bound to fast are not subject, as always permitted, not to abstinence from eggs.

15. The use of lard or other fat, condiment is allowed in Lent and throughout the year, excepting Ash Wednesday, Ember-days through Lent, Holy Week, the Vigil of Pentecost, the last three days of Holy Week, and the Eves of Particular Feasts, and the Vigil of All Saints, and of Christmas; as, on Good Friday eggs and all kinds of food, are to be abstained from, throughout the Lent.

16. Some purpose, as explicit, are recommended during Lent, particularly on those days in which flesh meat is used.

17. In lieu, taking a pecuniary tax, as purposes mentioned in lay before the Faithful the importance of Christian mortification, and the Scriptural obligation of complying with their Easter duty, which is to be fulfilled from the first Sunday of Lent; they will frequently and earnestly exhort the Faithful to comply with the Precept of Confession and Communion, at Easter, and to have to use fish meat, except by dispensation from the respective Pastors, which they are hereby authorized to grant in case of necessity. Dispensations for the days of abstinence, lost sight of obligation. The Holy See restricts the use of flesh meat, by dispensation on the day in which abstinence is dispensed, except for those employed in heavy labor, and in the Missions.

18. The prohibition not to eat fish and flesh meat at the same meal is forbidden in Lent, even on Sundays.

19. It should be carefully observed that, according to an answer of the Sacred Congregation of the Holy Office, to the Bishops of England in 1830, and to the Bishops of Ireland in 1877, the Holy See has never dispensed to have introduced the use of butter, lard, and lard, of chyme, of the fat of animals, on fast days. But, owing to the peculiar conditions of the Missions, in the Province, the Holy See has hitherto consented to tolerate it in the use of milk, and butter, in a small quantity, eggs, however, excepted, but permission not bound to fast are not subject, as always permitted, not to abstinence from eggs.

20. The use of lard or other fat, condiment is allowed in Lent and throughout the year, excepting Ash Wednesday, Ember-days through Lent, Holy Week, the Vigil of Pentecost, the last three days of Holy Week, and the Eves of Particular Feasts, and the Vigil of All Saints, and of Christmas; as, on Good Friday eggs and all kinds of food, are to be abstained from, throughout the Lent.

21. Some purpose, as explicit, are recommended during Lent, particularly on those days in which flesh meat is used.

22. In lieu, taking a pecuniary tax, as purposes mentioned in lay before the Faithful the importance of Christian mortification, and the Scriptural obligation of complying with their Easter duty, which is to be fulfilled from the first Sunday of Lent; they will frequently and earnestly exhort the Faithful to comply with the Precept of Confession and Communion, at Easter, and to have to use fish meat, except by dispensation from the respective Pastors, which they are hereby authorized to grant in case of necessity. Dispensations for the days of abstinence, lost sight of obligation. The Holy See restricts the use of flesh meat, by dispensation on the day in which abstinence is dispensed, except for those employed in heavy labor, and in the Missions.

23. The prohibition not to eat fish and flesh meat at the same meal is forbidden in Lent, even on Sundays.

24. It should be carefully observed that, according to an answer of the Sacred Congregation of the Holy Office, to the Bishops of England in 1830, and to the Bishops of Ireland in 1877, the Holy See has never dispensed to have introduced the use of butter, lard, and lard, of chyme, of the fat of animals, on fast days. But, owing to the peculiar conditions of the Missions, in the Province, the Holy See has hitherto consented to tolerate it in the use of milk, and butter, in a small quantity, eggs, however, excepted, but permission not bound to fast are not subject, as always permitted, not to abstinence from eggs.

25. The use of lard or other fat, condiment is allowed in Lent and throughout the year, excepting Ash Wednesday, Ember-days through Lent, Holy Week, the Vigil of Pentecost, the last three days of Holy Week, and the Eves of Particular Feasts, and the Vigil of All Saints, and of Christmas; as, on Good Friday eggs and all kinds of food, are to be abstained from, throughout the Lent.

26. Some purpose, as explicit, are recommended during Lent, particularly on those days in which flesh meat is used.

27. In lieu, taking a pecuniary tax, as purposes mentioned in lay before the Faithful the importance of Christian mortification, and the Scriptural obligation of complying with their Easter duty, which is to be fulfilled from the first Sunday of Lent; they will frequently and earnestly exhort the Faithful to comply with the Precept of Confession and Communion, at Easter, and to have to use fish meat, except by dispensation from the respective Pastors, which they are hereby authorized to grant in case of necessity. Dispensations for the days of abstinence, lost sight of obligation. The Holy See restricts the use of flesh meat, by dispensation on the day in which abstinence is dispensed, except for those employed in heavy labor, and in the Missions.

28. The prohibition not to eat fish and flesh meat at the same meal is forbidden in Lent, even on Sundays.

29. It should be carefully observed that, according to an answer of the Sacred Congregation of the Holy Office, to the Bishops of England in 1830, and to the Bishops of Ireland in 1877, the Holy See has never dispensed to have introduced the use of butter, lard, and lard, of chyme, of the fat of animals, on fast days. But, owing to the peculiar conditions of the Missions, in the Province, the Holy See has hitherto consented to tolerate it in the use of milk, and butter, in a small quantity, eggs, however, excepted, but permission not bound to fast are not subject, as always permitted, not to abstinence from eggs.

30. The use of lard or other fat, condiment is allowed in Lent and throughout the year, excepting Ash Wednesday, Ember-days through Lent, Holy Week, the Vigil of Pentecost, the last three days of Holy Week, and the Eves of Particular Feasts, and the Vigil of All Saints, and of Christmas; as, on Good Friday eggs and all kinds of food, are to be abstained from, throughout the Lent.

31. Some purpose, as explicit, are recommended during Lent, particularly on those days in which flesh meat is used.

32. In lieu, taking a pecuniary tax, as purposes mentioned in lay before the Faithful the importance of Christian mortification, and the Scriptural obligation of complying with their Easter duty, which is to be fulfilled from the first Sunday of Lent; they will frequently and earnestly exhort the Faithful to comply with the Precept of Confession and Communion, at Easter, and to have to use fish meat, except by dispensation from the respective Pastors, which they are hereby authorized to grant in case of necessity. Dispensations for the days of abstinence, lost sight of obligation. The Holy See restricts the use of flesh meat, by dispensation on the day in which abstinence is dispensed, except for those employed in heavy labor, and in the Missions.

33. The prohibition not to eat fish and flesh meat at the same meal is forbidden in Lent, even on Sundays.

34. It should be carefully observed that, according to an answer of the Sacred Congregation of the Holy Office, to the Bishops of England in 1830, and to the Bishops of Ireland in 1877, the Holy See has never dispensed to have introduced the use of butter, lard, and lard, of chyme, of the fat of animals, on fast days. But, owing to the peculiar conditions of the Missions, in the Province, the Holy See has hitherto consented to tolerate it in the use of milk, and butter, in a small quantity, eggs, however, excepted, but permission not bound to fast are not subject, as always permitted, not to abstinence from eggs.

35. The use of lard or other fat, condiment is allowed in Lent and throughout the year, excepting Ash Wednesday, Ember-days through Lent, Holy Week, the Vigil of Pentecost, the last three days of Holy Week, and the Eves of Particular Feasts, and the Vigil of All Saints, and of Christmas; as, on Good Friday eggs and all kinds of food, are to be abstained from, throughout the Lent.

36. Some purpose, as explicit, are recommended during Lent, particularly on those days in which flesh meat is used.

37. In lieu, taking a pecuniary tax, as purposes mentioned in lay before the Faithful the importance of Christian mortification, and the Scriptural obligation of complying with their Easter duty, which is to be fulfilled from the first Sunday of Lent; they will frequently and earnestly exhort the Faithful to comply with the Precept of Confession and Communion, at Easter, and to have to use fish meat, except by dispensation from the respective Pastors, which they are hereby authorized to grant in case of necessity. Dispensations for the days of abstinence, lost sight of obligation. The Holy See restricts the use of flesh meat, by dispensation on the day in which abstinence is dispensed, except for those employed in heavy labor, and in the Missions.

38. The prohibition not to eat fish and flesh meat at the same meal is forbidden in Lent, even on Sundays.

39. It should be carefully observed that, according to an answer of the Sacred Congregation of the Holy Office, to the Bishops of England in 1830, and to the Bishops of Ireland in 1877, the Holy See has never dispensed to have introduced the use of butter, lard, and lard, of chyme, of the fat of animals, on fast days. But, owing to the peculiar conditions of the Missions, in the Province, the Holy See has hitherto consented to tolerate it in the use of milk, and butter, in a small quantity, eggs, however, excepted, but permission not bound to fast are not subject, as always permitted, not to abstinence from eggs.

40. The use of lard or other fat, condiment is allowed in Lent and throughout the year, excepting Ash Wednesday, Ember-days through Lent, Holy Week, the Vigil of Pentecost, the last three days of Holy Week, and the Eves of Particular Feasts, and the Vigil of All Saints, and of Christmas; as, on Good Friday eggs and all kinds of food, are to be abstained from, throughout the Lent.

41. Some purpose, as explicit, are recommended during Lent, particularly on those days in which flesh meat is used.

42. In lieu, taking a pecuniary tax, as purposes mentioned in lay before the Faithful the importance of Christian mortification, and the Scriptural obligation of complying with their Easter duty, which is to be fulfilled from the first Sunday of Lent; they will frequently and earnestly exhort the Faithful to comply with the Precept of Confession and Communion, at Easter, and to have to use fish meat, except by dispensation from the respective Pastors, which they are hereby authorized to grant in case of necessity. Dispensations for the days of abstinence, lost sight of obligation. The Holy See restricts the use of flesh meat, by dispensation on the day in which abstinence is dispensed, except for those employed in heavy labor, and in the Missions.

43. The prohibition not to eat fish and flesh meat at the same meal is forbidden in Lent, even on Sundays.

44. It should be carefully observed that, according to an answer of the Sacred Congregation of the Holy Office, to the Bishops of England in 1830, and to the Bishops of Ireland in 1877, the Holy See has never dispensed to have introduced the use of butter, lard, and lard, of chyme, of the fat of animals, on fast days. But, owing to the peculiar conditions of the Missions, in the Province, the Holy See has hitherto consented to tolerate it in the use of milk, and butter, in a small quantity, eggs, however, excepted, but permission not bound to fast are not subject, as always permitted, not to abstinence from eggs.

45. The use of lard or other fat, condiment is allowed in Lent and throughout the year, excepting Ash Wednesday, Ember-days through Lent, Holy Week, the Vigil of Pentecost, the last three days of Holy Week, and the Eves of Particular Feasts, and the Vigil of All Saints, and of Christmas; as, on Good Friday eggs and all kinds of food, are to be abstained from, throughout the Lent.

46. Some purpose, as explicit, are recommended during Lent, particularly on those days in which flesh meat is used.

47. In lieu, taking a pecuniary tax, as purposes mentioned in lay before the Faithful the importance of Christian mortification, and the Scriptural obligation of complying with their Easter duty, which is to be fulfilled from the first Sunday of Lent; they will frequently and earnestly exhort the Faithful to comply with the Precept of Confession and Communion, at Easter, and to have to use fish meat, except by dispensation from the respective Pastors, which they are hereby authorized to grant in case of necessity. Dispensations for the days of abstinence, lost sight of obligation. The Holy See restricts the use of flesh meat, by dispensation on the day in which abstinence is dispensed, except for those employed in heavy labor, and in the Missions.

48. The prohibition not to eat fish and flesh meat at the same meal is forbidden in Lent, even on Sundays.

49. It should be carefully observed that, according to an answer of the Sacred Congregation of the Holy Office, to the Bishops of England in 1830, and to the Bishops of Ireland in 1877, the Holy See has never dispensed to have introduced the use of butter, lard, and lard, of chyme, of the fat of animals, on fast days. But, owing to the peculiar conditions of the Missions, in the Province, the Holy See has hitherto consented to tolerate it in the use of milk, and butter, in a small quantity, eggs, however, excepted, but permission not bound to fast are not subject, as always permitted, not to abstinence from eggs.

50. The use of lard or other fat, condiment is allowed in Lent and throughout the year, excepting Ash Wednesday, Ember-days through Lent, Holy Week, the Vigil of Pentecost, the last three days of Holy Week, and the Eves of Particular Feasts, and the Vigil of All Saints, and of Christmas; as, on Good Friday eggs and all kinds of food, are to be abstained from, throughout the Lent.

51. Some purpose, as explicit, are recommended during Lent, particularly on those days in which flesh meat is used.

52. In lieu, taking a pecuniary tax, as purposes mentioned in lay before the Faithful the importance of Christian mortification, and the Scriptural obligation of complying with their Easter duty, which is to be fulfilled from the first Sunday of Lent; they will frequently and earnestly exhort the Faithful to comply with the Precept of Confession and Communion, at Easter, and to have to use fish meat, except by dispensation from the respective Pastors, which they are hereby authorized to grant in case of necessity. Dispensations for the days of abstinence, lost sight of obligation. The Holy See restricts the use of flesh meat, by dispensation on the day in which abstinence is dispensed, except for those employed in heavy labor, and in the Missions.

53. The prohibition not to eat fish and flesh meat at the same meal is forbidden in Lent, even on Sundays.

54. It should be carefully observed that, according to an answer of the Sacred Congregation of the Holy Office, to the Bishops of England in 1830, and to the Bishops of Ireland in 1877, the Holy See has never dispensed to have introduced the use of butter, lard, and lard, of chyme, of the fat of animals, on fast days. But, owing to the peculiar conditions of the Missions, in the Province, the Holy See has hitherto consented to tolerate it in the use of milk, and butter, in a small quantity, eggs, however, excepted, but permission not bound to fast are not subject, as always permitted, not to abstinence from eggs.

55. The use of lard or other fat, condiment is allowed in Lent and throughout the year, excepting Ash Wednesday, Ember-days through Lent, Holy Week, the Vigil of Pentecost, the last three days of Holy Week, and the Eves of Particular Feasts, and the Vigil of All Saints, and of Christmas; as, on Good Friday eggs and all kinds of food, are to be abstained from, throughout the Lent.

56. Some purpose, as explicit, are recommended during Lent, particularly on those days in which flesh meat is used.

57. In lieu, taking a pecuniary tax, as purposes mentioned in lay before the Faithful the importance of Christian mortification, and the Scriptural obligation of complying with their Easter duty, which is to be fulfilled from the first Sunday of Lent; they will frequently and earnestly exhort the Faithful to comply with the Precept of Confession and Communion, at Easter, and to have to use fish meat, except by dispensation from the respective Pastors, which they are hereby authorized to grant in case of necessity. Dispensations for the days of abstinence, lost sight of obligation. The Holy See restricts the use of flesh meat, by dispensation on the day in which abstinence is dispensed, except for those employed in heavy labor, and in the Missions.

58. The prohibition not to eat fish and flesh meat at the same meal is forbidden in Lent, even on Sundays.

59. It should be carefully observed that, according to an answer of the Sacred Congregation of the Holy Office, to the Bishops of England in 1830, and to the Bishops of Ireland in 1877, the Holy See has never dispensed to have introduced the use of butter, lard, and lard, of chyme, of the fat of animals, on fast days. But, owing to the peculiar conditions of the Missions, in the Province, the Holy See has hitherto consented to tolerate it in the use of milk, and butter, in a small quantity, eggs, however, excepted, but permission not bound to fast are not subject, as always permitted, not to abstinence from eggs.

60. The use of lard or other fat, condiment is allowed in Lent and throughout the year, excepting Ash Wednesday, Ember-days through Lent, Holy Week, the Vigil of Pentecost, the last three days of Holy Week, and the Eves of Particular Feasts, and the Vigil of All Saints, and of Christmas; as, on Good Friday eggs and all kinds of food, are to be abstained from, throughout the Lent.

61. Some purpose, as explicit, are recommended during Lent, particularly on those days in which flesh meat is used.

62. In lieu, taking a pecuniary tax, as purposes mentioned in lay before the Faithful the importance of Christian mortification, and the Scriptural obligation of complying with their Easter duty, which is to be fulfilled from the first Sunday of Lent; they will frequently and earnestly exhort the Faithful to comply with the Precept of Confession and Communion, at Easter, and to have to use fish meat, except by dispensation from the respective Pastors, which they are hereby authorized to grant in case of necessity. Dispensations for the days of abstinence, lost sight of obligation. The Holy See restricts the use of flesh meat, by dispensation on the day in which abstinence is dispensed, except for those employed in heavy labor, and in the Missions.

63. The prohibition not to eat fish and flesh meat at the same meal is forbidden in Lent, even on Sundays.

64. It should be carefully observed that, according to an answer of the Sacred Congregation of the Holy Office, to the Bishops of England in 1830, and to the Bishops of Ireland in 1877, the Holy See has never dispensed to have introduced the use of butter, lard, and lard, of chyme, of the fat of animals, on fast days. But, owing to the peculiar conditions of the Missions, in the Province, the Holy See has hitherto consented to tolerate it in the use of milk, and butter, in a small quantity, eggs, however, excepted, but permission not bound to fast are not subject, as always permitted, not to abstinence from eggs.

65. The use of lard or other fat, condiment is allowed in Lent and throughout the year, excepting Ash Wednesday, Ember-days through Lent, Holy Week, the Vigil of Pentecost, the last three days of Holy Week, and the Eves of Particular Feasts, and the Vigil of All Saints, and of Christmas; as, on Good Friday eggs and all kinds of food, are to be abstained from, throughout the Lent.

66. Some purpose, as explicit, are recommended during Lent, particularly on those days in which flesh meat is used.

67. In lieu, taking a pecuniary tax, as purposes mentioned in lay before the Faithful the importance of Christian mortification, and the Scriptural obligation of complying with their Easter duty, which is to be fulfilled from the first Sunday of Lent; they will frequently and earnestly exhort the Faithful to comply with the Precept of Confession and Communion, at Easter, and to have to use fish meat, except by dispensation from the respective Pastors, which they are hereby authorized to grant in case of necessity. Dispensations for the days of abstinence, lost sight of obligation. The Holy See restricts the use of flesh meat, by dispensation on the day in which abstinence is dispensed, except for those employed in heavy labor, and in the Missions.

68. The prohibition not to eat fish and flesh meat at the same meal is forbidden in Lent, even on Sundays.

69. It should be carefully observed that, according to an answer of the Sacred Congregation of the Holy Office, to the Bishops of England in 1830, and to the Bishops of Ireland in 1877, the Holy See has never dispensed to have introduced the use of butter, lard, and lard, of chyme, of the fat of animals, on fast days. But, owing to the peculiar conditions of the Missions, in the Province, the Holy See has hitherto consented to tolerate it in the use of milk, and butter, in a small quantity, eggs, however, excepted, but permission not bound to fast are not subject, as always permitted, not to abstinence from eggs.

70. The use of lard or other fat, condiment is allowed in Lent and throughout the year, excepting Ash Wednesday, Ember-days through Lent, Holy Week, the Vigil of Pentecost, the last three days of Holy Week, and the Eves of Particular Feasts, and the Vigil of All Saints, and of Christmas; as, on Good Friday eggs and all kinds of food, are to be abstained from, throughout the Lent.

71. Some purpose, as explicit, are recommended during Lent, particularly on those days in which flesh meat is used.

72. In lieu, taking a pecuniary tax, as purposes mentioned in lay before the Faithful the importance of Christian mortification, and the Scriptural obligation of complying with their Easter duty, which is to be fulfilled from the first Sunday of Lent; they will frequently and earnestly exhort the Faithful to comply with the Precept of Confession and Communion, at Easter, and to have to use fish meat, except by dispensation from the respective Pastors, which they are hereby authorized to grant in case of necessity. Dispensations for the days of abstinence, lost sight of obligation. The Holy See restricts the use of flesh meat, by dispensation on the day in which abstinence is dispensed, except for those employed in heavy labor, and in the Missions.

73. The prohibition not to eat fish and flesh meat at the same meal is forbidden in Lent, even on Sundays.

74. It should be carefully observed that, according to an answer of the Sacred Congregation of the Holy Office, to the Bishops of England in 1830, and to the Bishops of Ireland in 1877, the Holy See has never dispensed to have introduced the use of butter, lard, and lard, of chyme, of the fat of animals, on fast days. But, owing to the peculiar conditions of the Missions, in the Province, the Holy See has hitherto consented to tolerate it in the use of milk, and butter, in a small quantity, eggs, however, excepted, but permission not bound to fast are not subject, as always permitted, not to abstinence from eggs.

75. The use of lard or other fat, condiment is allowed in Lent and throughout the year, excepting Ash Wednesday, Ember-days through Lent, Holy Week, the Vigil of Pentecost, the last three days of Holy Week, and the Eves of Particular Feasts, and the Vigil of All Saints, and of Christmas; as, on Good Friday eggs and all kinds of food, are to be abstained from, throughout the Lent.

76. Some purpose, as explicit, are recommended during Lent, particularly on those days in which flesh meat is used.

77. In lieu, taking a pecuniary tax, as purposes mentioned in lay before the Faithful the importance of Christian mortification, and the Scriptural obligation of complying with their Easter duty, which is to be fulfilled from the first Sunday of Lent; they will frequently and earnestly exhort the Faithful to comply with the Precept of Confession and Communion, at Easter, and to have to use fish meat, except by dispensation from the respective Pastors, which they are hereby authorized to grant in case of necessity. Dispensations for the days of abstinence, lost sight of obligation. The Holy See restricts the use of flesh meat, by dispensation on the day in which abstinence is dispensed, except for those employed in heavy labor, and in the Missions.

78. The prohibition not to eat fish and flesh meat at the same meal is forbidden in Lent, even on Sundays.

79. It should be carefully observed that, according to an answer of the Sacred Congregation of the Holy Office, to the Bishops of England in 1830, and to the Bishops of Ireland in 1877, the Holy See has never dispensed to have introduced the use of butter, lard, and lard, of chyme, of the fat of animals, on fast days. But, owing to the peculiar conditions of the Missions, in the Province, the Holy See has hitherto consented to tolerate it in the use of milk, and butter, in a small quantity, eggs, however, excepted, but permission not bound to fast are not subject, as always permitted, not to abstinence from eggs.

80. The use of lard or other fat, condiment is allowed in Lent and throughout the year, excepting Ash Wednesday, Ember-days through Lent, Holy Week, the Vigil of Pentecost, the last three days of Holy Week, and the Eves of Particular Feasts, and the Vigil of All Saints, and of Christmas; as, on Good Friday eggs and all kinds of food, are to be abstained from, throughout the Lent.

81. Some purpose, as explicit, are recommended during Lent, particularly on those days in which flesh meat is used.

82. In lieu, taking a pecuniary tax, as purposes mentioned in lay before the Faithful the importance of Christian mortification, and the Scriptural obligation of complying with their Easter duty, which is to be fulfilled from the first Sunday of Lent; they will frequently and earnestly exhort the Faithful to comply with the Precept of Confession and Communion, at Easter, and to have to use fish meat, except by dispensation from the respective Pastors, which they are hereby authorized to grant in case of necessity. Dispensations for the days of abstinence, lost sight of obligation. The Holy See restricts the use of flesh meat, by dispensation on the day in which abstinence is dispensed, except for those employed in heavy labor, and in the Missions.

83. The prohibition not to eat fish and flesh meat at the same meal is forbidden in Lent, even on Sundays.

84. It should be carefully observed that, according to an answer of the Sacred Congregation of the Holy Office, to the Bishops of England in 1830, and to the Bishops of Ireland in 1877, the Holy See has never dispensed to have introduced the use of butter, lard, and lard, of chyme, of the fat of animals, on fast days. But, owing to the peculiar conditions of the Missions, in the Province, the Holy See has hitherto consented to tolerate it in the use of milk, and butter, in a small quantity, eggs, however, excepted, but permission not bound to fast are not subject, as always permitted, not to abstinence from eggs.

85. The use of lard or other fat, condiment is allowed in Lent and throughout the year, excepting Ash Wednesday, Ember-days through Lent, Holy Week, the Vigil of Pentecost, the last three days of Holy Week, and the Eves of Particular Feasts, and the Vigil of All Saints, and of Christmas; as, on Good Friday eggs and all kinds of food, are to be abstained from, throughout the Lent.

86. Some purpose, as explicit, are recommended during Lent, particularly on those days in which flesh meat is used.

87. In lieu, taking a pecuniary tax, as purposes mentioned in lay before the Faithful the importance of Christian mortification, and the Scriptural obligation of complying with their Easter duty, which is to be fulfilled from the first Sunday of Lent; they will frequently and earnestly exhort the Faithful to comply with the Precept of Confession and Communion, at Easter, and to have to use fish meat, except by dispensation from the respective Pastors, which they are hereby authorized to grant in case of necessity. Dispensations for the days of abstinence, lost sight of obligation. The Holy See restricts the use of flesh meat, by dispensation on the day in which abstinence is dispensed, except for those employed in heavy labor, and in the Missions.

88. The prohibition not to eat fish and flesh meat at the same meal is forbidden in Lent, even on Sundays.

89. It should be carefully observed that, according to an answer of the Sacred Congregation of the Holy Office, to the Bishops of England in 1830, and to the Bishops of Ireland in 1877, the Holy See has never dispensed to have introduced the use of butter, lard, and lard, of chyme, of the fat of animals, on fast days. But, owing to the peculiar conditions of the Missions, in the Province, the Holy See has hitherto consented to tolerate it in the use of milk, and butter, in a small quantity, eggs, however, excepted, but permission not bound to fast are not subject, as always permitted, not to abstinence from eggs.

90. The use of lard or other fat, condiment is allowed in Lent and throughout the year, excepting Ash Wednesday, Ember-days through Lent, Holy Week, the Vigil of Pentecost, the last three days of Holy Week, and the Eves of Particular Feasts, and the Vigil of All Saints, and of Christmas; as, on Good Friday eggs and all kinds of food, are to be abstained from, throughout the Lent.

91. Some purpose, as explicit, are recommended during Lent, particularly on those days in which flesh meat is used.

92. In lieu, taking a pecuniary tax, as purposes mentioned in lay before the Faithful the importance of Christian mortification, and the Scriptural obligation of complying with their Easter duty, which is to be fulfilled from the first Sunday of Lent; they will frequently and earnestly exhort the Faithful to comply with the Precept of Confession and Communion, at Easter, and to have to use fish meat, except by dispensation from the respective Pastors, which they are hereby authorized to grant in case of necessity. Dispensations for the days of abstinence, lost sight of obligation. The Holy See restricts the use of flesh meat, by dispensation on the day in which abstinence is dispensed, except for those employed in heavy labor, and in the Missions.

93. The prohibition not to eat fish and flesh meat at the same meal is forbidden in Lent, even on Sundays.

94. It should be carefully observed that, according to an answer of the Sacred Congregation of the Holy Office, to the Bishops of England in 1830, and to the Bishops of Ireland in 1877, the Holy See has never dispensed to have introduced the use of butter, lard, and lard, of chyme, of the fat of animals, on fast days. But, owing to the peculiar conditions of the Missions, in the Province, the Holy See has hitherto consented to tolerate it in the use of milk, and butter, in a small quantity, eggs, however, excepted, but permission not bound to fast are not subject, as always permitted, not to abstinence from eggs.

95. The use of lard or other fat, condiment is allowed in Lent and throughout the year, excepting Ash Wednesday, Ember-days through Lent, Holy Week, the Vigil of Pentecost, the last three days of Holy Week, and the Eves of Particular Feasts, and the Vigil of All Saints, and of Christmas; as, on Good Friday eggs and all kinds of food, are to be abstained from, throughout the Lent.

96. Some purpose, as explicit, are recommended during Lent, particularly on those days in which flesh meat is used.

97. In lieu, taking a pecuniary tax, as purposes mentioned in lay before the Faithful the importance of Christian mortification, and the Scriptural obligation of complying with their Easter duty, which is to be fulfilled from the first Sunday of Lent; they will frequently and earnestly exhort the Faithful to comply with the Precept of Confession and Communion, at Easter, and to have to use fish meat, except by dispensation from the respective Pastors, which they are hereby authorized to grant in case of necessity. Dispensations for the days of abstinence, lost sight of obligation. The Holy See restricts the use of flesh meat, by dispensation on the day in which abstinence is dispensed, except for those employed in heavy labor, and in the Missions.

98. The prohibition not to eat fish and flesh meat at the same meal is forbidden in Lent, even on Sundays.

99. It should be carefully observed that, according to an answer of the Sacred Congregation of the Holy Office, to the Bishops of England in 1830, and to the Bishops of Ireland in 1877, the Holy See has never dispensed to have introduced the use of butter, lard, and lard, of chyme, of the fat of animals, on fast days. But, owing to the peculiar conditions of the Missions, in the Province, the Holy See has hitherto consented to tolerate it in the use of milk, and butter, in a small quantity, eggs, however, excepted, but permission not bound to fast are not subject, as always permitted, not to abstinence from eggs.

100. The use of lard or other fat, condiment is allowed in Lent and throughout the year, excepting Ash Wednesday, Ember-days through Lent, Holy Week, the Vigil of Pentecost, the last three days of Holy Week, and the Eves of Particular Feasts, and the Vigil of All Saints, and of Christmas; as, on Good Friday eggs and all kinds of food, are to be abstained from, throughout the Lent.

101. Some purpose, as explicit, are recommended during Lent, particularly on those days in which flesh meat is used.

102. In lieu, taking a pecuniary tax, as purposes mentioned in lay before the Faithful the importance of Christian mortification, and the Scriptural obligation of complying with their Easter duty, which is to be fulfilled from the first Sunday of Lent; they will frequently and earnestly exhort the Faithful to comply with the Precept of Confession and Communion, at Easter, and to have to use fish meat, except by dispensation from the respective Pastors, which they are hereby authorized to grant in case of necessity. Dispensations for the days of abstinence, lost sight of obligation. The Holy See restricts the use of flesh meat, by dispensation on the day in which abstinence is dispensed, except for those employed in heavy labor, and in the Missions.

103. The prohibition not to eat fish and flesh meat at the same meal is forbidden in Lent, even on Sundays.

104. It should be carefully observed that, according to an answer of the Sacred Congregation of the Holy Office, to the Bishops of England in 1830, and to the Bishops of Ireland in 1877, the Holy See has never dispensed to have introduced the use of butter, lard, and lard, of chyme, of the fat of animals, on fast days. But, owing to the peculiar conditions of the Missions, in the Province, the Holy See has hitherto consented to tolerate it in the use of milk, and butter, in a small quantity, eggs, however, excepted, but permission not bound to fast are not subject, as always permitted, not to abstinence from eggs.

105. The use of lard or other fat, condiment is allowed in Lent and throughout the year, excepting Ash Wednesday, Ember-days through Lent, Holy Week, the Vigil of Pentecost, the last three days of Holy Week, and the Eves of Particular Feasts, and the Vigil of All Saints, and of Christmas; as, on Good Friday eggs and all kinds of food, are to be abstained from, throughout the Lent.

106. Some purpose, as explicit, are recommended during Lent, particularly on those days in which flesh meat is used.

107. In lieu, taking a pecuniary tax, as purposes mentioned in lay before the Faithful the importance of Christian mortification, and the Scriptural obligation of complying with their Easter duty, which is to be fulfilled from the first Sunday of Lent; they will frequently and earnestly exhort the Faithful to comply with the Precept of Confession and Communion, at Easter, and to have to use fish meat, except by dispensation from the respective Pastors, which they are hereby authorized to grant in case of necessity. Dispensations for the days of abstinence, lost sight of obligation. The Holy See restricts the use of flesh meat, by dispensation on the day in which abstinence is dispensed, except for those employed in heavy labor, and in the Missions.

108. The prohibition not to eat fish and flesh meat at the same meal is forbidden in Lent, even on Sundays.

109. It should be carefully observed that, according to an answer of the Sacred Congregation of the Holy Office, to the Bishops of England in 1830, and to the Bishops of Ireland in 1877, the Holy See has never dispensed to have introduced the use of butter, lard, and lard, of chyme, of the fat of animals, on fast days. But, owing to the peculiar conditions of the Missions, in the Province, the Holy See has hitherto consented to tolerate it in the use of milk, and butter, in a small quantity, eggs, however, excepted, but permission not bound to fast are not subject, as always permitted, not to abstinence from eggs.

110. The use of lard or other fat, condiment is allowed in Lent and throughout the year, excepting Ash Wednesday, Ember-days through Lent, Holy Week, the Vigil of Pentecost, the last three days of Holy Week, and the Eves of Particular Feasts, and the Vigil of All Saints, and of Christmas; as, on Good Friday eggs and all kinds of food, are to be abstained from, throughout the Lent.

111. Some purpose, as explicit, are recommended during Lent, particularly on those days in which flesh meat is used.

112. In lieu, taking a pecuniary tax, as purposes mentioned in lay before the Faithful the importance of Christian mortification, and the Scriptural obligation of complying with their Easter duty, which is to be fulfilled from the first Sunday of Lent; they will frequently and earnestly exhort the Faithful to comply with the Precept of Confession and Communion, at Easter, and to have to use fish meat, except by dispensation from the respective Pastors, which they are hereby authorized to grant in case of necessity. Dispensations for the days of abstinence, lost sight of obligation. The Holy See restricts the use of flesh meat, by dispensation on the day in which abstinence is dispensed, except for those employed in heavy labor, and in the Missions.

113. The prohibition not to eat fish and flesh meat at the same meal is forbidden in Lent, even on Sundays.

114. It should be carefully observed that, according to an answer of the Sacred Congregation of the Holy Office, to the Bishops of England in 1830, and to the Bishops of Ireland in 1877, the Holy See has never dispensed to have introduced the use of butter, lard, and lard, of chyme, of the fat of animals, on fast days. But, owing to the peculiar conditions of the Missions, in the Province, the Holy See has hitherto consented to tolerate it in the use of milk, and butter, in a small quantity, eggs, however, excepted, but permission not bound to fast are not subject, as always permitted, not to abstinence from eggs.

115. The use of l

The Public Schools

BISHOP McQUAID'S ARGUMENT.

The Other Side of the Story.

WHY CATHOLICS OBJECT TO THE PUBLIC SCHOOL SYSTEM.

A Document that will Profit all who Peruse It.

In a recent number of the New England Journal of Education appears the following telling article from Bishop McQuaid of Rochester, N. Y.

The most that can be said of the American public-school system is, that it is an experiment of whose success so far there are many conflicting opinions. It is experimental, inasmuch as it is a radical departure from fundamental American ideas. If there is any one principle, ever and above all others, underlying our Democratic-Republican form of government—it is this that the political State should not undertake to do for the people what the people can do for themselves. Meddling with the duties and work of others in the sacred relations of parents and children, either to interfere with their rights or to relieve them of their responsibilities, is highly dangerous under any circumstances, and when perpetrated against the wish of parents, is unmitigated tyrannicide.

The danger that most seriously menaces our political form of government, and that also threatens the very life of all social order is the growth of communism. It is in European importation, and one that could not have found favor with our Americans had they not been traditionally lured by its seductive charms under the disguise of common-school communism. Social and economic communism will follow by the irresistible force of logic, as night follows the blazing dress an ignition at the common anvil, there is no reason from the communist's standpoint, why, some from the communist's standpoint, why, some from the communist's standpoint, why, some

Poetry.

(FOR THE MONITOR.)

WANTED, A HERO!

"Some good habit or some notable Germane trait."—Alger. Book V., 11.

The armies of Christ and the Devil engage
In war, since the dawn when heaven were buried,
And o'er the two camps which the warriors still wage,
The standards of Evil and Good are unfurled.

II.

Now naked on lee is a veteran band,
Yet how many their number for fashionable charge!
While wielders of pike that might well have unlimbered
Lose chivalrous ease on the hake it has frozen.

III.

The victims are heeding on altars of ice,
Fire forty we enter, "thou prayest such as phoenix;
"May soon are a respite in our service,
And may not the reverse of our glory be lower."

IV.

Though hard as Aprilode's heart be the pale
Sun shows every March o'er that desolate region,
Gives greater, I trow, must be blowing are
The athlete who fought in the Thundering Legion.

V.

And unstoke patrol round the alps of the lock,
Their lanterns light up each weakness in men,
The pots of devotion they reshlessly lock,
Though heaven is towards who wild to get warm.

VI.

A hallow appliance they have on the show,
Not one of the soldier's weaker is lacking,
The strength of the troops is no longer troubled.
A champion fighter bounded is retreating.

VII.

The door of the hallow room open they fling,
To their the black frost from the boner of the night,
Lo! the sun shines pale hard at the sting,
Expose the pulmon to his hot wan and showered.

VIII.

The bath-room leaks out at the door and the lighter
Sun sends long up as the watch cry eleven,
Yet Lady Fortune is fickle and illusive the night,
Our heads now too cold for a number so even.

IX.

He thinks of that war by track over lost,
Search under the moon! of the Mormon's land
There, pull off thy garments in darkness and frost,
And put thy gray hair the deserters crown under.

X.

Away to the enemy's camp now he flies,
The best of the crowns for hot water is burned,
Yet Lady Fortune is fickle and illusive to them
Her delight is some that continuer is martyred.

XI.

Oh ye're made a member-man such a fine bit,
Nor man of the Gospel that Enoch is treasure!
A crown made to order! A capital fit,
When, bright-winged jewelers, took ye this measure?

XII.

The service is so in the Mormon's camp
Many brightness means ever ope to meet,
Nothing ever is acquired with a stamp,
Commissions mine purchase my glorious inherit.

XIII.

And so may the recent recruit coming on Stamp is made by a hero.

Pope's "Essay on Man." Epistle I.

Literary Miscellany.

The Miser's Bequest.

The hour hand of Philip Acre's old-fashioned silver watch was pointing to the figure eight—the sexton had ventured that out the rain and the darkness of the March night, and his fine cropped and crubbed head had the red-hot bars of the little grate in a neutral-tint and comfortable sort of way, casting a rosy shine into the thoughtful brown eyes that were tracing castles and coronets in the brightly burning coals.

For Philip Acre was, for once, indulging himself in the dangerous fascinations of a day-dream.

"If I were only rich!" he confessed to himself. "Ah, (!) Then good-by to all these nasty ice-books; good-by to mandel-boots, and turned coats, and all the ways and means that turn a man's life into wretched bondage. Wealth! I revel in new books and delicious paintings, and high-stepping horses! Wealth! I buy a set of jewels for Edith—not pale pearls, or sickly emeralds, but diamonds, to blaze like little fires upon her royal throat! Wealth! I—what nonsense I'm talking, though!" he cried suddenly to himself: "Phil Acre, hold your tongue. I did suppose you were a fellow of more sense. Here you are, neither rich nor distinguished, but a simple law student; while Edith Wyllis is as far above your moon-struck aspirations as the Queen of Night herself! She loves me, though—she will wait—and the time may one day come. If only Dr. Wyllis were not so distrustful of a fellow! However, I must learn to prove myself worthy of the sweetest prize that ever—Hallo! come in, there, whoever you are!"

It was only the serving-maid of the lodging-house, carrying a letter in the blue paper spread, between her finger and thumb.

"Please, sir, the postman has just left it."

"All right, Katy. Now, then," he added, as the door closed behind Katy's substantial back, "let's see what my unknown correspondent has to say. A black seal! No! having any relations to lose, I am not shocked at the prospect."

He broke the seal, and glanced leisurely over the short, business-like communication contained within, with a face that varied from incredulous surprise to sudden glad-ness.

"Am I dreaming?" he murmured, rubbing his eyes, and shaking himself, as if to insure complete possession of his senses. "Yes, I'm wide awake, and in my right mind; no delusion—no part of my waking visions. But who would ever suppose that old Thomas Mortimer, whom I haven't seen since I was a boy of sixteen, and picked him out of the river half dead between a cramp and fright, would die and leave me all his money? Why, I'm not the shadow of a relation; but then I never heard that the old man had any kith or kin, so I can't imagine any harm in taking advantage of his odd freak. Rich—am I really to be rich! Is my Aladdin vision to be an actual fact? Oh, Edith, Edith!"

He leaned his both hands over his eyes, sick and giddy with the thought that the lovely far-off star of his adoration would be brought near to him at last by the magical gold. All those years of patient waiting were to be bridged over by the strange old freak of a bachelor; he might claim Edith now. How full of heart-thankfulness were the words that filled over the hand of the accepted lover, brightened by Edith's smile—much beautiful by the soft radiance of Edith's love. There was only one alloying shadow over the short, business-like communication contained within, with a face that varied from incredulous surprise to sudden glad-ness.

"Ah! (!) Then good-by to all these nasty ice-books; good-by to mandel-boots, and turned coats, and all the ways and means that turn a man's life into wretched bondage. Wealth! I revel in new books and delicious paintings, and high-stepping horses! Wealth! I buy a set of jewels for Edith—not pale pearls, or sickly emeralds, but diamonds, to blaze like little fires upon her royal throat! Wealth! I—what nonsense I'm talking, though!" he cried suddenly to himself: "Phil Acre, hold your tongue. I did suppose you were a fellow of more sense. Here you are, neither rich nor distinguished, but a simple law student; while Edith Wyllis is as far above your moon-struck aspirations as the Queen of Night herself! She loves me, though—she will wait—and the time may one day come. If only Dr. Wyllis were not so distrustful of a fellow! However, I must learn to prove myself worthy of the sweetest prize that ever—Hallo! come in, there, whoever you are!"

It was only the serving-maid of the lodging-house, carrying a letter in the blue paper spread, between her finger and thumb.

"Please, sir, the postman has just left it."

"All right, Katy. Now, then," he added, as the door closed behind Katy's substantial back, "let's see what my unknown correspondent has to say. A black seal! No! having any relations to lose, I am not shocked at the prospect."

He broke the seal, and glanced leisurely over the short, business-like communication contained within, with a face that varied from incredulous surprise to sudden glad-ness.

"Am I dreaming?" he murmured, rubbing his eyes, and shaking himself, as if to insure complete possession of his senses. "Yes, I'm wide awake, and in my right mind; no delusion—no part of my waking visions. But who would ever suppose that old Thomas Mortimer, whom I haven't seen since I was a boy of sixteen, and picked him out of the river half dead between a cramp and fright, would die and leave me all his money? Why, I'm not the shadow of a relation; but then I never heard that the old man had any kith or kin, so I can't imagine any harm in taking advantage of his odd freak. Rich—am I really to be rich! Is my Aladdin vision to be an actual fact? Oh, Edith, Edith!"

He leaned his both hands over his eyes, sick and giddy with the thought that the lovely far-off star of his adoration would be brought near to him at last by the magical gold. All those years of patient waiting were to be bridged over by the strange old freak of a bachelor; he might claim Edith now. How full of heart-thankfulness were the words that filled over the hand of the accepted lover, brightened by Edith's smile—much beautiful by the soft radiance of Edith's love. There was only one alloying shadow

THE MONITOR.

PUBLISHED FREE OF PUBLICATION.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 21, 1883.

CIRCULAR

To the Clergy of the Diocese of San Francisco.

Rev. Dear Sir: Our Holy Father, Pope Leo XIII., having been asked to encourage the work of sacrilegious Catholic Schools and Churches among the Italians and Colored people of the United States, has given it his Apostolic benediction, and has granted a plenary indulgence to all the faithful on the following conditions, to wit:

To all those who, on the day in which a collection may be made for the sacred and malefactance of Catholic Schools and Churches among the Italians and Colored people of the United States, being truly penitent and having received the Sacraments of Penance and Holy Communion, shall visit the Church to which such collection may be made, and shall there pray for at least a quarter of an hour for the propagation of the Faith, according to the intention of the Holy Father, and contribute to the good work whatever amount they may feel able or disposed to give.

Therefore, please announce to your congregation, the Sunday after the reception of this, that on the following Sunday after Mass, there will be found at the door of the Church some person duly appointed to receive their contributions.

Your brother in Christ,

✠ P. J. Alemany, O. P.,

Archbishop of San Francisco.

San Francisco, Feb. 5th, 1883.

Progress of the Church in the United States.

The editorial which we publish on the first and eight pages regarding the progress of the Church in the United States will be read with great interest throughout the whole Christian world; it is a beacon light, that the blood of the martyred missionaries, who died for the faith during the firstdawn of Christianity upon this continent, was not shed in vain. Like the prophets of old these saintly pioneers of the Cross in the New World, helped by their prayers and their good works to close up the breach in the walls of the fortress of faith, and "they set up the house of the Lord in its former state and made it stand firm."

Never in the whole history of the Church was a grander spectacle presented to the world than the silent, steady, onward march of the Catholic Church in this Union. Less than a century ago the enemies of God declared that the free atmosphere of America could never prove congenial to the Catholic Church. They boasted that Catholicity could never flourish in a land dedicated to liberty; they asserted that it was only through the influence of monarchy that it survived in the old world, and they cherished the hope that when it had to fight its way through a free people it would be dishonored, its ranks be filled with graves and its shrine the sanctuary of future glory, so, preportionately, he who recites the Rosary, remembering (through the mysterious) the

Virgin, who suffered with Him, becomes filled with grace and favors, and receives a pledge of future glory, as we are well informed from

Supreme Excellence of the Rosary.

Father Quarti, a priest of the Congregation of the Regular Clerics, and a most highly esteemed writer, after most learnedly explaining the origin, nature and admirable qualities of the Rosary, draws this magnificent conclusion in its favor. From all that we have said up to this, every one can clearly see the suprememinent dignity and supreme excellence of the Rosary over all other devotions. For the other devotions through which we venerate some particular mystery of the life of our Lord Jesus Christ are, as it were, aromatic plants from which the contemplative soul culls the particular merit of one virtue, that is, a little bouquet of spiritual flowers, whereas the Rosary is the vast garden of the Heavenly Spouse, the Paradise of delights which contains all the perfumes and all the mystical plants of the divine mysteries which fill the soul with ineffable sweetness. Other devotions are, as it were, private oratories, or small churches where we call to mind and adore some particular mystery of our redemption, and where we make a profession of some article of our faith; but the Rosary is the grand temple, the magnificent Pantheon dedicated to the memory of all the mysteries of our faith and the Evangelical Law, where all the pious members of the Confraternity make a public profession of the same faith in all its articles. The Rosary is a treasure of heavenly riches which are communicated to us through the mysteries of our salvation; it is an arsenal of spiritual weapons which enable us through Jesus Christ,—His merits and His life, to triumph over the devil; it is an excellent set of all Christian doctrine, of true wisdom, in which the secrets which God hides from the learned and the prudent of this world, are disclosed to the lowly and the humble; it is a beautiful garland containing the taste of all spiritual sweetness, which we can partake of according to the variety of the mysteries that we call to mind, we dwell upon in the practice of this holy devotion; finally, the Rosary is most sweet milk which the Holy Virgin gives to us in the contemplation of divine things * * * * * I add that this devotion has been established by the Mother of God, in memory of her wonders, and in order to imitate, in a certain way, her divine Son. As Jesus Christ, in memory of His wonders, instituted the Sacrament of the Eucharist, in which He enriches the faithful with His own body and precious blood; so the Holy Virgin with the mysteries of her own life and those of her divine Son's, instituted and composed this form of prayer by which her devoted servants are nourished with her most pure milk; that is, with the tender affection of the sincere devotion which flows from the bosom of her maternal piety. And as the soul that fondly dwells on the Passion of Jesus Christ, whilst partaking of the Holy Eucharist, becomes filled with grace and receives the assurance of future glory, so, proportionately, he who recites the Rosary, remembering (through the mysterious) the Fearful Condition of the Irish People.

The reign of terror which at present prevails in Ireland is only history repeating itself. England's policy has ever been to drive the Irish people to despair, through persecution, and then to punish them because they would not emigrate or die, so as to leave Ireland as pasture land for England. The poor house or the emigrant ship and infirmary were the alternatives, through which we renerate some particular mystery of the life of our Lord Jesus Christ are, as it were, aromatic plants from which the contemplative soul culls the particular merit of one virtue, that is, a little bouquet of spiritual flowers, whereas the Rosary is the vast garden of the Heavenly Spouse, the Paradise of delights which contains all the perfumes and all the mystical plants of the divine mysteries which fill the soul with ineffable sweetness. Other devotions are, as it were, private oratories, or small churches where we call to mind and adore some particular mystery of our redemption, and where we make a profession of some article of our faith; but the Rosary is the grand temple, the magnificent Pantheon dedicated to the memory of all the mysteries of our faith and the Evangelical Law, where all the pious members of the Confraternity make a public profession of the same faith in all its articles. The Rosary is a treasure of heavenly riches which are communicated to us through the mysteries of our salvation; it is an arsenal of spiritual weapons which enable us through Jesus Christ,—His merits and His life, to triumph over the devil; it is an excellent set of all Christian doctrine, of true wisdom, in which the secrets which God hides from the learned and the prudent of this world, are disclosed to the lowly and the humble; it is a beautiful garland containing the taste of all spiritual sweetness, which we can partake of according to the variety of the mysteries that we call to mind, we dwell upon in the practice of this holy devotion; finally, the Rosary is most sweet milk which the Holy Virgin gives to us in the contemplation of divine things * * * * * I add that this devotion has been established by the Mother of God, in memory of her wonders, and in order to imitate, in a certain way, her divine Son. As Jesus Christ, in memory of His wonders, instituted the Sacrament of the Eucharist, in which He enriches the faithful with His own body and precious blood; so the Holy Virgin with the mysteries of her own life and those of her divine Son's, instituted and composed this form of prayer by which her devoted servants are nourished with her most pure milk; that is, with the tender affection of the sincere devotion which flows from the bosom of her maternal piety. And as the soul that fondly dwells on the Passion of Jesus Christ, whilst partaking of the Holy Eucharist, becomes filled with grace and receives the assurance of future glory, so, proportionately, he who recites the Rosary, remembering (through the mysterious) the

Virgin, who suffered with Him, becomes filled with grace and favors, and receives a pledge of future glory, as we are well informed from General Jackson's Birthplace.

General Butler having recently asserted that General Andrew Jackson—seventh President of the United States—was born in Ireland, the question is being argued pro and con by the Eastern papers.

The Boston Post prints a letter written by Andrew Jackson, Jan. 17, 1867, in which he said "I with pleasure comply with your request, and enclose you my autograph, and inform you that I was born in Carolina, on the 15th of March, 1767."

To this reputed letter of Jackson's the Sunday Democrat of New York, makes the following reply, every word of which we endorse:

General Jackson never wrote any such letter. It is well established, or was, that his parents left Carrickfergus, Ireland, in 1767. He is stated to have been born in the Waxaw settlement, New Tennessee, in 1769; in North Carolina, in 1769; at sea, in 1765. He was born, but not in all these places, nor in either of them. The silly talk about Jackson's birthplace arose from hearsay gabble referring to the Constitution of the United States presenting qualifications for President. Article 2, section 5, of that oft-referred to document says, "No person except a natural born citizen, or a citizen of the United States at the time of the adoption of this Constitution (which was done Sept. 17, 1787, six years after the surrender of Cornwallis at Yorktown) shall be eligible to the office of President." Hence it made no difference whether he was born here or in Jerusalem, Ireland or Zealand. He was born from 1765 to the adoption of the Constitution in 1787.

Query.—Suppose General Montgomery, who was killed at Quebec, survived the war, would he be eligible to the Presidency? We answer yes, although he was a native of Donegal.

Was General Stephen Hopkins eligible, although a native of Cork? He was.

Was General Hand, Adjutant-General of the Continental Army, eligible, although born in Queen's County, Ireland? He was.

General Andrew Jackson, seventh President of the United States, was born and baptized in Carnickfergus, County Antrim, Ireland, in 1765or 1766. His parents came to this country when he, Jackson, was very young; but his brother, who was only his senior by nineteen months, never hesitated to state that he was, that he knew he was, born in Ireland. The question was never spoken of until after the battle of New Orleans, 1815, when the General became a national idol. Whoever said he was baptized in any church in America! The fact is—General Butler's right.

The Land League Not Guilty.

As reported in the cablegrams from Ireland which we publish this week, all indictments against prominent members of the Land League have been quashed. The Government persists in coercing the people, and yet it cannot, it dare not, convict the people of Ireland of the crimes with which it charges them

A VISITOR'S VIEWS OF THIS AND OUR CITY.

During a few leisure days we made a trip to the far-famed City of the Golden Gate—San Francisco—and were surprised at, and not surprised at all the acts of civilization, humanity, etc., that is to be heard about forty miles away. We arrived in Oakland, the sister city. Leaving San Francisco in a deep fog we crossed the beautiful bay of San Francisco in one of the well built steamers for which it is so famous. We were agreeably surprised to find we had left behind the dolorous people of a fog-bound, while our eyes were gladdened by the beautiful golden orb, glinting sunshine over every hill and dale, gladdening all nature in a flow of loveliness not one to be met with in mid-winter, in lands of other climes claiming the honor of the star-spangled banner.

As expected we had a greater sympathetic flow of the spirits than that mentioned Prince Charlie, in the city to which it gives its name. The "little cockney" spirit is a mere shrub compared with the gigantic tree of Dredd fame and sacred "national" spirit. The beauty of Oakland is indeed a joy forever; its rich gardened streets, even, with their beautiful flowers, their cottage mansions, their tasteful gardens, beautiful lawns, rare trees, shady nooks, with a delicious exhalation in the breeze. We found luxury to be coveted without delightful country scenery and the charms of the vestments of the city, and all within forty minutes journey, or, if the pleasure-seeker wants, in the world. We could not help comparing the town for our great Atlantic metropolis—New York. No tawny there produced by our Editorial garden and lawn. We make free use from the scissors to our brown stone mansions, shun all of beauty and luxury bestowed on nature—Nature is nothing in the garden of nature—but was the contrast. The pulsation of life—not but nature) its charmless monotonous and of place. The dead, dreary street, yet the life that seems to be (circulant) to the Ladies of the Country of the dazed Dublin, 1848 Water street. Nothing can mend the exquisite situation of this enamored metropolis. Its disposition is pure, peaceable, and the surrounding most beautiful to behold. It is the home of the Bancroft family, a most fond friend and patron, Mr. Harmon, whom we met three of the rare and the beautiful do honor to—by Wheeler street and Lake Merritt. On the lake were visible the finest graduates from the fair young ladies of the distinguished institution, Oakland Seminary, and the fair young ladies of the beautiful boating pond fitted up with every necessary and comfort. Nature gives the beauty, but the privileges of visiting the interior of the Academy are not to be obtained by the outsiders. In contrast of the environment of gown between the Academy and the Public Schools, the majority of all reserved to the privacy of the Academy, and the exclusive. The Public Schools are conducted with the system of education in use in the Public Schools of California, and the Academy is a private institution, and, though we have heard of some complaints, we have found the schools and the Academy to be the most perfect of any we met with. We, however, yet could find some fault with the kind of the boarding arrangements of method, order, and deportment in the diversified subjects of science. With great labor and experience the Ladies of the Holy Name have produced a pamphlet for oral instruction, equivalent in various science, (belletrist, pathology, etc) so that a graduate from this school would be at no loss to recognize in the Art Exhibition, the works of art, and intelligently from the bewildered gaze to one so short period. What appears to us most remarkable is that all the delicacy of science seems to depend upon the boarding, the preservation of knowledge is enjoyed to the full by the pupil; yet as well is it imparted to the understanding, that the fear of rudy boyishness need be apprehended by the most fastidious. We now amplify some of the works of skilful fingers in embroidery, painting of all kinds and on every material—velvet, rare China painting—in fact to sum up, a choice collection of all that is elegant with every useful accomplishment calculated to render lady-like and graceful the attainment of society. Add to all this the salubrity of Oakland, which is one of the most healthy localities, and the lovely scenical solitude of those good Sisters who devote all their cares, yours, reader this subject is most desirable one, in its largest sense, in which to place the young on whose future so much depends. VISITOR.

A Local Gem.

Fair reader have you heard the news, That either Fleming's boots or shoes, Sermon all others in Prince's town, For which he wears King Crispin's crown. His "long boots" multiplies nature, His "stump bottom" shoes by crowds are worn, His spring side gaiter, gracefully step the foot, While his "Oxford ties" are a perfect treat. He is patronized by beau and belle, For all his craft he does excel, And not one with him can dare compete, In beautifying the human feet. His leather is good, his work is strong, So perfect his art, you can't go wrong. His competitors he can defy, And up his facts you may rely. So I advise he him do wend your way, And at his shrine your homage pay; Then, if I err, mon than words can tell, The Pick of Dublin will please you well.

Boots and shoes of all kinds made to order in fashionable style, repairing of all kinds neatly done. P. GLEESON, Artist mon trial, and you will find yourself fitted fashionable in any shape or form. Note the address: 1147 Market St. bet. Seventh and Eighth, opposite new City Hall, San Francisco, M. F. Fleming, Proprietor.

—Some lady friends of ours who have purchased dress, suits, underwear, etc., for themselves and children at Mrs. Wolvey's, 58 Sixth street, say perfectly satisfied with style, fit and price. We have also purchased for ourselves shirts, underwear, etc. and were perfectly satisfied at a trifling expense.

—Dr. Warburton, graduate of London and Edinburgh, removed to 906 Market st. Office Hours, 1:30 to 3 P. M., 7:30 to 9:30 P. M.

SUMMONS.

IN THE SUPERIOR COURT, CITY AND COUNTY of San Francisco, State of California. — Action filed this 8 day of January, 1883. DENNIS C. HANDLEY, Plaintiff, vs. DENNIS C. HANDLEY, Defendant. Action brought in the Superior Court of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, the complaint filed in said City and County of San Francisco, State of California, the object and general relief being to DENNIS C. HANDLEY, Defendant, to appear and answer the complaint filed herein within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this summons—if served within this county; or if served elsewhere within this county, within thirty days; or else judgment will be taken against you by default for the relief demanded in the complaint. The undersigned, attorney for plaintiff, whose office is 638 Clay street, San Francisco, State of California, in the business of a commercial boarding and lodging house, and the plaintiff's business is to be conducted by the defendant, and the plaintiff's business is to be conducted by the defendant, and the plaintiff's business is to be conducted by the defendant

THE CATHOLIC CHURCH IN THE UNITRD STATES.

[CONCLUDED FROM FIRST PAGE.]

tide of immigration, among which many were Catholics. But it was not until 1850 that Kansas City was established as a See. The present state of the Church in this region is thus indicated by the most recent Statistics:—Archdiocese, 1; Dioceses, 78; priests, 70,000 members. Methodist Episcopal—220 churches, 209 ministers, 40,430 members. Lutheran — 139 churches, 77 ministers, 12,000 members. Baptist—267 churches, 285 ministers, 16,631 members. Christian—125 churches, 96 ministers, 15,500 members.

NEBRASKA.

This State still remains a Vicariate Apostolic, under the jurisdiction of Rt. Rev. Jos. O'Connor. The numerical strength of the Church within the boundaries of the State is thus given: Catholic—67 churches, 40 priests, 34,000 members. Lutheran—164 churches, 60 ministers, 17,600 members. Christian—75 churches, 41 ministers, 13,500 members. Methodist Episcopal:—98 churches, 61 ministers, 12,494 members. Presbyterian:—121 churches, 73 ministers, 4,340 members.

COLORADO.

The Vicariate Apostolic of Colorado comprises the whole State, and the religious statistics of the Church, and its numbers therein, are thus given in the Catholic Directory for 1882. The strength of the Protestant denominations we copy from Rand & McNally's Atlas: Catholic—39 churches, 42 priests, 34,000 members. Methodist Episcopal:—37 churches, 44 ministers, 3,037 members. Mormon:—33 churches, 150 high priests, 3,000 members. Presbyterian:—39 churches, 34 ministers, 1,521 members. Christian:—16 churches, 12 ministers, 1,750 members.

ARKANSAS.

In this State Baptists are the most numerous, having a membership of 47,398, followed by five other denominations, the Catholics ranking sixth, with 20 churches, 18 priests, and 5,000 members.

TEXAS.

The growth of the Church in Texas has been very remarkable. At present the Metropolitan See of Texas—that of Galveston, established in 1847, and San Antonio, erected in 1874. The returns show a large proportionate of Catholics over any of the Protestant denominations, as indicated by the following figures: Catholic:—104 churches, 117 priests, 120,000 members. Methodist Episcopal (South):—414 ministers, 62,259 members. Baptist:—1,440 churches, 794 ministers, 76,807 members. Methodist Episcopal:—172 churches, 191 ministers, 17,701 members. Christian:—146 churches, 136 ministers, 10,000 members.

LOUISIANA.

The early settlement of this State by French and Spanish colonists, and the subsequent migration thither of great numbers of immigrants from Europe, have always contributed to help the Catholic population largely in excess of the Protestant one, as illustrated by the following statistics of the present state of the Church therein: Catholic:—107 churches, 181 priests, 200,000 members. Baptist—722 churches, 419 ministers, 56,595 members. Methodist Episcopal (South):—78 ministers, 14,844 members. Methodist Episcopal:—106 churches, 71 ministers, 11,021 members. Methodist Episcopal (colored):—37 churches, 34 ministers, 4,728 members.

MISSISSIPPI.

In this State the colored race belong largely to the Baptist denomination, which swells the membership of that sect to 116,188. The Catholic—not fifth in the statistics of numerical gradation, there being in the State 33 priests, 50 churches, and 15,000 Catholic population.

ALABAMA.

Here, for the same reasons, we find the Baptists in the lead, with 94,569 members, followed by the Methodist Episcopal (colored) with 58,556 members. The Catholic population is set down at 15,250.

GEORGIA.

This State contains 219,726 Baptists, 92,[illegible] Methodists of different shades of color and belief, and 29,000 Catholics.

FLORIDA.

This State contains 27,188 members of the Methodist Episcopal Church (South), 18,540 Baptists, and 16,750 Catholics.

THE PACIFIC STATES.

CALIFORNIA.

Among the most flourishing portions of the United States wherein the Catholic Faith has been propagated, the history of the Church on this coast is not the least interesting chapter. The good seed sown by the apostolic pioneers—the Jesuits, Franciscans, and Dominicans—has, indeed, fructified a hundred fold, until now it forms a vast spiritual tree whose branches extend from New Mexico to Alaska. It would occupy too much space to go into the history of the progress of the Church on this coast, so we must rest satisfied with merely mentioning a few meagre facts to and' use its growth. Up to 1840 there were but two churches in San Francisco—St. Francis', a small wooden chapel, which stood where the present beautiful brick edifice at present stands, and the old Mission Dolores church which is at present being replaced by a majestic brick structure. In 1851 the little wooden church dedicated to St. Patrick was erected, and at that time Father Magginis, of happy memory, was the only priest in the city who could speak in English. The present venerable Archbishop, Most Rev. Joseph Sadoc Alemany, was consecrated Bishop of Monterey in 1850, and three years later he was translated to this See. This is not the place to speak of the successful labors of this esteemed Prelate, so we can only say that his works proclaim the glory of God and manifest his zeal in his service. In 1868 California was divided by the creation of the Diocese of Grass Valley, which also includes a portion of Nevada, and which is still presided over by its first Bishop, Rt. Rev. Eugene O'Connell, assisted by his auxiliary, Rt. Rev. P. Manogue. According to the statistics set forth in Rand & McNally's Atlas, there are in this State 177 Catholic churches, 200 priests, and 216,000 Catholics. The principal Protestant denominations are thus represented in their numerical order. Methodist Episcopal:—156 churches, 141 ministers, 11,198 members. Presbyterian:—116 churches, 119 ministers, 6,703 members. Christian:—49 churches, 50 ministers, 5,775 members. Baptist:—90 churches, 83 ministers, 5,738 members. Methodist Episcopal (South):—82 ministers, 5,365 members.

NEVADA.

The sparse population of this State is scattered over a vast extent of country, and to this cause may be attributed the small number of churches and congregations. The census returns give 6 churches, 8 priests, and 3,000 Catholic population. The Jews rank next, having 1 synagogue, 1 Rabbi, 700 members. Methodist Episcopal:—11 churches, 8 ministers, 635 members. Protestant Episcopal:—2 churches, 1 minister, 328 members. Presbyterian:—5 churches, 2 ministers, 247 members.

OREGON.

The first missionaries who planted the Cross in Oregon were Most Rev. Francis Norbert Blanchet, the venerable retired Prelate, who was the first Bishop of the See, and Rt. Rev. Modeste Demers, subsequently Bishop of Vancouver Island, where he died in 1871. These apostolic missioners commenced their labors in 1838, and for several years they were alone in their work of converting the Indians, there being but few white settlers in the country. The great distance intervening between the settled portion of the Western States and Oregon has kept immigration from filling up the country rapidly, but as soon as railroad communication is made with the East, Oregon's population will be greatly augmented. The Catholics have in the State 79 churches, 30 priests, and 20,000 members. The sects are thus represented: Methodist Episcopal: — 61 churches, 80 ministers, 3,176 members. Christian:—45 churches, 38 ministers, 1,750 members. Baptist:—73 churches, 55 ministers, 2,916 members. Presbyterian:—20 churches, 17 ministers, 1,025 members.

INDIAN TERRITORY.

The different religious denominations are thus given in Rand & McNally's Atlas: Baptist—95 churches, 79 ministers, 5,823 members. Methodist Episcopal (South)—34 ministers, 5,588 members. Catholic:—1 church, 6 priests, 3,780 members. Presbyterian (South):—26 churches, 10 ministers, 1,007 members.

ARIZONA.

The Vicariate Apostolic of Arizona was established in 1869. At present the Catholics have 11 churches, 13 priests, and 42,000 members within the territory, the Vicariate boundaries extending beyond the territorial limits. The Mormons rank next, having 37 churches, 178 preachers, 5,000 members. Presbyterian:—2 churches, 1 minister, 19 members. Protestant Episcopal.—2 churches, 1 minister, 40 members.

WYOMING.

This territory is comprised within the Vicariate Apostolic of Nebraska. The population is small and scattered, as may be inferred from the following figures: Mormon: —32 churches, 98 high priests, 3,000 members. Catholic:—1 churches, 1 priests, 2,000 members. Presbyterian:—4 churches, 4 ministers, 142 members.

NEW MEXICO.

Judging from the following figures, Protestantism is on the wane in this region, notwithstanding the consecrated Catholic soil of New Mexico, where the Church has 109 priests, 42 churches, and 121,000 members, while the statistics are thus set down, Presbyterian:—7 churches, 7 ministers, 162 members. Jews:—108 in the territory. Baptist:—1 church, 1 minister, 20 members.

MONTANA.

This territory is rapidly receiving immigrant population, and in a few years will be very largely Catholic. At present the Church seems so settled by the number of Indians belonging to the Reservations attended by the Jesuit Fathers. The census returns give the following: Catholic:—10 churches, 13 priests, 16,450 members. Christian:—6 churches, 4 ministers, 675 members. Methodist Episcopal.—8 churches, 6 ministers, 364 members. Protestant Episcopal:—8 churches, 6 ministers, 300 members. Methodist Episcopal (South):—9 ministers, 272 members.

IDAHO.

Like Montana, the territory has, until recently, not attracted the attention of immigrants, except those Mormons who migrated thither from Utah. The religious census is represented by the following figures: Mormon:—42 churches, 227 high priests, 6,000 members. Catholic —7 churches, 9 priests, 2,200 members. Presbyterian:—4 churches, 2 ministers, 401 members. Methodist Episcopal:—1 church, 1 minister, 25 members. Protestant Episcopal:—4 churches, 3 ministers, 200 members.

WASHINGTON.

The Catholics in Washington Territory have greatly increased in numbers during the past few years, as attested by the fact that many new churches have been built and new missions opened. The present religious census is as follows: Catholic:—26 churches, 24 priests, 13,000 members. Methodist Episcopal:—18 churches, 21 ministers, 1,756 members. Presbyterian:—23 churches, 13 ministers, 1,067 members. Christian.—10 churches, 8 ministers, 850 members. Methodist Episcopal (South).—9 ministers, 625 members.

UTAH.

This being the home of Mormonism, it can hardly be expected that any Christian denomination should make much headway in a road against this iniquitous institution. Here are the figures, as they occur at present, but we hope the disgrace will be wiped out ere the second centennial of American independence. Utah has been temporarily placed by the Holy See under the administration of the Archbishop of this Diocese. Mormon:—477 churches, 3,207 high priests, 55,676 members. Catholic.—3 churches, 5 priests, 2,000 members. Protestant Episcopal:—5 churches, 4 ministers, 222 members. Methodist Episcopal:—9 churches, 5 ministers, 206 members.

ALASKA.

This territory, although a portion of the United States, has been attached to the Diocese of Vancouver Island. St. Rose of Lima, at Fort Wrangel, is the only Catholic church in the territory, as the Catholic Indians are attended at stations by priests who are sent thither every summer from Victoria V. I. The Indian converts number about 1,000.

This embraces the entire limits of the United States, but we cannot close this important article without giving a summary of the Prelacy of the Catholic Church, and other statistics, which we glean from Sadlier's Catholic Directory for 1883, just at hand. Eighty-three years ago there was but 1 ordinary Bishop in the United States, now there are 70. Up to 1840 there was but 1 Archbishop, and 16 Bishops, in the Union; now there are 15 of the former and 56 of the latter Prelates. In 1840 there were but 482 priests in America, now there are 6,546. In 1850 there were but 1,100 Catholic churches in the Union, now there are 6,241, and dozens building in every Diocese. In 1860 there were but 34 Catholic colleges, now there are 61. In 1850 there were but 91 Catholic female academies in America, now there are 579. Twenty-five years ago parochial schools only numbered a few hundred, now there are 2,491, attended by 498,642 children. For all these glad tidings of great joy every Catholic will join with us in saying:

Gloria in Excelsis Deo!

The Disasters of a Month.

INAUSPICIOUS BEGINNING OF 1883.

Fearful Calamities by Land and Sea.

The month of January 1883 will long be memorable in the annals of history as one of the most calamitous seasons ever experienced, over a thousand lives being lost by disasters during its period.

The month had just begun when the news of Garfield's death was flashed over the wires to all parts of the world. The mystery that hung over it, together with the sympathy felt for the widow and orphans of the departed President, made the event the sensation of the month for several days.

On the day that the news of France's loss arrived the President of the United States stood in the White House, surrounded by the wives of the Cabinet officers, receiving congratulations from a throng of callers. The decorations were strikingly bright, the audience of the diplomats and soldiers was brilliant, the costumes of the ladies were rich. The band was playing, and the whole scene was one of life and animation. Suddenly Elisha Allen, the Hawaiian Minister, stepped down near the threshold of the reception room. The White House was closed at once, and the brilliant throng was dismissed.

THREE DAYS LATER

came the news of the spread of disaster and death over a large part of Europe. The Danube and the Danube river, inundated villages and towns, washed away bridges, undermined houses, and spread distress over many miles of territory. The Rhine dam at Ludwigshafen gave way and many people were drowned. The list of the dead along the Rhine numbered more than seventy persons. France, Switzerland, and Austria also suffered great distress.

On the following day the Chenry disaster occurred, the saddest of all the disasters of France. Gambetta was called the soul, and Chanzy the sword of resistance to German invasion. It was said that the Germans feared Gen. Chanzy as they had dreaded Skobeleff.

On the following day, the 6th of the month, the Indian line steamer City of Brussels, as she was nearing Liverpool in a dense fog, was run down by the steamer Kirby Hall. She sank almost immediately. The Captain of the City of Brussels said that the fog was so heavy that he stopped the engines and allowed the vessel to drift with the tide. After she had drifted thus for forty-one minutes, the Captain heard the whistles of steamers on both port and starboard sides. He thought that the two steamers were passing in a parallel line. A moment later a white light loomed up on the starboard bow, and before anything could be done the Kirby Hall struck the City of Brussels with terrific force. The Captain of the City of Brussels stuck by his ship till she went down, and then clung to a spar until rescued. Ten men were drowned.

FOUR DAYS LATER

occurred the appalling loss of life in the Mariposa hotel fire. The hotel was a veritable death trap. The fire started in the basement at 4 a. m.—an hour when all the inmates were asleep—and shot up the shaft like a meteor. In a minute nothing of the air from the shaft into the corridors had carried the flames into every story, and before any one had time to give an alarm the whole north end of the structure was a sea of fierce and roaring flame. The stairway around the elevator shaft was burned away, and the sleepers were caught in an awful trap. Another stairway was at the extreme north end of the building, but almost inaccessible. The flames and smoke swept through the corridors, and the affrighted guests were aroused by the suffocating smoke pouring through the apertures of the doors, followed by the glare of the fire. Some rushed forth almost into the heart of the flames and struggled toward the further stairway. A few of these escaped, the others were overcome by the smoke and roasted in the fire. But most of the people were awakened too late. When they jumped to affright from their beds and threw open their doors they were met by surging flames. They flew to the windows. Fire or sea or were stories below was the stone pavement. Many jumped, and were picked up mangled and dead. Others shrank back from the fearful jump until the flames swept into their rooms and shrivelled them into unrecognizable shapes. Many women hung from the window sills and rent the air with screams until the fire licked their hands and they went spinning down to a horrible death. At one time there were five women hanging at the same time from six story windows. Below were thousands of men looking on horrified and powerless as the women dropped one by one to the street and were picked up dead. The servant girls had no chance to escape, for the fire rushed up the stairway, consuming it as it passed, and swept into the servants' rooms. One after another they jumped from the windows in the top story of the burning building to the street below. Thousands looked on and saw them meet their death. The proprietor of the hotel became insane. The belief was current that somebody had set fire to the building, as no less than four attempts to burn it down had been made within two years. The number of lives lost was 74.

While they were still digging bodies out of the Mariposa ruins the Platters House, a big hotel in St. Louis, caught fire. It started at the same hour in the morning as the Milwaukee fire, but most of the guests escaped, leaving their effects behind.

ON THE 11TH DAY OF THE MONTH

10,000 people were driven from their homes in Hungary by the floods. Many were drowned. The dykes around Szak gave way, and the deluge completely inundated the town. Great distress still prevails there. On the 14th occurred a frightful fire in a circus in Russia. It was in some respects even more horrible than the Brooklyn fire, and almost equal to the Mariposa fire. Eight hundred people were packed into a circus building in Berdicheff when the alarm of fire was given. The structure was built of wood, and was without windows. The performance was about half over, and two clowns were in the ring, suddenly a shrill cry was heard in an adjoining "Fire!" The people thought it was part of the performance until the ringmaster ran out shrieking at the top of his lungs. A moment later the fire began to creep from the stables. The doors opened inward and were forced shut and held there by the pressure of the terror-stricken multitude. Some fought their way to the two side exits, but there were firmly seized upon, and dashed all efforts to break them open. It was impossible for the victims to escape. When the people realized this they began to throw their children into the ring from all parts of the house. There was a carpet in the ring, and there the fire did not reach. Parents, unused with a heroic instinct tossed the little ones down from the galleries and from all parts of the house. Nearly 200 children landed together in the ring and watched the slow approach of the fire with blanched faces. A few of them, principally boys, had been saved and fascinated. But as the fire crept around the building, the parents forgot their heroic impulses, and one by one jumped into the ring too. Soon the children were was a mass of struggling, fighting, terrified humanity, trying to escape. The poor children were trampled under foot by the mob as it surged frantically about. Then came the fifteen horses, accoutred and goaded by the flames, sprang into the ring, and dashed madly around frantically, trampling the people, trampling them to death. The horses were in a terrible struggle. The flames. The fire brigade was summoned, but it did not arrive until half an hour after the alarm was given, and then it was powerless to do anything toward putting out the fire, as the inside walls were frozen. Many people in the doors were cut away, but nearly 300 people had already perished. As the news became the scene was horrifying. The blackened bodies of scores of victims lay packed in the doorway, where they had fled, and lie as a vine and slowly rotated to death. It was said that the fire was caused by a groom, who threw a cigarette in the straw.

On the 16th occurred a terrible earthquake shocks destroyed many houses and killed many people. The shocks were felt in parts of Murcia in Spain. There was also a heavy earthquake shock in Bohemia. During the week preceding there had been heavy rains in Illinois and western Kentucky, as well as in Canada and New England, and there was a destructive shoshe in the island of Formosa. Many people were drowned in the Yangtse, while mouth kept pace with the disasters by fire and flood.

On the 17th day of the month the steamer Josephine left Seattle, W. T., and sailed for Skagit River. The boat had, when off Port Susan Bay, her boiler exploded. The passengers were scalded. They were shot of the boiler went straight up through the forward salon and pilot house, and blew the roof off the boat. Ten men were killed instantly. Two men who were waiting at the dinner table directly over the boiler were blown to atoms. Neither the Captain, the purser, nor the fireman was heard of afterward. Eight persons were killed and many more were wounded.

ON THE FOLLOWING DAY

occurred the great powder explosion in Holland. The village of Muiden was wrecked, twenty persons were killed, and neighboring towns were seriously damaged. The gunpowder manufactory for the Dutch army are situated at Muiden, and terrific explosions occurred at the same time. The roofs of the 14th occurred a frightful fire in a circus in Russia. It was in some respects even more horrible than the Brooklyn fire, and almost equal to the Mariposa fire. Eight hundred people were packed into a circus building in Berdicheff when the alarm of fire was given. The structure was built of wood, and was without windows. The performance was about half over, and two clowns were in the ring, suddenly a shrill cry was heard in an adjoining "Fire!" The people thought it was part of the performance until the ringmaster ran out shrieking at the top of his lungs. A moment later the fire began to creep from the stables. The doors opened inward and were forced shut and held there by the pressure of the terror-stricken multitude. Some fought their way to the two side exits, but there were firmly seized upon, and dashed all efforts to break them open. It was impossible for the victims to escape. When the people realized this they began to throw their children into the ring from all parts of the house. There was a carpet in the ring, and there the fire did not reach. Parents, unused with a heroic instinct tossed the little ones down from the galleries and from all parts of the house. Nearly 200 children landed together in the ring and watched the slow approach of the fire with blanched faces. A few of them, principally boys, had been saved and fascinated. But as the fire crept around the building, the parents forgot their heroic impulses, and one by one jumped into the ring too. Soon the children were a mass of struggling, fighting, terrified humanity, trying to escape. The poor children were trampled under foot by the mob as it surged frantically about. Then came the fifteen horses, accoutred and goaded by the flames, sprang into the ring, and dashed madly around frantically, trampling the people, trampling them to death. The horses were in a terrible struggle. The flames. The fire brigade was summoned, but it did not arrive until half an hour after the alarm was given, and then it was powerless to do anything toward putting out the fire, as the inside walls were frozen. Many people in the doors were cut away, but nearly 300 people had already perished. As the news became the scene was horrifying. The blackened bodies of scores of victims lay packed in the doorway, where they had fled, and lie as a vine and slowly rotated to death. It was said that the fire was caused by a groom, who threw a cigarette in the straw.

On the 19th occurred a terrible earthquake shocks destroyed many houses and killed many people. The shocks were felt in parts of Murcia in Spain. There was also a heavy earthquake shock in Bohemia. During the week preceding there had been heavy rains in Illinois and western Kentucky, as well as in Canada and New England, and there was a destructive shoshe in the island of Formosa. Many people were drowned in the Yangtse, while mouth kept pace with the disasters by fire and flood.

On the 20

Poetry.

FOR THE EDITORIAL
CHRISTMAS EVE.

[The following lines were written on last Christmas Eve by a newspaper man whose home was in our town, and he had to sit and gaze past in the midst of study models.]

The sweet Christmas Eve, and I am alone!
All alone in a strangest manner;
I hear but the wind, and its low, and moan,
And I think fill my soul grows sadness.
I think of my friends and their happy home,
I think of their joyous cheer,
And I think in my heart—to my sorrow—
And that laugh for my pain is near.

But ah, why should I grieve, or why repine,
For some to be lonely this night?
Alone in the Heart of the Lamp Divine,
And some with great joy are delight.
I will stop to think on the Babe of Bethlehem,
I will stop to think on the Star,
I'll hear the best sound of the Christmas bells—
Then sweep, then sweep with delight!

This long may be sad, but the morning light
Will bring me a joy that is true;
I am the holly, and the happy light
Is the blessed of the Pale Crescent;
I find blue of the Coming Years,
And I hear the joy bells of Christmas.

Ah, why should my heart be sad, O, Friend,
This Eve, this eve with joy so dazzling?
Then lift thy heart to the Child God's love
And feel of its rest in the Stable
But He knows for thee His bright throne above
And He will bring thee Home at last!
Why think of thy home, or the dancers there
Or of the joy of the Christmas Eve?
Hear our hearts—hear ring through the joyful
ah,
See our feet through the heaven streaming.

The Star rest of the Christmas Eve
We have come with the news before Him,
We have come to repeat the sacrifice
We have come to kneel before Him.
To finish thy care and thy sadness
To comfort thy sorrow, to set free,
And He brings to His priests joy glad.

T.

Literary Miscellany.

A Trial of Faith.

WHAT THE FIDELITY OF A HUNGRY BOY ACCOMPLISHED.

"Very good sermon we had this morning, and what a noble face that priest has!"

"You will see him this evening. He is down from Scotland for the holidays, and always passes that season with me.

A group of gentlemen were gathered in the handsome library of a handsome London dwelling, the property of Mr. Percy Lennox, who had spoken, in answer to the remark of his friend, Gerald Hayden. They were all celebrating New Year's under that roof where a kindly welcome was a frequent one with them. Darling was a wealthy young fellow, favored alike by fortune and nature. He was leaning on the mantelpiece at his ease, looking at his friends as if the sight of happy faces was a thing of beauty and a joy for ever to him.

"That priest, Father Bilcott," he resumed, "is as noble a man as I know, and—Perhaps I should not say so, as—

"God bless you! merry gentlemen!"

Lost clothing, low money!
Remember Christ our Saviour!

"Was named this New Year's day."

So sang a ragged, ruddy-faced little urchin under the window of the great house, and one or two of the gentlemen looked at me, smiled in a curious way, and then touched his noses with—

"He has your eyes," he said; "there's no imposition here, uncle; your little nose! Well, I'm sure, the goodness sake! get his face—what!" said the old gentleman irritably; "and what has this young rascal done to deserve charity.

I suppose he did make inquiries; I have only a recollection of answering a great many questions, and seeing a good many strange faces, and at last I was recognized as the merchant's grandchild.

I was to stay the night with my grandfather.

But general attention was directed to Mr. Darling, who was looking out, and into whose face I saw a wonderful softness, into which the blood rushed a crimson tide, leaving the face ashen gray at the boy for some moments; then he left the room, and they all looked back in the snow which had fallen the little wall; then he took the child's face round in his hands and led him indoors, the dog following at a respectful distance.

"Darling dear, do the children sing?"

"Yes, I'm a washman for boys who sing in the streets. I have noticed it before."

"Very kind you have Hayden," said Mr. Darling's voice. "A fellow feeling makes us wondrous kind; and as I was once in that situation myself—

"Singing in the street, barefooted and hungry?"

"Yes, Darling! What nonsense!"

"I didn't find it so. If you like to hear the story I will tell it to you."

"Oh! by all means. And the Amontillado, gentlemen, you had not finished."

You know, by reports at least he went on, my late guardian, John Darling. He had no son, my father, whom he held in very tightly, and was severe with on most points, particularly religious points. He was a Scotch Presbyterian, and had adopted Pope and prying for the Queen and hating the spread of Catholicism. He was one of the most liberal-minded, and, having one or two Catholic acquaintances, he was sure that they were less black than they were painted in point of faith. Thus, having sworn the work, it is said, and he ended by losing his heart to a young Catholic lady, through whom he had taken in the snow into the mysteries of religion, to be overawed by the solemn majesty of the ceremony. Indeed the Church founded on a rock, and he was required into her fold. Later on he married this young lady, and all this unknown to his father, who was at the time traveling in the south of France. When he returned my father still kept the secret, knowing old Darling's bigotry and his temper, and he resolved to keep it until Christmas morning, when he believed the novel influence of the true world soften a father's heart to—who as only child.

Well, he waited, and he found himself on that blessed Christmas day, with shrieking ringing to remind him of peace and good will, with happiness and joy in men's hearts and kindly greeting on their lips, and found himself an outcast and a beggar, with my angry father's face before his eyes, his bitter reproaches and stinging accusations in his ears, and the information that if he chose to abide by his "popish idolatries" he never more should enter that house; his father would disown him entirely.

I need not say that Paul Darling refused to abide by such. He had promised his Master to the vineyard.

He returned with these tidings to his young wife, who was absolutely dependent on him as he had been upon his father, who had educated him as a gentleman, the heir to a large fortune, and never taught him the use of his hands. Her relatives were not wealthy, and my father, after a vain struggle to bend her, left it for America, in which religion's persecution I was born.

For some years my father and mother struggled on, until much-loved and over-tortured children one nearly heart for ever. Then my mother resolved to return to her native land, believing that with her sister she would find a temporary home, in the amount the Atlantic with for only child—upon—only to find that her relatives had long ago abandoned the poor, for she was a delicate woman left to the friendship and succor of the world.

Well, my friends, she died, almost of starvation, in this city of wealth and luxury, and I was left to starve or die—to the fate of a street urch. My mother had taught me the true promise of repeating during the day St. Francis Xavier's motto, "Show thyself a mother," and I was assured it was frequently on my lips during those weary weeks of misery.

One day, the day before the Feast of the Circumcision, a small child in tatters, barefoot, and half-starved, might have been seen singing carols before this very house. The child was myself; but I did not know that I was singing before my grand father's door. All that I did know was that I was cold and hungry.

Suddenly the great door opened and there stood before me a lady dressed in my eyes seemed a young prince, and as I think now the handsomest one I ever saw, with a face glowing with bright blue eyes as fine as the sky on a hot morning. He stood for some moments looking to me, and then he came and asked me if I was hungry. I was hungry, nodding by holding out his hand and leading me indoors to a room that seemed to me like a fairy palace; then he rang a bell and in an imperious way ordered dinner. The servant stared like one petrified on beholding the ragamuffin who shivered beside the young gentleman, but he muttered something about Mr. Eros always doing what he pleased and so I was served with the first good food I had tasted for many a week.

And then he went down on his knees at my feet and asked her her whole story.

"Mother, I can't stand injustice, and the poor little fellow as no one knows but me! Isn't it wonderful how those Catholics stick to their faith? I have noticed it before.

"You'll be one yourself, I am afraid," said the lady, who looked startled, confused, all things save angry.

"Not! I'm afraid! Hoping hack his beautiful bright head. "I don't understand the thing; I don't believe in it; but I would not tempt a child to forsake his faith, and a birth so full of beauty as the Catholic faith is.

I remained in this quiet home for several weeks, and found that my uncle was supported herself and family by teaching music, while he, with the facetious courage peculiar to him, set about getting employment on one, and pay the poor lad's board and the luxury he had given up for my poor sake.

I had been in his care six months when my grandfather died; he had never altered his will, and the property passed to Eros my father, of course, had been long disinherited. Eros, on his demand from his father sent me to college, then abroad, and when I returned I found great changes had another was dead, his brothers and sisters settled in different stations, and he himself on the eve of entering the ministry of Jesus.

"There is no resisting the grace of God," he said to me, "and your own hand sowed the seeds. You first taught me to say, 'Mon-strate one Matrem,' and Mary has heard the prayer.

Do you know what he did before giving up the world? He made over to me the whole Doring property, saying that it had come to me from my father's side, and I was prince. I was present when he took the vows; many a tear has his generous hand been raised in benediction above me, the child he saved, the man who owes all to him.

Mr. Darling's voice shook a little; he turned aside for a moment; he was evidently moved. "You heard him speak this morning, my friends; you thought him noble yet you know his story; what say you now! Is not a noble heart?"

And now I have explained my interest in the walls of the streets, remembering my own dark childhood, remembering that whatever is done onto the least of those is done onto Christ as He Himself hath told us.

A Great Man.

A great man is affable in his conversation, generous in his temper, and invincible in his mind. He is not easily provoked upon. And as prosperity does not make him haughty or imperious, so neither does adversity sink him into meanness and dejection; for, if ever he shows more spirit than usual, it is when he is ill used and the world is frowning upon him. In short, he is equally removed from the extremities of sorrying and pride, and scorns either to trample on a worm or cringe to an emperor.

"Always say as you go, said an old nurse to her charge, "I'm a lady, I'm a lady!" but, uncle, suppose I have nothing to pay with?" Then don't go."

"A Drop of Ink in Every Word."

Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y. Three months ago I was broken out with large clusters of pimples on my face, which, despite the use of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery and Pellets (Pellets "and have taken six bottles, and I feel like a new person. All these clusters have healed and left my skin in a most healthy condition. I thought at one time that I would not be cured. Although I can feel nearly everyone my gratitude for you, yet there is a drop of ink in every word I write.

AMERICA HONESTLY RECOGNIZED.

Acknowledgment That England Could not Intend Insult to Us.

"It is impossible to escape from a feeling almost of bewildlement at the thought of the future of North America. Nothing, indeed, is prosperous, and will speedily become very much more so; but it is not exceptional. All the Western States and Territories are doing like her—increasing rapidly in population, and forming a soil till now unworked to yield them profit. Unquestionably this is the most important fact in contemporary history. It is a new fact; it cannot be compared with any organic phenomenon in the past, that it could be has failed for those who like untrammelled political speculation. It fascinates the statisticians, soothes Mr. Giffen, who has just dealt with it in an elaborate fashion before the Statistical Society. He points out that the population of the United States has doubled in a hundred years from 3,000,000 to 50,000,000—that is to say, that it has during that time multiplied itself seven times, or doubled itself every twenty-five years. At the like rate of increase it would result in another century the unheard of total of 800,000,000, the fortieth part of the whole world, there are good reasons why it should not proceed quite in that rapid rate. Still, it must increase rapidly till the conditions of life have found an equilibrium, and the comparative ease of living in the Old and the New World has become fairly balanced.

It is difficult to exaggerate the significance of this, especially to England. On the one hand, we have no longer exist without American. The country of which, within recent memory, we were absolutely and entirely jealous, now proves to be the country by which our surplus population, that used to earn by the hundreds of shiploads. Its land comes with ease, and is sold at our prices under the hands of our enterprising English brethren. Its cities are rapidly growing to the point of getting fish from the Cagman was the thought of odious foreign competition, and Canadian Dominion, which we rapidly increase in wealth and numbers, is much more than the idea of a new market and a new source of supply. As Mr. Giffen remarks, it is an idea which affects the whole of the political life of Europe. We are a new Europe, as it were, growing up on the other side of the Atlantic, and though their problems are for the moment not cure, and though they resolve to keep aloof from our quarrels, their very existence has influence on us. Little by little the political perspective of Europe is changed, and the nations other nations than the three or four which have been used to regard as important, are the only progressive and truly civilized nations. It is not, of course, that England be admitted to be the more interesting, but even in this respect fifty years more will bring an astonishing difference. Time.

Pini De Casagnac on Gambetta.

The Parisian journals are naturally enough filled with anecdotes and reminiscences concerning the late M. Gambetta. Of these the curiosities in the style, at the Bourse, in the Chamber of Deputies, or in the cafes, at the Palais Bourbon, or under the shadow of the Pantheon, are those which are most interesting. Some very deplorable stories have circulated in the Chamber. Some Bonapartists have ventured to express opinions which did not please the Left Centre, in many instances the Deputies have been so far forgetful of their dignity as to call Paul de Cassagnac, which runs as follows. "Leon Gambetta is dead. The hand of Providence has struck down the man who in his fall in pieces—like Antioches, who, though still living, has been eaten alive by worms—he succumbs in the prime of his fall. Gambetta, in his fall, spurted his blood. He had risen against God. He has fallen. It is frightful; but it is just and just. Gambetta's death resulted glory, without elect, a beast's death. And what a surrounding spectacle! Gambetta, who enveloped the last moments of his life with impiety, Gambetta, who, in his books and in his speeches, and in his speeches and in his speeches, and in his speeches, and in his speeches,

THE MONITOR.

TWENTY-SIXTH YEAR OF PUBLICATION.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 26, 1913.

PRAYERS FOR WEEK.

To the Clergy of the Diocese of San Francisco.

Rev. Dear Sir: As the season is advancing and in parts of the State many catechists have not a motive demand, we deem it our duty to ask you and your people to join in humble prayer to Almighty God, "the giver of every good and perfect gift," beseeching Him in His bounty to bestow upon us the much needed supply of rain. With this view we would direct that you in the place of the Prayer for Lent, and of Mass on 1st Sunday in Lent, reciting the Litany of the Saints, or of the Blessed Virgin Mary, and that in all the Masses you add the Collect "Ad petendum pluviam," until our prayer be heard.

Your brother in Christ,

✠ J. S. ALEMANY, O. P.,

Archbishop of San Francisco.

San Francisco, Feb. 23rd, 1913.

Willing to Keep their Courage Up!

Bishop McQuaid's article seems to have created a fearful panic in the Protestant camp. The parsons, the preachers, and even the "Protestant" laymen have rushed into print, all of them gesticulating and grunting like a lot of demented Dervishes setting off a big—shaker to scare away evil spirits! The ghost of defunct Protestantism raised by Bishop McQuaid will not down, notwithstanding all the noise made by the gospel fire-hooters and the furious fusillades of fire-crackers set of in response to the shot and shell which the Bishop so skilfully sent into among the sectarians. Blish, proof-sure are never friendly towards the physician who tells them they are dying, and is ready to Protestantism but a combination of pride and wealth! Bishop McQuaid—divinely-constituted physician of the soul—has recently told the world that the sick patient Protestantism is rapidly approaching "that bourne from whence no traveler returns," and the friends of the health, old, fossilized institution are naturally incensed at his declaration. Fat parsons, sleek preachers, and well-paid "professors" in so-called theological colleges are all rampant with rage, not do we wonder, at the moment their salaries stop, all these windmills, which work only on "the breath of the world," will lose a respectable religious racket and be compelled to "earn their bread by the sweat of their brow" just like ordinary mortals.

The anticipation of the early arrival of this evil day for them has led some of these fossils fallen into the mistake of printing an article in this week's Outlook, in which they foolishly indulge in a very feeble over over the assertion that "Popery" has lost in this country more members than it has at present in its American communion. Well, suppose it has! Are there not more Protestants, and which will entirely disappear in the future. It could not well be expected that the faith would be retained in the families of immigrants who settled in this country during the last century and the early portion of the present century, when immediately they arrived, these children saw no priest or had a church to worship in. There are regions of America where Catholic settlers lived for twenty years, yet never heard Mass, nor saw a Catholic doctrine expounded; there are other regions where—as Bishop Spalding, of Peoria, will remember—"through lack of priests and Turks (one of us) and the Indian, in their eyes, was not so hateful as the Pope." Thus the Catholic Indian became a Pagan.

"A fond figure for the hand of scorn
To point its slowly-moving finger at."

Under these, and kindred circumstances, the growth of the Church has been not only marvelous, but even miraculous! Let the persecution which has prevailed against the Church be as intense, as bitter as the hate of the sects, and they would long since have slumbered in that grave occupied by the Hillsdales, Inghersolls, Blanchards and other gospel gangs who have long since been consigned to the tomb of the Cayuhoga.

The perturbed parsons and professors who falsely figure out the "failure of Catholicism," predicated upon such metatic propositions, should not lose sight of the fact, and impressed fact that the Church, by which they attribute failure through loss of members in this country, is precisely the same Church which withstood the persecution unequal against her from the days of Nero and Domitian down through all the brutal rulers and emblems of the Roman Empire down to the present time. The Church that emerged from the cauldron of the Catacombs and covered the formerly pagan and persecuting Rome with Christian emblems of the God they suffered for, is not very likely to "fall" in this land where it flourishes so grandly in the full light of freedom. What Bagbash's persecuting policy has failed to effect by several centuries of cruelty that makes the blood run cold, is not likely to take place in a land where freedom to worship God is the hap-stone in the arch of liberty!

Ah! dapper dissenters of the gospel of death, you cannot lay the fattering unction to your souls that our loss has been your gain. When Catholics fall away from the faith they become as dead limbs on a living tree, which impart no vitality to other members of the forest. The innumerable conversions from the ranks of soul-steeped dotards, during the past years of this century, has nearly recouped the Church for all she fell away from her fold in previous years. Your admission, and not you sayer, should therefore be content when you behold the true Church of God triumphing over persecution, and, in the face of the downfall of millions of her people, marching onward in that pathway of progress which our Divine Lord promised when he declared that He would be with her to the end of the world!

It is true that the Church has lost millions of her children in the past. But the defection of Judas was not pointed out, even by the enemies of our Blessed Lord, as proof of the "decay" of Christianity. The Church has always contained apostles as well as apostates; true Catholics and turn-coats have been baptized at the same font; future backsliders and future Bishops have knelt side by side when receiving the sacrament of Confirmation. It always has been so, and it always will be so, just as sinners and saints are found in the same Catholic congregation.

But, notwithstanding the great losses which the Church in America has sustained, the appalling fact stares our terrified sectarian neighbors in the face that there are still from twelve to fifteen millions of Catholics left in America, as against 133,000 Baptists, 1,600,772 Methodist Episcopal members, 684,570 Lutherans, 573,547 Presbyterians, and a sprinkling of a few hundred thousand among the speckled corps of Biblical sects—men who help to make up the brass band of Popery-hating barnstorm in the land of the star-spangled banner!

The facts and figures which the Mourros published last week must have caused a cold shiver to run down the back of many a Bible barnacle as he passed from State to State and saw the onward march of Popery everywhere throughout the land of the Pilgrim Fathers. Then as he witnessed how wisely Catholics followed Horace Greeley's advice to "go West." he must have pondered over the fact that it was no wonder he looked into the furious bullies of fire-crackers set of in response to the shot and shell which the Bishop so skilfully sent into among the sectarians. Blish, proof-sure are never friendly towards the physician who tells them they are dying, and is ready to Protestantism but a combination of pride and wealth! Bishop McQuaid—divinely-constituted physician of the soul—has recently told the world that the sick patient Protestantism is rapidly approaching "that bourne from whence no traveler returns," and the friends of the health, old, fossilized institution are naturally incensed at his declaration. Fat parsons, sleek preachers, and well-paid "professors" in so-called theological colleges are all rampant with rage, not do we wonder, at the moment their salaries stop, all these windmills, which work only on "the breath of the world," will lose a respectable religious racket and be compelled to "earn their bread by the sweat of their brow" just like ordinary mortals.

The anticipation of the early arrival of this evil day for them has led some of these foolish fellow into the mistake of printing an article in this week's Outlook, in which they foolishly indulge in a very feeble over over the assertion that "Popery" has lost in this country more members than it has at present in its American communion. Well, suppose it has! Are there not more Protestants, and which will entirely disappear in the future. It could not well be expected that the faith would be retained in the families of immigrants who settled in this country during the last century and the early portion of the present century, when immediately they arrived, these children saw no priest or had a church to worship in. There are regions of America where Catholic settlers lived for twenty years, yet never heard Mass, nor saw a Catholic doctrine expounded; there are other regions where—as Bishop Spalding, of Peoria, will remember—"through lack of priests and Turks (one of us) and the Indian, in their eyes, was not so hateful as the Pope." Thus the Catholic Indian became a Pagan.

"A fond figure for the hand of scorn
To point its slowly-moving finger at."

Under these, and kindred circumstances, the growth of the Church has been not only marvelous, but even miraculous! Let the persecution which has prevailed against the Church be as intense, as bitter as the hate of the sects, and they would long since have slumbered in that grave occupied by the Hillsdales, Inghersolls, Blanchards and other gospel gangs who have long since been consigned to the tomb of the Cayuhoga.

The perturbed parsons and professors who falsely figure out the "failure of Catholicism," predicated upon such metatic propositions, should not lose sight of the fact, and impressed fact that the Church, by which they attribute failure through loss of members in this country, is precisely the same Church which withstood the persecution unequal against her from the days of Nero and Domitian down through all the brutal rulers and emblems of the Roman Empire down to the present time. The Church that emerged from the cauldron of the Catacombs and covered the formerly pagan and persecuting Rome with Christian emblems of the God they suffered for, is not very likely to "fall" in this land where it flourishes so grandly in the full light of freedom. What Bagbash's persecuting policy has failed to effect by several centuries of cruelty that makes the blood run cold, is not likely to take place in a land where freedom to worship God is the hap-stone in the arch of liberty!

Ah! dapper dissenters of the gospel of death, you cannot lay the fattering unction to your souls that our loss has been your gain. When Catholics fall away from the faith they become as dead limbs on a living tree, which impart no vitality to other members of the forest. The innumerable conversions from the ranks of soul-steeped dotards, during the past years of this century, has nearly recouped the Church for all she fell away from her fold in previous years. Your admission, and not you sayer, should therefore be content when you behold the true Church of God triumphing over persecution, and, in the face of the downfall of millions of her people, marching onward in that pathway of progress which our Divine Lord promised when he declared that He

A Protestant Paper on Lent.

"We are to be midst of the season of Lent. It begins early this year. Easter will therefore be late, and the late March is a long season of Lent. We are glad to know that in some of the churches the observance is assuredly good, rendering the season very helpful to a finer spiritual tone, and a more exalted life. For most of us it would be well if we could keep Lent half the year. And it is a fact of observation that some have been better and tenderer, so thoroughly so from most on Ash Wednesday, and that it would be the moral improvement if we maintained it. If we maintained it we would be such a fact as the Lord had shown.

The foregoing paragraph is from the Pacific, a Presbyterian paper under Congregationalist control, in this city, and we must congratulate our distinctively Protestant contemporary on its conversion to Catholic ideas by heading the penitential season of Lent so highly, because it proves that a change is coming over Protestants, in this regard, that argues well for that coming time when many of them will be Catholics. Unlike our Methodist neighbor—Brother Crary, of the Advocate—the Pacific is anxious to extend the Lenten season to half the year, but the Church of God is a more generous mother than Congregationalism, and she has declared that forty day's fasting, at this season, is sufficient for sinners, while lunatics, like Brother Crary, are entirely exempt from the obligation!

In this connection it may be well to inform our half-shell Catholic confreres of the Pacific that each of his readers as are incapacitated from keeping the Lenten season can be dispensed from the obligation by applying to his Grace, whose Regulations for Lent have suggested the above paragraph in the Pacific. This power no Protestant preacher possesses, nay more than he can forgive sins or feed the lambs and sheep of Christ's fold with the Bread of Life.

It may be wise, also, to inform our pennon-loving brother of the Pacific that a dispensation from fasting (as distinguished from an exemption or an atoning cause) release the individual from the law of abstinence, but confines him to one meal at mid-day, while an exemption from fasting releases the person altogether, or is that he is exempt are not restricted as to the quantity or the quality of the food they may use. Inasmuch as people, children under the age of seven years, are not obliged to fast, it is incompatible with fasting, are all exempt.

An atoning cause comes from the law; a dispensation from the law-giver or ecclesiastical superior. The first releases from the fast all under 21 years, and over 60 years of age; persons recovering from sickness, or those who are compelled to perform exhausting labor. A dispensation, in short, is given by the lawful superior either from some particular or urgent cause of the petitioner—such as being editor of the Pacific, for instance!—or some reason affecting the community, such as an epidemic. An exculpatory cause releases a person from the law restricting to one full meal in the day, but obliges them to abstain from certain kinds of food. Adam and Eve were obliged to abstain, not to fast.

Now, as our good brother of the Pacific, we presume, was baptized, he therewith became a child of the Church—because there is only one God, one Faith, one Baptism, one Bible, and one Church—our good brother thereby became amenable to the laws of the Church, and he should pray loudly and long for that fatherly Archbishop who bade Lent so easy to keep, and of such short duration that even our erring brethren think it should last at least six months.

The brethren of the Pacific will please rise and sing this doxology:

Wake the dog, the holy Lent,
Which Pope of Rome to us has sent.
Wake, the Pacific, hath through,
Abstain from meat, and whisky, too;
And when on earth our lives are spent
May we go where there is no Lent!
To, to, O Lord! this truth be given,
There is no Lent for those in Heaven!

Supreme Excellence of the Rosary.

SECOND ARTICLE.

Father Crozier, a most learned and renowned Jesuit, after enlighting in the most magnificent manner, the Devotion of the Rosary, adds: Every one is aware that it was Co great St. Dominic who established this admirable devotion after an apparition with which the most holy Virgin had honored him, in 1208, whilst he was preaching against the Albigenses. . . . This was properly speaking, the first epoch of this devotion, and of the establishment of the holy Confraternity (of the Rosary), which is so celebrated throughout the world that it has become as a sign of predestination for all the members! In truth, what devotion has ever been more acceptable to God! What has ever been of more efficacious with the Blessed Virgin! . . . It can be truly said that the Rosary is one of those devotions of the Church that gives the greatest homage to the Mother of God. Heretics of all ages (since its establishment), but particularly those of these latter times, have inveighed against this devotion. . . . They have left nothing undone to bring discredit on the Confraternity; but all their efforts will serve only to increase the number of the associates. There is no Confraternity dedicated to Mary more celebrated than this one; there is none that brings greater advantages to Christians; nor is there any more solidly established by the Church of God! With what profusion have not the Sovereign Pontiffs poured out on this Confraternity the spiritual treasures of which they are the Depositaries! With what eagerness have not both kings and peoples entered into this pious Society! How many victories, alone its establishment, has not this solid devotion gained for us over the enemies of our faith! What salutary reforms has it not effected in the morals of the people, and what edifying piety has it not produced amongst all classes! During the life-time of its holy Founder, it was established, with, always, in Germany, Poland, Russia, Moscovy, and even in the Islands of the Archipelago. But it made still greater progress under the heirs of the real and piety of St. Dominic. The Blessed Alan preached the Rosary in all the Northern countries, and he did it so successfully that the worship of the Mother of God, and devotion to her, may be said to have taken a fresh start!

The Duty of Alms-Giving.

As long as there have been persons on the earth, alms-giving has been commanded. Few other duties are so often commended in the Old Testament. "Give alms out of thy substance," said the holy man Tobias to his son, "and turn not away thy face from the poor. Hereby thou shalt merit that the Lord never turn away His from thee. Let thy alms be according to thy ability. If thou have much, give much; if thou have little, give willingly out of that little."—Tob. iv. 7. The precept of alms giving, by which we are bound to give away what is superfluous in our goods, is founded on two reasons, which are very proper to make us love and observe it. The first is that we may be cured of avarice, or attachment to earthly things. The passion, the sad consequence of sin, is one of the chief sources of the evil that afflicts the world. In directing us to keep within the limits of necessity, the new Adam adopted the true means of eradicating it. Avarice once removed, the heart has no further any difficulty in rising towards the love of superior goods. Alms-giving is, therefore, most necessary, and occupies a special place in the plan of our regeneration.

The second reason on which alms-giving is founded, is that man may be continually reminded of this touching truth, observed by sin, that they are all brethren—that the world is only one great family, of which God is the Father. Christian notation are all based on this principle, whose violation brings about most dreadful revolutions. Need we be surprised if the Redeemer so strongly insisted on the precept of almsgiving, which is the application of this principle, and if our forefathers so continually in complying with it, shall serve as the leading matter of our judgment, and the rule of His sentence!

The precept of alms-giving obliges us to give what is over and above our goods. The rich are only God's stewards. In it right, that in this world, some of the children should have all, and the others be left to gather the crumbs that fall from the table? Infinite Providence, must not the abundance of one party supply the indigence of the other! Yes rich of the world! hear what St. Augustine says to you: If you had to receive your treasures to a distant country, and had great reason to fear the attacks of robbers, would you not be delighted if some highly respectable young man came to you and said: My father lives in the country to which you are going. He is very rich. Leave your money here with me. I shall have need of it. In return I will give you a letter of exchange on my father. As soon as you present this letter to him, after your arrival, you shall receive the whole amount with interest—even a hundred per one, instead of one per cent. Well, this high-born youth is the poor man. The country to which you travel is Eternity. The rich man is God. Give, therefore, to the poor man, that you may receive from God. If you require guarantee, the poor man will offer you his rags. The more torn they are, the more certain you may be that everything intrust to him will be restored to you. You say, adds St. Augustine, I have children. Very good; send one more of them and give something to Jesus Christ.

The Works of Hubert Howe Bancroft.

HISTORY OF MEXICO.

The compilation of history, like all human labor, is valuable according as it ranks in superiority above similar efforts by predecessors in the same field, or as it rises above the work of contemporaries. Looked at in this light, the book before us will never be laid above ordinary mediocrity so long as Prescott's Conquest of Mexico continues to be perused by the reading public. Those who have read the admirable work on Mexico, by Prescott, cannot fail to have been sensibly affected with the sensation that his was the master-mind among American writers on Spanish history. He was in full sympathy with his theme, he wrote because his historical genius was stimulated more from love of literary labor than from the desire of reaping profit. In fine, he wrote just as the great Canova used the chisel, or Murillo handled the brush, and the result is admirable in all respects as the work of such men of genius, whether in art, science, or literature.

Mr. Bancroft's present volume is much less corrupted with the poison of prejudice than the volume previously reviewed, yet we must solemnly register our condemnation of it the Voltaire sentiment which pervades its pages, wherein no opportunity is lost to scoff at the name and attributes of Almighty God, and to mock at the heroes of the sixteenth century who had the hardihood to have faith in such a Supreme Being, or rely for succor on any religious belief. The very prominent infidel prejudice in Mr. Bancroft's mind entirely unfits him for the position he has assumed to himself as the historian of a people whose discoveries were undertaken for, and dedicated to, the glory of God and the propagation of the Christian religion. No man whose mind is impregnated with infidelity can correctly understand, or rightly interpret, the motives which moved the adventurous sons of Spain to overture the idolatrous altars of the Indians and replace them by the altar whereon sacrifice is consummated. Infidelity—every writer the pagan idolatry of the Chinese pagoda is just as reasonable, and, mayhap, more acceptable, than the religious rites of the Indians—Infidelity, we say, drove Cortes, and the Catholics who accompanied him, no trait of character save that of men who are "following the dictates of their very foolish faith to its natural result, forgetting, in his rebellion against God and His holy faith, that the extinction of the present is the result of the extinction of the past, and also that it is better to break down idols, even if you have to slay idolaters, than to permit the worship of idols to continue to be continuously offered up as human sacrifices.

The conquest of Mexico was the triumph of the Cross over the sanguinary and cruel mass murder of innocent people, who were annually slaughtered in thousands in order to appease the wrath of the idols to whom which the people worshiped. Cortes changed this blood-stained career of the sons of Japhet into that of the sons of Jesus Christ, and of the Almighty who upheld it, yet, in the book before us, Cortes is depicted as a depraved desperado whose zeal was influenced by the devil, while the cruel, gloomy, and insidious tyrant, Montezuma, is pictured as a Mentors Moses whose Land of Promise was invaded by a band of marauding spirits who turned an earthly paradise into a seething pandemonium. Thus the new Adam adopted the very debit side of the Christian heroes, and all the virtues accredited to the rose who were scarcely one remove from cannibals.

"Walters at Spain" is what our author calls the gallant handful of heroes who achieved the conquest of Mexico, and those reclamation or ruiners who expected moral injury to humanity from such religious zealots are accounted "childish" by the present chronicler of their conquest. Yet the glorious ery of those brave soldiers is found on the banner of their expedition: "Let us follow the Cross, and if we have faith under this sign we shall conquer." With what fidelity they followed the Cross, how faithfully they struggled for its supremacy, and how nobly they conquered the idolatry of the Mexicans, the Catholicity of the Mexican race, throughout all subsequent years, fully attests.

The work, as it has a holy horror of miracles, the occurrence of which is recorded and attested by the early writers on the conquest of Cortes in Mexico, but Mr. Bancroft is not satisfied—as Prescott was—with giving the record so he found it, and let each reader form his own conclusions regarding his supernatural or exaggerated deductions therefrom, but he stamps all such miraculous manifestations with the seal of his materialistic condemnation. If, however, our author will consult the old Testament, he will find therein the record of many miracles which are just as great stumbling blocks to skepticism as those related in connection with the career of Cortes. He may scoff at the miracles recorded in the Bible as the mere invention of imaginative chroniclers whose word is unworthy of credence in this enlightened century, but, nevertheless, they were received as the Divine revelations of inspired writers by all the hundreds of millions of Christians in the past, and are still recognized as such by the Christian world of the present.

When we reflect upon the fact that our author records his belief in the total depravity of the entire human race, under the assertion that "most men are rascals at heart in one direction or another," we need not be astonished at his heterodox view of heavenly manifestations, no matter how well they may be supported by testimony of witnesses who were far better qualified to form an opinion of their reality than a compiler who casts them from him as the refuse rubbish of Romanism which is of too morally a nature to find lodgment in the minds of say men possessing the perspicuity of this nineteenth century pride. A pride which leads our author to insinuate that "rascality" is the moving impulse in most men's actions, whether they be "money-changers in the Temple" or missionaries of the Cross. As Tom Hood well says:

"Alas for the rarity
Of human charity
Under the sun!"

As honest man has been defined by one who knew whereof he spoke as "God's noblest work," and we are told by the inspired writer that "the just man lively by faith," so that it clearly follows that the "rascals" referred to by Mr. Bancroft are only those who deny God, who have no faith, and in whom religion has been replaced by the "rascality" of human nature. Yet, "God made man upright the Maker," says the inspired writer, ", sheed of the earthen pots: Shall the clay say thou that fashioned it: Why hast thou made and thy work is without hands!"—a passage in Scripture which should convince our California historian that "rascality" is not natural to man, but that God implanted in the character to fill up the void in the heart created by the absence of Christian principles.

One of the most picturesque scenes in the panorama of Pacific coast discovery is the march of Cortes towards Mexico, a feature which Prescott has clad in word painting, which makes it pass before the reader's vision with all the realism of life. But in the work before us this history of heroic deeds, inspired by holy faith, loses its charm in the recital of a mass of minor details which only detract from the consecutiveness of the narrative and burden the mind of the reader with a mass of matter which is either irrelevant, or unimportant, or trivial.

In Prescott's Conquest of Mexico we see the scenes as the actors perform their parts upon the stage, but in the present compilation the reading reminds one of a book in the green room where the actors smoke, sweat, and talk scandal, into the drapery room where gaudy robes are thrown off, and are replaced from paint, pulpy, and Dutch gilt jewelry, to that secret sanctum where never brought anything but money to those concerned in them. His Holiness is careful to point out to the reader that the people of Mexico, in past and lawful, says Pope Leo, for those who first came to them were Christians, and lawful means. This is what the Irish people—Catholics—say of the Protestant Irish. It is only when those lawful means are refused them that a few, abandoning hope of redress by constitutional and legal means, and in his rebellion against God and His holy faith, that the extinction of the present is the result of the extinction of the past, and also that it is better to break down idols, even if you have to slay idolaters, than to permit the worship of idols to continue to be continuously offered up as human sacrifices.

It has been, well said that "No man is a hero to his valet," and this feature, with some book-makers, of accepting as true all the petty scandal set afloat against illustrious men in every age of the world, neither adds nor takes from the historical narrative nor adds interest to the narrative. The scenes enacted in the kitchens of kings are not those which are considered worthy of the lives of monarchs, nor are the foibles of the followers of Cortes, which have been foisted into this volume, calculated to enhance the value of the work. Of the scandals those who look in such books for mental pabulum that will improve and edify the mind, will be sorely disappointed. We can rise in the world to that sublimity achieved by their fellow-man whom universal acclaim has honored with the title of heroes.

Cortes planted civilization in Mexico. He may have used many rough methods, in the face of an overwhelming army that menaced him on every side during his march towards Mexico, but in place of the cruelties which were practiced among the people by their rulers, and the darkness of pagan idolatry in which they were enveloped, he left them a legacy of civilization which has endured ever since, and which has opened our domain for the spiritual and social improvement of myriads of souls. The realization of this great reformation is the love and habits of the Indians of Mexico far overshadows the brutality which is alleged against Cortes in his conquest of that country. We can pardon the rough ways of sixteenth century soldiery, but while we lament over individual cases, where excess of zeal seemed to have led to a change in the character of the Spanish forces, we must not forget that their very lives depended upon the fortune of war, that they were in a strange country, beset by foes as fierce by nature as they were formidable in numbers, and, thinking thus, we must cast the veil of charity over their past peccadilloes and thank Heaven for the mighty work which they achieved in the face of dangers and difficulties far greater than ever surmounted by any soldiery, of equal number, in the history of the world before or since.

We regret that our historian has not taken this broad, common-sense view of his subject, but has been led to condemn the Christian heroes for crimes which, in many instances, they doubtless never committed, and attributed to their actions motives which could never have survived in the breasts of men whose lives of practical piety are proved by their almost daily assistance at Mass and their frequent reception of the soul-saving Sacraments of that Church of God which they so gloriously extended, and which has ever since flourished so luxuriantly throughout the entire area of that land discovered by the Christian Cortes, and, in part, redeemed from pagan idolatry by the indomitable courage of Catholic Cortes.

The Pope's Letter to Cardinal McCabe.

The Irish papers recently at hand contain the full text of the Letter of Pope Leo XIII., to Cardinal McCabe, a letter that is at once timely in its appearance and wise in its counsels. His Holiness expresses his deep gratification at the zeal displayed by the Irish Prelates in the performance of their solemn duty in watching over the spiritual and temporal interests of their flocks, and he also adverts to the doubtful disposition manifested by the people in hearkening to the voice of the shepherds of their souls. Commenting on this important document, the Dublin Freeman's Journal says:

"In truth, there are few people who would bear so unhappy a lot in so Christian a spirit as the Irish people. The Irish people doubtedly is due to religion and the retaining influence of the Church. Nothing but religion could reconcile the Irish peasant to his fate, enlightened as it too often is by the very glimpse of the happiness of the world. His Holiness, in eloquent language, warns the people against the danger of those evil counsels which put their trust in deeds of violence. In fine, he wrote just as the great Canova used the chisel, or Murillo handled the brush, and the result is admirable in all respects as the work of such men of genius, whether in art, science, or literature.

Mr. Bancroft's present volume is much less corrupted with the poison of prejudice than the volume previously reviewed, yet we must solemnly register our condemnation of the Voltaire sentiment which pervades its pages, wherein no opportunity is lost to scoff at the name and attributes of Almighty God, and to mock at the heroes of the sixteenth century who had the hardihood to have faith in such a Supreme Being, or rely for succor on any religious belief. The very prominent infidel prejudice in Mr. Bancroft's mind entirely unfits him for the position he has assumed to himself as the historian of a people whose discoveries were undertaken for, and dedicated to, the glory of God and the propagation of the Christian religion. No man whose mind is impregnated with infidelity can correctly understand, or rightly interpret, the motives which moved the adventurous sons of Spain to overture the idolatrous altars of the Indians and replace them by the altar whereon sacrifice is consummated. Infidelity—every writer the pagan idolatry of the Chinese pagoda is just as reasonable, and, mayhap, more acceptable, than the religious rites of the Indians—Infidelity, we say, drove Cortes, and the Catholics who accompanied him, no trait of character save that of men who are "following the dictates of their very foolish faith to its natural result, forgetting, in his rebellion against God and His holy faith, that the extinction of the present is the result of the extinction of the past, and also that it is better to break down idols, even if you have to slay idolaters, than to permit the worship of idols to continue to be continuously offered up as human sacrifices.

More Protestant Decay.

We read with horror that the baptizing of infants have become a great rarity among the Protestants, and that, of the from the statistics of last year. Dr. Talmage has the largest Presbyterian congregation in the country, for it numbers no less than 2,737 members, and yet only 34 children were last year brought to him for baptism. Dr. Parkhurst counts 1,292 parishioners, but baptized only 29 infants during the course of the year. In the Classon Avenue, Church, numbering 600 members, only 12 infants were brought to the baptismal font. In Boston of the North Church, numbering 600 members, but only 11 baptisms, Dr. Robinson's magnificent Memorial Church counts 1,600 members, but had only 15 baptisms. In the first Presbyterian Church on Fifth avenue, with a membership of 410 souls, but two children were baptized. The wealthy Dutigue church had only one baptism, though it counts a membership of 1,300. Dr. Van Dyke, with 571 parishioners, and Dr. Crosby, with 350, has not a single baptism to report. The three largest and wealthiest Methodist churches of Buffalo, with a respective membership of 496, 411 and 320 souls, could but boast of but one baptism during the past year.

"The Gilson farm at three Rotie, Marion county, Or., was sold recently to the Monastery Fathers for $27,000, or $90 per acre. The site is beautiful one, overlooking the country for miles around."

The above paragraph we clip from the Methodist, of this city, but our neighbor is mistaken in the name of the Fathers that located. We presume the Benedictine Fathers were the purchasers, and we are hoppy to inform our brethren that it is "a beautiful one, overlooking the country for miles around," because the Benedictines will be sure to plant a large cross in a conspicuous place, and that the cross will be seen for miles in a section of Marion county which was the birth-place of Wesleyism in Oregon. How the bones of the Walters, the Lees, and the other pioneers of Methodism in Oregon, would rattle in their graves if they could only learn that "a Papish cross" now overlooked the spot where they were consecrated to the evangelical elect! Verily, time works wonders against the followers of John Wesley, and in favor of the Church that earned both loudly and deeply!

Father James Conroy, assistant pastor at St. Joseph's Church, Trenton Island, N. J., died at Denver, Col., about two weeks ago. He studied at Niagara Falls, at Troy, Troy Seminary, and in Rome. Father Conroy was ordained last June, and was stationed temporarily at Trenton Island, his birthplace. He went to Colorado some time ago hoping to recruit his health, which was completely shattered while in Rome.

THE MONITOR.

TWENTY-SIXTH YEAR OF PUBLICATION.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 26, 1913.

✠

DEATH OF THE FIRST PRIEST ORDAINED ON THIS COAST.

There died on the 6th inst. at the old Mission of San Antonio, Monterey county, Father Doroteo Ambris, at the age of 65 years. He was educated in Mexico of his family a Catholic College, and came to page with Rt. Rev. Francis Garcia Diego y Moreno, O. S. F., the first Bishop of California. Catholic Indians being then numerous in this State, and especially in the San Antonio Valley, were left without a Priest to provide for them. To supply this want was the first work of the Bishop, and seeing in the youth whom he had with him a good classical scholar and theologian, besides manifesting proofs of solid virtue, he resolved to retain him for that Mission. Hence Father Ambris could boast of being the first who received Holy Orders on the Pacific Coast. Shortly after his ordination he left to take charge of the mission established at San Antonio, and there he remained laborious and ministering to the wants of his people for 32 years, until death snatched him from their midst.

In him were concentrated all the virtues of a good Priest, especially that of poverty, zeal for souls, relentless and patience, which he practiced to a high degree. The Mass was composed chiefly of the poorest class of Indians and Californians, who possessed nothing of their own, and who were entirely supported by "the good Padres," who utilized the Church property for that purpose, but it being contrary to the rules of the Church property consequently a slight inconvenience, the only complaint against the Priest was that he was too much of a Franciscan in his ministrations, and too much of a Franciscan in his poverty. Thus he was the Priest of the Poor, and he was the Priest of the Poor, and he was the Priest of the Poor, and

Two Pictures.

The Am Morin is publishing a very interesting memoir of Rev. Henry Lemcke, O. D. D. He was raised a Protestant and ordained a Lutheran minister, but not being satisfied, he at last found his way into the true Church. In the process of his search for truth, he investigated the claims of several of the sects, among others the Moravians. But let him tell his own story:

"There were in our country," he says, "some few divines after the form of the Moravians; we called them pietists. In our neighborhood lived one of them. I became acquainted with him, and paid him now and then a visit, but found in him and his circle nothing but shallow, hypocritical doing. Once after dinner I looked round for a pipe, —there was always a whole assortment of them standing in a corner,—but there was nothing of that sort this time to be seen. An old maiden sent, a true examplar of a thinking female, when she saw what I was after, said: 'My dear brother in Christ has discarded that sinful habit.'

"Yes," said he, "I have been diligently searching whether our great Lord and His Apostles did smoke tobacco, and when I was convinced that they did not, I threw my whole smoking apparatus out of the window.

"'Why,' said I, 'did you not throw your wife after it? for to the best of my knowledge, they had no wives either.' Now whether storm broke loose against me,

He afterwards gave up the chasing and the Evangelical Church, where he came to a friend of his, who had made a college, and in which home he met another Gaboldey one of whom was Mr. Dippenbosch who afterwards (Samuel Dippenbosch.) While there he says,

"A young man who had been ordained with Dippenbosch invited us to be present at his first sermon, which was to take place in his native village, not far from town. We drove out, stopped at a farm-house a little winding distance from the village, where the young priest was born. When we entered the house we heard the cries of the blind grandmother: 'Is Jac—ob, I was going to say, it is the Holy Father Joseph here?' And so she was groaning her way from behind the stove, the tears running out from her blind eyes, and after she had taken hold of the priest's hand she dropped on her knees to receive his benediction and so did the whole family. 'My God! thought I, what is about to be the priesthood of the true Church! There is the grandmother who assists at the birth of her grandson; there is the father, a stout rough farmer, who very likely has given Joe many a thrashing; there are brothers and sisters, with whom he has been playing or quarrelling; they are all on their knees to receive the blessing which, in their firm belief, came down through all generations from the Son of God upon this young man.

Well might he say, "I was all at once transplanted into a Paradise of innocence, of unbelief indifference—into the bright and warm atmosphere of Gaboldey."

A Georgia Hint.

A young man in Tuskegee went to see a beautiful young lady, last night, and stayed so late that the young lady's mother brought in a dozen eggs, and asked him to hatch them for her. He took the hint and left, declaring that he would never go there again.

Cheaper than Dirt.

Residents of the Mission district will at 1218 Post street, near Gough, find a stock of goods in the dry goods line, in the grocery line, in the boot and shoe line, in the line of crockery, glass, tin, iron, hardware, in the line of hats and caps, in the line of ready-made clothing, in the line of Gents furnishing goods, in the line of carpets, bed ticking, oil cloths, window shades, in the line of tobacco, cigars, and pipes, in the line of stoves, tinware, and kitchen utensils, in the line of patent medicines, in the line of perfumery, in the line of fancy goods, in the line of notions, in the line of toys, in the line of Yankee notions, in the line of everything everything every day, all selling at cheaper prices than anywhere else in the city. Call and examine for yourselves, and be convinced. Up one flight of stairs, and you will find the goods. Remember the number, 1218 Post street; office hours, 12 to 2 P. M.

A Local Gem.

Fair reader have you heard the news, That either Fleming's boots or shoes, Surpass all others in Fleece town, For which he wears King Crispin's crown. He "long draw" multitudes adorn, He "clump bottom" shoes by the score, Which he "relined and repaired" may the last, Which he "refitted" for a perfect trust. For his prices are by none and alike, And his work he does right, And not one with him can dare compete, In beautifying the human feet. He leather is good, his work is strong, Its perfect his art, you can't go wrong. All competitors he can defy, And on his onts you may rely. So fair ones to him do wend your way, And at his shrine your homage pay; Then you will find, more than words can tell, The Path of Fashion will please you well.

Boots and Shoes of all kinds made to order in first-class style. Repairing of all kinds neatly done. P. S.—Give the devil one trial, and you will find yourself fitted better than you ever thought. Note the address: 1147 Market St., bet. Seventh and Eighth streets, near City Hall, San Francisco, M. F. Fleming, Proprietor.

Ladies who desire to keep up with the fashion in shoes and want and look for economic should patronize Mr. Maloney 25 Sixth street. Fashionable patterns cut to order. A fine line of gaiters and ladies under-wear, also all kinds of infant wear.

—Dr. Warburton, graduate of London and Edinburgh, removed to 906 Market street, Office Hours, 1:30 to 3 P. M., 7:30 to 8:30 P. M.

SUMMONS.

IN THE SUPERIOR COURT, CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO, State of California. H. S. BOND MARGERY, Plaintiff, vs. HENRY G. MARGERY, Defendant. Action brought in the Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, State of California, with the Complaint filed in said City and County of San Francisco, in the office of the County Clerk, and Ex-Officio Clerk of said Court. The undersigned, HENRY G. MARGERY, Defendant, hereby required to appear in said Court within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on him of the Summons—if served within this county; or if served elsewhere within this district, then within twenty days; or be taken against you, in addition to the property already in the possession of the Court, judgment will be taken against you, and the Court will grant the bonds of matrimony now and heretofore existing between the plaintiff and defendant, on the ground of defendant's wilful desertion, and failure to provide for the support of the plaintiff, and the defendant will be called on to pay so much of the Community Property as the Court in which, reference to hereby made, and for costs of suit, counsel fees, and general relief, as the law hereinbefore notified that if you fail to appear and answer the complaint as herein required, the plaintiff will proceed to take the Court for the relief demanded. Given under my hand and seal of the said Superior Court, at the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, this 15th day of December in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and eighty-one.

DAVID WILLCS, Clerk,
By A. J. Kamm, Deputy Clerk.
M. COONEY, Plaintiff's Attorney.

DR. PHELAN

(Graduate of the University of New York.)

Formerly Physician to Sacramento and St. Mary's Hospitals.

Specialty of CATARRAL DISEASES.

Office and Residence 320 Third Street Cor. Bryant.

INSURANCE.

COMMERCIAL INSURANCE COMPANY OF CALIFORNIA.

FIRE AND MARINE.

Capital fully paid $200,000 0
Assets, San Francisco Property 1, Mortgages 1,000,000 0
Loanes paid since organ 800,000

405 California Street, S. F.

CHAS. A LATON Secretary. JOHN M. WISE, President.

HAS REMOVED THE HOME MUTUAL INSURANCE COMPANY

Now occupies premises

NO. 216 SANSOME STREET.

19th ANNUAL EXHIBIT, JANUARY 1st, 1881.

Premiums closed organization $4,142,500 10
Amount Jan. 1, 1880 ..... 1,000,000 00
Amount Jan. 1, 1881 ..... 1,000,000 00
Capital Paid Up, Gold 1,000,000 00
Surplus over everything 1,000,000 00

President ..... F. F. MORGAN
Vice President ..... CHAS. MAYNARD
Secretary ..... CHAS. R. STORY
Special Agent ..... E. R. MATHEWS

FIRE AND MARINE INSURANCE

UNION INSURANCE COMPANY

OF SAN FRANCISCO,

THE CALIFORNIA LLOYDS, ESTABLISHED IN 1861.

Nos. 416 and 418 California Street.

CAPITAL ..... $750,000 GOLD.

PAID DAVIS, PRESIDENT SETTLEMENT OF LOSSES, GOLD ASSURED.

DIRECTORS:

SAN FRANCISCO.

B. D. Rosenstock,	Nicholas Landeg,
H. B. Parrott,	John Parrott,
Moses Hallam,	James Moffit,
H. Q. Kinne,	J. Rosenberg,
M. J. O'Connor,	M. H. Sweeny,
J. Dalzhover,	Joseph Brandenstein,
Daniel Meyer,	Gustave Touchard,
Adam Grant,	J. G. Kinne,
Adolphe Sanchez,	Geo. C. Hickox,
Charles Lefranc,	F. M. Smith,
Joseph Sullor,	Charles Bonn,
Raphael Dey,	W. H. Hoag,
J. Lawrence Pool,	William Sproule,
A. W. Ott,	John Corbett,
N. S. Shaw,	J. O. Hackley,

A. B. Phelps.
GUSTAVE TOUCHARD, President.

N. G. KITTLE, Vice-President.
JAS. D. BAILEY, Secretary.
GEO. V. BOHEN, Surveyor.

EDUCATIONAL.

COLLEGE OF NOTRE DAME

MARYSVILLE, CALIFORNIA.

THIS INSTITUTION, ESTABLISHED IN 1864, I chartered by the State Legislature, and endowed with all the rights and privileges of similar Collegiate Institutions in the United States.

Reference required. For terms and particulars address,

COLLEGE OF NOTRE DAME, Marysville, Cal.

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and 5 outfit free. Address H. Hallett & Co., Portland, Me.

EDUCATIONAL.

Academy of Our Lady of Angels.

SANTA CLARA . . . . CALIFORNIA.

THIS INSTITUTION, CONDUCTED BY the Sisters of Notre Dame, affords an opportunity of securing for young ladies, at a trifling expense, a moral and intellectual education. One feature in particular that should recommend this Academy, is the influence ever exerted over the pupils to views and habits of economy and to render them useful members of society in after life.

The scholastic year, comprising 10 months, commences at the beginning of August and ends in June.

Pupils are received at any period of the year.

TERMS:

Per quarter, payable in advance.

Entrance Fee, Ten Dollars, to be paid once. Board, Tuition, Washing and use of bedding, $50. Vocal and instrumental Music form extra charges.

French and Spanish lessons free. Next session begins August 11th.

SANTA CLARA COLLEGE

SANTA CLARA, ... CALIFORNIA

THE THIRTY-SECOND ANNUAL SESSION will commence Tuesday, Aug. 2, 1881. This Institution was founded in 1851, and in 1855 was incorporated with the privileges of a University. It now consists of a large building, with a spacious yard, fully protected, covered gymnasium, with all the apparatus, etc. It possesses a complete Philosophical Apparatus, and valuable collections of Mineralogy and Geology. It has also, practical schools of Assaying, Surveying, Civil Engineering, Mechanical and Commercial Drawing. For the latter a new building 180x40 has been erected, that has recently been fitted up for these.

Diplomas are given in two departments—the Classical and Scientific—and Certificates in the Commercial course.

TERMS:

(Payable semi-monthly in advance)

Matriculation Fee, to be paid but once ..$ 15 00
Use of the Library, Gymnasium and Washing and Mending of Linen, ... 50 00
Board and Tuition, including Stationery and Medicine, Bath, etc., per session of five months 200 00

For further particulars apply to the President of Santa Clara College, Santa Clara, California, 214 Hayes street, San Francisco, or to

REV. J. PINASCO, S. J.,
President.

ST. JOSEPH'S ACADEMY.

Conducted by the Christian Bros.

Fifth and Jackson Sts., OAKLAND, CAL.

THIS INSTITUTION IS A SELECT BOARDING and Day School for young ladies. It offers every facility for acquiring a thorough Education, whether Classical, Scientific or Commercial.

Parents and guardians desirous of sending their sons to a Boarding School, where they will be kept apart from those who, by example, or otherwise, may lead them into evil, can do so, by entrusting them to the collegiate system of this Institution.

Students are received at any time during the year, but for a shorter period than one term of five months.

TERMS:

(Payment in U. S. gold coin, and invariably in advance)

Board, Washing and Tuition, per term of 5 months, $125
Entrance Fee, payable but once 10
Entrance Fee payable but once 5

BRO. CLAUAN Director

SAINT MARY'S COLLEGE

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

Conducted, by the Christian Bros.

Offers every facility for acquiring a thorough Education, whether Classical, Scientific or Commercial.

THOSE WHO COMPLETE THE CLASSICAL Course receive the degree of A. B.

The Commercial course has been established for the convenience of those who wish to acquire a good practical education in as short a time as possible.

While proper care is bestowed on every branch taught in the College, our own language receives special attention. The daily exercises of the students in Grammar, Composition and Rhetoric are published and corrected in the class rooms.

TERMS PER SCHOLASTIC YEAR,
(Payable half yearly in advance):

Board, Tuition and Washing $250 00
Bed and Bedding 15 00
Use of Philosophical Apparatus 10 00
Vacation at College 50 00
Use of Bed 10 00

Music and Drawing form extra charges.
For further particulars address

BRO. BETTELIN, President.

ST. GERTRUDE'S ACADEMY,

RIO VISTA, SOLANO CO., CAL.

THIS ACADEMY FOR YOUNG LADIES UNDER the direction of the Sisters of Mercy, is beautifully situated on a rise in the plain, about 1½ miles west of Rio Vista. The location is remarkably healthy, and the place is well known throughout the State for the health and comfort of the pupils. The premises are extensive and well adapted to the accommodation of a large number of pupils, and equally central. The course of instruction combines all that usually appears at a solid education.

Eight months of any term during its term, and will be charged for from the time of entrance.

The school year is divided into two sessions of five months each; the first to commence January and ends in June.

Terms per Session, Payable in Advance.

BOARDING PUPILS.

Board and Tuition, with use of bedding $112 50
Washing 12 50
Use of Bed 5 00
Music, Harp, Guitar, Drawing, French, Plain and Ornamental Needlework do not form extra charges.

DAY ACADEMY.

Terms per month, in advance:

Senior Class $2 50
Intermediate Class 1 50
Junior Class 1 00
Music Lessons, with use of instrument 1 50
Music Lessons, with use of instrument 1 00

☞ No entrance fee required. For further information apply to

M. M. CANELLER, Director.

Convent of Our Lady of the Sacred Heart,

OAKLAND, . . . CALIFORNIA.

CONDUCTED BY

The Sisters of the Holy Names of Jesus and Mary.

THIS INSTITUTION IS PLEASANTLY SITUATED on Broadway street near Lake Merritt, combining as it does the advantages of a country home, being supplied with all the modern improvements—an element having been spared to provide for the comfort of the inmates.

The course of study embraces the various branches of a solid, useful and ornamental education.

TERMS:

(Payable half yearly in advance):

Board and tuition (French and Spanish included) $250 00
Washing 12 50
Bed and bedding, without sheets (if supplied by the institution) 15
Piano, Harp, Guitar, Vocal Music, Drawing and Painting form extra charges.
For further particulars apply to

THE SUPERIORESS.

ST. JOSEPH'S ACADEMY,

SACRAMENTO, ... CALIFORNIA.

Boarding and Day School for Girls.

Conducted by Sisters of Mercy.

ESTABLISHED 1857. INCORPORATED 1878.

Pupils admitted any time during the year; terms, moderate. For particulars apply to the SUPERIORESS

EDUCATIONAL.

ST. ROSE'S ACADEMY,

UNDER THE DIRECTION OF THE

Sisters of St. Dominic,

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

THIS INSTITUTION, BEAUTIFULLY LOCATED in Tyler Street, near Fillmore, offers parents and guardians the advantages of a refined education. One feature in particular that should recommend this Academy, is the influence ever exerted over the pupils to views and habits of economy and to render them useful members of society in after life.

The scholastic year, comprising 10 months, commences at the beginning of August and ends in June.

Pupils are received at any period of the year.

TERMS:

Per quarter, payable in advance.

Entrance Fee, Ten Dollars, to be paid once. Board, Tuition, Washing and use of bedding, $50. Vocal and instrumental Music form extra charges.

French and Spanish lessons free. Next session begins August 11th.

SANTA CLARA COLLEGE

SANTA CLARA, ... CALIFORNIA

THE THIRTY-SECOND ANNUAL SESSION will commence Tuesday, Aug. 2, 1881. This Institution was founded in 1851, and in 1855 was incorporated with the privileges of a University. It now consists of a large building, with a spacious yard, fully protected, covered gymnasium, with all the apparatus, etc. It possesses a complete Philosophical Apparatus, and valuable collections of Mineralogy and Geology. It has also, practical schools of Assaying, Surveying, Civil Engineering, Mechanical and Commercial Drawing. For the latter a new building 180x40 has been erected, that has recently been fitted up for these.

Diplomas are given in two departments—the Classical and Scientific—and Certificates in the Commercial course.

TERMS:

(Payable semi-monthly in advance)

Matriculation Fee, to be paid but once . $ 15 00
Use of the Library, Gymnasium and Washing and Mending of Linen, ... 50 00
Board and Tuition, including Stationery and Medicine, Bath, etc., per session of five months 200 00

For further particulars apply to the President of Santa Clara College, Santa Clara, California, 214 Hayes street, San Francisco, or to

REV. J. PINASCO, S. J.,
President.

ST. JOSEPH'S ACADEMY.

Conducted by the Christian Bros.

Fifth and Jackson Sts., OAKLAND, CAL.

THIS INSTITUTION IS A SELECT BOARDING and Day School for young ladies. It offers every facility for acquiring a thorough Education, whether Classical, Scientific or Commercial.

Parents and guardians, desirous of sending their sons to a Boarding School, where they will be kept apart from those who, by example, or otherwise, may lead them into evil, can do so, by entrusting them to the collegiate system of this Institution.

Students are received at any time during the year, but for a shorter period than one term of five months.

TERMS:

(Payment in U. S. gold coin, and invariably in advance)

Board, Washing and Tuition, per term of 5 months, $125
Entrance Fee, payable but once 10
Entrance Fee payable but once 5

BRO. CLAUAN Director

SAINT MARY'S COLLEGE

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

Conducted, by the Christian Bros.

Offers every facility for acquiring a thorough Education, whether Classical, Scientific or Commercial.

THOSE WHO COMPLETE THE CLASSICAL Course receive the degree of A. B.

The Commercial course has been established for the convenience of those who wish to acquire a good practical education in as short a time as possible.

While proper care is bestowed on every branch taught in the College, our own language receives special attention. The daily exercises of the students in Grammar, Composition and Rhetoric are published and corrected in the class rooms.

TERMS PER SCHOLASTIC YEAR,
(Payable half yearly in advance):

Board, Tuition and Washing $250 00
Bed and Bedding 15 00
Use of Philosophical Apparatus 10 00
Vacation at College 50 00
Use of Bed 10 00

Music and Drawing form extra charges.
For further particulars address

BRO. BETTELIN, President.

ST. GERTRUDE'S ACADEMY,

RIO VISTA, SOLANO CO., CAL.

THIS ACADEMY FOR YOUNG LADIES UNDER the direction of the Sisters of Mercy, is beautifully situated on a rise in the plain, about 1½ miles west of Rio Vista. The location is remarkably healthy, and the place is well known throughout the State for the health and comfort of the pupils. The premises are extensive and well adapted to the accommodation of a large number of pupils, and equally central. The course of instruction combines all that usually appears at a solid education.

Eight months of any term during its term, and will be charged for from the time of entrance.

The school year is divided into two sessions of five months each; the first to commence January and ends in June.

Terms per Session, Payable in Advance.

BOARDING PUPILS.

Board and Tuition, with use of bedding $112 50
Washing 12 50
Use of Bed 5 00
Music, Harp, Guitar, Drawing, French, Plain and Ornamental Needlework do not form extra charges.

DAY ACADEMY.

Terms per month, in advance:

Senior Class $2 50
Intermediate Class 1 50
Junior Class 1 00
Music Lessons, with use of instrument 1 50
Music Lessons, with use of instrument 1 00

☞ No entrance fee required. For further information apply to

M. M. CANELLER, Director.

Convent of Our Lady of the Sacred Heart,

OAKLAND, . . . CALIFORNIA.

CONDUCTED BY

The Sisters of the Holy Names of Jesus and Mary.

THIS INSTITUTION IS PLEASANTLY SITUATED on Broadway street near Lake Merritt, combining as it does the advantages of a country home, being supplied with all the modern improvements—an element having been spared to provide for the comfort of the inmates.

The course of study embraces the various branches of a solid, useful and ornamental education.

TERMS:

(Payable half yearly in advance):

Board and tuition (French and Spanish included) $250 00
Washing 12 50
Bed and bedding, without sheets (if supplied by the institution) 15
Piano, Harp, Guitar, Vocal Music, Drawing and Painting form extra charges.
For further particulars apply to

THE SUPERIORESS.

ST. JOSEPH'S ACADEMY,

SACRAMENTO, ... CALIFORNIA.

Boarding and Day School for Girls.

Conducted by Sisters of Mercy.

ESTABLISHED 1857. INCORPORATED 1878.

Pupils admitted any time during the year; terms, moderate. For particulars apply to the SUPERIORESS

EDUCATIONAL.

ST. ROSE'S ACADEMY,

UNDER THE DIRECTION OF THE

Sisters of St. Dominic,

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

THIS INSTITUTION, BEAUTIFULLY LOCATED in Tyler Street, near Fillmore, offers parents and guardians the advantages of a refined education. One feature in particular that should recommend this Academy, is the influence ever exerted over the pupils to views and habits of economy and to render them useful members of society in after life.

The scholastic year, comprising 10 months, commences at the beginning of August and ends in June.

Pupils are received at any period of the year.

TERMS:

Per quarter, payable in advance.

Board, Washing and English Tuition, per quarter $87 50
Entrance Fee 10 00

EXTRAS:

Languages, (each)	$10
Vocal Music in Class	1 50
Vocal Lessons in Class	2 50
Grand Vocal Lessons	5 00
Drawing and Painting in Water Color	1 50
Oil Painting per lesson	2 50
Dancing, per lesson	1 50
Use of Piano for Practicing	5 00

DAY PUPILS.

Preparatory Class, per term	$12 5
Intermediate	15 00
Higher	22 50
Use of Piano for Practice	5 00

Each young lady is required to be provided with two dresses, one change of underclothing, one pair of gloves, stockings, one dozen napkins, four towels, one silver fork and spoon, one silver tea spoon, two pillows, four pillow cases, one mattress, one knife, fork, goblet, dark apron and napkin ring.

Bonnets or hoops allowed by rule.

Pupils of any religious persuasion will be received on the same footing, and are required to be present at the religious exercises of the Institution.

All correspondence of the young ladies will be subject to the inspection of the Superiores.

For further particulars address

SISTER SUPERIOR

COLLEGE OF NOTRE DAME

OF SAN FRANCISCO,

FOR YOUNG LADIES.

CONDUCTED BY THE SISTERS OF NOTRE DAME.

THIS INSTITUTION, FOUNDED IN 1868, chartered in 1869 by Act of the Legislature of the State of California, enabling the Trustees to confer Collegiate Honors, including the Degree of Bachelor of Arts, on young ladies who may, on account of their proficiency in literature, be adjudged worthy of the acquisition of a solid and refined education.

TERMS:

Tuition, Board, Washing and Bedding, per annum $250 00

EXTRA CHARGES.

Piano, with use of Instrument, per annum. $60 00
Vocal Music, Class Lessons 20 00
Vocal Music, Private Lessons 40 00
Drawing, per annum 20 00
Painting in Water Colors, per annum 20 00
Painting in Oil, per lesson 1 00
Use of Piano for Practice 5 00
Graduating Fee 5 00
Contingent Fee, payable at commencement of each scholastic year 10 00
Fees for Preparatory Class, payable at the beginning of each half session, in advance.

SELECT LADY SCHOOL.

Terms per month (paid in advance.)

Tuition in the 1st and 2nd College Classes $ 50
Tuition in the 3rd and 4th College Classes .. 5 00
Tuition in the 1st and 2d Preparatory Classes 4 00
Tuition in the 3d and 4th Preparatory Classes 3 00
Tuition in the 1st and 2d Grammar Classes . 3 00
Tuition in the 1st and 2d Intermediate Classes 2 50
Tuition in the 1st and 2d Primary Classes . 2 00
Pupils not preparing for Graduation, Drawing, Painting, Vocal Music, Instrument Music form extra charges. Pupils in Reading Schools, but learning French and Spanish are given gratis the privilege of one class in Plain and Fancy Needlework.

N. B.—A private conservatory is furnished, at moderate rates, for the convenience of pupils residing in distant parts of the city.

School of the Holy Cross.

A Boarding and Day School for Young Ladies.

CONDUCTED BY THE SISTERS OF CHARITY of the Holy Cross. For terms, etc., address the Sisters, or apply at the Convent.

SACRAMENTO INSTITUTE.

Conducted by the Christian Brothers.

A Select Boarding and Day School,

N. AND TWELFTH STS., SACRAMENTO.

EVERY FACILITY IS HERE AFFORDED TO ACquire a sound Education. The Commercial Department receives special attention. Students received at any time during the year. For particulars apply to BROTHER DIRECTOR.

MISCELLANEOUS.

ROOFS

TIN! ASPHALTUM!!!

New Roofs of Tarred Felt, Old Roofs Repaired, and GUARANTEED when so contracted for by

MET MARKET STREET
Bet. Fourth and Fifth.

Orders may be left at Office of H. G. FISKE.

TELEPHONE Cab and Carriage COMPANY.

STABLES:

1324 and 1326 Market St.

PRINCIPAL STANDS: G. W. cor. Kearny & Geary & Market Sts.

CENTRAL STAND, 5 Kearny St.

The Latest Styles of

CARRIAGES, CABS & COUPES

Always in attendance at the Stables and Stands.

Any accidents, or neglect of drivers, if reported to owner and manager, P. J. DOLAN, at the Stand or Stables, will be suitably rewarded, and such factors punished.

RATES OF FARE.

CABS AND COUPES.

Single Fare	$ .50
Per Hour	1.00
Parties, etc., Each way	1.00
Carp House and return	3.00
Fare	2.00
Funerals	2.00

HACKS AND CARRIAGES.

Per Hour	$1.50
Carp House and return	3.00
Fare	2.00
Theaters, etc.	1.00
Per Journey	1.00

To all regular riders a reduction from the above rates will be made, by applying to the owner.

P. A. DOLAN,
Telephone Nos. 2131 and 2152.

$72 A WEEK, $12 a day at home easily made. Costly Outfit free. Address True & Co., Augusta, Maine.

MURPHY, GRANT & CO.,

IMPORTERS OF DRY GOODS,

And Sole Agents for the Pacific Coast OF THE

Veuve Xavier Jouvin Kid Gloves

Stock and Sansome Sts., San Francisco. sol2

P. GALLAGHER & SON, —DEALERS IN—

POULTRY AND GAME.

STALLS 1 and 2,

QUEEN CITY MARKET,

1158 Market Street.

(Opposite Sixth.)

SAN FRANCISCO AND NORTH PACIFIC RAILROAD.

On and after Sunday, October 23, 1881, Boats and Trains will leave San Rafael (Pier foot of Tiburon ferry) as follows:

10.15 A. M. Daily (except Sundays) for San Rafael and intermediate points.

2.30 P. M. Daily, Sundays included, via Donahue and Cheminade branch, for Donahue.

4.45 P. M. Daily, Sundays excepted, for San Rafael.

SUNDAY EXCURSIONS.

10.15 A. M. Train connects at San Rafael with Narrow Gauge Railroad for Fairfax and way stations.

Stages connect at Tiburon for Vallejo, Napa, Calistoga and Clear Lake; at Donahue for Santa Rosa, Sebastopol, Cloverdale, Healdsburg, Lake Port, Lower Lake, Ukiah, Saratoga, Springs, Sonoma County, Calistoga, Napa, Knight's Valley, Monticello, Pope Valley, Pacific Coast, Geyserville, Cloverdale, Ukiah, Lakeport, Upper Lake, Bartlett Springs, Navarro Valley, Mendocino City, etc.

NOTICE OF REMOVAL.

JERRY LOWNEY & SON

HAVE REMOVED THEIR CARRIAGE FACTORY from corner of Sansome and English streets, to 406 Ninth street. A choice assortment of carriages on hand ready to order, and repairing promptly attended to.

OIL PAINTING, FRESCOING AND DECORATING.

J. BROUHROUD,

21 Stockton Street, S. F.

FRESCOER, DECORATOR AND PAINTED GLASS Designer. Church work a specialty. Particular attention given to the painting of religious subjects or designs.

THE GREAT CONVENIENCE

OF THE NEW YORK CATHOLIC AGENCY is that by the use of its facilities persons can transact business by mail, express, saving any freight or cartage charge, one cent per unit of goods wanted, and never pay more (generally less) than a manufacturer direct from the dealer. It also has facilities for transacting any private business in New York, such as purchasing goods, procuring patterns, the advantage of which is obvious to your agent are more valuable than ever. Address

THOMAS D. EGAN,
New York Catholic Agency, 32 Barclay street, and 33 Park Place.

BOOTS AND SHOES.

BOOTS AND SHOES.

JOHN SULLIVAN,

NORTHEAST COR. OF SATTERY AND JACKSON streets, where to make to order the best French Calf Boots for $5, at from $5 00
Calfskin Leather Boots $6 00
Kip Boots 4 50
Calfskin $3 5

Boys' and Children's Boots and Shoes made to order. Persons in the country entering Boots and Shoes to the amount of Twelve Dollars or more, will be allowed Twenty-five per cent. off, so as to make the expense charge light. I sell Boots and Shoes of MY OWN MANUFACTURE ONLY. Boots and Shoes sent C. O. D. Postpaid: see price.

LITHOGRAPHERS. BOOKBINDERS

P. E. DOUCHERTY & CO.,

STEAM

BOOK AND JOB PRINTERS,

412 Commercia St., and 411 Clay St. Between Sansome and Battery.

HARVEY'S

HOT-WATER RADIATOR.

SECURES A MILD UNIFORM TEMPERATURE without the enforcement waste of fuel or litter of the open grate; most healthful atmosphere without the dry, parching air so common among the hot-air furnaces; no noisome sewage; the hot-air furnace; the hissing or cracking of the steam. 12 sizes.

☞ Gas Information or Descriptive Circular, sent free.

NO. 213 MISSION ST.

Bet. Main and Beale, SAN FRANCISCO.

BELLS ETC.

MENEELY BELL FOUNDRY.

Superior Bells for Churches, Schools, Farms, Factories, Fire Alarms, Clocks, etc. Price List Free. Mention this paper. MENEELY & CO., WEST TROY, N. Y.

BUCKEYE BELL FOUNDRY.

Bell of Pure Copper and Tin for Churches, Schools, Farms, Factories, etc. Price List Free. VANDUZEN & TIFT, Cincinnati, O.

BLYMYER MF'G CO BELLS

Church, School, Factory, Farm Bells and Chimes. Catalogue sent free. Mention this paper. BLYMYER MANUFACTURING CO., CINCINNATI, O.

LINFORTH, RICE & CO.,

Sole Agents, 502 and 504 Market Street, S. F.

WEED & KINGWELL,

CALIFORNIA BRASS WORKS

125 First Street S. F.

Manufacturers of GARDEN VALVES, Brass Bibs, and UR-CATES of all kinds. Brass Cocks, Brass Bibs, Copper Bibs, etc.

BRASS SHIP WORK, SINKS, BREATHING PAIPS, SUDORIC BEACHS, ETC.

ALSO ALL KINDS

Brass, Composition, Zinc and Babbitt Metal Castings, Steamboat and CHURCH BELLS.

Agents for Blabon's Burglar Lubricator.

PROFESSIONAL CARDS

M. COONEY,

Attorney and Counsellor at Law.

405 Kearny street, cor. Pine. Rooms 3 and 4. San Francisco.

JOHN M. BURNETT,

Attorney and Counsellor at Law.

Rooms 1 and 2, 307 Montgomery street, cor. Sacramento San Francisco.

A. H. LOUGHBOROUGH-Law Office,

N. W. Cor. Sacramento and Montgomery Streets.

M. C. HASSETT,

Attorney and Counsellor at Law,

HAS REMOVED HIS OFFICE TO

PHELAN'S BUILDING,

Rooms 512 and 513 Tel. Exchange

LAW OFFICE

HENRY PERRY

230 Montgomery Street.

Rooms 16 and 17, SAN FRANCISCO

WM. W. BISHOP,

Attorney at Law,

324 PINE STREET,

ROOMS 1, 2, AND 3. Dividend Building

Piano, Singing, Guitar, Violin, Accordeon and Banjo

TAUGHT AT MODERATE PRICES BY

MRS. H. BENNETT,

145 Fourth St., near Howard.

CHARLES F. HANLON

HAS REMOVED HIS LAW OFFICE TO

PHELAN'S BUILDING,

Market Street.

Rooms 16 and 44, second story. San Francisco.

BANKING HOUSES.

JOS. A. DONOHOE, San Francisco. EUGENE KELLY, New York.

DONOHOE, KELLY & CO.

SAN FRANCISCO.

EUGENE, KELLY & CO.,

NEW YORK.

BANKERS.

EXCHANGE ON

NEW YORK, LONDON, AND BANK IRELAND (Dublin).

Payable at all the Branches.

ALSO IN EVERY COUNTY TOWN OF IRELAND.

PHILADELPHIA BREWERY.

JOHN WELLAND . . . PROPRIETOR

SECOND STREET, NEAR FOLSOM, SAN FRANCISCO.

Amount of Beer sold in 1881, 50,187 barrels. sep28

BOOKS BOUGHT AND SOLD BY A. BOURGOIN 1304 Montgomery street.

TAILORS.

John Kavanagh,

MERCHANT TAILOR

6 New Montgomery Street.

PALACE HOTEL, S. F.

The Making of Clergymen's Garments Specialty

N. SWEENY,

MERCHANT TAILOR

41 Second street,

Opposite Jones street ..... San Francisco.

Cassocks and Clerical Clothing a Specialty

M. FITZPATRICK

—IS—

The BOSS Tailor

Of the Pacific Coast.

36 1-2 FOURTH STREET,

Corner of Jessie ..... San Francisco.

☞ Go there for your CLOTHES. You are sure to be suited and don't you forget it.

THOMAS DRADY,

MERCHANT TAILOR

No. 6 Third Street,

Near Market, S. F.

JOHN HICKEY,

Merchant Tailor

36 Fourth street,

Between Market and Mission streets ..... San Francisco.

Business Suits to order from $ Pants " Fine Dress Suits " Black Doeskin Pants "

DENIS REDMOND,

MERCHANT TAILOR

No. 500 Bryce street.

☞ Perfect fit and good work guaranteed.

EMPLOYMENT ETC.

O'BRIEN & WARD

Male and Female

EMPLOYMENT OFFICE

MALE DEPARTMENT, 610 Clay st.

FEMALE DEPARTMENT, 606 Clay st.

ALWAYS TO BE HAD—FIRST-CLASS MEN, Boys, Farm Hands, Teamsters, Dairymen, Hands, Gardeners, Gardeners, and Married Couples, Waiters, Bakers and Bakers, Cooks, good reliable Help, without any charge to employers, attending rooms open before 8 ☞ Clay street.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Marble Works.

Monuments & Headstones

—IN—

Marble and Scotch Granite

MANTLES & GRATES

Marble and Encaustic Tiles.

☞ Designs sent on applying for it.

W. H. McCORMICK,

807 MARKET ST. - bet. Fourth and Fifth

MRS. JEROME DEASY,

CENTRAL

Floral Depot

706 Market St.

San Francisco

Bouquets, Crosses and Cut Flowers always on hand.

Funeral and Wedding Decorations Made to Order.

RAZORS!

FOR $1,000

I WILL MAKE A BETTER RAZOR AND SOMETHING MORE THAN ANY MAN IN THE WORLD.

My razors make guaranteed. ..... $ 1.00
My Hand Razors warranted not to rust the finest white shaving 2.00
Good English Razors 1.00
Best English Razors 2.00

☞ Sent C. O. D. or by mail.

M. PRICE,

415 Kearny Street

Grinding and Repairing.

W. A. HAMMOND

Watchmaker and Jeweler

No. 4 Sixth Street

(Second door from Market)

Watches Cleaned, $1. Glasses, $1.

MONITOR MENTION.

The Hon. Charles Curran, Chief Justice of Jamaica, and grandson of John P. Curran, the famous Irish orator, is at present visiting Mission, and is so authoritatively stated that he has received from the Catholic church by his cousin, Father Curran, of Hughesville, Missouri, immediately after his arrival there.

—Best Pictures made at the Imperial, 724 Market street.

—Kennedy Salve is unrivaled for its speedy healing qualities. Ask your druggist for it. 25c.

—Dr. A. V. Bills, Dentist, 11 Geary street, rooms 1 and 2.

—Dr. W. E. Price, Dentist, No. 917 Market street between Fifth and Sixth, San Francisco.

—Removed—J. E. Pulman, M. D. Office and residence to 14 Dupont street.

—Don't wear ill-fitting suits but call at 422 Powell street for excellent dress making. Satisfaction guaranteed. Patronize received evening.

—The best Teas and Coffees are sold at the Tea Store, 147 Third st., bet. Howard and Folsom.

—Carpet-beating and whitewashing, 333 Tyler, Oakland branch, 2146 and Telegraph avenue; telephone, 2126

DAVITT'S SPEECH.

[CONCLUDED FROM FIRST PAGE.]

prompt to action, every motive that could call for sacrifice is fighting on the side—the property of our fatherland, the happiness of our people, love of country, right of free speech, freedom of the press, domestic sanctuary, and national autonomy as a crowning incentive to patriotic self-determination (applause). What are our opponents compelled to do to uphold their supremacy? To suppress public meetings, deny freedom of speech, refuse trial by jury, violate the rights of domestic sanctuary, and to throw all the gates of constitutional rule, and resort to every form of despotical despotism (applause).

WHICH SIDE WILL YOU FIGHT ON?

It is true that in the meantime the member for Wexford will have to go to prison for fighting on the side of country, justice, and free speech; but I actually gloat over the apostasy which Ulster and the rest of Ireland will witness in the author of the Home Rule Bill, who has been condemned to a third and twenty-two hours' daily confinement in Kilmainham by the blind and bitter vindictiveness of the landlord Catholic party (applause). The course which English statesmanship is pursuing in failing either to remain benefactors and Home rule in Ireland, or to adopt and do the exploiters of the members from Westminster and in the hearts of this country by mortal law (hear, hear), by no means which Ireland has been pursuing during the past four years can only be final victory (applause). Force is but a check by judgment, if the people are true to themselves and their country, and the people (applause). To destroy a thing that's eternal is the effort of powers that be to make it the instrument of their own ends. Celtic rule and Irish landlordism are both already political destruction, and are regarding all prudence and policy that might be pursued in the expansion of Irish social institutions in Ireland. The political pole that deprive people of their liberty of which they have ceased to destroy; and the very power that has caused contact of the Irish people with the Celtic race, and the shock

Poetry.

(FOR THE MONITOR.)

THOSE OUT-STRETCHED ARMS.

BY ELEANOR C. DONNELLY.

A holiday old tradition sweetly saith
That when the dead Christ blessed the Cross it rested
Its arms, by all spread and dim with death,
By Mary's tender hand, were meekly closed,
But when the brushed and swollen Arms, the stress
To gently fold upon Thy Sacred Heart,
O might not mystery of doubtless love!
She could not bend or close their Mother blest!

Crowned with wounds, He lay upon her knee,
His blood's mangled Hands spread wide apart,
As though to say: "Poor mamma! behold! behold!
And, even yet, I'll clasp you to My Heart!"

As though to say: "O suffering mine, who yours!
Do I not know your sorrows in Mine own?
Behold! I gather into these Arms, and bless Thee, my Sorrowful Mother, to my aching breast!"

Dear Arms, where, then, both solid and abuse
Repose from pain, release from ale and woe!
Where, when commissary, shame-confused,
The saddest heart, with rapturous love, may cloud
Its shelter!

Dear out-stretched Arms! as full of mute appeal
The Cross! I've spurned your foul embrace, of yore,
Ah! let me, now, unto your shelter, steal,
And hide there, sweet Love! for ever more!

Philadelphia, Lent, 1883.

A SONG FOR ST. PATRICK'S DAY.

AIR—"THE BELLS OF SHANDON."

The trumpet sounded and joy unbounded
Irish spread, I answered back, spoke up
Its notes are swelling round the peasant's dwelling
Where I'll try to be just to poor Land Katherine.
When our land victorious, redeemed and glorious,
For the Irish Republic's home shall be
Our old national Shamrock
Our Irish Shamrock
The queen majestic of the western sea.

The beyond all sowing and ribbon dressing,
With their bonnets and their heads may be
To me more cheering, more bright appearance,
Than a Kelly Kerry from sea to sea.
With her rains and mountains, and golden fleeces
Our Irish Shamrock
Our Irish Shamrock
There's a country for Wet, where a golden hat
Beneath the laborer for all his toil!
Yes! there's a country, and I never forgiven it
Of the chaste the pearls and makes rich the soil.
Of all lands of my order, 'tis the wide world's vast Queen.
Niagara's thunder talk that land is free.
But for me our grandest
Give me the Shamrock
Our Irish Shamrock
The queen majestic of the western sea.

Our dear Irish country, our isle, has spoken
Then shall be broken oppressor's spell;
For the emerald green from sea to sea.
And proudly rolling round our brave Patrick
We'll unfurl our Shamrock, and we'll sweep them
To the port of Freedom—what a rickety!
Our Irish Shamrock
Our Irish Shamrock
The queen majestic of the western sea.

PATRICK THEACY.

Pugs and the pawn, sweet, little bird,
Here often wrote I sing;
I'll pipe the wood, I'll sing the woods,
With my sweet music ring.

I'd sing inside the bed of pain,
I'd make and sin a rest
I'd sing inside the prison-gate,
And sing inside the jail.

I'd sing upon the city-walls,
And in the market-place;
My harp would plead for everyone
A hymn of love and peace.

But I am neither high nor proud,
Nor fond of song in idle,
I sing in spots where I am found
And heard in some dirtier.

STATE SCHOOL BOOKS.

Commenting upon the general waste and extravagance of the State Printing Office, the Sacramento Mail says: "It is the Public Printing Office, and it is not to be wondered at that they will be found to be the most expensive concern in the State in California. The fact will not be in any way lessened by the circumstances that they are the official means by the people for any given work. The expense of putting them up must be borne by the people, and it is to be hoped that long before the publishers receive their receipts for the work they will have paid, in taxes, for the cost of production. The only difference with the Public Printing Office is that we can see and so test books would be objected to and also see the cost of them."

A SPONGING OF ST. PATRICK'S DAY.

AIR—"THE BELLS OF SHANDON."

Dear Friends Dry, that good Curmilliun, Sneds
A native of Kilmacrenny, Ayr, Scotland. He was Dead 1848 he lived at Los Angeles, Santa Cruz and Monterey. In that year he was killed by a bear, and his property was sold at auction by the Sheriff of the pioneers who let out the bear. He was the first of the pioneers who let out bears, and the last of the pioneers who let out bears, and the last of the pioneers who let out bears, and the last

THE MONITOR.
TWENTY-SIXTH YEAR OF PUBLICATION.
WEDNESDAY, MARCH 14, 1883.

CIRCULAR LETTER.

—FROM—

ARCHBISHOP ALEMANY, of the Clergy and Laity of the Diocese of San Francisco.

Dearly Beloved:—It is sometime since we discussed in our duty to invite your attention to a subject most important to Israel, and at the same time surrounded with serious difficulties. We allude to the "Yearly Directory," established in this city several years ago, under the Christian inspiration of assisting helpless boys to habits of industry and respectable employments. The necessity of such institution became then quite evident, and that necessity, instead of diminishing, has grown in gravity and importance.

Some time ago the Directory, like similar organizations, became liable to some difficulties, mentioned in a manner from the fact that we had not at our disposal a sufficient number of Christian Brothers, or of clergymen who could devote time enough to its encouragement and progress. The gentleman in charge, as far as we can judge, has done much good, and, by his zeal, and especially in procuring companion for them in good respectable families, but it was always deemed most desirable to secure the help offered by the Brothers or of the Clergy. not only to better establish the organization of the public, but also to control and direct in a more effective manner the object in view—the temporal and spiritual interest of our youth. In cities like ours there are always many boys whose age or condition does not render them candidates for the Orphan Asylum, and who, nevertheless, deprived of the necessary influence of paternal directions, are liable to fall into bad associations, and they contract habits of idleness and dissipation.

Hence, as soon as we return, which, we expected one of the ordinaries of the Cathedral, the Rev. Mechael Connolly, we intend to the principal Director of the Institution, and, jointly, to devote all energies and solicitude to its direction and prosperity, in union with the local and immediate Superintendent.

We notice that you may obtain a clearer and more definite idea of the establishment, we herewith exhaust, substantially, their respective reports.

Mr. James Reid, the local Superintendent, in his report to the Board of Directors, says that during the twenty-one months that he has been in charge of the Directory, ending December 31, 1882, one thousand fifty hundred and sixty-one boys have presented themselves, and of that number, nine hundred and forty-five have been provided with situations.

Of these 1,561, 1,313 are entered on the books as natives of the United States, of one hundred and seven born in California, the remaining 248 being of foreign birth.

The ages, religion and parentage of children are given as follows:

Between 5 and 10 years of age	99
" 10 and 14 " "	1,146
" 14 and 21 " "	316
Total	1,561
Religious or Born:
Catholics	1,269
Protestants	292
Jews	0
With or Religion	27
Mother only is living	87
Full orphans	125
Total	1,561
Br. of parents (population) during 21 months	1,157
Boys lodged	792
Boys placed out	365
Giving distributed, pieces	1,000

The foregoing shows that 365 boys, making employment, slightly per cent. are boys whose parents and mothers are living, but who cannot, at least who do not, obtain employment either for themselves or for their children.

Intimate acquaintance with these boys shows that they are by no means bad, or belonging to what are called the "dangerous class," and most of them need only the opportunity of "helping themselves" in order to make of them good and useful members of society, rather than become in time, which they certainly seem unwise if left in the midst of idleness and temptation.

It is claimed for the Directory that, in proportion to its limited means, it is doing more for this true amelioration of the youth of the city, and for the protection of society, than are all our general and conservative establishments for which we are being taxed so heavily; and that therefore this and kindred institutions should concentrate themselves to the charitably disposed, and, above all, to more in proportion who ought to use the money there is in our power to do good, rather than in punishing it.

The Superintendent furnishes a list of all the patrons of the Institution, together with the amounts contributed respectively, whether of cash or clothing, or of clergymen who could all of whom he would tender his thanks; also the many gentlemen who have given employment to our boys, whose age or condition does not render them candidates for the Orphan Asylum, and who, nevertheless, deprived of the necessary influence of paternal direction, are liable to fall into bad associations, and they contract habits of idleness and dissipation.

Hence, as soon as we return, which, we expected one of the ordinaries of the Cathedral, the Rev. Mechael Connolly, we intend to the principal Director of the Institution, and, jointly, to devote all energies and solicitude to its direction and prosperity, in union with the local and immediate Superintendent.

Your devoted brother in Christ,

✠ J. S. ALEMANY, O. P.,
Archbishop of San Francisco.

San Francisco, March 7, 1883.

A Palpable Falsehood in a Protestant Paper.

We can find some excuse for falsehood uttered deliberately by an infidel who does not recognize God, and whose conscience is dead to all fear of future punishment. But what shall we say of that Protestant minister who pretends to preach and practice Christianity, yet who willfully and maliciously circulates an untruth in order to gratify his mendacious anti-Catholic spirit by bearing false witness against his neighbor? Yet this is precisely what the Pacific has done in its recent issue, wherein it pretends to quote from a lecture delivered recently in this city by Professor Dorr on "Suicide."

In the course of his lecture this gentleman gave the following exhibit of the religious statistics of the Union, which he stated were true to the extreme Northwestern and Western States, and, he believed, to the Southern States, and, he concluded, true of all the Northern States, where it ranged from 141 million to every 100,000 of the population every year. In other words, he said, 1 in every 700 was the ratio of 100,000 population, or 1 in every 3,500, while New York city, he said, observed but 1 in every 3,515. How marked is the difference.

Alluding to the causes which tend to augment the high rate of suicide in this State, Professor Dorr said:

"The returns that California gives us of both immigrant and native-born population, and of the number of the causes producing different results. Of the 1,000,000 of people, 200,000 are foreigners, and, of the 800,000, only 17 were of an embodied intellect; 787 were, in other words, idiots, and but 13 could in any way be considered above the average. No city equaling this in size, which has nearly as many of soldiers. We must admit that it is the place most given to self murder, for remember any other place in the world, so far as heard from. In Paris the average age of suicides is 45; in this city, 32. In New York, in one year, through that is an exception, it was between 25 and 26. How is it that so many young men commit suicide in this city? Because very young men are entitled to the ballot, they are young, and short brains, a state that took hold of lately all, seize pretty to this. Then we have many importations of men who have made fail-ure in other lands, and, coming here, finding it difficult to more in more important spheres, and finding for one more, they decide upon suicide as their last resort. Of place into state, example, 7 were foreigners, here in elsewhere, is one of the idiot' homes. Our institutions do not in the State enfranchise in suicide, owing to the men with which the majority are covered. Richmon, too, able in solve the matrix. Poverty is a cause less frequently found in this city than elsewhere; it is the subject claim that resorts to this way of ending their misery, will be found to have to go through of the course. The explanation given in one-half of the cases is that the suicide was due to sickness. We all have the reason for searching it to ship in our minds. In former years we had no such cases."

"How is it," asks the lecturer, "that so many young men commit suicide in this city? And the answer has given in a terrible indictment against the godless system of education in our day: "Because our young people are neglected for the calling they succeed." They have been educated into the idea that manual labor is degrading, that religion is merely the rant of preachers or the rhapsodies of priests. They have grown up in an atmosphere where God's name is seldom heard, save to be desecrated, and when they hear the thorns there is only one remedy left, and that is to end their worthless lives by the most awful, unworthy, and unworthy act that man can commit.

If the education of our day fitted our young men for the mechanical occupations, suicide would be fewer. If the voice of God could be heard in our public schools, and our young men were taught to observe His laws, suicide would be a crime as rarely committed as it is almost unknown among their holy faith; sadly enough to the tragedies that beset them, arising from want and the contagion of evil associates; and finally because criminals through an original fault of their own, but from the very force of circumstances.

The Father has found, that in the past, the Directory has accomplished a noble work, but that it has fallen short of its mission, mainly owing to the want of sufficient means to meet either the expectation of its projectors, or the growing exigencies of the case.

In view, then, of placing the Institution upon what firm foundation that it deserves, and some what has been accomplished elsewhere by similar means, the Father proposes to make it a matter of personal interest to all those who would aid a noble work, and he would, at the same time, bring that co-operation within the power of every one.

Without doing away with the old one, he proposes a new plan of membership for the benefactors of the Directory, in which an annual contribution of one dollar, paid in instalments of 50 cents, if desired, shall entitle each member to all the spiritual benefits of three Masses weekly said for the contributors, and when dead, in lieu of a solemn Requiem Mass said semi-annually for the repose of the souls of the deceased members, and their friends. Due notice will be given of these Requiem Masses in order that those who wish to attend may do so.

The old patrons and subscribers, and all who shall continue donations of any kind shall partake of all these benefits.

This Association is to be known as St. JOSEPH'S UNION, for the temporal and spiritual care of neglected boys.

The only duty expected from members of the Union, besides the payment of their annual subscription of one dollar, would be to interest themselves in referring to the Directory the neglected boys of their neighborhood.

Cards of membership will be issued at an early day at the desk of the several churches, and an opportunity given to all who wish to become members of this charitable Union.

Besides the weekly Masses said for all the members, a Mass will be said monthly for all those who would kindly act as collectors for membership and donations to the Association.

As the work of the Directory is intended for the benefit of the city at large, the respective Pastors are requested to lend their influence to encourage the formation of organizations of the Union.

The building on Howard street, between Tenth and Eleventh, is entirely too small to meet the constantly increasing numbers of those who wish to avail themselves of the benefits intended to be afforded; and to begin at once the work of enlarging the present edifice, and of rendering it more commodious in every respect, an architect has been arranged to be given at the Grand Opera House on Tuesday, March 27th, by which it is hoped the public in general will show its appreciation of a noble charity.

The Pastors will please have this circular read at the last Mass and Vespers on next Sunday, and the collection if given at the other Masses.

Your devoted brother in Christ,

✠ J. S. ALEMANY, O. P.,
Archbishop of San Francisco.

San Francisco, March 7, 1883.

A Palpable Falsehood in a Protestant Paper.

We can find some excuse for falsehood uttered deliberately by an infidel who does not recognize God, and whose conscience is dead to all fear of future punishment. But what shall we say of that Protestant minister who pretends to preach and practice Christianity, yet who willfully and maliciously circulates an untruth in order to gratify his mendacious anti-Catholic spirit by bearing false witness against his neighbor? Yet this is precisely what the Pacific has done in its recent issue, wherein it pretends to quote from a lecture delivered recently in this city by Professor Dorr on "Suicide."

In the course of his lecture this gentleman gave the following exhibit of the religious statistics of the Union, which he stated were true to the extreme Northwestern and Western States, and, he believed, to the Southern States, and, he concluded, true of all the Northern States, where it ranged from 141 million to every 100,000 of the population every year. In other words, he said, 1 in every 700 was the ratio of 100,000 population, or 1 in every 3,500, while New York city, he said, observed but 1 in every 3,515. How marked is the difference.

Alluding to the causes which tend to augment the high rate of suicide in this State, Professor Dorr said:

"The returns that California gives us of both immigrant and native-born population, and of the number of the causes producing different results. Of the 1,000,000 of people, 200,000 are foreigners, and, of the 800,000, only 17 were of an embodied intellect; 787 were, in other words, idiots, and but 13 could in any way be considered above the average. No city equaling this in size, which has nearly as many of soldiers. We must admit that it is the place most given to self murder, for remember any other place in the world, so far as heard from. In Paris the average age of suicides is 45; in this city, 32. In New York, in one year, through that is an exception, it was between 25 and 26. How is it that so many young men commit suicide in this city? Because very young men are entitled to the ballot, they are young, and short brains, a state that took hold of lately all, seize pretty to this. Then we have many importations of men who have made failure in other lands, and, coming here, finding it difficult to more in more important spheres, and finding for one more, they decide upon suicide as their last resort. Of place into state, example, 7 were foreigners, here in elsewhere, is one of the idiot' homes. Our institutions do not in the State enfranchise in suicide, owing to the men with which the majority are covered. Richmon, too, able in solve the matrix. Poverty is a cause less frequently found in this city than elsewhere; it is the subject claim that resorts to this way of ending their misery, will be found to have to go through of the course. The explanation given in one-half of the cases is that the suicide was due to sickness. We all have the reason for searching it to ship in our minds. In former years we had no such cases."

"How is it," asks the lecturer, "that so many young men commit suicide in this city? And the answer has given in a terrible indictment against the godless system of education in our day: "Because our young people are neglected for the calling they succeed." They have been educated into the idea that manual labor is degrading, that religion is merely the rant of preachers or the rhapsodies of priests. They have grown up in an atmosphere where God's name is seldom heard, save to be desecrated, and when they hear the thorns there is only one remedy left, and that is to end their worthless lives by the most awful, unworthy, and unworthy act that man can commit.

If the education of our day fitted our young men for the mechanical occupations, suicide would be fewer. If the voice of God could be heard in our public schools, and our young men were taught to observe His laws, suicide would be a crime as rarely committed as it is almost unknown among their holy faith; sadly enough to the tragedies that beset them, arising from want and the contagion of evil associates; and finally because criminals through an original fault of their own, but from the very force of circumstances.

The Father has found, that in the past, the Directory has accomplished a noble work, but that it has fallen short of its mission, mainly owing to the want of sufficient means to meet either the expectation of its projectors, or the growing exigencies of the case.

In view, then, of placing the Institution upon what firm foundation that it deserves, and some what has been accomplished elsewhere by similar Help for the Homless Boys.

The Circular Letter from his Grace Archbishop Alemany, O. P., which we publish this week, is an eloquent appeal to the Catholics of this Archdiocese to come to the rescue of the forsaken and orphan boys who frequent the streets of the city, and who will swell the ranks of our criminal classes unless some effort is made to save them. No words of ours can add one to the facts or strength to the figures which his Grace gives in his Circular, but we desire to impress upon the minds of our readers everywhere on the coast the spiritual blessings in which they will become sharers by enrolling themselves among the members of St. Joseph's Union.

An annual donation of one dollar will entitle every member—no matter where his residence may be—to a share in one hundred and fifty-six Masses every year. And when death claims a member, its soul, and the souls of his friends, will share the spiritual aid of few Requiem Masses annually, as well as the pious prayers if all who attend thereat.

Here we have a superabundance of spiritual blessings which will repay ten thousand fold the small offering which Catholic charity prompts us to give toward the salvation of the souls of our fellow children who are dear to the Sacred Heart. We will also have the happy reflection of knowing that we are partakers in the good work of rescuing from a life of present misery and ultimate ruin a class of the community that will in the near future become a blessing of a curse to society in general.

These boys are helpless to remedy the life of ruin into which they have been plunged by the death, the destitution or the disupation of their parents, and, with pleading hands, they say to every Christian in this community: "Through no fault of mine I am what I am, do you make me what I ought to be." It is for us to respond to this appeal by rescuing and saving our fellow-boy, by brightening up his life and bettering his condition, and thus we will take the step towards saving both his soul and the body of many a" nobody's boy."

We hope, therefore, for the love of charity and good works which animates every Catholic heart, that there will be a magnificent and a munificent response to the appeal of our beloved Archbishop, to whose tender heart this work is very precious. Day by day he experiences the sad necessity of having some place to shelter those boys who are cast upon the world through the carelessness or the crime of their parents, and the piteous tales which those poor waifs of humanity tell would make the heart of any man or woman of feeling to bleed.

It is our duty to rescue and to save these suffering children, and in the performance of this duty let us be generous and earnest. Let every adult Catholic in the city join his Nazarene Brother in the labor of the holy corps in which Catholics can combat vice and render virtue victorious. Our Blessed Lord has given us a precept which points the road way of ruin at which he has entered we will be laying up graces for our souls in the great hereafter, and we will earn for ourselves the mercy of God who has said: "Suffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not, for of such is the Kingdom of Heaven."

With God for our guide in this great work, with St. Joseph for its patron, and under the ægis of Archbishop Alemany and Archbishop, St. JOSEPH'S UNION should at once become a union of every practical Catholic on this coast. The way to membership is open to all, the purity for demanded is but the fraction of a single day's work at ordinary wages, while the good to be accomplished is to fulfill the Scriptural injunction which tells us to clothe the naked, to feed the hungry, to shelter the homeless, and to doing this we do good to the orphan and the stranger, we place the sword of sorrow from many a sorrel heart, and we preserve society from a danger that threatens to become alarmingly great unless good and generous men and women determine to save the boys of our city from the sin and misery which is likely to encompass their lives unless they are lifted out of the gutter into which they have been thrown through no fault of theirs.

An Infernal Industrial School.

Many readers will remember that about two years ago a proposition was made by the Superintendent of the Industrial School, in this city, to take away the guardianship of the girls in the Magdalen Asylum from the custody of the Sisters of Mercy to whom they are kept virtuously at an expense of fifty cents a day, and to turn them over to the aforesaid Superintendent. But the Board of Supervisors, aware of his past experience, that the aforesaid Superintendent was incapable of inculcating morality into the minds of the boys under his charge, they wisely concluded that it would be better to have him let the girls alone in an asylum where they are not only protected, but are also purified from the stain of the sin that may be on them, and are returned to the world clean of heart and hopeful of heaven. In this regard of the officials acted wisely, indeed, as it is the sad experience of many Municipal Boards that where girls are placed in public institutions under the care of men, they invariably become the more corrupt the longer they are public wards. Among the dispatches published in the Eastern press, we find the following, which preaches a sermon upon this subject far more powerful than any words we could pen, and which we introduce in order to show the criminal depravity which exists in industrial schools where both sexes are under the care of men whose morals are in many cases even far more loose than the juvenile culprits they are expected to reform:

"HARTFORD, Conn., February 22.—A special from Rutland to the Courant says: Rumors are flying of the State Industrial School at Middlebury, and the result has been a thorough search at the State house. It is said that the institution is in a terrible state, and that a thorough investigation will be made, and a shocking state of affairs is expected to be disclosed. Of seven inmates, Katie Boughton has just given birth to illegitimate twins, and Ella Wright is expected. Mary Jessup, of Waldron, has an illegitimate child, and Ella Wright, of Rutland, is, it is about to be confined, and Mary Green, aged 14, was confined last week. The lady who is now at the New Haven House of Friendless, it is alleged that these girls were all in the school, or at places where the school put them out."

The New York "Independent" to Brother McCrary.

The New York Independent is a rare sore among Protestant papers, for the reason that it is fair-minded on some of its questions upon Catholic affairs. By a singular coincidence the Independent was lecturing Mr. McCrary's of the Eastern States upon the subject of the cruelty of some Whose was pitching into that perturbed preacher for the same uncharitable feeling. Alluding to the only two financial failures of record against Catholic money-brokers in this land of boasted liberty, the Independent reads this lesson to the McCrarytes of Methodism and other birds of evil omen who live off the carrion of calamity, which they find congenial to their vitiated and vindictive tastes:

"Protestants, however, have the temptation in now rising upon us again to fling gibes at your Roman Catholic fellow-citizens, because the case of Cincinnati suffered shame and the Catholic money-broker failed for a large sum of money. It now appears that a similar disaster has long been brewing in Philadelphia, and the storm has burst, with a prospective loss of $500,000, paid to the depositors, which is a great crash upon several on the section of ecclesiastical building and loan associations. This time, it is largely on small depositors, factory girls and others, who have put their little savings, and sometimes their bank all of their savings, a few hundred or a few thousand dollars.

"But all this style of financering was wrong, very wrong, and the Protestant Church, in its corporate capacity, is not responsible. Interest can be paid on deposits only out of profits, and the profits are made by loans and investments of any an income; they should one. The immediate cause of the failure in Philadelphia, we understand, has had found that not before this last failure and fortune its promise to do any such banking.

"We mention this Philadelphia case enough, but the Cincinnati and Lawrence scandals do not show anything in particular against the Roman Catholic Church. There is no evidence of any intention to defraud, or any dishonesty, in the criminal incompetency. The priests, doubtless, thought they were doing a good thing for their parishioners. They meant well. Such instances should teach Protestants to be charitable to Roman Catholics, and to every great number of the poor and ignorant, who are the victims of the ignorance and folly of their leaders. The Church influence is, on the whole, decidedly conservative, and, in the main, encourages industry, thrift and honesty. Protestants have, in the spiritual, the advantage, in a general way, of exercising some of the ministerial functions of the Church, and those which it likely to encourage their lives unless they are lifted out of the gutter into which they have been thrown through no fault of theirs.

A Provincial Council to be Held in New York.

His Eminence Cardinal McCloskey, Metropolitan of the Ecclesiastical Province of New York, has formally summoned his Coadjutor, Most Rev Archbishop Corrigan, the suffragans the Bishops of the Province, the heads of the greater Dioceses and Religious, and all others who, by right or discretion, are entitled to be present, to assemble on June 24, in St. Patrick's Cathedral, New York to take due part in a Provincial Council of New York, and the first held under the administration of Cardinal McCloskey.

Instructions of the Council were issued last week by the Cardinal, Archbishop Corrigan, Archbishop Corrigan, to the Bishops of the Province. These are Bishop John Loughlin, of Brooklyn; Francis McNeirny, of Albany; Bishop Stephen V. Ryan, of Buffalo; Edgar P. Wadhams, of Ogdensburg; M. V. Wigger, of Newark; M. J. McQuaid, of Rochester.

The Bishops invited alone have a voice in the deliberations, but there will be prospective dioceses theologians, notaries, etc., to assist them at the Council and to prepare or put in form the various schemata or proposals under consideration.

The Bishops of the Province will hold a preliminary meeting in New York in Master Week to arrange some of the matters to be discussed. Some of the schemata are already in process of preparation.

—A magnificent contribution on gallian education in Italy, and the injurious fruits of education without religion, will be found on the eighth page. Our Rome correspondent has some further statistics on this subject which we are forced to keep back until after our next issue.

Give Your Dollar on St. Patrick's Day.

We earnestly hope that the appeal of the Central Council of the Irish National Land League of America, which appeared in the MONITOR of the 21st ult., will meet with a hearty response on St. Patrick's Day. Inasmuch as the plan devised by the Council may have escaped some of our readers, we append it again so that all may contribute understandingly:

"We have likewise a plan to offer to all whom the overwhelming pressure of the terrible crisis the suffering Irish of the famine stricken west, that if some one, any one, must the approval of all. Day after day the wail of their misery reaches us, the cry of their sorrow is stifled, history repeats itself in unhappy Ireland. Deadly famine rages the west and north, the tyrant Government turns pitiless from the petition for relief, to spend its distributed energy in dragooning the poor and south, imitating emancipation, letting in the Orangemen to murder and plunder the Nationalists. It has been said that 'the land shall never again be passed for Ireland,' and we do not know but that the prophecy may be true, that in addressing ourselves to men and women of our race and creed, we are acting anything contrary to its spirit.

Our plan is that between this date and that of St. Patrick's Day, every Irish man and woman and child, and every descendant of an Irish, shall contribute the sum of one dollar to a special fund for relief purposes only. To make this a truly popular subscription no one shall be allowed to contribute more than one dollar, and none but Lists will be opened immediately at the different Irish National Societies, and the money received by the treasurer, the name of each contributor being enrolled in a book to be kept for the purpose. The money so collected will be transmitted to the Land League Fund, and shall be transmitted by the Treasurer, Patrick Ford, Washington, Mr. Michael Davitt, the Secretary of the Irish National Land League, and Mr. Michael Davitt, the Secretary of the Irish National Land League, and shall be distributed in Ireland, by the Land League, and shall be used in the relief of evicted tenants in the Land Leagues, and gave orders that the few copies printed should be burned and the Land Leagues, and shall be used in the relief of evicted tenants. Some other copies were lost in the mail, and some were lost in some one hand between £10,000 and £20,000,

OUR PRIESTS.

Our priests, for are they not ours? Are they not here, having abandoned all, obedient to the Master's will to toil amongst us, laboring and sowing, reaping and reaping, and gathering in God's own harvest. Is ought else in us ought? Do we ever in some moment of thought look over our young city, and remember that, but a few years ago, nought broke the repose of that soft green mount where lies our cemetery? Almost alone the large cross crowned the hill now so full of white enclosures. Do we ever think of those holy men whose bones lie at the foot of that cross, and whose spirits, we assume, are with others of our earlier admonitions, aided those of the just made perfect. Jesus Christ the everlasting priest abides for ever, and priest succeeds priest, in His everlasting priesthood. That priesthood is spread o'er the face of the earth, among all nations of the world, living as Christ did, teaching and preaching. Great in His duration, its dignity, its prerogatives, its object and its power. Are we conscious of this? Let us speak simply. God's priests hold for us the keys of Heaven, with holy Baptism they unlock for us its gates. In them the power to purify and resit sin, to consecrate, and feed us with the Divine food of our souls, and when death comes to bring us peace and pardon, in sweet benedictions. Ah, how dear to the heart of Jesus must be those of his priests. How he ills them with his divine nature—how like to His in His humanity. Do we ever realize how human are their hearts, how heroic their sacrifices. No domestic joy or home comfort is theirs. Them though with pitying love to redeem the sinner, to console the widow and care for the orphan. Theirs the office in the still hour of death, for the dark chilmed Heart should know his God, as man, in the cring white man. Let us, then, learn to use the treasures we have with us, and not wait until we have lost them, to know their worth. God's priests keep knowledge, not for themselves, but in store for others; theirs the part to study, consider and communicate spiritual knowledge, open to receive. Let us try to meet their in all things, spiritual and temporal. Let us with all our power relieve them of the latter, especially that dreadful hindrance, debt, where ever it lies, remembering always that however small they bear the burden we were the contractors. Our shepherds are few in number for their large and scattered flock, but they toil with superhuman energy, and it behoves us to move with them in order, peace and good will. A core cement to advance our moral and social welfare, and in our children to lay the foundation of a Catholic nation.

Thoughts for Lent.

By the Passion of Jesus Christ, the words of the Holy Psalmist have been fulfilled—"Mercy and truth have met each other, justice and peace have kissed." They kissed one another, because by the merits of Jesus Christ man obtained peace with God, while at the same time the Divine justice was more than abundantly satisfied by the death of our dear Redeemer. Yes, more than abundantly, because to save us it was not actually necessary that Jesus Christ should endure so many sufferings and insults; one single drop of blood one simple prayer would have been sufficient to save the whole world; but to strengthen our confidence, and, above all, to gain our love, He thought fit that our redemption should not only be sufficient, but more than abundant. "Let Israel hope in the Lord; for with the Lord there is mercy, and with Him plentiful redemption." Yes, we must always bear in mind that He endured all these torments for each one of us in particular. The soldiers of His feared Son, the Street of Blood, the scourging, and buffeting, the spittles, the mockery of the purple robe and the reed, the crowning with thorns, the nailing of his hands and feet, the three hours on the Cross, the thirst, the abandonment by His Eternal Father, and, finally, His death upon the Cross—all this and much more was for each one of you, as if there had been no other soul to be redeemed. "He loved me, and gave Himself for me." He knew every single sin that even His own children, the members of His mystical Body the Holy Catholic Church, would, alas! commit; since of impurity, of intemperance, of injustice—sins committed by the various senses of the body, the eyes and ears, the taste and touch. He knew how the majesty of His Heavenly Father would be insulted by blasphemy, cursing, and swearing; by sloth and irreverence, and disregard for the Divine service of Adoration and Thanksgiving, of Sacrifice and of Prayer; and in His infinite love and mercy He took the guilt of all these sins upon Himself, and made a full and superabundant satisfaction for them. "He loved us," says St. John, "and washed us from our sins in His own blood." And therefore, beloved children, knowing these things, and the price at which we have been redeemed, can you possibly continue in habitual sin, and in forgetfulness of the love of Jesus Christ? Will you with your eyes open, cruelly again nail Him on God, and make a mockery of Him? Will you go on living for the world, the devil, and the flesh, as if you had never been redeemed, as if the Passion and Death of Jesus Christ had never taken place, or were a fable of human invention?—Lenten Pastoral Bishop of Southwark.

What the Pledge is.

Total abstinence practised through a supernatural motive is a great virtue. The motive may be a desire to avoid the occasion of falling into the sin of intemperance, or it may be motivated by a noble zeal, or a desire to save the souls of others by example of good example. A temperance pledge is a public avowal of one's resolve to abstain wholly from the use of intoxicating drink through fear of all these motives, and is therefore a great act of virtue. On the other hand it should be distinctly understood that the will of the Church in this matter is that persons taking the pledge are not to bind themselves under pain of sin. A pledge is not a vow. Of course, it is possible for persons to bind themselves; but such is neither the intention nor the will of the Church. A vow should never be made unless under the direction, or with the consent of one's spiritual adviser. Much harm, we mean much sin before God, may result from mistaken idea that a temperance pledge binds under pain of sin. Some years ago the Archbishops and bishops of Quebec petitioned the Holy See to favor in a special way the temperance societies of that Province. The Holy Father replied that their request was granted, provided the members of said societies bound themselves by neither vow nor oath, and providing that the promise to refrain from wine and other intoxicating drinks would be so made that its violation would not be a sin.

If, however, one's previous intemperate habits make it a sating drink in any quantity and [illegible] occasion of drunkenness, then a vow is your only safety. Do not break [illegible] by indulging at all [illegible]

A Local Gem.

Pale reader have you heard the news,
Thus either Sunday's by a or chance,
Persons all others in Prince town,
For which we wave King Crispin's crown.
His "long dress" multitudes adorn,
His "dress bottom" shows he is a peer,
His spring side gaiters generally clasp the foot,
While his "Oxford ties" are a perfect treat.
He is patronized by beau and belle,
For of his cash he does cost,
And not one with him can dare compete,
In beautifying the human feet.
He hashes in good, his work is strong,
